A N

Universal HISTORY,

FROM THE

Earlieſt Account of Time to the Preſent:

COMPILED from

ORIGINAL AUTHORS;

And ILLUSTRATED with

Maps, Cuts, Notes, Chronological and Other Tables.

VOL. I.

Ἱστορίας ἀρχαίας ἐξέρχεσθαι μὴ καταιόσι, ἐν αὐταῖς γὰρ εὑρήσεις ἀκόπως, ἅπερ ἕτεροι συνῆξαν ἐγκόπως. Basil. Imp. ad Leon. fil.

DUBLIN:
Printed by EDWARD BATE, for the EDITORS:
M,DCC,XLIV.

To his GRACE, the

Duke of MARLBOROUGH.

THE Nature and Deſign of this Work may, in ſome Degree, atone for the Liberty we take in prefixing to it the immortal Name of MARLBOROUGH. For whoſe Protection ſhould we court in publiſhing an Univerſal Hiſtory, wherein are diſplayed the Atchievements of all the Heroes of former Ages, if not your GRACE's, who are Grandſon to the greateſt Hero of our Age? Whoever impartially peruſes the following Hiſtory, and compares the ſo much exalted Heroes of Antiquity with the late Duke of Marlborough, will find, that their mighty Acts now ſerve but as Foils to ſet off his more glorious Enterpriſes and Succeſſes. Moſt of thoſe great Conquerors were, we may ſay, but licenſed Thieves, Subverters of States and Empires, Plunderers of the Subſtance, and Enemies to the Rights, of Mankind; whereas the generous Duke of Marlbo- rough drew his Sword in the noble Cauſe of Liberty, againſt the ambitious Attempts of a powerful and inſulting Nation, defeated its beſt-concerted Meaſures, and delivered not Britain only, but all Europe, from impending Slavery.

NOR have Arms alone reflected an extraordinary Luſtre on your GRACE's Family; Letters too have greatly contributed to its Splendor. The Earl of Sunderland Your Father, altho' engaged in the moſt arduous Scenes of publick Life, hath enriched this Nation with a Monument of his Love and Value for the liberal Arts, which other Nations may well envy, but few can equal. No Wonder then, that Your GRACE, in whom the eminent Prerogatives of two ſuch illuſtrious Families have centred, ſhould be ſo much the Darling of this happy Nation. But it is not the Luſtre alone, which is derived on You from Your noble Progenitors, that entitles You to the Love and Eſteem of Mankind. The Excellency of Your own Virtues heightens the Glory which You received by Inheritance: Among the many good Qualities, which we might here here take occaſion to celebrate, without riſquing the uſual Cenſure incurred by Dedicators, we ſhall only ſingle out that truly noble and generous Spirit, which is ſo becoming Perſons of Your eminent Station. Providence ſeems to have put Wealth in Your Hands merely that You might deſpiſe it, and ſhew by Your Example, in theſe Times of Corruption, that the Value of Gold is to be meaſured only by the Opportunities it gives of exerting Good Nature. That Greatneſs of Mind, which You happily join to Greatneſs of Fortune, will make the Duke of Marlborough live, when mean Men, of the ſame Rank, are, in ſpite of their Treaſures ſo carefully hoarded up, buried in Oblivion. The Humanity of Your Temper, Your obliging Affability and Condeſcenſion, might be a noble and juſt Subject of Panegyric: But it is not our Intent here to enter into a Detail of Your Grace's Virtues and Perfections. We are too conſcious of our own Inabilities to attempt it. We ſhall therefore only add, that if Your Grace's Patronage can recommend this our Performance, to all who love and honour the Duke of Marlborough, its Reception will be Univerſal. What we lay before You has been hitherto kindly received by the Public, both at Home and Abroad; which, we hope, will in ſome meaſure excuſe the Liberty we take in ſuing for YOUR GRACE's Protection. To have entirely depended on Your Good Nature, without any kind of Merit in the Work itſelf would have been unpardonable.

BUT we have already treſpaſſed too much upon YOUR GRACE's Patience; wherefore we ſhall only beg leave to aſſure You, that our greateſt Ambition is, that this Addreſs, and the following Hiſtory, be acceptable to YOUR GRACE, and that we may be allowed the Honour of Subſcribing ourſelves,

MY LORD,

Your Grace's

Moſt Obedient,

Moſt Devoted,

Humble Servants,

The Authors.

CONTENTS

OF

VOLUME I.

PREFACE, giving a general account of the Work.
INTRODUCTION, containing the Cosmogony, or Creation of the World, Page 1

CHAP. I.

SECT. I.

The Creation of Man, and the Situation of the Garden of EDEN, 107

SECT. II.

Of the Fall of Man, 118

SECT. III.

The Chronology from the Creation to the Deluge stated, 138

SECT. IV.

The History of the Antediluvian Patriarchs, 144

SECT. V.

The prophane History before the Flood, 174

SECT. VI.

Of the Deluge, 193

SECT. VII.

Of the State of the Antediluvian World, and the Changes made in the Earth by the Deluge, 220

SECT. VIII.

An enquiry concerning the Situation of Mount ARARAT, and the various Opinions about it, 230

CHAP. II.

SECT. I.

The Chronology from the Deluge to the Departure of ABRAHAM from HARAN stated, 243

SECT.

CONTENTS.

SECT. II.

The History of NOAH after the Flood, and of his Descendants, to ABRAHAM, 251

SECT. III.

The History of SANCHONIATHO after the Flood, 294

SECT. IV.

Of the removal of Mankind from about Mount ARARAT to the Plain of SHINAAR, and of the building of BABEL, 312

SECT. V.

Of the Confusion of Tongues, 330

SECT. VI.

Of the Dispersion of Mankind, and the Planting of Nations in the two first general Migrations, 346

SECT. VII.

Of the Origin of civil Government, and the Establishment of the first Kingdoms, 377

CHAP. III.

SECT. I.

A Description of EGYPT, 383

SECT. II.

Of the Antiquity, Government, Laws, Religion, Customs, Arts, Learning and Trade of the antient EGYPTIANS, 431

SECT. III.

Of the EGYPTIAN Chronology to the Time of ALEXANDER the Great, 491

SECT. IV.

The History of OSIRIS, ISIS, TYPHON, and ORUS, 513

THE

THE

PREFACE.

HISTORY is, without all doubt, the moſt inſtructive and uſeful, as well as entertaining, Part of Literature; more eſpecially, when it is not confined within the narrow Bounds of any particular Time or Place, but extends to the Tranſactions of all Times and Nations. Works of this Nature carry our Knowledge, as Tully obſerves, beyond the vaſt and devouring Space of numberleſs Years, triumph over Time, and make us, though living at an immenſe Diſtance, in a manner Eye-witneſſes to all the Events and Revolutions, which have occaſioned aſtoniſhing Changes in the World. By theſe Records it is that we live, as it were, in the very Time when the World was created; we behold how it was governed in its Infancy, how over-flowed and deſtroyed in a Deluge of Water, and again re-peopled; how Kings and Kingdoms have riſen, flouriſhed, and declined, and by what Steps they brought upon themſelves their final Ruin and Deſtruction. From theſe and other like Events occurring in Hiſtory, every judicious Reader may form prudent and unerring Rules for the Conduct of his Life, both in a private and publick Capacity. But, as the eminent Advantages accruing to us from this valuable Branch of Learning have been ſufficiently diſplayed by many others, we ſhall not trouble our Readers with a minute Detail of them, but haſten to what is peculiar to the Work, which we now offer to the Public.

WE promiſed, in our firſt Number, to prefix to this Volume, when it was compleated, a Preface, wherein, after ſome Account of the Method we have obſerved, and the Authors we have chiefly followed in the Work, we ſhould examine the different Computations of Time, the Coins, Weights, and Meaſures uſed by the ſeveral Nations whoſe Hiſtories ſhould be therein delivered, with ſuch other Particulars as we ſhould judge uſeful and neceſſary. This Promiſe is what we now intend to diſcharge, and to begin with a ſuccinct Account of the Method we have purſued.

OUR Intent was to write a General Hiſtory of Mankind, from the earlieſt Account of Time to the preſent. Purſuant to this Deſign, before we enter upon the Hiſtory itſelf, we have thought it neceſſary to premiſe, by way of Introduction, an Account of the Coſmogony, or Production of the Earth, as being the Theatre on which the Scenes of the enſuing Hiſtory were to be acted. In this preludious Diſcourſe, after having related, without omitting any thing that was really curious or entertaining, the various Opinions both of the ancient and modern Philoſophers, concerning the formation of the animate and inanimate World, we proceed to the only authentick and genuine Hiſtory of the Creation, that which has been left us by Moſes. The Opinions of the Philoſophers are, for the moſt part, abſurd, incoherent, and contradictory; whereas the Moſaick Account, if rightly underſtood, carries with it all the Marks of Truth and Probability, even though it be regarded only as a human Compoſition, abſtracted from divine Authority. Having attended the Earth through its ſeveral Degrees of Formation, ſeen it perfected, cloathed with Trees and Plants, repleniſhed with Animals, and at laſt Man, for whom the Whole was deſigned, and to whom the Dominion of it was expreſly given by its Maker, introduced and placed in it; we take ſome Notice of the Opinion of thoſe who think Mankind were in being before Adam, whom they ſuppoſe to have been the Progenitor of the Jews only; we touch upon ſeveral Inquiries that have been made concerning the Time and Seaſon of the Creation, the Place where Adam was created, &c. and cloſe the Introduction with ſome Account of the Creation of the Angels, of the Nature, Power, Employments, Employments, &c. of thoſe Spiritual Beings, that ſo eminently concerned themſelves in the Affairs of Mankind, at leaſt in the firſt Ages of the World. The Introduction, we hope, will not be thought of a diſproportionable Length; ſo copious a Subject, as the Origin of the World and Mankind, could not be well reduced into a narrower Compaſs. If there ſhould be ſome little Obſcurities or Inconſiſtencies, where we have delivered or explained the Opinions of the old Philoſophers, we need not ſay much to excuſe ourſelves to thoſe who know in what Uncertainty and Confuſion the Hiſtory of thoſe Philoſophers and their Opinions have been left by the Antients.

FROM the Coſmogony, or Formation of the Earth and Things that were made for the Uſe of Man, we proceed to the General Hiſtory of the World till the Flood, but premiſe ſeveral curious Inquiries touching the Situation of the Garden of Eden, the State of Innocence and its Continuance, the two Trees, the Prohibition laid on the firſt Pair, the Tempter and his Puniſhment, the Fall of Man, and the Effects it had on human Nature, and on the Earth, with the different Opinions touching the manner in which the Change in the Conſtitution of Man and of the Earth was effected. The Chronology from the Creation to the Deluge is what we likewiſe thought neceſſary to ſettle, before we entered upon the Hiſtory of the Antediluvian World. As Moſes hath not ſet down the particular Time of any Tranſaction before the Flood, except only the Years of the Patriarchs, all we can do in this Period is to determine that Point, which might have eaſily been done, were there no Varieties in the ſeveral Copies we now have of Moſes's Writings. But as the Hebrew, the Samaritan, and Greek Verſion of the Septuagint, vary very much from one another, and ſome Writers prefer one Copy and ſome another, we have exhibited theſe Varieties in ſeveral Chronological Tables of the Years of the Patriarchs, adding to the Computation of the Hebrew, of the Septuagint, and of the Samaritan Pentateuch, the Numbers of the Years of the Patriarchs, as delivered by Joſephus, and corrected by Dr. Wills and Mr. Whiſton, the Numbers in the preſent Copies of that Hiſtorian being greatly corrupted. Having thus ſtated the Chronology before the Flood, we deliver the Hiſtory of the Antediluvian Patriarchs, as tranſmitted to us in the Writings of Moſes, which are the only to be depended upon in thoſe early Times. However, we have thought it not amiſs to collect the moſt material Pieces of Hiſtory to be found in profane Authors, relating to the Times preceding the Flood; among which though there be ſome which bear apparent Marks of Truth, yet we believe the greater Part will be judged to deſerve little Credit: However, as every thing, which has the leaſt Pretence to ſo great Antiquity, cannot but be entertaining and curious, we hope our Labour in collecting them will not be condemned as uſeleſs.

FROM the Hiſtory of the Antediluvian World, we paſs to that of the Flood, where we produce profane Teſtimonies of that wonderful Cataſtrophe, relate various Conjectures of antient and modern Writers, as to the Manner in which that dreadful Devaſtation was brought on the Earth, give ſome Account of the Ark, whereby Noah and his Family, with ſuch Kinds of living Creatures as he took in with him, were delivered from this Deſtruction; and laſtly before we diſmiſs the Hiſtory of the old World, take a tranſient View of the Antediluvian State of Mankind, of their Religion, Policy, Arts and Sciences, of the Alterations which have been wrought in Nature by the Flood, of the Longevity of the Antediluvians, and the Cauſes of it, as well as of the prodigious Fertility of the firſt Earth. To theſe we add an Inquiry touching the Situation of Mount Ararat, and the various Opinions about it.

HAVING thus collected, in the beſt manner we could, what we have found worth Notice, from Writers of various Times, Religions, and Countries, relating to the Antediluvian World, we proceed to the General Hiſtory from the Deluge to the Birth of Abraham; but but first settle the Chronology from the Deluge to the Departure of Abraham from Haran. This is one of the most difficult Periods to settle in all Chronology, not only because we have no Assistance therein from profane History, but also on Account of the great Diversity between the several Mosaick Writings. However, it is no small Satisfaction, that the great Differences between the several Copies end here, and that, being once got below the Birth of Abraham, we enter upon a more certain Series of Time, about which Chronologers do more generally agree; the Variety of the Copies making a Difference of but few years, not of several Ages, as we find before this Period: For the better exhibiting of which we have inserted Chronological Tables of the Years of the Postdiluvian Patriarchs to the Call of Abraham, according to the Computation of the Hebrew, of the Septuagint, and of the Samaritan Pentateuch. Having stated the Chronology, we come to the History of Noah after the Flood, and of his Descendants to Abraham, presenting the Reader with whatever we find curious or entertaining, not only in sacred, but profane, Writers, namely, in the small Remains which are left us of the Phœnician Antiquities collected by Sanchoniatho, and which are supposed to relate to the earliest Times. As the planting of Nations in the two first general Migrations, the forming of Societies and Governments, the Rise of Arts and Sciences, the Beginning of States and Monarchies, fall within this Period, we give the Reader as distinct an Account of these important Facts, as the Records which have reached us will allow of.

FROM the general History of the Migrations of the Children of Noah, of the peopling of the Earth by them, and the settling of the first Governments, we descend to the particular Histories of each Kingdom; beginning with that of Egypt, which is without doubt one of the most antient Nations of the World, having been peopled either by Ham, or his Son Mizraim, with his own Issue, which inhabited several Parts of it under the Names of Mizraim, Pathrusim, Casluhim, and Caphthorim. This History tory we purſue from the firſt Original of the Egyptian Nation to its Conqueſt by the Perſians, when the ſevere Prediction of the Prophet [a] was fulfilled, There ſhall be no more a Prince in the Land of Egypt. And here to acquaint the Reader, in a few Words, with the Method we have followed in delivering the particular Hiſtories of each Nation; we begin with accounting, in the beſt Manner we can, for the Name or Names which each Nation bears; then we proceed to a Deſcription of the Country, containing an Account of its Situation, Extent, Climate, Diviſions, Fertility; of its animal and vegetable Productions, of the natural and artificial Curioſities it contains; of its Cities, Rivers, Mountains, Lakes, and whatever elſe worthy of Notice is to be found in each Province. Next we inquire into the Original and Antiquity of the Inhabitants, conſider their Laws, Government, Religion, Cuſtoms, Inſtitutions, Language, Commerce, Learning, Trade, Navigation, and alſo endeavour, as far as ſo intricate a Subject will allow, to ſettle the Chronology of each Nation. Laſtly, we deliver the Series and Hiſtory of their Kings, which comprizes the Wars, Treaties, Revolutions, and all the moſt remarkable Events of each Country. Thus we may ſay, without Vanity or Oſtentation, that no Hiſtory hath hitherto appeared in any Language, which can with more Juſtice challenge the Title of an Univerſal Hiſtory than the preſent, ſince it comprizes not only the Hiſtory of all Nations and Countries, but of all Religions and religious Ceremonies, of all Arts and Sciences, of the Laws that have been any where obſerved, of Trade, and Navigation, and, in ſhort, of whatever has been invented for the Uſe and Convenience of human Race. But to return to the Sequel of our Hiſtory.

After delivering the Succeſſion of the kings of Egypt, according to the Greek and Latin Authors, we thought it might be deemed an Omiſſion, if we ſhould take no Notice of the Series of the Egyptian Kings

[a] Ezek. xxx. 13.

Kings given us by the Oriental Writers. Wherefore we have ſet down their Names, and briefly mention their principal Actions, as related by the Eaſtern Hiſtorians, leaving the Reader to judge what Credit ought to be given them.

NEXT to the Hiſtory of the Egyptians we give that of thoſe Nations, with whom the Children of Iſrael waged War before, or upon, their ſettling in the Land of Canaan, namely, the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, Edomites, Amalekites, Canaanites, and Philiſtines. From theſe we proceed to the Hiſtory of the antient Syrians, Phœnicians, and that of the Jews, from Abraham, Founder of the Jewiſh Nation, to the Babyloniſh Captivity. We have inlarged ſomewhat on the latter, giving a diſtinct Account of their Patriarchs from Abraham to Moſes, of their Egyptian Bondage, Deliverance, and 40 Years wandering in the Wilderneſs; of their Wars with the Inhabitants of Canaan and the neighbouring Nations; of their Religion, Government, Laws, Cuſtoms, Learning, Arts, Commerce, with an accurate Deſcription of the Land of Promiſe, &c. We have alſo ſettled the Jewiſh Chronology, from the Call of Abraham to the Babyloniſh Captivity, and then proceeded, firſt to the Hiſtory of the Judges that governed Iſrael, from the Death of Joſhua to Saul their firſt King, and thence to the Reign of Zedekiah, when the City of Jeruſalem was burnt, and the whole Nation carried into Captivity by Nebuchadnezzar. Having thus delivered the Hiſtories of the moſt antient Kingdoms, till they were ſeverally ſubdued by the great Empires, and became Parts or Provinces of them, we enter upon the Hiſtory of the ſaid Empires, and go on with the Hiſtories of the Aſſyrian Empire to its Conqueſt by the Medes and Babylonians, and of the Babylonian Empire to its Deſtruction by Cyrus.

NOW to ſay ſomething of the Authors we have chiefly followed in the Work, for we have advanced nothing without quoting our Authors, that the Reader may, for his fuller Satisfaction, recur, if he pleaſes, to the Originals; Moſes is the only authentick Writer of what happened before, and for ſeveral Ages after the Flood. He is by univerſal Conſent allowed to be the moſt antient Hiſtorian now extant; for, whether he was contemporary with Inachus, as Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Julius Africanus, Joſephus, Tatian, Clement of Alexandria, Porphyry, and others ſuppoſe, or lived in the Time of Cecrops, the firſt king of Athens, as Euſebius affirms, it is certain, that his Hiſtory was compoſed, not only before all the Hiſtories, but even before the Fables of the Greeks; ſince, according to the Calculation of the former, he wrote 675 Years before the Trojan War, and according to that of the latter 275 Years before that Æra. His Hiſtory as well as the Jewiſh Laws, whereof he was Author, are comprized in five Books, known under the Title of the Pentateuch, which is univerſally received both by the Jews and Chriſtians as penned by him, if we except Abenezra and Spinoſa among the former, and ſome modern Criticks among the latter, if their avowed Principles can permit us to call them Chriſtians, who denied him to be Author of it, and who have been learnedly confuted by a late Writer [b]. Beſides the Pentateuch, there have been ſome other Works aſcribed to Moſes, though without any Certainty, ſuch as the Book of Job, which ſome ſuppoſe to have been compoſed by him, during his 40 Years Abode in Midian, and have this Argument on their Side, that it appears to have been written before the Deliverance of the Iſraelites from the Egyptian Bondage; otherwiſe it were abſurd to ſuppoſe, that either Job or his Friends, conſidering what Kindred and Country they were of, could be ſo ignorant of the Wonders which God had wrought in Favour of that oppreſſed People, or ſo forgetful of them, as not to have urged them in the ſtrongeſt Terms, during their long and intricate Controverſy about the various Diſpenſations of Providence. Moſes is alſo ſuppoſed to have wrote eleven Pſalms, viz. the 90th, 91ſt, and ſo on to the 100th.

to

[b] Abbadie. Verit. de la Relig. Chreſtienne.

100th. Origen [c]. believes him to have tranſlated the Book of Job out of the Syriack into Hebrew. Some few Fragments of other Books are likewiſe quoted by ſeveral of the antients as wrote by him; ſuch as, 1. his Apocalypſe, out of which St. Paul is by them ſuppoſed to have taken theſe Words, For in Chriſt Jeſus neither Circumciſion availeth any thing [d]. &c. 2. his Leſſer Geneſis; 3. his Aſcenſion; 4. his Aſſumption; 5. his Teſtament, and Myſterious Books. St. Jerom, who quotes a Paſſage or two out of his Leſſer Geneſis, tells us, that they had it in Hebrew in his Time [e]. The Sethites, an antient Sect of Hereticks, quoted his Teſtament and Myſterious Books, or Diſcourſes; but all theſe were ſo far from bearing any Authority in the Church, that they fell into Contempt and Oblivion, in Proportion as Chriſtianity prevailed.

THOUGH the Writings of Moſes be the only Records to be depended upon in the early Times, yet we have not omitted to give ſome farther Accounts, relating to the ſame Period, tranſmitted to us by profane Writers, namely by Sanchoniatho, Manetho, and Beroſus. Sanchoniatho, a Tyrian according to Athenæus and Suidas, according to others of Berytus, is ſaid by Porphyry the Philoſopher [f], Euſebius [g], and Theodoret [h], to have lived about the Time of the Trojan War: Whence Bochart, Huetius, and others ſuppoſe him to have been contemporary with Gideon. But theſe Writers are certainly miſtaken in their Chronology, and Sanchoniatho muſt be of a much later Date, ſince he ſpeaks of Tyre, which was built but 91 Years before the Deſtruction of Troy, as a very antient City. He muſt therefore have lived, as Suidas thinks, ſome conſiderable Time after that War, but the number of Years we cannot preciſely determine. If what is ſaid of Sanchoniatho be true, viz. that he dedicated his Book to Abibal King of Tyre, who was Hiram's [c] Origen, in Job. [d] Gal. vi. 15. [e] Epiſt. 127. ad Fabiol. [f] Lib. 4. adverſus Chriſtian. [g] Lib. 1. Præparat. Evangel. [h] Lib. 2. de curat. Græcar. affect. p. 28.

Fathers,

Father, and Solomon's Ally, he muſt have been Contemporary with David, who did not begin his Reign till ſeveral Years after the Trojan War. He compiled the Phœnician Hiſtory, according to Porphyry, from the antient Monuments and Memoirs which were imparted to him by one Hierombalus a Prieſt, whom Bochart, Huetius, and ſome others take to be Gideon, he being in the Book of Judges ſometimes named Jerobaal. But this Conjecture is refuted by others[1]. He is ſaid to have likewiſe made uſe of the Regiſters of the Cities of Phœnicia, which he found lodged in the Temples, and to have carefully ſought out, as Philo Biblius informs us, the Writings of Taaut, knowing him to have been the firſt Inventor of Letters, and the ſame whom the Egyptians call Thoth, the Greeks Hermes, and the Latins Mercury. He wrote alſo the Hiſtory of Egypt, and another Book of the Coſmogony and Theogony of the Phœnicians. Theſe Works were tranſlated out of the Phœnician into the Greek Tongue by Philo Biblius, a famous Grammarian, who lived in the Reigns of Veſpaſian, Titus, Domitian, Trajan, and Adrian. Philo digeſted them into nine Books, though Porphyry mentions but eight, perhaps not counting, as Bochart conjectures, his Coſmogony and Theogony. He begins his Hiſtory with the Origin of the World, and of Mankind: but, his Work being apparently written with a Deſign to apologize for Idolatry, inſtead of deducing the Hiſtory, as Moſes hath done, from Adam in the Line of Seth, the Worſhippers of the true God, he has, according to the Hypotheſis of Biſhop Cumberland, given us that of the idolatrous Line of Cain, that the Religion which this Author, or thoſe he tranſcribed, patronized, might appear to be introduced by the elder Branch, a Circumſtance which, they might think, gave it no ſmall Luſtre and Reputation. In the few Fragments of his Works that are remaining, we might be juſtly ſurprized to find not ſo much as the leaſt Mention of the Deluge, did we not conſider that Deſtruction was a Judgment on the idolatrous World, with which the Profeſſors of the true Religion probably reproached the Heathens, and which the latter were therefore deſirous to conceal, and to bury, if poſſible, the very Memory of ſo extraordinary a Monument of Divine Vengeance and their own Shame. Biſhop Cumberland, ſuſpecting, with a great deal of Reaſon, the Phœnician Records, where they deliver the Pedigree of Cain's Line, to have been corrupted, propoſes an Amendment of them; for which we refer the Reader to that learned Prelate's Book on Sanchoniatho, or to Sect. III. Note C of the preſent Hiſtory. We muſt not forget to acquaint the Reader, that ſome Writers have, upon very ſlight Grounds, endeavoured to prove all that has been ſaid of Sanchoniatho to be an arrant Fable; and the Work, which goes under his Name, as well as the Name itſelf, to have been forged by Philo Biblius, in Oppoſition to the Books which Joſephus had wrote not long before againſt Apion. But their Arguments are ſo frivolous, that they ſcarce deſerve an Anſwer.

[1] Vandal n. Diſſer. de Sanchoniath.

tion

MANETHO, an Egyptian by Birth, High-Prieſt and Keeper of the ſacred Records of that Nation, flouriſhed in the Reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, by whoſe Order he undertook the Hiſtory of Egypt, tranſlating out of the Egyptian Language, into the Greek, the ſacred Regiſters that were committed to his Care. This Work he divided into three Parts, whereof the Firſt contained the Hiſtory of the Gods; the Second that of the Demi-gods; and the Third the Dynaſties, which ended in Nectanebus, the laſt king of Egypt, who was driven out by Ochus in the 107th Olympiad, a few Years before the Conqueſt of Perſia by Alexander. Beſides his Hiſtory of Egypt, he wrote ſeveral other Books, viz, one of the Theology of the Egyptians, commonly ſtiled the holy Book; one of the antient and religious Ceremonies of the Egyptians, called by Porphyry, the Book of Antiquity and Piety; one of Phyſic; and one concerning the Manner of preparing paring Incenſe to be uſed by the Egyptian Prieſts.: The two latter Books are aſcribed by Suidas to another Manetho, by Birth a Mendeſian; but his Authority in Matters of this Nature is little to be depended upon. He likewiſe wrote ſix Books in Verſe on the Influence and Power of the Stars, which he dedicated to Ptolemy Philadelphus. This Piece is ſtill extant, and was publiſhed in the Original Greek, with a Latin Explanation and Notes by Gronovius in 1698, from the only Manuſcript that was remaining, and lodged in the Medicean Library at Florence. To this Work Paulinus Nolanus alludes in the following Verſes:

Nunc tria miremur texentem fata Platonem,
Aut Arati numeros, aut picta Manæthonis aſtra.

He publiſhed alſo a Book of the Jews, which Joſephus refutes in his firſt Book againſt Apion, as filled with fabulous Accounts. Of all his Works, except his Aſtronomy, there are now but a few Fragments remaining in Africanus, Euſebius, and Syncellus. The Credit of this Author has been called in queſtion by ſeveral Writers, not only on account of the incredible Antiquity to which his Hiſtory is ſuppoſed to have aſcended, but from the Account which, it is ſaid, he himſelf gave of the Records from whence he took it, pretending to have extracted it from certain Pillars in the Syriadic Land, on which Inſcriptions had been made in the ſacred Dialect and Letters by Thoth, the firſt Hermes, and were tranſlated, after the Flood, out of the ſacred Dialect into Greek, and laid up by Agathodæmon, the Son of the ſecond Hermes, the Father of Tat, in the inner Receſſes of the Egyptian Temples. Now it is impoſſible, that the firſt Hermes, who lived in the earlieſt Years of the Egyptian Monarchy, could write a hiſtory of ſo many Generations, which came into the World after his Death; and if Manetho could aſſert this, it muſt neceſſarily have overthrown the Credit of his whole Work. But we do not think that Writer could mean any ſuch Thing; the Words cited from from him do not ſay, he took his whole Hiſtory from thoſe Pillars; though he might probably quote thoſe Records to ſupport the antient Hiſtory, which preceded the Time of Thoth, and ſuch Pillars, or at leaſt ſome Pillars of great Antiquity, and by the Prieſts attributed to Thoth, muſt have been extant in the Days of Manetho, or he could never have appealed to them in ſo publick a Manner, eſpecially in writing to his Prince. The ſtronger Prejudice againſt the Credit of this Writer, ariſes from his Chronology. The Egyptians, it is true, pretended to an exceſſive Antiquity, and to have certain Records for a prodigious length of Time paſt. This appears not only from the old Egyptian Chronicle, but from the extravagant Numbers of Years their Prieſts impoſed upon Herodotus, Plato, and Diodorus; but Manetho ſeems to have been much more modeſt, though the Sum of his 32 Dynaſties, from Menes to fifteen Years before Alexander, (without taking the Reigns of the Gods and Demigods into the Account) if caſt up, will amount to above 5300 Years, which will reach higher than the Creation of the World; and Joſeph Scaliger has accordingly ſettled their Chronology in ſuch manner, that, by his own Way of reckoning, it exceeds the Epoch of the Creation 1336 Years. After Cambyſes had carried away the Egyptian Records, the Prieſts, in all Probability, to ſupply their Loſs, and keep up their Pretences to Antiquity, began to write new Records, wherein they not only neceſſarily made great Miſtakes, but added a good deal of their own Invention, eſpecially as to diſtant Times. From theſe Materials, for want of better, Manetho collecting this Hiſtory, muſt have intermixed a good deal of Fable, as there is indeed in the Antiquities of all Nations; ſince it cannot be expected, that People could have begun to keep Records till ſome Ages after their Settlement. It is unjuſt therefore to lay the whole Blame of the Confuſion and Uncertainty, we find in the Egyptian Hiſtory, at the Door of Manetho: He collected, for ought we know, faithfully from the Records he had, and we have ſo little genuine Remains of him, and what we have has been ſo mangled by Tranſcribers and Pretenders to correct him, that they ſcarcely bear any Reſemblance of that antient and venerable Hiſtorian. Several antient Writers of good Judgment, as Plutarch, Porphyry, Euſebius, and Joſephus, looked upon him as a Writer, whoſe Authority was to be depended on; and the curious Fragment tranſcribed from him by Joſephus, before his Copies had been corrupted, ſeems to confirm this good Opinion, being the moſt valuable and authentick Piece of Egyptian Hiſtory, of ſo great Antiquity, that is extant, and the Series of Kings, which we have thence exhibited Book I. Chap. III. Sect. III. is a pretty exact one, connecting the Egyptian and Grecian Hiſtories, by acquainting us, that Sethoſis was Ægyptus, and his Brother Armais Danaus.

BEROSUS, by Birth a Chaldean, flouriſhed under Antiochus Soter, or his Son Antiochus Theos, and not in the Time of Moſes, as ſome, groſsly miſtaken, have imagined. For he dedicated his Work to Antiochus, the third King after Alexander, as Tatian informs us, that is, to Antiochus Theos; Alexander was ſucceeded by Seleucus Nicanor; Seleucus Nicanor by Antiochus Soter; and he by his Son Antiochus Theos. He tells us himſelf in his firſt Book of the Hiſtory of Babylon, that he was born during the Minority of Alexander the Great. He wrote in Three Books the Chaldean and Babylonian Hiſtory, which took in that alſo of the Medes. Pliny tells us [a], that his Hiſtory contains the events of 480 Years. But of that Work we have now remaining only ſome few Fragments quoted by Joſephus in his Books againſt Apion, and by Alexander Polyhiſtor; for the Beroſus, publiſhed by Annius of Viterbo, is, without all Doubt, a ſpurious Piece. Joſephus ſays, that he agreed with Moſes in his Accounts of the Deluge, the Fall of Man, the Ark, in which the Reſtorer of Mankind was ſaved; and adds, that he mentions the Deſcendants of Noah, and their reſpective Ages, to Nabulaſſar, King of Babylon; bylon; and that, relating the Actions of that Prince, he ſpeaks of the taking and burning of Jeruſalem by his Son Nebuchadonoſor; on which Occaſion, ſays he, the Jews were carried Captives to Babylon; whence enſued the Deſolation of that City for 70 Years, till the Reign of Cyrus. He is quoted by Pliny, Tatian, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Vitruvius, and Euſebius, which ſhews him to have been a Writer of good Authority. In the Series he gives us of the ten Kings, whom he ſuppoſes to have reigned at Babylon before the Flood, there are ſome ſmall Variations in the Authors, who have tranſcribed that Hiſtorian, which has induced us to exhibit them to the Reader's View, Book I. Chap. I. Sect. V. of the preſent Hiſtory. As theſe ten Succeſſions exactly anſwer the ten Generations from the Creation to the Flood, the firſt King by Name Alorus, has been ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Adam, as Xiſuthrus, the laſt in the Series, plainly appears to be Noah. The Reader will find his Account of the Chaldean and Babylonian Coſmogony in the Introduction, and the Subſtance of the few Fragments that are ſtill remaining, and relate to the earlieſt Times, Book I. Chap. I. Sect. V.

[a] Hiſt. Natur. l. 6. c. 55.

To Beroſus we may add Abydenus, who flouriſhed ſome Time after him, and, in many Things, follows him. Abydenus wrote the Hiſtory of the Chaldean Empire, whereof there are but few Fragments remaining in Euſebius, Cyrillus, and Syncellus. In one of theſe Fragments he gives the Names and Reigns of the ten firſt Kings of Chaldea, copied with ſome ſmall Variation from Beroſus, as the Reader may ſee, Book I. Chap I. Sect VI. In another he ſpeaks of the Tower of Babel, and the Confuſion of Languages, agreeable to the Account we have in Holy Writ. Theſe Fragments Scaliger has illuſtrated with learned Notes in his Book, De emendatione temporum. Some confound this Abydenus, with Palæphatus, called alſo Abydenus, from the City of Abydus, the Place of his Birth. Palæphatus was contemporary with Alexander, a favourite vourite Diſciple of Ariſtotle's, and wrote the Hiſtories of Cyprus, Delos, and Arabia.

ERATOSTHENES the Cyrenæan was a Man of eminent Learning, Keeper of the famous Library of Alexandria, and greatly in favour with Ptolemy Euergetes, by whoſe Order he wrote the Hiſtory of the Theban Kings of Egypt, the Catalogue of which has met with a very favourable Reception among the Learned, not only as a Supplement to Manetho, who has entirely omitted that Succeſſion, but as a certain Foundation for fixing the Egyptian Chronology. His Authority has been by ſeveral Writers preferred to that of Manetho, in regard he was not an Egyptian, and took his Liſt from the ſacred Records of Thebes, or had it from the ſacred Scribes there. He has given, together with the Egyptian Names of the Kings, their Interpretation in Greek, which the ſkilled in the Coptic Tongue allow to be juſt in ſome Inſtances; but ſeveral of them are corrupted and unintelligible. This Author wrote a great Number of Books, whereof the Catalogue may be ſeen in Fabricius, Galens, Voſſius, &c. but the only Piece, now remaining entire, is his Deſcription and fabulous Account of the Stars. He ſtarved himſelf thro' Grief for the Dimneſs of his Sight in the 10th or 12th Year of Ptolemy Epiphanes, 196 Years before Chriſt.

In the Hiſtory of Egypt, beſides Manetho, we have chiefly followed Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus. Herodotus, or, as others call him, Erodotus, is the moſt antient Writer among the Greeks, whoſe Works have reached us. There is no Room left to doubt of the Place of his Birth, he himſelf having inſerted, at the Beginning of his Hiſtory, both his Name and Country: This is, ſays he, the Book of Herodotus of Halicarnaſſus. He was alſo ſurnamed the Thurian, having accompanied a Colony, which was ſent from Athens, to ſettle at Thurium, a City of Magna Græcia on the Tarentin Gulf. This happened the third Year of the 83d Olympiad, during the Archonſhip of Callimachus.

limachus. Here, if we believe Pliny [1], he wrote his Hiſtory, being then forty Years old, in the firſt Year of the 84th Olympiad, 310 Years after the Foundation of Rome, and 444 before Chriſt. Before he began his Hiſtory, he travelled all over Greece, Italy, and Egypt, to inquire into the Origin, Traditions, and Records of the Nations he was to write off. His main Deſign was to write the Wars of the Perſians againſt the Greeks, from the Reign of Cyrus to that of Xerxes; but he extended it to the Hiſtory of other Nations, namely, of the Lydians, Egyptians, and Scythians. This Hiſtory he divided into nine Books, giving to each of them the Name of one of the nine Muſes; wherein he has ſince been followed by Cephalion, Bion, the Rhetorician, and P. Aurelius Opilius; tho' ſome are of Opinion, that his Books were not by himſelf diſtinguiſhed with thoſe Titles, but by the Admirers of his Performance. He recited his Hiſtory, as Lucian informs us, on the publick Theatre at Olympia to a crowded Auditory of the chief Men of all Greece, met to celebrate the Olympic Games, and was more admired even than thoſe who carried the Prizes. Euſebius ſays, that this happened, not at Olympia, but at Athens, on the Feſtival of the Panathenæa. On this Occaſion it was that Thucydides, tho' then eighty Years old, was ſo touched with Emulation, that he reſolved to undertake the writing of an Hiſtory, and ſtrive to equal or excel Herodotus. The Hiſtory of Herodotus has been propoſed by Tully, Hortenſius, Quintilian, and all the beſt Judges of Antiquity, as a Pattern to all Hiſtorians. As for the Truth of his Accounts, we muſt own, that it has been called in queſtion by Men of no mean Character. Cteſias doubts the Truth of what he writes concerning the Medes and Aſſyrians; but we ſhall prove hereafter this Hiſtorian leſs worthy of Credit than Herodotus. Manetho cenſures him, for advancing many Falſities, with regard to the Egyptian Hiſtory; which Charge is not quite groundleſs, ſince he himſelf owns, that what he relates to have happened before the Reign of Pſammitichus, and on the Credit of others, is far from certain. But none ever attacked with more Virulency, if we may be alowed the Expreſſion, the Credit of Herodotus, than Plutarch, whoſe Judgment would be of great Weight, had he not himſelf declared, that the Reputation of his Country had engaged him in the Diſpute. Herodotus relates, that, in the Expedition of Xerxes, the Thebans, to conſult their own Safety, abandoned the Common Cauſe, and joined the Perſians. Tho' this was matter of Fact, and Demoſthenes afterwards reproached the Thebans with it, yet Plutarch, who was a Native of Chæroneæa, a Theban City, could not bear the baſe Behaviour of his Countrymen to be tranſmitted to Poſterity, but vented his Reſentment againſt the Publiſher of their Cowardice in a Book wrote for that Purpoſe, and entituled, Of the Malignity of Herodotus. But his Exceptions are either trifling, or turn upon Facts, which Herodotus himſelf delivers as doubtful. Beſides, he betrays throughout the whole Work a great deal of Paſſion, Prejudice, and Ill-nature. On the other ſide, all Greece, by their ſolemn Approbation, gave an ample Teſtimony of his Veracity, at a Time when moſt of the Tranſactions, which he deſcribes, were very well known. In his whole Work there appears an Air of Sincerity, which even his enemies have been forced to acknowledge: He examines the Truth of the Facts which he relates, and for the moſt part acquaints his Readers, with what others have ſaid on the ſame Subject. When he relates extraordinary Events, he tells us, that he copied them from others, and declares which he believes, and which he ſuſpects, adding, as it is ſaid; as I have been told; this does not at all ſeem probable; thoſe, who feign ſuch Stories, relate, &c. He often repeats, that what he relates ought not to be depended on, any farther than it appears probable; that the Character of an Hiſtorian obliges him to relate what he had heard, but that the Readers are not bound to believe whatever he has been told. As to the Lydian Hiſtory, which ſome look upon as fabulous, it cannot be denied, but that he was acquainted with the Tranſactions of that Nation, which bordered on the Aſiatick Greek Cities, in one of which Herodotus was born, not above 60 Years after the Deſtruction of the Lydian Empire. He ſeems very ſincere in his Egyptian Hiſtory; for he ingenuouſly owns, that all he relates before the Reign of Pſammitichus is uncertain, and that he reports the early Tranſactions of that Nation on the Credit of the Egyptian Prieſts, on which he did not much depend. His Hiſtory of the Aſſyrians and Medes does not at all agree with that which the modern Chronologiſts have followed; but moſt of the Antients have preferred Herodotus to all others. In his Hiſtory of Perſia he differs in many Particulars from Xenophon's Cyropædia; but we muſt obſerve with Tully, that the Cyropædia is rather an inſtructive Piece, than an Hiſtory. The Chronology of Herodotus is far from being exact, eſpecially with relation to the Egyptian Affairs, extravagant Numbers of Years having been impoſed upon him, as well as upon Diodorus and Plato, by the Egyptian Prieſts, who piqued themſelves mightily on the Antiquity of their Nation. Herodotus wrote other Books beſides the Hiſtory now extant; for Ariſtotle [m] finds fault with him for ſaying that an Eagle drank during the Siege of Nineveh, whereas no Bird with hooked Talons, as that Philoſopher affirms, ever drinks. This Paſſage is not to be found in his Works now extant, which has made ſome Authors imagine, that Ariſtotle quoted it from the Hiſtory of Aſſyria, which, in two Places of his firſt Book, he promiſed to write. But, if he had ever publiſhed it, we can ſcarcely believe, that none of the Antients would have ſo much as mentioned it. It is more likely, that his preſent Hiſtory was more compleat in Ariſtotle's Time, than it is now; or even that Ariſtotle thro' Miſtake quoted Herodotus inſtead of ſome other Author, whereof we have Inſtances in other antient Writers. Some aſcribe to Herodotus dotus the Life of Homer, which in moſt Editions is annexed to his Hiſtory; but the Diverſity of Stile, and the Diſagreement between Herodotus and the Author of that Piece, plainly evince theſe two Works to have been penned by different Hands. We refer the Reader for farther particulars concerning Herodotus, to Henry Stephens, Joachimus Camerarius, and Montfaucon in his Book on Judith.

1 Lib. 12. c. 4.

to

[m] Lib. viii. de Anima. c. 18.

Diodorus Siculus was born at Argyrium, or Agyrium, a Town of Sicily, and thence called Siculus, or the Sicilian. He flouriſhed under Julius Cæſar and Auguſtus, and began his Hiſtory after the Death of the former, as he himſelf informs us [n]. He travelled with no ſmall Danger over great Part of Europe, Aſia, and all Egypt, to acquaint himſelf with the Geography of the Places, as well as the Cuſtoms and Manners of the Inhabitants. He wrote a General Hiſtory from the earlieſt Times to the 180th Olympiad, that is, to Cæſar's War with the Gauls. This Hiſtory he intituled the Bibliotheque or Library, having copied his Accounts from the Writers of different Nations, who flouriſhed before. In his Hiſtory of the Egyptians, Aſſyrians, Medes, Perſians, Greeks, Carthaginians, Sicilians, and Rhodians, he follows Herodotus, Cteſias, Beroſus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Philiſtus, Calliſthenes, Theopompus Chius, &c. in what relates to the Macedonians, he depends on Cardianus and Marſias; in his Hiſtory of Crete he quotes Epimenides, Dorſiadas, Soſicrates, and Laoſthenides: Of the forty Books of his Hiſtory, fifteen only are now remaining, viz. the five firſt, the eleventh, and the following to the twentieth. The four firſt Books comprehend the Theology and Hiſtories, preceding the Trojan War, of the Egyptians, Babylonians, Chaldeans, Indians, Scythians, Arabians, Æthiopians, Africans, and Greeks. This Part is interwoven with many Fables, which however were believed by thoſe Nations, whoſe Hiſtories he writes. In the 5th Book he gives an Account of the Origin and Antiquities of the greater Iſlands. The five five following Books contained the Antiquities of all the Eaſtern Nations, the Origins of the Greeks and Romans, and the moſt remarkable Tranſactions that happened in any Part of the World, from the taking of Troy to the Expedition of Xerxes into Greece. The 11th Book begins with the Expedition of Xerxes into Greece, and ends in the Year which preceded the Expedition of the Athenians into Cyprus under the Conduct of Cimon. The five following Books continue the Hiſtory of all Nations to the Time of Philip King of Macedon, whoſe Exploits are related in the 16th, as thoſe of his Son Alexander in the 17th, and of his Succeſſors to the Death of Antigonus in the three next. In the other twenty Books our Author purſued the Hiſtory of all Nations, from the Death of Antigonus, which happened in the 119th Olympiad, to Cæſar's War with the Gauls, that is, to the 180th Olympiad. The 11th Book and the following were written in the Nature of Annals, with the Names of the Athenian Archons and Roman Conſuls to each Year. But Diodorus is not ſo exact in his Computations, with regard to the Roman Affairs, as could be wiſhed; for he places the Beginning of Xerxes's War in the firſt Year of the 75th Olympiad, which, according to him, concurred with the Conſulſhip of Spurius Caſſius and Proclus Virginius Tricoſtus; but theſe had been Conſuls ſix Years before, and thoſe of that Year were Cæſo Fabius the ſecond time, and Spurius Furius Fuſus; a Miſtake which is continued thro' the whole Sequel of his Annals. In the Affairs of Egypt he was likewiſe greatly impoſed upon, as to the Numbers of Years, by the Egyptian Prieſts.

[n] Lib. 5. p. 208.

In the Hiſtory of the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, &c. we chiefly follow the Scripture and Joſephus, from whom however we diſſent, when he takes the Liberty, as he frequently does, to diſſent from holy Writ. Joſephus wrote his hiſtory of the Jewiſh War and Deſtruction of Jeruſalem firſt in Hebrew, or, as ſome ſay [o], in Syro-Chaldaic, for the Uſe of his own own Nation, and afterwards tranſlated it into Greek about the ſeventh Year of the Reign of the Emperor Veſpaſian, to whom he dedicated it. This Work was, by the Emperor's Order, placed in the publick Library at Rome, and the Author, as Euſebius and St. Jerom inform us [f], diſtinguiſhed with a Statue, an Honour conferred upon very few. Beſides his Hiſtory he wrote twenty Books of the Jewiſh Antiquities, which he dedicated to Epaphroditus his great Patron. In theſe Books he gives us the Hiſtory of the Jews from their firſt Origin to the 12th Year of Nero, when they began to ſhake off the Roman Yoke. This Work, as Joſephus himſelf informs us, was compleated in the 13th Year of Domitian, that is, in the 93d of Chriſt. In his Chronology he often diſagrees both with the Septuagint, and the Writers of other Nations; nay, he is frequently inconſiſtent with himſelf, which we may impute to the Careleſneſs and Ignorance of his Tranſcribers, ſeeing there appears ſuch a Diſagreement between the antient Manuſcripts of the ten laſt Books of his Antiquities and the printed Copies, that ſome have imagined [g] him to have left two different ones. The Veracity of this Writer, eſpecially in the Books of his Antiquities, has been often call'd in queſtion; and truly, his Accounts ſometimes not only vary from holy Writ, but are diametrically oppoſite to what we read in the Hiſtory of Moſes and the Prophets, and this after having ſolemnly proteſted, that his Deſign was to add nothing of his own, but faithfully to tranſcribe, without the leaſt Alteration, what he found in the ſacred Records of his Nation. He wrote alſo two Books againſt Apion, who, in the third and fourth Books of his Egyptian Hiſtory, had defamed and traduced the Jews. In this Work he ſhews himſelf converſant not only in the Hiſtory of his own, but of all other Nations, and to have peruſed, as St.

[o] Sam. Baſnagius, Exercit. in Baronium.

[f] Euſeb. l. 3. Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. & Hieron. c. 13. catalog.
[g] Emericus Bigot. epiſtolæ Reineſii ad Boſium, p. 381.

Jerom

Jerom expreſſes it [r], all the Libraries of the Greeks. This Book likewiſe Joſephus dedicated to Epaphroditus, whence it is manifeſt, that it was publiſhed before the 95th Year of Chriſt, for in that Year Epaphroditus was, by Order of Domitian, put to Death. Beſides his Hiſtory and Antiquities, he wrote the Hiſtory of his own Life; and, according to ſome, a Diſcourſe on the Empire of Reaſon, in Commendation of the ſeven Maccabees; a Book alſo againſt the Greeks, namely againſt Plato, is aſcribed to him; but it is uncertain, whether he was the Author of the two latter, ſome affirming, ſome denying, him to have wrote them.

In our Hiſtory of the antient Syrians, we have had always before our Eyes the Books of the Kings, the Chronicles, and the Prophets, and have left Joſephus and the profane Hiſtorians, where they ſeem to contradict holy Writ, but at the ſame time acquainting the Reader in our Notes with their various Opinions, and the Reaſons that are alledged to ſupport them. The Hiſtory of the Phœnicians we have taken chiefly from Diodorus Siculus, Juſtin, Curtius, Pauſanias, Appian, Oroſius, Plutarch, and from Dius, Menander, and Philoſtrates, as quoted by Joſephus. Dius and Medander wrote the Hiſtory of Phœnice, and are both commended by Joſephus as very exact in their Accounts, having compiled their Hiſtories from the antient Records that were lodged in the Temples. Dius was by Birth a Phœnician, and Menander an Epheſian; the Accounts of both perfectly agreed, as Joſephus often repeats, with Scripture. Beſides the Hiſtory of Phœnice, Menander wrote the Life of Ithobal King of Tyre, wherein he mentioned the Drought that happened in Ahab's Reign. Philoſtrates likewiſe wrote the Hiſtory of Phœnice, and, as Joſephus informs us, gave an exact Account of the Siege of Tyre.

[r] Epiſt. 84. ad Mag. Orator.

THE Account we give of the Phœnician Kings, from the antient fabulous Hiſtory of the Greeks, is chiefly extracted from Apollodorus. This Writer was by Birth an Athenian, by Profeſſion a Grammarian, Diſciple of Ariſtarchus the Grammarian, and Panætius a Rhodian Philoſopher, who lived in the Reign of Ptolemy Euergetes. He wrote his Hiſtory, which he intituled the Bibliotheque of the Gods, in the Reign of Attalus Philadelphus, King of Pergamus, who died in the third Year of the 160th Olympiad, that is, 138 Years before Chriſt. Of this Work there are now but three Books remaining, tho' there is no doubt but it contained ſeveral others; for Macrobius quotes the 14th, Hermolaus the 16th; and Photius tells us, that Sopater, the Sophiſt, handling the ſame Subject, copied ſeveral Paſſages out of this Work, from the firſt to the 24th Book. This Piece, in Scaliger's Opinion, is a very judicious Performance, and tho' moſtly fabulous, yet ſuch as may give us ſome Inſight into antient Hiſtory, the Fables being founded on hiſtorical Truth, and the Perſons ſuch as have exiſted, tho' their Actions be exaggerated or diſguiſed. The ſame Author adds, that we may extract from Apollodorus a more certain and better grounded Chronology, than from the Rhapſodies of Beroaldus; and Voſſius is of Opinion, that by ſeparating the fabulous Stories from real Events, we may form from his Writings a true Hiſtory. He begins with Inachus, who is believed to have founded the Kingdom of the Argivi, in Abraham's Time, and brings his Hiſtory down to the Time of Theſeus Prince of Athens. The Books that are loſt reached to the 1040th Year after the Trojan War, or to the 258th Olympiad.

IN the Hiſtory of the Jews we have followed the Scripture and Joſephus, where he agrees with the Sacred Hiſtory, not neglecting to acquaint the Reader in our Notes with the Traditions of the Rabbies.

THE Hiſtory of the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, and Babylonians we have likewiſe delivered agreeable to what we we have found in Scripture relating thereto. We have rejected, as an arrant Fable, the Aſſyrian Hiſtory of Cteſias; but as it has been, we may ſay, from all Antiquity admitted into the Body of Hiſtory, we ſhall here give ſome Account of that Writer. Cteſias was a Native of Cnidos, and accompanied Cyrus in his Expedition againſt his Brother Artaxerxes, on which Occaſion he was taken Priſoner; but, having cured Artaxerxes of a Wound he received in the Battle, he became a great Favourite at the Court of Perſia, where he continued practiſing Phyſic for the Space of 17 Years. Thus far Diodorus Siculus. Photius likewiſe informs us, that he flouriſhed in the Time of Cyrus, the ſon of Darius and Brother of Artaxerxes, who poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom of Perſia. Strabo, ſpeaking of the great Men of Cnidos, mentions Cteſias, who, ſays he, cured Artaxerxes; and Xenophon who was his Contemporary, tells us, that Cteſias of Cnidos was a Phyſician, and, being taken Priſoner, dreſſed the Wound, which Artaxerxes received in the Engagement. He was employed, as he himſelf witneſſes, by Artaxerxes in Negotiations with the King of Salamis, with Conon, and the Lacedemonian Embaſſadors; which ſhews what Credit he was in at the Court of that Prince. Cteſias wrote the Hiſtory of Perſia in 23 Books, whereof the firſt Six contain the Hiſtory of the Aſſyrians and Medes, the other Seventeen the whole Hiſtory of Perſia, from Cyrus to the Author's Death. He alſo wrote the Hiſtory of the Indies. But theſe Works are loſt, and all we have remaining of them is an Abridgment compiled by Photius, which is alſo imperfect, he having omitted the Hiſtory of the Aſſyrians and Medes. However, we have that Hiſtory too abridged in Diodorus, and the Names of the Kings, which Diodorus left out, carefully ſet down by Euſebius and Syncellus. Cteſias has always been looked upon, by the moſt judicious among the antients, as a fabulous Writer. Ariſtotle, who was almoſt his Contemporary, declares him a Writer unworthy of Credit. Antigonus Cariſtius, who lived in the Time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, ſays, that he frequently lyes, and relates what is altogether incredible. Plutarch, in his Life of Artaxerxes, calls him a vain Man, and a notorious Lyar. Lucian charges him with relating in his Indica what he had never ſeen or heard; and truly, whoever peruſes that Work, muſt immediately conclude him to have been a Man of no Sort of Sincerity. His Hiſtory of Aſſyria is moſt evidenly calculated to aſtoniſh, amaze, and to ſtrain Credulity beyond all poſſible Bounds. His Liſt of the Aſſyrian Kings ſeems to be a groſs Forgery, it being a Medley of Greek, Perſian, Egyptian, and other Names. Again, in all long Liſts of Kings, the ſame Names, or ſome bearing a near reſemblance to them, are obſerved often to recur. But the Names in Cteſias are not alone what may prompt us to pronounce him guilty of Forgery; the Length of the Reigns may be urged as another Argument againſt him; except it be anſwered, that in thoſe very early Days, ſo nearly bordering on the Times of the Deluge, ſuch Length is not to be wondered at. But this would be no Anſwer at all; for at leaſt three fourths of them muſt have lived, when the Life of Man was reduced to its preſent Standard. But yet, ſeveral of the antient Hiſtorians, and, what is more ſurprizing, of the modern Chriſtian Writers, have blindly followed him in Oppoſition to Scripture, Heroditus, and other more undoubted Authorities. Diodorus Siculus tranſcribed him; Cephaleon, Caſtor, Trogus, Velleius Paterculus have copied ſeveral Accounts from him. Julius Africanus, Euſebius and Syncellus have adopted, in part, his Chronology of the Aſſyrian Kings, wherein they have been followed by moſt of the modern Chronologers.

of

We ſhall now give a ſuccinct Account of ſeveral Authors quoted by us, with whom perhaps every Reader may not be acquainted. Theſe are,

Zoroaſter, a Bactrian, whom ſome ſuppoſe to have been contemporary with Nimrod, and the King of the Bactrians. Cluverius takes him for Adam; Procopius, Gazeus, Gazeus, and Epiphanius, for Abraham; Huetius for Moſes; Gregory of Tours for Shem, &c. We are in no leſs Uncertainty as to the Time wherein he flouriſhed; Epiphanius making him contemporary with Nimrod, Eujebius with Semiramis, and Apuleius with Cyrus and Cambyſes. Plato calls him the moſt antient of all the Perſian Sages: Eudoxus, Pliny, and Hermippus tell us, that he lived five thouſand Years before the Trojan War: Xanthus of Lydia, according to the Teſtimony of Laertius, reckons but 600 Years from Zoroaſter to Xerxes. As to his Works, Hermippus ſays, that he wrote two Millions of Verſes. Suidas gives us the Titles of ſome of his Works, viz. Four Books of Nature, one of precious Stones, and five of Aſtronomical Predictions. Euſebius quotes a Paſſage from his Sacred Hiſtory of Perſia, containing an excellent Deſcription of the Divine Attributes. Theodorus of Mopſueſtia, treating of the Magic of the Perſians, produces Zoroaſter's Hypotheſis, admitting two Principles. Proclus collected the pretended Oracles of Zoroaſter in 280 Hexameter Verſes. He is ſaid to have been the Inventor of Magic among the Eaſtern Nations; but by Magic nothing was meant in thoſe Days beſides Phyſic and Theology, as Naudæus proves with very convincing Arguments.

Mochus, or Moſchus, a Sidonian, lived before the Trojan War, as Strabo informs us, and wrote the Hiſtory of Phœnice. He is quoted by Joſephus in the firſt Book of his Antiquities, by Athenæus, and Tatian, who names two other Phœnician Writers, viz. Theodotus and Hiſicrates. His Hiſtory was tranſlated into Greek by Chætus, or Lætus; but we have now only a few Fragments of it remaining in the above-mentioned Writers.

ALEXANDER POLYHISTOR, a celebrated Writer in the Reign of Ptolemy Lathyrus, and by Sylla carried Captive to Rome, wrote a great many Hiſtories, as his Name witneſſes, and among others thoſe of India and Egypt. Clement of Alexandria quotes a Book of his concerning the Jews, wherein were inſerted ſerted Solomon's Letters to the Egyptian and Phœnician Kings, with their reſpective Anſwers. Euſebius alſo recites a Fragment of the ſame Author, relating to the Jews [f].

ORPHEUS, ſurnamed the Librethian, was a Thracian, and is famous among the Antients, not only for Poetry and Muſic, but alſo for Theology. He is ſaid to have been the firſt that taught the Greeks the Egyptian Myſteries. Clement of Alexandria ſays, that Homer borrowed ſeveral Paſſages from his Poems. The Antients mention many Pieces that were under his Name, ſome of which are ſtill extant, viz. an Epic Poem, entitled, The Argonautics; 86 Hymns; a Poem on precious Stones and their Virtues, and ſeveral Fragments of other Works, aſcribed to him by Proclus, Tzetzes, and other Writers. Plato mentions the Hymns of this Author in his eighth Book of Laws: Stobæus and Suidas aſcribe the Hymns to Onomacritus, and others, with Clement of Alexandria, to Pythagoras. We alſo find ſeveral Verſes cited by Juſtin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, Euſebius, and Theodoret, out of the Teſtament of Orpheus; but the bare reading of them will convince us, that they are the Performance of a more modern Writer.

NEITHER have Euſebius, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine, Africanus, and Syncellus, been excluded from our Hiſtory. In their Time the Libraries of Greece were furniſhed with excellent Manuſcripts, which have been ſince loſt. From them they made their Collections; and we may judge of their Sincerity by the Authors which remain, and which they have faithfully quoted; ſo that where other Writers were at a loſs, they have often put us in the way in our Purſuit of Truth.

IN the Deſcriptions of Countries we have chiefly followed, among the Antients, Strabo, Ptolemy, and Dionyſius Periegetes. Strabo flouriſhed under Auguſtus and Tiberius, and viſited moſt of the Places which he deſcribes; whence his Deſcriptions are very exact, if we except thoſe of Germany, wherein he depended on the Relations

[f] Euſeb. Præpar. Evang l. 9.

Relations of others. He publiſhed ſeveral Works; but his XVII Books of Geography are the only that have reached us. In theſe he not only deſcribes the Situation of the Places, but often the Manners, Cuſtoms, Laws, and Religions of the Inhabitants.

PTOLEMY was of Peluſium in Egypt, and flouriſhed in the Reign of M. Aurelius Antoninus. In his Geography he followed Marinus Tyrius who was almoſt his Contemporary. He is often miſtaken as to the Degrees of Longitude and Latitude, and ſometimes ſpeaks of Cities, which had been deſtroyed many Years, not to ſay Ages, before his Time, as ſtill extant. Moſt of his Miſtakes have been carefully corrected by Ortelius, and Gherardus Mercator, Cluverius, Velſerius, and others. His Canon is ſo exactly agreeable to Scripture Hiſtory, that if this latter could poſſibly ſtand in need of Confirmation, ſo far as it relates to the Hiſtory of the great Empires of the Aſſyrians and Babylonians, nothing could be ſo effectual towards it as this Canon, which has given birth to one of the moſt famous profane Æra's, that of Nabonaſſar, the firſt King in it, and without which there would be the greateſt Obſcurity in the Affairs of theſe People. Nothing is more ſurprizing, than that this moſt noble Monument ſhould have been ſo little examined by the Light naturally reflected on it from the ſacred Pen-men, as not to have extricated the whole Body of Chronologers and Hiſtorians from out of the Labyrinth, they have almoſt all bewildered themſelves in, miſled by the Extravagances of Cteſias, a fabulous Writer, who has been blindly followed by the Antients, and moſt of the Moderns. This Canon takes Date from about the 23d Year of Pul's firſt Appearance on this Side of the Euphrates, about the Year 2252 after the Flood, according to our Computation, and 747 Years before Chriſt; which ſhews the Kingdom of Babylon to have been immediately of Aſſyrian Origin, according to the Prophet [r]: Behold the Land of the CHALDEANS; this

[r] Iſai. 23. 13.

People was not till the Aſſyrian found it for them that dwell in the Wilderneſs; they ſet up the Towers thereof, they raiſed up the Palaces thereof.

DIONYSIUS PERIGETES, born at Charax, a Town ſituated on the Gulph of Arabia, flouriſhed in the Reign of Auguſtus, by whom he was ſent, as Pliny informs us [t], to ſurvey the Eaſtern Countries, namely Armenia, Parthia, and Arabia. His Geographical Deſcription of the World was originally wrote in Greek Verſe, and tranſlated into Latin Verſe by Rufus Feſtus, Avienus, and Priſcian. Euſtathius, Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, wrote in Greek a learned Commentary on this Work.

Thus we have taken the Materials to compoſe theſe Volumes from the pureſt Sources of Antiquity. However, we muſt own that, as to the Hiſtory of antient Times, and the Original of particular Nations, we have not been able to give ſuch ſatisfactory Accounts as we could wiſh, not one of the Hiſtories of thoſe antient Nations, whom the Grecians called Barbarians, written by the Natives, or extracted immediately from their Records, having reached us. What Fragments of them have been preſerved here and there in other Writers, we have connected together, filling up the Chaſms of one Writer with the Teſtimony of another, and melting down together the moſt precious Metals of Antiquity, in order to form a new one leſs precious indeed, but, perhaps, more ſerviceable.

But as the Authors, that we have had Occaſion to follow, or even to tranſcribe, are ſuch as have tranſmitted to us Accounts of the earlieſt Times, we muſt here, in a few Words, remove the Prejudices which ſome Criticks have raiſed againſt the profane Writers in general, who have treated of the original and early Antiquities of Nations. In moſt Nations, ſay they, Poets were the firſt Hiſtorians, who of Courſe interſperſed their Accounts with a thouſand Fables. From ſuch infected Sources the Hiſto-

[t] Lib. 5. c. 27.

rians

rians in after-Ages, for want of better Materials, copied, and conſequently deſerve no more Credit than thoſe they tranſcribed.

To anſwer this Objection, we muſt with Varro divide the whole Series of Time into three Periods; the firſt, from the Beginning of the World to the Deluge; the ſecond, from the Deluge to the firſt Olympiad; and the third, from the firſt Olympiad to the preſent. The firſt Period he calls an Age entirely unknown; and truly we find nothing in profane Hiſtorians, relating to that Time, which has any Appearance of Truth, if we except two or three, quoted by Joſephus, whoſe Accounts of the Deluge, and the Times preceding it, agree, as he informs us, in many Particulars, with that of Moſes. The ſecond Period Varro ſtiles the fabulous Time, by Reaſon of the many Fables with which the Accounts of it, that have been tranſmitted to Poſterity, are interwoven: The laſt he calls the Hiſtorical Time. Diodorus Siculus extends the fabulous Age no farther than the Trojan War; and indeed from that Time the impenetrable Miſt, which had overcaſt the preceding Ages, begins to clear up, and ſome Rays of Truth to break out. Now to anſwer the Objection, we do not pretend to give any tolerable account of the firſt Ages from profane Authors. In After-Ages, when the Uſe of Letters was introduced, Poets, it is true, are ſaid to have been the firſt Hiſtorians; but we muſt not ſuppoſe whatever they wrote to be a mere Fable; their Groundwork was often Truth, tho' embelliſhed with various Fictions. Thus for inſtance, Homer's Poems ought not to be regarded only as an excellent poetical Performance, but as the moſt antient Hiſtory of Greece; inſomuch that if we had no other Remains of Antiquity, than Homer's Works, to convince us of the Trojan War and the taking of that City, we could not call in queſtion the Truth of that Event. Homer, tho' a Poet, diſcovers to us the State of Greece at that Time; he gives us an Account of their Kings and Generals; deſcribes their States, Cities, and Government; ſhews us, that Greece was divided into ſeveral ſmall Dynaſties, each of which had their reſpective Sovereigns, of which Agamemnon, King of Mycenæ, Sicyon, and Corinth, was the moſt powerful, &c. Theſe and a great many other Events are purely hiſtorical, and confirmed by creditable Hiſtorians; ſo that Homer's Work is both a Poem and a Hiſtory. And what we have inſtanced in one Poet, may in the ſame Manner be applied to others: For tho' their Works were interſperſed with many fabulous Strokes, yet they might have furniſhed a judicious Hiſtorian, that could diſtinguiſh between Truth and Fiction, with good Materials for a Hiſtory: Beſides, it is not to be doubted, but that ever ſince the Uſe of Characters was firſt introduced, Men have left behind them Monuments of ſuch Things as might concern Poſterity; Fathers, what regarded their domeſtic Affairs; Princes and Magiſtrates, what related to the Public. Theſe were the firſt Hiſtories of Mankind, and the moſt antient Hiſtorians have done nothing elſe but digeſt them into a better Form. Thus Manetho compiled his Hiſtory from the Memoirs of Jerombalus, an Egyptian Prieſt; Beroſus from the Regiſters of the Babylonians; Sanchoniatho from thoſe of the Phœnicians, &c. And indeed there is Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that moſt Cities and States had Regiſters, in which from Year to Year they wrote down the moſt remarkable Occurrences, and Archives, wherein they lodged Letters, Treaties, and other Pieces, which might ſerve as Evidences to Poſterity. They alſo tranſmitted the Memory of Things by the Inſtitution of Feſtivals, the building of Cities, erecting of Stones, Pillars, Altars, Tombs, and the like Monuments. The Cuſtom of engraving on Stone is, without doubt, very antient, and the Number of theſe moſt faithful Monuments of Antiquity was almoſt infinite, as is plain from all the antient Hiſtorians, who often appeal to them. From theſe, as well as from the Poets, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the firſt Hiſtorians extracted their Hiſtories, and therefore they deſerve the ſame Credit; nay, the Poets themſelves ſelves often worked upon Materials already prepared, and only put into Verſe what they found regiſtered in the Annals of their Country. But who can warrant that the Prieſts, who in moſt Nations were the firſt Annaliſts, did not through Superſtition inſert many Fictions? Prieſts, zealous for the Worſhip of their Gods, and whoſe Intereſt it was by falſe Prodigies to deceive People, may have ſcattered ſuch up and down in their Accounts, and made their Gods interpoſe in the principal Actions. And in this Point the beſt Hiſtorians have ſuffered themſelves to be impoſed on. But as to the Subſtance of the Narrations in Matters of War, Politicks, new Settlements, Treaties, Deaths of Princes, &c. what Motive could the Prieſts have to be guilty of Forgeries? The relating of Prodigies is an Abuſe, which Superſtition has brought into all the Hiſtories of the World. Has not Credulity inſerted even into the modern Hiſtories a thouſand Prodigies? and are theſe Hiſtories leſs true with reſpect to the great Events?

'Tis true, that moſt of the Monuments of Antiquity are now loſt; but they were in great part extant, when thoſe Hiſtorians wrote, whoſe Works have reached us. Beſides, tho' many of the public Monuments have been deſtroyed by Wars, Time, miſguided Zeal, and other Caſualties, yet they are not all loſt. What few Facts we have ſtill remaining in the moſt antient Writers, furniſh a Stock of Materials, which, with the Help of Criticiſm, whoſe Province it is to diſtinguiſh between Truth and Fiction, may be made uſe of, without Danger of our being impoſed upon. The Fragments of thoſe venerable Hiſtorians, preſerved here and there in other Writers, are like ſo many Rays, which, in the midſt of the Darkneſs thrown over the early Times, ſerve to diſcover a Way through the Ruins.

NEITHER is the Diſagreement of Authors among themſelves any certain Proof that they deſerve no Credit. Oftentimes, with reſpect to Things that have happened in our Days, and almoſt in our Sight, we find a Differenc in the Accounts given by thoſe who were Eye-witneſſes to what they relate. The Particulars of a Battle are not always told the ſame way by thoſe who diſtinguiſhed themſelves in it. The neareſt Objects appear differently, according to the different Views of the Spectators. Imagination, Prejudice, and Partiality often ſet a Bias on Mens Underſtandings, and hence ariſe all thoſe Variations we find in the Writings, which have ſerved as Memoirs to the firſt Hiſtorians of particular Nations. This Diſagreement among Authors has very much encreaſed the Labour of collecting them into one Body: We have often been in Suſpence about the Choice and Preference, and always taken care to relate, at leaſt in the Notes, the Variations we found among different Authors, it not being reaſonable to confine the Reader to our own Sentiments.

An exact Diſtribution of Time is, as it were, the Light of Hiſtory: Without this it would be only a a Chaos of Facts heaped together. An exact Chronology is like Ariadne's Clue, which conducts our Steps through all the Windings of the Labyrinth. By the means of certain fixed Epocha's we perceive the Progreſs of States, the Variations of their Fortunes, and the Changes made in their Government. For this Reaſon we have thought it neceſſary to ſettle the Chronology, and refer the Facts we have collected to their proper Dates. Our general Æra's are, the Creation, the Flood, and the Years before, or after, Chriſt. The Mind being thus Conducted, the Ideas we retain from reading are more diſtinct, and more eaſily fixed in the Memory.

Geography is another eſſential Part of Hiſtory. Every Hiſtorian that neglects it muſt of neceſſity be confuſed in his Relations. We have therefore endeavoured to be exact in the Situation of the Towns, Rivers, Foreſts, Lakes, and Mountains, whither the Courſe of Events has led us. Our Guides in this were not only the Hiſtorians, who are not always very exact, but alſo the moſt eminent Geographers of Antiquity tiquity, whom we have mentioned above; and in doubtful Caſes we have had Recourſe to the Moderns, particularly to Cluverius, Ortelius, Cellarius, and ſuch of the modern Travellers as have ſurveyed the Places, and are generally looked upon as exact and faithful in their Accounts. From all theſe together we have got Maps drawn by a ſkilful Hand, where we thought them neceſſary. Thus the Reader will be able with one Caſt of an Eye to run over the ſeveral Countries which he reads of. There are many Nations, which have not the ſame Limits at this Day, that they had formerly; neither are all Towns, which have antient Names, unqueſtionably ſituated in the very Places, where the Towns of the ſame Name ſtood heretofore. We have therefore choſe rather to deſcribe moſt of the Places, mentioned in our Hiſtory, by their antient Names; but at the ſame time we have conſtantly taken Care to reconcile the antient Geography with the modern in our Notes, and to mark the different Limits of the new Nations and the old.

It is not uſual to publiſh Hiſtories with Notes, or at leaſt to crowd them with ſo great a Number: But tho' no other Hiſtory, perhaps, has need of them, yet they are neceſſary to this which we have undertaken. The Manners, Cuſtoms, Religions, Arms, Dreſs, Governments, &c. of the various Nations we deſcribe, are not only ſo different among themſelves, but from any thing we now ſee, or are acquainted with, that it would have been hardly poſſible to give juſt Ideas of them without Explications, which could not have well been brought into the Text. The Thread of the moſt beautiful Story would have been often broke, and no Point of Hiſtory would have been brought to its Concluſion, but in a languid Manner. It was neceſſary therefore to throw into Notes the great Number of inſtructive Obſervations, without which the Hiſtory would have been imperfect. Beſides, abundance of Diſputes have been raiſed by learned Men upon ſeveral Events, which we are obliged to inform the Public of, in order to make our Work more compleat. But this could not have been, if we had not taken Notice of the Variations of the ſeveral Authors, who have tranſmitted to us the ſame Facts. Hiſtorians often diſagree as to the Circumſtances, and, on the other hand, the Thread of the Hiſtory will not admit but of one way of relating the Event. We have therefore placed in the Body of the Hiſtory what ſeemed to us moſt probable, and the reſt in the Notes, leſt thoſe Readers, who peruſe but one Author, ſhould charge us with Falſhood, if we differed from his Hiſtorian. The Length of ſome of our Notes ought not to frighten the Reader: Every judicious Perſon will perceive, that we have taken Pains to be as conciſe as the Subject will allow us, having often brought, within the compaſs of a few Lines, Diſſertations, with which learned Men have filled large Volumes.

THE Knowledge of the Coins, Weights and Meaſures of the Antients, is neceſſary for the right underſtanding of their Writings, as well as of the preſent Hiſtory, where we could not avoid uſing now and then their Terms and Phraſeology. But as it cannot be expected, that we ſhould enter here into a minute Diſcuſſion of a Subject which has ſupplied Matter to whole Volumes, we ſhall only exhibit ſome Tables, wherein the Value of the antient Coins, Weights, and Meaſures is, with great Care and Exactneſs, reduced by Dr. Arbuthnot, to the Engliſh Standard. Several Writers of great Abilities, namely Biſhop Cumberland, Mr. Graeves, and Dr. Hooper, have with great Learning and Accuracy, handled the ſame Subject: But we have given the Preference to Dr. Arbuthnot's Calculations, by reaſon they are more adapted to the Capacity of every Reader: and, on the other hand, do not differ in any conſiderable Matter from thoſe of the learned Writers we have mentioned. In theſe Tables the Reader will find, 1. The Greek, Roman, and Jewiſh Meaſures of Length. 2. Their Meaſures of Capacity for Things both liquid and dry; and laſtly, Their Money reduced to the Engliſh Standard.

1. ENGLISH

1.

ENGLISH MEASURES of LENGTH.

Inch	Palm	Span.	Foot	Cubit	Yard	Pace	Fathom	Pole	Furlong	Mile
3
9	3
12	4	$1\frac{1}{3}$
18	6	2	$1\frac{1}{2}$
36	12	4	3	2
60	20	$6\frac{2}{3}$	5	$3\frac{1}{3}$	$1\frac{2}{3}$
72	24	8	6	4	2	$1\frac{1}{5}$
198	66	22	$16\frac{1}{2}$	11	$5\frac{1}{2}$	$3\frac{3}{10}$	$2\frac{3}{4}$
7920	2640	880	660	440	220	132	110	40
63360	21120	7040	5280	3520	1760	1056	880	320	8

											Paces. Feet. Inches. Dec.
Dactylus											0—0—0,7554$\frac{11}{16}$
4	Doron or Dochme										0—0—3,02181$\frac{1}{4}$
10	2$\frac{1}{2}$	Lichas									0—0—7,5546$\frac{7}{8}$
11	2$\frac{3}{4}$	1$\frac{1}{11}$	Orthodoron								0—0—8,31011$\frac{9}{16}$
12	3	1$\frac{1}{5}$	1$\frac{1}{11}$	Spithame							0—0—9,0656$\frac{1}{4}$
16	4	1$\frac{6}{10}$	1$\frac{5}{11}$	1$\frac{1}{3}$	Pous						0—1—0,0875
18	4$\frac{1}{2}$	1$\frac{4}{5}$	1$\frac{7}{11}$	1$\frac{1}{2}$	1$\frac{1}{8}$	Pugme					0—1—1,5984$\frac{3}{8}$
20	5	2	1$\frac{9}{11}$	1$\frac{2}{3}$	1$\frac{1}{4}$	1$\frac{1}{9}$	Pugon				0—1—3,10931$\frac{1}{4}$
24	6	2$\frac{2}{5}$	2$\frac{2}{11}$	2	1$\frac{1}{2}$	1$\frac{1}{3}$	1$\frac{1}{5}$	Pechus			0—1—6,13125
96	24	9$\frac{1}{5}$	8$\frac{8}{11}$	8	6	5$\frac{1}{3}$	4$\frac{4}{5}$	4	Orguia		0—6—0,525
9600	2400	960	872$\frac{8}{11}$	800	600	533$\frac{1}{3}$	480	400	100	Stadium or Aulos	—120—4—4,5
76800	19200	7680	6981$\frac{9}{11}$	6400	4800	4266$\frac{2}{3}$	3840	3200	800	8 Milion	—967—0—0

3.

ROMAN MEASURES of LENGTH.

										ENGLISH. Paces. Feet. Inches. Dec.
Digitus tranſverſus										0 - 0 - 0,725 1/5
1 1/3	Uncia									0 - 0 - 0,967
4	3	Palmus minor								0 - 0 - 2,901
16	12	4	Pes							0 - 0 - 11,604
20	15	5	1 1/4	Palmipes						0 - 1 - 2,505
24	18	6	1 1/2	1 1/5	Cubitus					0 - 1 - 5,406
40	30	10	2 1/2	2	1 2/3	Gradus				0 - 2 - 5,01
80	60	20	5	4	3 1/3	2	Paſſus			0 - 4 - 10,02
10000	7500	2500	625	500	416 2/3	250	125	Stadium		120 - 4 - 4,5
80000	60000	20000	5000	4000	3333 1/3	2000	1000	8	Milliare	967 - 0 - 0

4.

SCRIPTURE Meaſures of Length. ENGLISH

								Ft. Inch. Dec.
Digit								0— 0,912
4	Palm							0— 3,648
12	3	Span						0—10,944
24	6	2	Cubit					1— 9,888
96	24	8	4	Fathom				7— 3,552
144	36	12	6	1½	Ezekiel's Reed			10—11,328
192	48	16	8	2	1⅓	Arabian Pole		14— 7,104
1920	480	160	80	20	13⅓	10	Schœnus's meaſuring line	145—11,04

Note. The Eaſt uſed another Span, equal to ⅓ of a Cubit.

5. The

5.

The LONGER SCRIPTURE Measures. ENGLISH.

Cubit					Miles.	Pac.	Ft.	Dec.
					0—	0—	1,824
400	Stadium				0—	145—	4,6
2000	5	Sab. days Journey . .			0—	729—	3,0
4000	10	2	Eaſtern Mile . .		1—	403—	1,0
12000	30	6	3	Paraſang . . .	4—	153—	3,0
96000	240	48	24	8	a Day's Journey .	33—	172—	4,0

6.

ENGLISH SQUARE MEASURES.

Inches
144	Feet
1296	9	Yards
3600	25	$2\frac{7}{9}$	Paces
39204	$272\frac{1}{4}$	$30\frac{1}{4}$	10,89	Poles
1568160	10890	1210	435,6	40	Rood
6272640	43560	4840	1742,4	160	4 Acre

7. ENGLISH

7.

ENGLISH MEASURES of CAPACITY.

Wine Meaſure.

Solid Inches.

$28\frac{7}{8}$									Pint
231	8								Gallon
4158	144	18							Rundlet
$7276\frac{1}{2}$	252	$31\frac{1}{2}$	$1\frac{3}{4}$						Barrel
9702	336	42	$2\frac{1}{3}$	$1\frac{1}{3}$					Tierce
14553	504	63	$3\frac{1}{2}$	2	$1\frac{1}{2}$				Hogſhead
19279	672	84	$4\frac{2}{3}$	$2\frac{2}{3}$	2	$1\frac{1}{3}$			Puncheon
29106	1008	126	7	4	3	2	$1\frac{1}{2}$		Butt
58212	2016	252	14	8	6	4	3	2	Tun

8.

ENGLISH CORN MEASURES,

Are raiſed from a Wincheſter Gallon, which contains $272\frac{1}{4}$ Solid Inches, and, as far as ſerves our Purpoſe, are,

Solid Inches

$34\frac{1}{2}$					Pint
$272\frac{1}{4}$	8				Gallon
544	16	2			Peck
2178	64	8	4		Buſhel
17424	512	64	32	8	Quarter

9. GRECIAN

9.

GERMAN Square Measure.

Plethron, by ſome ſaid to contain 1444, others 10000 Square Feet; Arura, the Half of the Plethron.

The ÆGYPTIAN Arura was the Square of 100 Cubits.

ROMAN Square Measure.

The ROMANS divided their As, Libra, or any Integer, after the following Manner; ſo the Jugerum was reckoned the Integer.

Unciæ.		Jugerum contained Sq. Feet	Scruples.	Engl. Roods.	Sq. Poles.	Sq. Feet.
I	As - - - - - 12	As - - - 28800	- - 288	2 ——	18 ——	250,05
$\frac{11}{12}$	Deunx - - - - 11	Deunx - - 26400	- - 264	2 ——	10 ——	183,85
$\frac{10}{12}$	Dextans - - - 10	Dextans - - 24000	- - 240	2 ——	2 ——	117,64
$\frac{9}{12}$	Dodrans - - - 9	Dodrans - - 21600	- - 216	1 ——	34 ——	51,42
$\frac{8}{12}$	Bes - - - - - 8	Bes - - - 19200	- - 192	1 ——	25 ——	257,46
$\frac{7}{12}$	Septunx - - - 7	Septunx - - 16800	- - 168	1 ——	17 ——	191,25
$\frac{6}{12}$	Semis - - - - 6	Semis - - - 14400	- - 144	1 ——	9 ——	125,03
$\frac{5}{12}$	Quincunx - - - 5	Quincunx - 12000	- - 120	1 ——	1 ——	58,82
$\frac{4}{12}$	Triens - - - 4	Triens - - 9600	- - 96	0 ——	32 ——	264,85
$\frac{3}{12}$	Quadrans - - - 3	Quadrans - - 7200	- - 72	0 ——	24 ——	198,64
$\frac{2}{12}$	Sextans - - - 2	Sextans - - - 4800	- - 48	0 ——	16 ——	132,43
$\frac{1}{12}$	Uncia - - - - 1	Uncia - - - 2400	- - 24	0 ——	8 ——	66,21

NOTE. Actus Major was 14400 Square Feet, equal to a Semis-Clima 3600 Square Feet, equal to a Seſcuncia.
Actus Minimus was equal to a Sextans.

ATTICK MEASURES of CAPACITY for Things LIQUID.
ENGLISH Wine Measure.

								Gall.	Pints.	Sol. Inch.	Dec.
							Kochliarion	0	— $\frac{1}{120}$ —	0,035	$\frac{83}{120}$
2							Cheme	0	— $\frac{1}{60}$ —	0,071	$\frac{23}{60}$
$2\frac{1}{2}$	$1\frac{3}{4}$						Myſron	0	— $\frac{1}{48}$ —	0,089	$\frac{1}{48}$
5	$2\frac{1}{2}$	2					Konche	0	— $\frac{1}{24}$ —	0,178	$\frac{11}{24}$
10	5	4	2				Kyathos	0	— $\frac{1}{12}$ —	0,356	$\frac{23}{12}$
15	$7\frac{1}{2}$	6	3	$1\frac{1}{2}$			Oxybaphon	0	— $\frac{1}{8}$ —	0,535	$\frac{3}{8}$
60	30	24	12	6	4		Kotyle	0	— $\frac{1}{2}$ —	2,141	$\frac{1}{2}$
120	60	48	24	12	8	2	Xeſtes	0	— 1 —	4,283
720	360	288	144	72	48	12	Chus	0	— 6 —	25,698
8640	4320	3456	1728	864	576	144	72 12 Metretes	10	— 2 —	19,626

II.

ATTICK MEASURES of CAPACITY for Things DRY.

							English Corn Measure. Pecks. Gall. Pints. Sol. Inch.
						Kochliarion	0 - 0 - 0 - 0,276$\frac{1}{6}\frac{9}{0}$
						10 Kyathos	0 - 0 - 0 - 2,763$\frac{1}{6}$
						15 $1\frac{1}{2}$ Oxybaphon	0 - 0 - 0 - 4,144$\frac{3}{6}$
						60 6 4 Kotyle	0 - 0 - 0 - 16,579
						120 12 8 2 Xeftes	0 - 0 - 0 - 33,158
						180 18 12 3 $1\frac{1}{2}$ Choinix . . .	0 - 0 - 1 - 15,705$\frac{1}{4}$
						8640 864 576 144 72 48 Medimnos	4 - 0 - 6 - 5,482

Note, 1. Beſides this Medimnus, which is the Medicus, there was a Medimnus Georgicus, equal to ſix Roman Modii.

Note, 2. There are ſome other Meaſures (mentioned by Authors) of uncertain Value, eaſily reducible to thoſe of the Tables.

ROMAN Measures of Capacity for Things Liquid.

										Engliſh Wine Meaſure. Gall.	Pints.	Sol.In. Dec.
									Ligula	0 -	$0\frac{1}{48}$ -	$0,117\frac{5}{12}$
								4	Cyathus	0 -	$0\frac{1}{12}$ -	$0,469\frac{2}{3}$
								6	$1\frac{1}{2}$ Acetabulum	0 -	$0\frac{1}{8}$ -	$0,704\frac{1}{2}$
								12	3 2 Quartarius	0 -	$0\frac{1}{4}$ -	1,409
								24	6 4 2 Hemina	0 -	$0\frac{1}{2}$ -	2,818
								48	12 8 4 2 Sextarius	0 -	1 -	5,636
								288	72 48 24 12 6 Congius	0 -	7 -	4,942
								1152	288 192 96 48 24 4 Urna . . .	3 -	$4\frac{1}{2}$ -	5,33
								2304	576 384 192 96 48 8 2 Amphora .	7 -	1 -	10,66
								46080	11520 7680 3840 1920 960 160 40 20 Culeus .	143 -	3 -	11,075

Note, 1. Quadrantal is the ſame with the Amphora, Cadus, Congiarius and Dolium, and denotes no certain Meaſure.
Note, 2. The Romans divided the Sextarius, as the Libra, into twelve equal Parts, called Cyathi ; and therefore they denominated their Calices, Sextantes, Quadrantes, Trientes, according to the Number of Cyathi which they contained.

13.

ROMAN Measures of Capacity for Things Dry.

							English Corn Measure. Pecks.	Gall.	Pints.	Sol. In.	Dec.
						Ligula	0	— 0	— 0	$\frac{1}{4}\frac{1}{8}$	— 0,01
					4	Cyathus	0	— 0	— 0	$\frac{1}{1}\frac{1}{2}$	— 0,04
					6	$1\frac{1}{2}$ Acetabulum	0	— 0	— 0	$\frac{1}{8}$	— 0,06
				4	24	6 Hemina	0	— 0	— 0	$\frac{1}{2}$	— 0,24
			2	8	48	12 Sextarius	0	— 0	— 1		— 0,48
		8	16	64	384	96 Semimodius	0	— 1	— 0		— 3,84
	2	16	32	128	768	192 Modius	1	— 0	— 0		— 7,68

JEWISH MEASURES of Capacity for Things LIQUID.

							Engliſh Wine Meaſure. Gall. Pints. Sol.Inch.
						Caph	0 — $0\frac{5}{8}$ — 0,177
$1\frac{1}{3}$						Log	0 — $0\frac{5}{6}$ — 0,236
$5\frac{1}{3}$	4					Cab	0 — $3\frac{1}{3}$ — 0,944
16	12	3				Hin	1 — 2 — 2,832
32	24	6	2			Seah	2 — 4 — 5,64
96	72	18	6	3		Bath Epha : :	7 — 4 — 16,992
960	720	180	60	30	10	Coron, Chomer . .	75 — 5 — 25,545

15.

JEWISH MEASURES of CAPACITY for Things Dry.

							English Corn Measure. Pecks. Gall. Pints. Sol. In. Dec.
						Gachal	0—0—0 $\frac{1}{120}$ — 0,033
20						Cab	0—0—2 $\frac{5}{6}$ — 0,672
36	1 $\frac{4}{5}$					Gomor	0—0—5 $\frac{1}{10}$ — 1,210
120	6	3 $\frac{1}{3}$				Seah	1—0—1 — 4,033
360	18	10	3			Epha	3—0—3 — 12,100
1800	90	50	15	5		Leteeh	16—0—0 — 26,500
3600	180	100	30	10	2	Chomer, Coron	32—0—1 — 18,969

16.

ENGLISH TROY WEIGHT.

Grains
24	Penny Weight
480	20	Ounce
5760	240	12	Pound

17.

The Most Antient GRECIAN and ROMAN WEIGHTS reduced to TROY WEIGHT.

				Pds. Oun. Penwt. Gr.
			Drachma	00—00—02—14 $\frac{72}{125}$
100			Mna	01—01—00 4 $\frac{44}{125}$
6000	60		Talanton	65—00—12— 5 $\frac{43}{125}$

The Less Antient GRECIAN and ROMAN WEIGHTS reduced to English TROY WEIGHT.

									Pounds.	Oun.	Pewt.	Grains.
Lentes									0 -	0 -	00 -	$0\frac{85}{144}$
4	Siliquæ								0 -	0 -	00 -	$3\frac{1}{28}$
12	3	Obolus							0 -	0 -	00 -	$9\frac{3}{28}$
24	6	2	Scriptulum						0 -	0 -	00 -	$18\frac{3}{14}$
72	18	6	3	Drachma					0 -	0 -	02 -	$6\frac{2}{14}$
96	24	8	4	$1\frac{1}{3}$	Sextula				0 -	0 -	03 -	$0\frac{6}{7}$
144	36	12	6	2	$1\frac{1}{2}$	Sicilicus			0 -	0 -	04 -	$13\frac{3}{7}$
192	48	16	8	$2\frac{2}{3}$	2	$1\frac{1}{3}$	Duella		0 -	0 -	06 -	$1\frac{5}{7}$
576	144	48	24	8	6	4	3	Uncia	0 -	0 -	18 -	$5\frac{1}{7}$
6912	1728	576	288	96	72	48	36	12	Libra	0 -	10 -	18 -	$13\frac{5}{7}$

The Roman Ounce is the English Avoirdupois Ounce, which they divided into seven Denarii, as well as eight Drachms; and since they reckoned their Denarius equal to the Attick Drachm, this will make the Attick Weights $\frac{1}{8}$ heavier than the correspondent Roman Weights.

Note. The Grecians divided their Obolus into Chalci and Lepta. Some, as Diodorus and Suidas, divided the Obolus into six Chalci, and every Chalcus into seven Lepta: Others divided the Obolus into eight Ohalci, and every Chalcus into eight Lepta or Minuta.

19.

The GREATER WEIGHTS reduced to Engliſh Troy Weight.

			Pounds.	Oun.	Penwt.	Grains.
		Libra	0	10	18	$13\frac{5}{7}$
$1\frac{1}{24}$		Mina Attica communis	0	11	07	$16\frac{3}{7}$
$1\frac{1}{3}$	$1\frac{7}{12}$	Mina Attica Medica	1	02	11	$10\frac{2}{7}$
$62\frac{1}{2}$	60	$46\frac{7}{8}$ Talentum Atticum comm.	56	11	00	$17\frac{1}{7}$

Note. There was another Attic Talent, by ſome ſaid to conſiſt of 80, by others of 100 Minæ.

Note. Every Mina contains 100 Drachmæ, and every Talent 60 Minæ: but the Talents differ in Weight, according to the different Standard of the Drachmæ and Minæ, of which they are compoſed. The Value of ſome different Minæ, and Talents in Attick Drachmæ, Minæ, and Engliſh Troy Weight, is exhibited in the following Table.

20.

MINA

		Pounds.	Ounces.	Penwt.	Grains.
Ægyptiaca	eſt Drachm. Atticar	$133\frac{1}{3}$	01	05	$22\frac{26}{40}$
Antiochica		$133\frac{1}{3}$	01	05	$22\frac{26}{40}$
Cleopatræ Ptolemaica		144	01	06	$16\frac{32}{40}$
Alexandrina Dioſcoridis		160	01	08	$16\frac{1}{40}$

TALENTUM

		Pounds.	Ounces.	Penwt.	Grains.
Ægyptiacum	eſtMinarum Atticar	80	86	08	16 : 08
Antiochicum		80	86	08	16 : 08
Ptolemaicum Cleop.		$86\frac{2}{3}$	93	11	11 : 00
Alexandriæ		96	104	00	19 : 14
Inſulanum		120	130	01	04 : 12
Antiochiæ		360	390	03	13 : 11

21.

JEWISH WEIGHTS reduced to Engliſh TROY-WEIGHT.

			Pound.	Oun.	Penwt.	Grains
		Shekel	00	00	09	02_{7}
60		Maneth	02	03	06	$10\frac{2}{7}$
3000	50	Talent	113	10	01	$10\frac{2}{7}$

Note. In reckoning Money, 50 Shekels made a Maneh; but in Weight, 160 Shekels.

The Value and Proportion of the GRECIAN Coins.

											l.	s.	d.	q.
										Lepton
									7	Chalcos
								14	2	Dichalcos
							28	4	2	Hemiobolion
						56	8	4	2	Obolos
					112	16	8	4	2	Diobolon
				224	32	16	8	4	2	Tetrobolon
			336	48	24	12	6	3	1½	Drachma
		672	96	48	24	12	6	3	2	Didrachmon	[Stater
	1394	142	96	48	24	12	6	4	2	Tetradrachmon
1680	240	120	60	30	15	7½	5	2½	1½	Pentadrachm.

Note 1. Of these the Drachma. Didrachm, &c. were of Silver, the rest, for the most part, of Brass; the other Parts, as Tridrachm, Triobolus, &c. were sometimes Coined.

Note 2. I have supposed, with the Generality of Authors, that the Drachma and Denarius were equal, tho' there is Reason to believe the Drachma was somewhat the weightier.

23. The

23.

The GRECIAN GOLD COIN was

	l.	s.	d.
The Stater Aureus, weighing two Attick Drachms, or half of the Stater Argenteus, and exchanging usually for 25 Attick Drachms of Silver, in our Money - - - -	00	16	1¾
According to our Proportion of Gold to Silver. - - - - -	01	00	9
There were likewise the Stater Cyzicenus, exchanging for 28 Attick Drachms, or ¾ - -	00	18	1
Stater Phillippicus, and Stater Alexandrinus, of the same Value
Stater Daricus, according to Josephus, worth 50 Attick Drachms, or Stater Crœsius, of the same Value	01	12	3½ 24.

The GRECIAN Manner of reckoning Sums of Money was by

		l.	s.	d.
DRACHMÆ.	1 - - - -	0	00	07¾
	10 - - - -	0	06	05½
	100 equal to a Mina - -	3	04	07
MINÆ.	1 - - - -	3	04	07
	10 - - - -	32	05	10
	60 equal to a Talentum	193	15	00
TALENTA.	1 - - - -	193	15	00
	10 - - - -	1937	10	00
	100 - - - -	19375	00	00

25.

I have given the Value of the different Talents, and Minæ, conſidered as Weights; but when they denote Sums of Money, they vary after the following Manner:

MINA Syra			25
Ptolemaica			33⅓
Antiochica			100
Eubœa			100
Babylonica		eſt Drachm. Atticar	116
Attica major			133⅓
Tyria			133⅓
Æginæa			166⅔
Rhodia			166⅔
TALENTUM Syrum			15
Ptolemaicum			20
Antiochicum			60
Eubœum			60
Babylonicum		Minarum Atticarum	70
Atticum majus			80
Tyrium			80
Æginæum			100
Rhodium			100
Ægyptium			80

26.

The Value and Proportion of the ROMAN Coins.

						l.	s.	d.	q.
					Teruncius	0	0	0	$0\frac{775}{1000}$
				2	Sembella	0	0	0	$1\frac{55}{100}$
			2	4	Libella, As	0	0	0	$3\frac{1}{10}$
		$2\frac{1}{2}$	5	10	Seſtertius	0	0	1	$3\frac{3}{4}$
	5	5	10	20	Quinarius, Victoriatus	0	0	3	$3\frac{1}{2}$
10	10	10	20	40	Denarius	0	0	7	3

Note, Of theſe the Denarius, Victoriatus, Seſtertius, and ſometime the As, were of Silver, the reſt of Braſs.

There were ſometimes alſo coined of Braſs, the Triens, Sextans, Uncia, Sextula, and Dupondius.

27. The

27.

The ROMAN GOLD COIN was the AUREUS, which weighed generally double the DENARIUS;

	l.	s.	d.
The Aureus, according to the first Proportion of Coinage, mentioned by Pliny, Lib. XXXIII. Chap. 3. was worth	1	04	3 3/4
According to the Proportion that obtains now amongst us, worth - - -	1	00	9
According to the Decuple Proportion, mentioned by Livy and Julius Pollux, worth - - - - -	0	12	11
According to the Proportion mentioned by Tacitus, and which afterwards obtained, whereby the Aureus exchanged for 25 Denarii, its Value - - -	0	16	1 3/4

28.

Some Alterations of the Value of the ROMAN COIN, mentioned by Pliny.

In the Reign of Servius A. Urb. 490 - -	the As weighed of Brass	1 Pound
A. Urb. 537 - -		2 Ounces
A. Urb. 586 - -		1 Ounce
		½ Ounce
A. Urb. 485 - -	1 Denarius exchanged for	10 Asses
A. Urb. 537 - -		16 Asses
A. Urb. 547 Scruple of Gold worth - -		20 Sestertii
Coined afterwards of the Pound of Gold -		20 Denarii	Aurei
In Nero's Time of the Pound of Gold - -		45 Denarii	Aurei

29. The

29.

The ROMAN Manner of reckoning Sums of Money reduced to the ENGLISH STANDARD.

SESTERTII NUMMI.	l.	s.	d.	q.
Seſtertius — — —	0	00	01	3¼
Decem — — —	0	01	07	1½
Centum — — —	0	16	01	3
Mille equal to a Seſtertium. —	8	01	05	2
SESTERTIA.
Seſtertium — —	8	01	05½
Decem — — —	80	14	07
Centum. This Sum the Romans expreſs'd thus, Debet mihi centum, debet mihi centum Seſtertia ; vel debet centum millia Seſtertium.	807	05	10
Mille — — —	8072	18	04
DECIES SESTERTIUM, &c. The Adverb Centies being underſtood.
Decies Seſtertium, vel Decies centena millia nummum —	8072	18	04
Centies, vel Centies H. S. —	80729	03	04
Millies H. S. — —	807291	13	04
Millies Centies H. S — —	888020	16	08

30.

The ROMAN Manner of reckoning INTEREST MONEY.

Aſſes uſuræ vel Centeſimæ uſuræ	1	per Cent a Month.	12 per Cent a Year.
Semiſſes uſuræ — —	½		6
Trientes uſuræ — —	⅓		4
Quadrantes uſuræ — —	¼		3
Sextantes uſuræ — —	⅙		2
Unciæ uſuræ — —	1/12		1
Quincunces uſuræ — —	5/12		5
Septunces uſuræ — —	7/12		7
Beſſes uſuræ — — —	⅔		8
Dodrantes uſuræ — —	¾		9
Dextantes uſuræ — —	10/12		10
Deunces uſuræ — — —	11/12		11

31 JEWISH

JEWISH MONEY reduced to the Engliſh Standard.

31.				l.	s.	d.
			Gerah	0	00	$1\frac{5}{16}$
10			Bekah	0	01	$1\frac{1}{16}$
20	2		Shekel	0	02	$3\frac{3}{16}$
1000	100	50	Maneh, Mina Hebraica	5	14	$0\frac{3}{4}$
60000	6000	3000	60 Talent	342	03	9
Solidus Aureus, or Sextula, worth				0	12	$0\frac{1}{12}$
Siclus Aureus, worth				1	16	6
A Talent of Gold, worth				5475	00	0

Note. In all the Tables of Money, I reckon Silver at 5 Shillings, and Gold at 4 Pounds the Ounce.

NOW to ſay ſomething of the different Computations of Time, Beroſus wrote his Chronology by the Computation of Sari, Neri, and Soſi; which being antient Meaſures of Time, and well known when the original Records were written, could not then have wanted Explanation. But Beroſus, or ſome later Writer, has, either out of Ignorance or Deſign, magnified theſe Meaſures beyond all imagination, and tells us, that the Sarus contained the Interval of three thouſand ſix hundred Years; the Nerus of ſix hundred, and the Soſus of ſixty. But other Authors have taken thoſe Years for Days only [u]; and indeed with a great deal of Reaſon; for not to inſiſt on the incredible Length of the Reigns of the Chaldean Princes in the firſt Hypotheſis, which no Writer of common Senſe could offer to impoſe on the Word, it plainly appears, that they were no more than Days, from the Reign of the ſixth King of Chaldea, which is expreſſed in the firſt Table of thoſe Kings exhibited Book I. Chap. I. Sect. V. to be ninety nine Years, but in the [u] Syncellus, p. 17.

the others by the round Number of ten Sari, or 100 Years. The Word Sarus, throwing away the Termination, is no other than the Chaldee, or Syriac Sar, ben. The Sarus therefore contained three thousand six hundred Days, or just ten old Chaldean Years, of three hundred and sixty Days each; and that before the Deluge, not only the Civil, but also the Tropical, Solar, and Lunar Year consisted of twelve Months, of thirty Days a piece, or three hundred and sixty Days in the whole, has been fully proved by a modern Writer [w].

THE Egyptians, who addicted themselves to the Study of Astronomy in the earliest Ages, and were well acquainted with the Motions, Periods, and Stations of the Planets, were the first that adjusted the Length of the Year to the annual Revolution of the Sun, by adding to their twelve Months of 30 Days a piece five additional Days and six Hours, while the Greeks and Romans used the more rude and inconvenient Form of Lunar Years, intercalating a Month every third Year. However, the five additional Days, as Syncellus [x] informs us, were not introduced till a thousand Years after the Deluge, and never were looked upon as proper Parts either of the Year, or of any of its Months, but as Days belonging to the Nativity of five several Egyptian Deities, who, as it is observed in a famous Tradition related by Plutarch [y], were to be born neither in any Year, nor in any Month.

THE Jewish Year, as is plain from the Calculations which Moses gives us of the Days of the Flood and elsewhere, consisted of 365 Days, and consequently of 12 Solar Months, the last of which had 35 Days. As Moses had been brought up in Egypt, it is very likely he learned that way of reckoning there; and besides, it must have been the most known and easy Method to the Jews, who had been accustomed to it

[w] Allin's Disc. on the antient Year, in Mr. Whiston's Theory, Book II. p. 144. [x] Syncell. p. 125. [y] Plut. de Isid. & Osirid.

during during their long Abode in Egypt. Scaliger [z], and others after him, have indeed ſuppoſed, that they had an intercalar Month, once every 120 Years; but it is plain, that the Scripture hints nothing like ſuch an Intercalation, or Year of 13 Months; tho' it is not eaſy to gueſs how they diſpoſed of the ſix additional Hours of the Egyptians, without ſome ſuch Suppoſition. However, Moſes, by expreſs Command of God, did afterwards compute the Years by Moons.

THE antient Year of Greece, Lydia, and the Grecian Colonies in Aſia, as well as the firſt Roman Year, before the Correction of Numa Pompilius, conſiſted likewiſe of 360 Days, as the learned Writer, we have quoted above, fully proves [a].

BESIDES the Computation of Months and Years, the Greeks reckoned their Time by Olympiads, each Olympiad containing the ſpace of four Years. This Method of Computation had its Riſe from the Olympic Games, which were celebrated every 4th Year, and became ſo conſiderable, that the Greeks made them their Epoch. They commenced, according to ſome, the Year of the World 3208, 776 Years before Chriſt, and 22 before the Founding of Rome; according to others, in the Year of the World 3251.

THE Romans computed by Luſtrums, or purifying Sacrifices, which were inſtituted by Servius Tullus, about the Year 180 of Rome, and were to be renewed every five Years, immediately after the Cenſus; whence the Luſtrum contained the ſpace of five Years. But they muſt have been for ſome time diſuſed, as appears from the Faſti Capitolini, where the 50th Luſtrum is ſaid to have been made in the 574th Year of Rome.

As to the Chronology of the Antients, there is no depending upon it. That of the Eaſtern Nations has been ſtrangely depraved, by Contentions ariſing among them about their Antiquity, each claiming the Preference

[z] Scaliger, de emend. temp. l. 2.

[a] Mr. Allin, ubi ſupra.

rence in that Point. Thus Herodotus tells us [b], that the Prieſts of Egypt reckoned from the Reign of Menes to that of Setbon, who put Sennacherib to Flight, 341 Generations, as many Prieſts of Vulcan, and an equal Number of Kings of Egypt. He adds, that three Generations make an hundred Years; ſo that, according to this Computation, the whole Time from the Reign of Menes to that of Sethon was eleven thouſand three hundred and forty Years. The Chaldeans alſo piqued themſelves on their Antiquity, and pretended to have obſerved the Stars 473,000 Years; and Calliſthenes, the Diſciple of Ariſtotle, ſent Aſtronomical Obſervations from Babylon to Greece, ſaid to be of 1903 Years ſtanding. The Chronology of the antient Greek Authors is no leſs uncertain. Thoſe who wrote of Antiquities, as Pherecydes, Epimenides, Hellanicus, Hippias the Elean, Ephorus, &c. digeſted their Works by Genealogies, or the Ages, and Succeſſions of the Prieſteſſes of Juno Argiva, of the Ephors, of the Kings of Sparta, and the Archons of Athens, &c. nor did they begin to ſet down the Generations, Reigns, and Succeſſions in Numbers of Years, till ſome time after the Death of Alexander, which makes their Chronology very uncertain. And ſuch it was reputed by the Greeks themſelves, as is manifeſt from ſeveral Paſſages in Plutarch [c]. The Chronology of the Latins is ſtill more uncertain. Plutarch and Servius repreſent great Uncertainties in the Original of Rome. The old Records of the Latins were burnt by the Gauls about 64 Years before the Death of Alexander; and Quintus Fabius Pictor, the moſt antient Latin Hiſtorian, lived 200 Years after that King, and copied the greateſt Part of his Hiſtory from Diocles Peparethius a Greek. Not one of the European Nations had any Chronology at all before the Time of the Perſian Empire, and whatever Chronology they now have of antient Times has been formed ſince by Reaſoning and Conjecture: So that, on a ſtrict View and due Examination of the Antiquities of Nations, and the Records which have been left us, thoſe of the Jews, excluſive of their Divine Authority, will evidently appear to be the moſt certain and authentick, and conſequently the ſureſt Foundation to build our Chronology upon.

[b] Herod. l. 2. [c] Plut. in Vit. Lycurg. & Solon.

HOWEVER, it muſt be confeſſed, that there is no certain Uniformity in the Jewiſh Computation, and that the ſeveral Copies of their Records, viz. the Hebrew, Samaritan, Pentateuch, and Septuagint, differ very much from one another. Which Diſagreement hath ariſen from two Things; 1. Corruption, or Errors of frequent tranſcribing; and 2. The Want of computing from ſome fixed Æra, and digeſting the Hiſtory as it was written, into a chronological Method: For beſides the great Diſagreement among the various Copies, with regard particularly to the Ages of the Patriarchs, there is a ſeeming Difference at leaſt betwixt the whole Numbers of ſeveral Intervals. Thus, for inſtance, the Interval from the Exodus to the founding of Solomon's Temple, is expreſly mentioned [d] to be four hundred and eighty Years; whereas the Sum of all the Patriarchs given in the Book of Judges, &c. amounts to about five hundred and ninety two Years. Which Particulars not being adjuſted by the Years of ſome certain Æra, we are at a loſs for the true Diſtance of Time, not knowing by what Standard the Meaſure of the Intervals is to be taken.

THIS Variety of Computations hath left room for Chronologers to enlarge, or contract the Space of Time, betwixt the Flood and the Birth of Chriſt, by adhering to one Copy rather than another; or by rejecting, or retaining the whole Numbers, or the Particulars, juſt as it ſuited their Humour of making the Sacred Hiſtory agree with the Prophane; or otherwiſe of reducing the Prophane to the Sacred. And as the Diſagreement among the heathen Writers is great alſo, and every Author hath followed the Hiſtorian he liked

[d] 1 Kings vi. 1.

beſt

beſt, hence a wide Difference hath ariſen amongſt modern Chronologers, as appears by the various Computations ſeveral of them have made of the Years of the World to the Birth of Chriſt, which we here give, as collected by Strauchius [c], Chevreau [f], and others.

A TABLE of the Years of the World to the Birth of CHRIST, according to the Computation of ſeveral Chronologers.

	Yrs.	Mon.
Alphonſus King of Caſtile (in Muller's Tables)	6984
The ſame (in Strauchius)	6484	9
Onuphrius Panvinius	6310
Suidas	6000
Lactantius, Philaſtrius	5801
Nicephorus	5700
Clemens Alexandrinus	5624
The Author of the Faſti Siculi	5608	9
Iſaac Voſſius, and the Greeks	5598
The ſame (in Chevreau)	5590
Theophilus Antiochenus	5515
The Conſtantinopolitans and Grabe's Septuagint	5508	3
Cedrenus (in Chevreau)	5506
Julius Africanus, Theophanes Eutychius, &c.	5500
The Ethiopians	5499	9
Cedrenus (in Strauchius)	5493	9
Panodorus	5493
Maximus Monachus	5491	9
Sulpitius Severus	5469
Victor Giſelius, in his Remarks on Sulpitius	5419
St. Auſtin (in Genebrard)	5351
Iſidorus Peluſiota	5336
Abunazar	5328
Rabanus Maurus	5296
Iſidor. Hiſpalenſis (in Strauchius)	5210
Paulus de Foſſembrona	5201
Euſebius	5200	5
Beda (in Strauchius)	5199
Philippus Bergamenſis, Oroſius, &c.	5198
Philo the Jew, Sigebert	5096
Epiphanius	5049
Metrodorus	5000
Ado, Archbiſhop of Vienna	4832
Joſephus corrected	4698
Odiato, or Ebwico	4320

[c] Breviarium Chronologicum, lib 4. c. 1. [f] Hiſt. du Monde, l. 1. c. 1.

	Yrs.	Mon.
Marianus Scotus	4192	9
Laurentius Codomannus	4141	8
The ſame (L. Godomeau in Chevreau)	4140
Ribera	4095
Genebrard	4090
Arnold de Pontac	4088
Michael Mæſtlinus	4079	3
J. Baptiſt Ricciolus	4062	3
R. Moſes Maimonides	4058
Jacobus Salianus (in Strauchius)	4053	9
The ſame (in Chevreau)	4052
Henr. Spondanus	4051	9
Torniellus	4051
Gul. Langius (in Strauchius)	4041	9
The ſame (in Chevreau)	4040
Eraſmus Reinbold	4021	3
Jacobus Cappellus	4005	9
John Wickman	4004	9
Thomas Lydiat, and Laurence Eichſtadt	4004
Edward Simpſon, and Archbiſhop Uſher	4003	9
M. Ant Cappellus, and Archbiſhop Uſher (in Chevreau)	4000
Dionyſius, Petavius, Decker, Kepler, &c. (in Chevreau)	3984
Petavius (in Strauchius)	3983	3
Krentzheim	3971	9
Abraham Bucholtzer (in Strauchius)	3970	9
The ſame, J. Cluverius (in Chevreau) Pantaleon, Boxhornius, Janſenius, M. Dreſſer	3970
Chriſt. Matthias, and J. Cluverius (in Strauchius)	3968	9
Henry Bunting (in Strauchius)	3967	9
The ſame (in Chevreau) and Andrew Soelmatter	3967
Chriſt. Longomontanus	3966	3
Peter Opeemer	3966
Chriſt. Longovionlanus, in his Hypotheſis in Aſtronomiam Danicam, Toſtatus, Philip, Melanæthon, Funccius, and others (in Strauchius)	3964
Melanæthon, Funccius, &c. (in Chevreau)	3963
Jacobus Haynlinus	3963	3
Sixtus Senenſis	3962
Joh. Lucidus, Sculter, John Lightfoot, and ſeveral others	3960
Alph. Salmeron (in Chevreau) John Picus Count of Mirandola, and others	3959
Lamberg, and Salmeron (in Strauchius)	3958
J. G. Herwart ab Hohenburg	3955
Beda, Hermannus Contractus, George Herwart (in Chevreau)	3952
Cornelius a Lapide	3951
Scaliger, Calviſius, Ubbo Emmius, Behmius, and Helvicus (in Strauchius)	3949	3

Origen,

	Yrs.	Mon.
Origen, Argoli, John Seyber	3949
Chriſtianus Schotanus	3948	3
Johanes Micrælius	3948
Scaliger, Calviſius, Helvicus, (in Chevreau) Alſted, &c.	3947
Hermanus Contractus (in Strauchius)	3945	9
John Carrion	3944
St. Jerom in his Hebraic Queſtions	3941
Gerard Mercator	3928
Matthæus Beroaldus	3927	3
B. Arias Montanus	3849
Andreas Helvigius	3836
Some Talmudiſts	3784
R. David Ganz (in Chevreau)	3761
The Jewiſh vulgar Computation	3760	3
R. David Ganz (in Strauchius)	3760
Hieron à Sancta Fide, Paulus de S. Maria, Galatinus, Georgius Venetus	3760
R. Habſon, in his Treatiſe of the Cycles of Paſſover	3740
R. Jaſon Noſen	3734
R. Abraham Zaccuth	3671
The leſſer Chronicon of the Jews	3670
R. Lippoman	3616

It would be endleſs, as well as unneceſſary, here to examine into the particular Cauſes of this great Difference among Authors, every one ſtill pretending to ground his Syſtem on the Authority of the Scripture: It will be ſufficient, after we have ſtated the Times from the Creation to the Birth of Christ, according to the Computation obſerved in the three ſeveral Copies of the Scripture before-mentioned, to ſubjoin one or two Schemes of the ſame Intervals, according to the different Supputations of the beſt modern Chronologers, which, beſides illuſtrating our Subject, will be of Uſe to the Reader in peruſing the Hiſtorians, who make Uſe of one or other of thoſe Computations.

TABLE I. formed out of the whole Numbers of the Intervals.

	Hebrew.				Samaritan. According to Euseb. and the present Copies				Septuagint. Common Copies.
	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Christ.	4. Years of the Intervals.	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Christ.	4. Years of the Intervals.	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Christ.	4. Years of the Intervals.
1. The Creation	0		3944		0		4305		0		5270
2. The Deluge	1656		2288	656	1307		2998	1307	2242		3028	2242
3. The Vocation of Abraham	2023	367	1921	367	2384	1077	1921	1077	3389	1147	1881	1147
4. The Exodus	2453	797	1491	430	2814	1507	1491	430	3819	1577	1451	430
5. The founding of the Temple	2933	1277	1011	480	3294	1987	1011	480	4259	2017	1011	440
—— Captivity ——
6. The burning of the Temple	3357	1701	587	424	3718	2411	$587\frac{4}{12}$	423-	4683	2441	$587\frac{4}{12}$	$423\frac{3}{4}$
—— the first of Cyrus	3409	1753	535		[3770	2463	535		[4735	2493	535
—— the second of Darius Hyst.	3427	1771	517	[70	[3788	2481	517	[70	[4753	2511	517	[70
7. The Birth of Christ	3944	2288	0	587	4305	2998	0	$587\frac{1}{12}$	5270	3028	0	$587\frac{4}{12}$

TABLE

TABLE II. formed out of the Particulars.

	Hebrew.				Samaritan.				Septuagint. According to Dr. Grabe's Edition and the Conſtantinopolitans.
	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Chriſt.	4. Years of the Intervals.	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Chriſt.	4. Years of the Intervals.	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Chriſt.	4. Years of the Intervals.
1. The Creation	0		4111		0		4424		0		5508
2. The Deluge	1656		2455	1656	1307		3117	1307	2262		3246	2262
3. The Vocation of Abraham	2083	427	2028	427	2384	1077	2040	1077	3469	1207	2039	1207
4. The Exodus	2513	857	1598	430	2814	1507	1610	430	3894	1629	1614	425
5. The founding of the Temple	3093	1437	1018	580	3406	2099	1018	592	4495	2230	1013	601
Captivity			607				607
6. The burning of the Temple	3523	1867	588	430	3836	2409	588	430	4919	2654	589	424
the firſt of Cyrus	[3575	1919
the ſecond of Darius Hyſt.	[3583	1927							[4995
7 The Birth of Chriſt	4111	2455	0	588	4424	3117	0	588	5508	3246	0	589

TABLE III. according to the Supputation of certain Authors.

	Hebrew. USHER.				JOSEPHUS.				Septuagint. PEZRON.
	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Chriſt.	4. Years of the Intervals	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Chriſt.	4. Years of the Intervals.	1. Year of the World.	2. Year of the Flood.	3. Year before Chriſt.	4. Years of the Intervals.
1. The Creation	0		4004		0		4658		0		5872
2. The Deluge	1656		2348	1656	1556		3102	1556	2256		3617	2256
3. The Vocation of Abraham	2083	427	1921	427	2523	967	2135	967	3513	1257	2360	1257
4. The Exodus	2513	857	1491	430	2953	1397	1705	430	3943	1687	1930	430
——Moſes's Death	[2553				[1993
5. The founding of the Temple	2992	1336	1012	479	3545	1989	1113	592	4816	2560	1057	8[illegible]3
—— Captivity	3397	1741	607						[5268	3012	605	[illegible]2
6. The burning of the Temple	3416	1760	588	424	4015	2459	643	[illegible]0	[5287	3031	586	[illegible]
——the firſt of Cyrus	3468				4085			[70	[5337	3081	536	69
——the ſecond of Darius Hyſt.	3486			[70					[5351	3095	520
7. The Birth of Chriſt.	4004	2348	0	588	4658	3102	0	643	5873	3617	0

THE

THE Reader may perceive at one View of the preceding Tables, what Room the ſeveral Copies of the Scriptures we now have, give for varying the Chronology of the whole, and how many different Syſtems may be grounded on them. By the Calculation made uſe of in the firſt Table, which conſiſts of the Intervals, inſerted in the fourth, or right-hand Column of each Diviſion, from the Creation to the Birth of CHRIST, according to the whole Numbers mentioned in the Text of the reſpective Copies, the Samaritan Account exceeds the Hebrew by three hundred and ſixty one Years, while the Septuagint exceeds the Samaritan by nine hundred and ſixty five Years. Which Difference ſtill becomes greater in the ſecond Table, made out of the particular Numbers, which compoſe the Intervals, by an Addition of one hundred and nineteen Years to the Samaritan, and two hundred and thirty eight to the Septuagint Computation; which therefore exceeds the Hebrew Computation in the firſt Table, by no leſs than one thouſand five hundred and ſixty four Years.

THE third Table exhibits three other Forms, the firſt of which, being that of the great Primate Uſher, is grounded on the Hebrew whole Numbers, and differs from that in the firſt Table but ſixty Years, which are added to the Interval from the Deluge to the Call of Abraham. The ſecond is compoſed from the Chronology of Joſephus, as cleared up by Dr. Wills[g], and Mr. Whiſton[h]; who, reckoning according to the Particulars, obſerves ſomewhat of a Mean between the Samaritan and the Septuagint, and is thought, in moſt reſpects, to have given us the true Hebrew Numbers, which, it is to be feared, the Jews, ſince his Time, have corrupted. And the third is that of P. Pezron, being an Enlargement of the Septuagint

[g] Pref. to L'Eſtrange's Edition of Joſephus. [h] Chronol. of the Old and New Teſt. and his Eſſay for reſtoring the true Text, &c.

and

and Greek Computation, in order to accomodate the Sacred to the Prophane Hiſtory.

Of theſe three different Copies of Scripture, the Samaritan Computation ſeems not only beſt to ſuit the Nature and Circumſtances of the Hiſtory of antient Times recorded in the Old Teſtament, as well as to be confirmed by the Concurrence of genuine Prophane Hiſtory, which by no means ought to be thrown out of the Queſtion; but alſo appears to be the old and authentic Hebrew Computation, preſerved by the Samaritans in their Character, while the Hebrew Copy has evidently been corrupted, in all Probability, to obviate the Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, and on other Accounts; as Pezron [i], Dr. Wills [k], Mr. Whiſton [l], and others have ſufficiently proved.

For theſe Reaſons therefore, and many others, which will frequently occur in the Courſe of this Work, we have found ourſelves obliged to depart from the Example of the Generality of our modern Chronologers, who follow the Hebrew Chronology, and to adhere to that of the Samaritan, which preſerves a Mean between the Defect of the Hebrew on the one Hand, and the Exceſs of the Septuagint on the other. In adjuſting our Periods, we have ſtrained nothing to favour any Hypotheſis of our own, or to force the Sacred Hiſtory to agree with any Part of the Prophane, as too many unreaſonably have done; of which our conſtant confining ourſelves to the whole Numbers, which are always the ſhorteſt, is a Demonſtration.

The Reader may obſerve, that the whole Difference betwixt the Hebrew and the Samaritan Computation (for we have no more than the Pentateuch in that Character) lies in the Interval between the Creation and the calling of Abraham, and ariſes from the different Ages aſſigned the Patriarchs, at the Birth of their Sons mentioned in Geneſis. The Septuagint Copy carries

[i] Vid. l'Antiquité des tems retablie & defendue. [k] In his Preface to L'Eſtrange's Engliſh Joſephus. [l] Eſſay for reſtoring the true Text, &c. Prop. 12. p. 220.

carries this Difference down to the Founding of the Temple, which, according to that Text [m], happened in the four hundred and fortieth Year of the Exodus, forty Years ſhort of the Hebrew; but we have choſen to follow the whole Number, as it ſtands in the Hebrew [n], (for we have no Samaritan Copy here to guide us) thinking the Text too expreſs to admit of any Alteration. The Length of the Interval from the Founding to the Burning of the Temple, is limited within the four hundred and thirty Years of God's Patience towards the Jews [o]; and is collected out of the Years of the Reigns of the Kings of Iſrael and Judah, as they have been collated and adjuſted by judicious Chronologers [p]: So that there is no room for allowing more than forty Years to the Reign of Solomon, as aſſigned him in all the Copies extant, the Scripture affording Means for reconciling the ſeeming Inconſiſtencies, with Regard to the Ages of him and his Son Rehoboam, at their reſpective Acceſſions to the Throne. But here we ſhould be at a great Loſs (the Babyloniſh Captivity interrupting the Courſe of the Jewiſh Hiſtory), if it was not for the Opportunity we have of connecting this Period with the Nabonnaſſarian or Babylonian Æra, by means of the famous Aſtronomical Canon of Ptolemy; whereby we are enabled with Certainty to carry the Account of Time down to the Birth of Chriſt, which, according to our Supputation, falls in the Year of the World four thouſand three hundred and five, and of the Flood two Thouſand nine hundred and ninety eight, according to the Samaritan Computation in the firſt Table.

We have alſo taken the Liberty to depart from the general Method, obſerved hitherto by Chronologers in another Point, and inſtead of carrying down our Computation from the Creation, through the ſeveral Ages, [m] Vid. Septuag. 1 Kings vi, 1. [n] 1 Kings vi. 1. [o] Ezek. iv. 4, 5, 6. [p] See Uſher's Chronologia Sacra, Pars poſterior; and Whiſton's Short View of the Chronol. of the Old Teſt. p. 83. and in the Tables at the End.

to

to the Birth of Chriſt, to diſcontinue it at the Flood, and begin a new Reckoning from thence; and this we have been induced to do for ſeveral Reaſons.

1. BECAUSE the Period between the Creation and the Flood contains little memorable, beſides the Age and Death of each Patriarch. 2. Becauſe it is a particular Period cut off, as it were, from the reſt of Time, and hath little or no Connection with the Ages ſucceeding the Deluge. 3. Becauſe at the Deluge the old World was deſtroyed, and from thence a new Origination of Mankind began, whoſe Affairs have little or no Dependence on thoſe of the Antediluvians. 4. Becauſe it will help to give the Reader a more diſtinct Notion of the Diſtance of Time, as derived from a Period with which we are more immediately concerned, and beyond which no genuine Hiſtory of any Nation reaches. 5. Becauſe it will bring the ſeveral Scriptural Computations nearer to an Agreement among themſelves, the great Diſproportion among them ariſing chiefly from the Difference this Period creates. Thus in the whole Space of Time, from the Creation to the Birth of Chriſt, the Septuagint, according to the firſt Table, differs from the Hebrew, one thouſand three hundred and twenty ſix Years, and but ſeven hundred and forty, reckoning from the Flood. The Difference alſo between the Septuagint and the Samaritan, reckoning from the Creation, is no leſs than nine hundred and ſixty five Years; and no more than thirty, if you compute from the Flood. The Septuagint Chronology exceeds that of Joſephus ſix hundred and twelve Years, taking in the Times preceding the Deluge; but in the Space betwixt the Deluge and Chriſt, it is exceeded by that of Joſephus by ſeventy four Years, as will appear more clearly by the following Table.

According

According to the first TABLE.

Years from the Creation to Christ.	Years from the Flood to Christ.
Sam. 4305	2998
Heb. 3944	2288
361	710
Sept. 5270	3028
Heb. 3944	2288
1326	740
Sept. 5270	3028
Sam. 4305	2998
965	30
Jos. 4658	3102
Heb. 3944	2288
714	814
Jos. 4658	3102
Sam. 4305	2998
353	104
Sept. 5270	Jos. 3102
Jos. 4658	Sept. 3028
612	74

According to the second TABLE.

Years from the Creation to Christ.	Years from the Flood to Christ.
4424	3117
4111	2456
313	661
5508	3246
4111	2455
1397	791
5508	3246
4424	3117
1084	129
4658	3102
4111	2455
547	647
Jos. 4658	Sam. 3117
Sam. 4424	Jos. 3102
234	15
Sept. 5508	3246
Jos. 4658	3102
850	144

Indeed,

Indeed, if we compare the Hebrew and the Samaritan, the Caſe is otherwiſe; for the Difference betwixt thoſe two Computations is greater in the Interval from the Flood to Chriſt than from the Creation, the Samaritan falling ſhort of the Hebrew in the Interval betwеen the Creation and the Flood, at the ſame Time that it exceeds it in that betwixt the Flood and the Vocation of Abraham.

Upon theſe Conſiderations, we have thought fit, throughout the Courſe of our Hiſtory, to make uſe of the Year of the Flood, inſtead of that of the World, in our marginal Synchroniſms, and hope the Reader will conſider it rather as an Improvement, than an Innovation in Chronology. However, in our Tables at the End of each Volume, we ſhall add the Year of the World, to ſerve inſtead of a Julian Period; a Contrivance, which how uſeful ſoever it may be in the Technical Chronology, is, as we conceive, of no manner of uſe at all in the Hiſtorical.

To the Year of the Flood we have always added that before Chriſt, which, conſidering the Variety of Syſtems that are abroad, (every Author almoſt having one of his own) is the more neceſſary, as it always carries the Chronology of the Author along with it; for the two Sums, being added together, ſhew the Year before the Chriſtian Æra, according to that Computation, whether Hebrew, Samaritan, or Septuagint, which the Author follows. For Inſtance, according to the Samaritan Account in the firſt Table, which we follow, Solomon began to build the Temple in the Year of the Flood 1987, and before Chriſt 1011; theſe two Sums added make two thouſand nine hundred ninety eight; which is the Year before the Chriſtian Æra by that Reckoning; and two thouſand nine hundred ninety eight being added to one thouſand three hundred and ſeven, the Number of Years betwixt the Creation and the Flood, the Sum, four thouſand three hundred and five, gives the Year of the World in which the Birth of Chriſt happened, according to the vulgar Computation. Indeed, was our Chronology logy upon as fixed a Footing as it is among the Greeks, the Ruſſians, and ſome other Nations, who begin their Computation from the Creation, and never change their Opinions; to diſcover the Diſtance of any Tranſaction backwards from the preſent Time, there would be no need of knowing more than the Year of the World in which it fell out. For Inſtance, the Temple was begun, according to the Ruſſians, who follow the Greek and Septuagint Computation in the ſecond Table, in the Year of the World 4495. Now the preſent Year of our Lord 1730, being the ſeven thouſand two hundred and thirty eighth according to their Account, it is only deducting four thouſand four hundred ninety five, from ſeven thouſand two hundred thirty eight, and you have two thouſand ſeven hundred forty three, which is the Number of Years ſince the Founding of Solomon's Temple to this Time, differing but two Years in Exceſs from our Reckoning: Whereas, before we could be able to diſcover it by that ſingle Character, we ſhould be obliged, perhaps, to ſearch a good while to find out the Syſtem which the Author goes upon; and when we had met with it, ſhould be at the Trouble of uſing Subſtraction, as well as Addition. So that the joining the Year before Chriſt to that of the World, or of the Flood, is one of the greateſt Improvements in Chronology; and as neceſſary for aſcertaining the true Time of every Event, as the Longitude and Latitude are in Geography, to determine the exact Situation of a Place. In a Word, theſe two Sorts of Reckonings ought to be made inſeparable; and whoever gives only one of them without the other, can afford his Reader no ſatisfactory Idea of Things; and indeed muſt write in Confuſion himſelf.

HAVING given the Reader this general Account of our Chronology, and ſtated the ſeveral Periods of it from the Creation, and the Flood, to the Birth of Chriſt; we ſhall hereafter give the Analyſis of each Period, as we proceed, to ſhew the Authority upon which our Syſtem is grounded.

IN

In the History itself we have endeavoured to execute our Proposals in the best Manner we could; and hope we have made no Slips therein, but such as are excusable. Some no doubt there are; for we have not the vanity to think ourselves able to write a perfectly compleat History, which, as a modern Author [p] expresses it, is not to appear, but in that Year which discovers the perpetual Motion, and the Philosopher's Stone.

In composing the following Work, we have all along taken the Liberty (to use the words of an ingenious Gentleman, whom we have followed in this respect) "To translate, to imitate, or even literally to introduce any Parts of the Authors, from whom we "have made our Collections, if we found them really conducing to the Use or Ornament of the Design, not being able to discover any Merit, or Cunning, in varying the Stile and Sense of an Author, "for no other Purpose, than to conceal the Ignorance "of the Transcriber, or to destroy an Obligation of "Gratitude, which ought to be confessed to all Mankind." [q]

We have added to this, as we shall do to each Volume, a compleat and copious Index, giving the Reader a View of the whole Work in Epitome, and referring him to all the Parts of it with great Exactness.

[p] Le Moyne. [q] Mr. Lewis in his Preface to his Origines Hebræ.

AN

AN

Universal History,

FROM THE

Earlieſt Account of Time to the Preſent.

THE

INTRODUCTION,

CONTAINING

The Coſmogony, or Creation of the World.

The deſign of the work, and the difficulties which attend it.

OUR deſign is to write a General Hiſtory of mankind, from their original to our own time. An undertaking of vaſt extent, and which would, perhaps, be ſcarce practicable, were the hiſtories of all nations now extant, and their ſeries complete. But as many nations entirely neglected their hiſtory, at leaſt for ſeveral ages; ſo the hiſtories of many others, who kept ſome records of paſt actions, have been either totally, or in part, deſtroyed by wars, time, miſguided zeal, and other caſualties. Beſides, few nations have been able to give a tolerable account of their original, or early antiquities; the firſt memory of perſons, and facts, having been preſerved by the inſtitution of feſtivals, the building of cities, erecting of ſtones, pillars, altars, tombs, and the like monuments, from whence a true ſeries of hiſtory could not be accurately deduced and collected, any more than from the oral tradition which accompanied them.

BUT if the want of records has, on the one hand, reduced hiſtory into a cloſer compaſs, it has, on the other, occaſioned great confuſion and uncertainty. For the frequent interruptions, and defects, which occur in the antiquities of nations, drive the hiſtorian ſo often to precarious conjectures, and oblige him to have recourſe to ſo many ſhifts, to connect and ſupply them, that his labour ſeems to be encreaſed by the ſcarcity of materials; and he is unable, after all, to give his reader ſatisfaction.

MANY other difficulties there are, which attend the execution of this undertaking, eſpecially as to the hiſtory of antient times: ſuch as the numbers of forged and ſpurious books; the fictions of poets, who were the firſt hiſtorians; the contradictions and partiality of authors; the different computations of time in uſe among the ſame, as well as different nations; the want of æras to compute from in ſome nations, and the multiplicity of them in others; the variety of proper names of the ſame perſon and place, and the corruption of them through ignorance, negligence, or deſign. What adds to the misfortune is, that if we except the Jews, not one of the hiſtories of thoſe antient nations, whom the Grecians called Barbarians, written by the natives, or extracted immediately from their records, have come to our hands; nothing remaining of them, beſides ſome few fragments, preſerved here and there in other writers, which ſerve only to make us lament their loſs, and to ſhew the inaccuracy of the Greek hiſtorians, with regard to foreign nations.

WE have thought proper briefly to premiſe thus much, with regard to the ſtate of antient hiſtory, in order to entitle ourſelves to the reader's candour, in paſſing his judgment upon a performance, wherein there are ſo many difficulties to ſtruggle with. But before we enter upon the hiſtory itſelf, we ſhall give ſome account of the coſmogony, or the production and formation of this earth; which ſeems to demand our firſt attention, as being the place from whence mankind derive their original, and the theatre whereon the ſcenes of the enſuing hiſtory are to be acted.

God the author of the world, both as to matter and form.

THAT the univerſe was created or produced out of nothing, by an infinitely powerful, wiſe, and good GOD, who being ſelf-exiſtent is the original cauſe of all things, is not only certain from revelation, but deducible, and has been clearly proved, from reaſon [a]. And tho' all atheiſts, both antient and modern, have conſtantly denied, that even infinite power can create matter, and the affirmative has been thought

[a] Dr. CLARKE, in his Demonſtration of the Being and Attributes of GOD.

thought to be embarraſſed with ſeveral conſiderable difficulties, as our having no idea how a nothing from all eternity can be made to exiſt, and the ſeeming contradiction in ſuppoſing the world to be created in time, becauſe then it would be ſeparated from eternity only by an indiviſible point, which cannot ſufficiently diſtinguiſh an eternal Being from a temporary production [b]; yet theſe are rather difficulties ariſing from our own imperfect, and finite reaſon and conception, whereby we are not able to form a diſtinct idea of creation, or eternity, than any real impoſſibility in the thing itſelf: for it is no contradiction to affirm, that ſomething, which once was not, may ſince have begun to exiſt; the true notion of creation being not a forming of ſomething out of nothing, as out of a material cauſe, but only a bringing ſomething into being, which before had no being at all, and which, without ſome cauſe, would not have exiſted; and this no man can reduce to a contradiction, any more than the formation of any thing, into a ſhape which it had not before, can be reduced to a contradiction [c]. And they who deny GOD's power to create matter, muſt fly to one of theſe ſuppoſitions, either that matter exiſted from eternity, as a paſſive ſubject of all the operations of GOD, and as a collateral principle, or elſe that matter is the only ſelf-exiſtent being; either of which involves us in the moſt impious abſurdities. The firſt ſuppoſition neceſſarily implies two ſelf-exiſtent principles, which is a direct contradiction; and the other, that it is impoſſible to conceive matter not to be, or to be in any reſpect otherwiſe than it now is, without a contradiction; than which nothing is more eaſy. For whether we conſider the form of the world, with the diſpoſition and motion of its parts, or whether we conſider the matter of it, as ſuch, without reſpect to its preſent form; every thing in it, both the whole, and every one of its parts, their ſituation and motion, the form, and alſo the matter, are the moſt arbitrary and dependent things, and the fartheſt removed from neceſſity, that can poſſibly be imagined [d].

The arguments uſed to prove the non-exiſtence of matter of ſmall force

As for thoſe who deny the actual exiſtence of matter and motion, (if there be any who do ſo in earneſt) it might be ſufficient to ſay, that there is in effect no difference in re-ſpect to us, whether they be actually exiſtent, or no more than appearances; for if GOD immediately communicate all ſenſible perceptions to our mind, as he muſt do if there be no ſuch thing as ſenſible ſubſtance, he is ſtill the author of thoſe appearances, which have the ſame conſequences and effects, to our conception, as if they were real: not to urge the indecency of ſuſpecting GOD to have made the world a mere ſcene of deluſion. The impoſſibility of extenſion is attempted to be proved from the inextricable difficulties which follow, if matter be infinitely diviſible, as it neceſſarily muſt, and is eaſily demonſtrated [e]. And if there be no extenſion, the unavoidable conſequence is, that there can be no motion; which is alſo argued from the perplexing objections raiſed on the ſuppoſition of a vacuum; and yet a vacuum muſt be admitted, or elſe no motion can be conceived [f]. But theſe difficulties, though unanſwerable, as great maſters of reaſon have confeſſed, evince no more, than that human underſtanding is finite and imperfect; and being only raiſed from our want of having an adequate idea either of extenſion or ſpace [g], ought not therefore to be eſteemed real difficulties [h].

[b] Mr. BAYLE, dans les Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, Tom. IV. p. 1301. [c] Dr. CLARKE, ubi ſup. p. 83, 84. See alſo Dr. NICHOLLS's Conference with a Theiſt, Vol. I. Part 1. p. 26. [d] Dr. CLARKE, ubi ſup. p. 23, &c.

The ſeveral opinions concerning the origin of the world.

THE ſeveral opinions, which have been held by the antients, or moderns, as to the origin of the univerſe, may be comprehended under one, or other, of the following three; viz.

I. THAT the world is eternal, both as to matter and form, and had neither any origin, nor will be ſubject to any corruption [i].

II. THAT the matter of the world is eternal, but not the form. Or,

III. THAT the world had a beginning, and will ſuffer a diſſolution, being of its own nature periſhable.

The opinion of thoſe who held it eternal, both in matter and form.

AND to begin with the firſt of theſe opinions: None of the antients openly maintain'd it, except ſome Pſeudo-Pythagoreans, and Ariſtotle [k]; to whom we may add ſeveral of Plato's followers. But few, if any, of them intended thereby to aſſert, as ſome moderns have done, that the material world

[e] Vide BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt Art. Zenon, Remarq. G. [f] Vid. ibid. Rem. F. I. [g] Vid. ibid. Rem. I. and LOCKE on Human Underſtanding, B. 2. c. 13. [h] Vid. CLARKE's Demonſtration of the Being and Attributes of GOD, p. 11, 12. [i] DIODOR. SIC. l. 1. p. 6. [k] BURNET's Archæol. l. 2. cap. 1.

world was GOD, or the original, ſelf-exiſting, and independent Being, in oppoſition to the belief of a ſupreme all-governing mind; but either barely that ſomething muſt needs be eternal, which is all Ocellus Lucanus proves; or elſe that the world is an eternal, and neceſſary effect, flowing from the immutable energy of the divine nature, which ſeems to have been Ariſtotle's opinion; or elſe that the world is an eternal voluntary emanation from the all-wiſe and ſupreme Cauſe, which was the opinion of many Platoniſts [l].

The opinion of Ocellus Lucanus.

OCELLUS LUCANUS, whoſe antiquity and authority have been oppoſed to thoſe of Moſes [m], though he lived not long before Plato, was one of the moſt antient aſſerters of the world's eternity; wherein he deviated from the true doctrine of his maſter Pythagoras. We have a ſhort treatiſe under his name, concerning the nature of the univerſe, wherein he affirms it to be utterly incapable either of generation or corruption, of beginning or end [n]; that it is of itſelf eternal, and perfect, and permanent for ever [o]; and that the frame and parts of the world muſt needs be eternal, as well as the ſubſtance and matter of the whole [p], and mankind alſo [q]. But his arguments for this opinion are either very abſurd and ridiculous; as when he attempts to prove that the world muſt needs be eternal, without beginning or end, becauſe both its figure and motion are circular, and therefore without beginning or ending [r]; or elſe they are ſuch arguments as tend to prove that ſomething muſt needs be eternal, becauſe it is impoſſible for every thing to ariſe out of nothing, or to fall into nothing; as when he ſays, that the world muſt have been eternal, becauſe it is a contradiction for the univerſe to have had a beginning; ſince, if it had a beginning, it muſt have been cauſed by ſome other thing, and then it is not the univerſe [s]: to which one argument all he ſays in his whole book is plainly reducible. And to ſay the truth, he himſelf ſeems perſuaded, that however eternal and neceſſary every thing in the world be imagined to be, yet even that neceſſity muſt flow from an eternal and intelligent mind, the neceſſary perfections of whoſe nature are the cauſe of that harmony which keeps the univerſe together, and prevents its falling into diſorder [t]. He allows God to have given men faculties, organs of ſenſe, and appetites, not for the ſake of pleaſure, but fitted for final cauſes [u]; and expreſly aſſerts, that the ever active Being governs, and the ever paſſive is governed; that the one is firſt in power, the other poſterior; that the one is divine, rational, and intelligent, and the other generated, irrational, and liable to change [x].

[l] Dr. CLARKE, ubi ſup. p. 32. [m] Vid. Oracles of Reaſon, p. 215. [n] OCELL. LUCAN. de Univ. p. 506. Inter opuſc. Mythol. edit. per T. Gale, 1688. [o] Ib. 510. [p] Ib. 528. [q] Ib. 530. [r] Ib. 514. Vid. alſo Oracles of Reaſon, ubi ſup. [s] OCELL. ibid, 506, 508.

Of Ariſtotle.

ARISTOTLE alſo held this opinion, as is ſufficiently known; and, if he be to be believed, was the firſt, at leaſt of the Greeks, who aſſerted it; for he ſays, that before his time the temporary production of the world was univerſally entertained, though it was a queſtion whether it ſhould ever periſh or not [y]. His doctrine was, that not only the matter of the heavens and earth was ingenerate and eternal; but that even mankind and all the ſpecies of animals, male and female, have ſubſiſted from everlaſting by a perpetual courſe of generation, without any original beginning or production; and that the earth hath for ever been adorned with trees, plants, flowers, minerals, and other productions, as we now ſee it to be [z]. But how this is reconcileable with what he elſewere delivers of the natural gravity and levity of different elements, ſeems hard to ſhew: for if thoſe elements were ever in their natural places and diſpoſitions, according to their reſpective gravity, which nothing but ſome external violence could have hindred; it follows neceſſarily, that the earth once was in a very different form from what it now is, and could not poſſibly be inhabited from eternity [a]. The great reaſon, which induced Ariſtotle to aſſert the world to be eternal [b], was, becauſe he thought ſuch an effect muſt needs eternally proceed from ſuch an eternal cauſe as the divine Mind, which being all act and energy, could not reſt in a ſtate of inactivity. He acknowledes, that the firſt principle is neither fire, earth, nor water, nor any thing which is the object of ſenſe; but that a ſpiritual ſubſtance is [t] OCELL. de Legibus Fragm. ibid. p. 537. [u] Idem. de Univ. 531. Vid. Dr. CLARKE's Demonſtration, &c. p. 33, &c. [x] OCELL. de Legibus Fragm. ubi ſup. p. 538. [y] ARISTOT. de Cœlo. lib. 1. cap. 10. [z] Ibid cap. 12. Vid. PHILON. JUD. de Incorruptibilitate Mundi, p. 940, BURNET's Archæol. l. 1. p. 180. CUDWORTH's Intellectual Syſtem. p. 250. [a] Vid. BURNET's Archæol. l. 1. p. 181. and his Theory of the Earth, V. I. p. 51.

[b] Several other Reaſons were given by his Followers, nearly agreeing with thoſe of OCELLUS, which may be read in PHILO JUD. ubi ſup. p. 943, &c.

the

the cauſe of the univerſe, and the ſource of all the order and beauty, as well as of the motions and forms, which we ſo much admire in it[c]. And he expreſly deſcribes GOD to be an intelligent Being[d], incorporeal, the firſt mover of all things, himſelf immoveable[e], eternal, indiviſible, and void of all quantity[f]; and affirms, that if there were nothing but matter in the world, there would be no original cauſe, but an infinite progreſſion of cauſes[g]; which is abſurd[h]. So that the true notion of this great philoſopher was, that though the world had no temporary generation, yet it was produced from one ſupreme Deity, after ſome other manner[i].

THESE ſentiments of Ariſtotle, as to the eternity of the world, have been embraced by many of his followers, and among the reſt by ſeveral learned Mohammedans, who were thence named Dahrians, or Eternaliſts. Of this opinion al Farâbi, al Kendi, Ebn Roſhd, and Ebn Sina (which two laſt we uſually call Averroes and Avicenna) were ſuſpected; and therefore their philoſophy was publickly, and even in the pulpit, inveighed againſt by the more orthodox, and themſelves branded with the invidious appellations of atheiſts and infidels[k].

THOUGH Plato, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, did himſelf plainly acknowledge the world to be made by GOD, yet having uſed ſome expreſſions, as if he thought the time of its formation to be indefinite; as when he ſays, that the world muſt needs be an eternal reſemblance of the eternal idea[l], his followers, or the greateſt part of them, who adhered to Ariſtotle's opinion in this matter, took advantage of theſe expreſſions, and explained them ſo, as if by the creation of the world was not to be underſtood a creation in time, but only in order of nature, cauſality, and dependance[m]: that is, that the will of GOD, and his power of acting, being neceſſarily as eternal as his eſſence, the effects of that will and power muſt be ſuppoſed coeval to the will and power themſelves; in the ſame manner as light would eternally proceed from the sun [n], or a shadow from the interposed body, or an impression from an impoſed seal, if the respective causes of these effects were supposed eternal [o]. Existence from eternity, and being caused or produced by another, were not therefore by these philosophers apprehended to be contradictory or inconsistent. And as they were led into this opinion, no otherwise than from the sole consideration of the deity; viz. its benevolent will, and generative power [p]; so they allowed, that the world, notwithstanding its being from eternity, might in some sense be said to be made, as being produced from another cause, and not self-originated. And the generation of the inferior gods, and the world, in this sense, Proclus himself, that grand champion for the world's eternity, plainly acknowledges, when he says, that they called it the generations of the gods; meaning thereby, not any temporary production, but their ineffable procession from a superior first cause [q].

Of Plato's followers.

[c] ARISTOT. Metaph. l. 1. cap. 2, 3. [d] Νοῦς. [e] DIOGENES LAERT. in vita ARISTOT. p. 286. Ed. Amſt. 1692. [f] In Phyſ. l. 7. c. 1. &c. [g] In Metaph. [h] Vid. CLARKE's Demonſtration, &c. p. 35, and alſo CUDWORTH, p. 253. [i] SIMPLIC. in ARISTOT. Phyſ. l. 8. & l. 1. c. 1. [k] Vid. D'HERBELOT. Biblioth. Orientale, p. 303. & ELENCH, Scriptorum præfix. Epiſt. Hai Ebn Yokdhan. [l] PLATO in Timæo, & apud. Cicer. de Univ. [m] PLOTINUS En. 3. l. 2. c. 1. & En. 2. l. 9. c. 3.

THE later Platonists were so fond of this notion of the world's eternity, that being on the one hand unwilling to abandon it, and on the other desirous to save appearances, they endeavoured by forced constructions, to wrest their master's words, especially his Timæus, to their purpose; and, as has been long since observed, turned themselves every way, using all manner of violence to the text, as conceiving they ought, by all possible means, to conceal and deny the generation of the world, and of its soul, as if it were some horrid thing, and not to be spoken of [r]. It is well known, that Platonism was very early introduced into the church; and even this dogm favourably received by some, and Origen in particular [s], and as zealously opposed by others. It may however be worth observing, that this doctrine of the world's co-eternity with GOD, was, in the sixth century, suffered to be publickly taught in Alexandria by Ammonius, the scholar of Proclus [t], and not without success.

[n] Idem, En. 5. l. 8. c. 12. SALLUST. de Diis & Mundo, cap. 7. PROCLUS in Timæum. l. 2. p. 111 [o] Dr. CLARKE's Demonstration, &c. p. 37. See also the authors there cited, & PHILO JUD. de Incorruptibilitate Mundi. [p] PROCL. in Tim. p. 116. [q] PROCL in Tim p. 85. Vid. etiam SALLUST. c. 13. CUDWORTH, p. 253. [r] PLUTARCH. de Psychog. Plat. p. 1013. [s] Vid. METHODIUM. de creatis, apud Photium, p. 932. [t] ZACHARIAS MITYLENENSIS, in Biblioth. patrum, Vol. II. p. 331. Ed. Paris, 1644.

To

An Answer to the Platonic argument for the world's eternity considered.

TO the argument made uſe of by the Platoniſts for the eternity of the world, drawn from the nature and attributes of GOD, it has been anſwered; that though GOD be eſſentially and neceſſarily good, yet the communications of his goodneſs are the effects of his will, and not merely of his nature. For GOD, being a free agent, could have refrained from making the world, or could have made it otherwiſe; and therefore thoſe who make the expreſſions of the divine bounty neceſſary, in order to ſettle the world's eternity, and that he might always have an object whereon to exerciſe his goodneſs, take as much from his ſelf-ſufficiency, as they would ſeem to flatter his goodneſs. For GOD cannot be himſelf without his goodneſs; and therefore, if his goodneſs cannot be without ſome creature to ſhew and diſplay itſelf upon, God cannot be perfect, or happy without his creatures; becauſe theſe are the neceſſary iſſues of his goodneſs, and conſequently the being of the creature becomes neceſſary to the being of GOD, which is the higheſt derogation imaginable from the abſolute perfection of the divine nature [u]. All which is very true, and we do not ſee what reply a Platoniſt could make, if it were the real doctrine of the ſect, that the world was an involuntary effect of his mere nature. But they plainly taught otherwiſe, and expreſly declared, that one of the reaſons why they maintained the world not to be a temporary production, was, the conſideration of his beneficent will [x], as well as his productive power; both which being ſuppoſed, the effect may neceſſarily follow, without any derogation from GOD's abſolute perfections. It is not therefore without due conſideration, that very able diſputants have acknowledged, that the time when the world was created, or whether its creation was, properly ſpeaking, in time, is not ſo eaſy to demonſtrate ſtrictly by bare reaſon, but the proof of it can be taken only from revelation; and therefore they, who, wanting that light, have denied the world to have had a beginning, are ſomewhat excuſable [y].

This controverſy ſet in a clearer light.

BUT, on a nicer diſcuſſion, this controverſy about the eternity of the world will appear to be, in a great meaſure, [u] Vid. Biſhop STILLINGFLEET's Origines Sacræ, p. 275, &c.

[x] Ἀγαθοειδὴς βούλησις. PROCL. in Timæum, p. 116. which Words Dr. CUDWORTH has tranſlated, ſomewhat freely Eſſential Goodneſs. Intell, Syſtem, p. 253. [y] Dr. CLARKE's Demonſtr. &c. p. 39. & POIRET, Cogitationes rationales de Deo anima & mundo, lib. 3. c. 16. num. 9. p. 439. Ed. 1085.

a diſ-

a diſpute about words only. All chriſtians in general (except thoſe who believe the eternity of matter, and therefore deſerve not that name) agree, that GOD alone hath always exiſted; but ſeveral maintain, that he might have actually created the world, as ſoon as he formed the decree of producing it; whence they conclude, that the world might have exiſted eternally, ſince there is no doubt, but that the decree to produce it is eternal. On the other hand ſeveral maintain, that it is impoſſible for a creature to be eternal [z]. But when they come to argue, the ſtrength of each party lies rather in making objections, than ſolving them. This diſpute, which is rendered ſo tedious and perplexing, would end preſently, if they would but explain themſelves clearly on each ſide, and forego the equivocal acceptation of eternity; and then the queſtion ſhould be thus ſtated: Is it poſſible, that GOD and his creatures may have always exiſted together? The negative would not ſo readily be taken; for the expreſſion of the eternity of the world, that expreſſion, I ſay, which ſhocks ſo many people, would not ſtrike the mind. To remove this ſtumbling-block ſtill more effectually, it ſhould be declared, that a creature which ſhould have always co-exiſted with GOD would not be eternal, for this reaſon; becauſe the duration of creatures is ſucceſſive, and that eternity is a ſimple duration, which eſſentially excludes both paſt and future. By this eſſential diſtinction between the duration of GOD and that of creatures, the whole conteſt almoſt would ceaſe, and each ſide find their account. It would be granted to thoſe who deny the poſſibility of the creature's being eternal, that they are in the right; and it would not be denied to be poſſible, that GOD and his creature might have always exiſted together; ſince it is certain, that the cauſe includes not in its idea a priority of time, with reſpect to its effect, and that this is more nicely true as to an almighty cauſe, which needs only will to produce actually whatever it pleaſes. Again, they who ſay, that the creatures have not always co-exiſted with GOD, muſt grant, that GOD exiſted before they did. There was then a before, when GOD exiſted alone; therefore it is not true, that GOD's duration is an indiviſible point; whence it follows, that time preceded the exiſtence of creatures: which conſequences drive thoſe who argue in this manner to contradict themſelves; for if the duration of GOD be indiviſible, without paſt or future, time and creatures muſt have began together; and if ſo, how can it be ſaid, that GOD exiſted before the exiſtence of his creatures [a]?

[z] Vid. JOH. PHILOPON. contra Proclum, p. 4. & CUDWORTH, p. 887.

out

THE two ſeemingly inſuperable arguments then for the eternity of the world are drawn from the eternity of GOD's decree for its creation, and the indiviſibility of the real duration of GOD: which yet have been anſwered in this manner; It is ſuppoſed that among the poſſible beings which GOD knew before he made the decrees of creation, one was a ſucceſſive duration, which hath neither beginning nor end, and whoſe parts are as diſtinct from one another, as thoſe of poſſible extenſion, which GOD likewiſe knew before his decrees, as infinite according to the three dimenſions. He has left in the ſtate of poſſible things one part of this infinite duration, and has decreed the exiſtence of the other. He choſe ſuch moment as he pleaſed, in this ideal duration, for the firſt which ſhould exiſt, and annexed thereto the act by which he decreed the creation of the world: ſo that the eternity of that act does not prove the eternity of the world; nor does the indiviſibility of GOD's real duration prove the world had no beginning [b].

BUT after all, the diſtinction of the ſchoolmen between the manner of the duration of GOD, and that of his creatures, whereon the preceding argumentation is built, though it has been generally received by the beſt pagan, as well as chriſtian philoſophers, and is at leaſt as old as Parmenides [c], has yet been rejected, and oppoſed by many men of great learning and judgment, as inconſiſtent and unintelligible; it being very hard to conceive eternity to be an inſtant, or how that can be together, or at once, which muſt neceſſarily be imagined to be co-exiſtent to ſucceſſions [d]. And whatever force the above-mentioned arguments may be ſuppoſed to carry for the eternity of the world, underſtanding thereby the univerſe, with its ſeveral changes and viciſſitudes; they are far from proving, that the diſpoſition of the ſolar ſyſtem, much leſs the form of the earth, has been for ever the ſame as we now ſee it: the imagining of which

[a] BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Zabarella, Jaques, Rem. H. See alſo Epiſt. Abi Jaafar Ebn Tofail de Hai Ebn Yokdhân Edit. à POCOCK. p. 105, 106. and Mr. Ockley's Engliſh Tranſlation, p. 83. [b] BAYLE, ubi ſupra. [c] See CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſtem, p. 388. [d] GASSEND. Phyſic. l. 1. Archbiſhop TILLOTSON, Vol. 7. Serm. 13. See alſo Dr. CLARKE's Demonſtr. &c. p. 45. and CUDWORTH's Intell. Syſtem, p. 644.

ſeems

ſeems to have been the great error of the old Eternaliſts, and has been ſtrongly oppoſed by ſeveral arguments, as well from reaſon, as human teſtimony, ſeparate from the evidence of divine revelation, as will be ſeen hereafter.

The opinion of thoſe who held the univerſe to be God.

SOME modern aſſerters of the world's eternity have gone on very different principles from theſe antients, and ventured to affirm the material univerſe to be ſelf-exiſtent, and the ſupreme Deity itſelf. This is the doctrine of Spinoza, the firſt, as is ſuppoſed, who reduced atheiſm into a ſyſtem, by regular deductions, after the method of the mathematicians. But as the fundamental opinion, whereon he erected that ſyſtem, was not new, it may be proper, before we ſpeak of him, to ſay ſomething of thoſe who led him the way, though he has departed from them in ſome reſpects.

The opinion of Xenophanes, and his followers;

THAT the univerſe is but one ſubſtance, and that GOD and the world are but one and the ſame thing, hath been an opinion of ſome ſtanding, and is ſuppoſed to have been firſt taught by Xenophanes, the founder of the ſect afterwards called the Eleatic. He is ſaid to have held not only the eternity and immutability of the world [e], but alſo, that whatever exiſted was one being; that there was neither any generation nor corruption; that this one being was immoveable, and remained always the ſame [f], and was the true GOD [g]; which doctrine was not only defended by his ſucceſſors, Parmenides, Meliſſus, and Zeno of Elea, but by Stilpo, and the Megaric philoſophers alſo. And to obviate the objection, which might be brought againſt the unchangeable nature of the univerſe, from the continual alterations made therein, by new generations and corruptions, they maintained, that whatever changes it ſeemed to ſuffer, were no more than illuſions of our ſenſes, and mere appearances. Which laſt retreat they are eaſily beaten from: for ſince they cannot deny, but there are changes in the world in appearance at leaſt, it even thence follows, that nature is not immutable, but muſt neceſſarily be changed in the ſubject which produces, or receives our ſenſations; and thoſe ſenſations, being paſſions, imply both an efficient cauſe,

[e] PLUTARCH. apud Euſeb. de Præparat. Evang. l. 1. cap. 8. & l. 15. cap. 35. [f] ARISTOCLES de Philoſoph. apud Eund. l. 14. cap. 17. Vid. etiam ARISTOT. de Xenophane, Zenone, & Gorgia, in initio, & CICER. in Lucullo. [g] CICER. Quæſt. Acad. lib. 2. Vid. etiam SEXTUM EMPIRIC. in Pyrrhon. Hypotyp. l. 1.

and

and a paſſive principle, which overthrows at once their pretended unity of all things [h].

NEVERTHELESS this opinion of Zenophanes and his followers, that all things are one, which ſeems ſo impious and abſurd, has been ſo explained by ſeveral learned men [i], and themſelves defended, as if by the univerſe or all, they meant not the material principle of which all things are compoſed, but that one ſimple principle, from whence all things had their original, that is, the true GOD, whom they expreſly affirm to be incorporeal [k]; and therefore could not poſſibly be, in their opinion, the material world. But the writings of theſe philoſophers being not without obſcurity, ſome of the antients, who were leſs acquainted with metaphyſical ſpeculations, underſtood them phyſically; as if they had aſſerterd the whole corporeal world to be all but one thing, and that immoveable; thereby deſtroying, together with the diverſity of things, all motion, mutation, and action; which was plainly to make them not to have been philoſophers, but madmen. Simplicius [l], a man well acquainted with the opinions of antient philoſophers, aſſures us, that Xenophanes and Parmenides herein wrote not as naturaliſts, but as metaphyſicians, not concerning a phyſical element, or principle, but concerning the true Being, or the divine tranſcendency; adding, that though ſome of thoſe antient philoſophers did not diſtinguiſh natural things from ſupernatural, yet the Pythagoreans, and Xenophanes, and Parmenides, and Empedocles, and Anaxagoras, did all handle theſe two diſtinctly, however, by reaſon of their obſcurity, it were not perceived by many; for which cauſe they have been moſt of them miſrepreſented, not only by pagans, but alſo by chriſtians [m], And in fact, when theſe Eleatics come to treat of natural things, they plainly acknowledge them to be compounded of different principles. Xenophanes ſuppoſed, that the earth conſiſted of air and fire [n], and that all things were produced out of the earth, and the ſun and ſtars out of clouds [o]: he alſo held, that there were four elements [p]. Parmenides made a profeſſed diſtinction between [h] Vid. ARISTOCLEM. ubi ſupra. [i] LESCALOPIER, in Cicer. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. p. 44. Art de penſer, part III. cap. 18. & CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 377. & 383, &c. [k] CUDWORTH, p. 378, 383, &c. [l] SIMPLIC. in Phyſ. ARISTOT. p. 5, 6, &c. [m] CUDWORTH, p. 383. See BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Xenophanes, Remarq. L. [n] PLUTARCH. apud. Euſeb. de Præp. Ev. l. 15. cap. 55. [o] Idem, in Strom. apud. Eund. l. 1. cap. 8. [p] DIOGEN. LAERT. in Vita Zenoph. p. 558.

the

the doctrine concerning theological and metaphyſical things, called by him truth, and that concerning phyſical and corporeal things, which he called opinion. In the former of which doctrines he aſſerted one immoveable principle, but in the latter two moveable ones, fire and earth, or heat and cold, the firſt being the workman, and the other the matter [q]; he taught, that the earth was formed of a denſer air, which ſubſided [r], and that mankind was firſt produced out of mud [s]. Which notions concerning the origin of things he ſeems to have received from Archelaus the Ionic, whoſe auditor he is ſaid to have been. And with them Zeno alſo agreed, holding, that the nature of all things aroſe from a mixture of heat and cold, dryneſs and moiſture; and that man was generated of the earth, being equally compounded of the aforeſaid principles, ſo that neither predominated [t].

Of Strato Lampſacenus.

WHETHER Strato of Lampſacus held the unity of all things or no, is a doubt; for though he made nature inanimate, and acknowledged no GOD but nature [u], yet it is not certain, that he taught the univerſe, or nature, to be one ſimple being. From his ridiculing the atoms of Democritus [x], it has been thought reaſonable to imagine, that he admitted no difference between the parts of the univerſe; but this is allowed to be no neceſſary conſequence. It may be only concluded, that his opinion approaches infinitely nearer to Spinoziſm, than the corpuſcular ſyſtem. There is likewiſe ſome room to believe, that he did not teach, as the Atomiſts did, that the world was a new work, and produced by chance; but, as the Spinoziſts do, that nature produced it neceſſarily, and from all eternity [y]. Plutarch indeed tells us [z], that he held that which was natural to follow that which was fortuitous, as if he allowed ſomething to chance, at firſt motion, or impreſſion at leaſt, which was afterwards perfected by nature, or the plaſtic life, ſuppoſed by him to be in every part of matter; making the mundane ſyſtem to depend upon a certain mixture of chance, and plaſtic or orderly nature,

[q] SIMPLIC. ubi ſupra, & DIOG. LAERT. in Vita Parmenidis, p. 560. [r] PLUTARCH. apud Euſeb ubi ſup. l. 1. cap. 8. [s] DIOG. LAERT. loco citato. CICERO, in Lucullo. SIMPLIC. & THEMIST. in lib. 1. Phyſic. Ariſt. [t] DIOG. LAERT. in vita Zenon. p. 566. [u] CICERO, de Nat. Deor. l. 1. & Quæſt. Acad. l. 2. LACTANTIUS, de Ira Dei, cap 10. [x] CICERO, Quæſt. Acad. ubi ſupra. [y] BAYLE, Dict Hiſt. Art. Spinoza, Rem. A. [z] PLUTARCH. Adv. Colotem. p. 1115.

nature, both together[a]. But as his opinion is repreſented by Lactantius[b], he rejected all chance, which was the great difference between him and the Epicureans, and affirmed, that nature had in itſelf a generative and vital power, but had neither ſenſe nor figure; ſo that all things were, as he imagined, generated of their own accord, without the aſſiſtance of any Former, or Author.

Of Alexander the Epicurean, and ſome heretical chriſtians.

BUT whatever was the real notion of this greateſt of the peripatetic philoſophers[c], it is certain, that Alexander the Epicurean, who is ſuppoſed to have been contemporary with Plutarch[d], maintained, that GOD is matter, or not diſtinct from it; that all things are eſſentially GOD, and that forms are imaginary accidents, which have no real exiſtence; and therefore he held all things to be ſubſtantially the ſame[e]. Some heretical chriſtians have alſo embraced this extravagant opinion; as one Amalric in particular, whoſe dead body was taken up, and burnt in the beginning of the thirteenth century[f], for having in his life-time taught that all things were GOD, and GOD was all things, and the eſſence of all creatures; ſo that the creator and the creature were the ſame; and that GOD was therefore called the end of all things, becauſe all returned into him[g]. Which ſentiments of his were followed by his ſcholar David of Dinant, and ſeveral others[h]; the learned Peter Abelard having alſo been accuſed of holding the ſame opinion[i].

Of certain ſects among the Japaneſe, and Mohammedans.

NOR has this notion been confined to Europe only, it having alſo made no ſmall progreſs in the eaſt. A conſiderable ſect among the Japaneſe teach, that there is but one principle of all things; that this principle is ſimple, clear, luminous, incapable of encreaſe or diminution, without figure, perfect in the higheſt degree, wiſe, but void of reaſon or underſtanding, leading a life of perfect inaction, eaſe, and tranquillity, like a man, whoſe attention is ſtrongly fixed on one thing, regardleſs of all other. They hold, that this principle

[a] Vid. CUDWORTH's Intell. Syſtem, p. 108. and BAYLE's Dict. loco citato. [b] LACTANTIUS, de Ira Dei, loco citato. [c] So PLUTARCH calls him in the paſſage above quoted. [d] THOMASIUS, Diſſertat. xiv. ad Philoſoph. Stoic. p. 199. [e] ALBERTUS MAGNUS, in 1 Phyſic. Tract. 3. c. 13. [f] V. PRATEOLUM, in Elencho Hæreſ Voce Amalricus, p. 23. He adds, that, according to ſome authors, this heretic, and his adherents, were burnt alive. [g] THOMASIUS, loco citato, ex GERSON. Tractat. de Concordia Metaphyſ. cum Logic. [h] See the authors juſt cited, and BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Spinoza, Rem. A. [i] BAYLE, ibid.

principle is in all particular beings, and communicates his eſſence to them, in ſuch a manner, that they are the ſame thing with him, and are reſolved into him when they are deſtroyed[k]. The ſect called by the Mohammedans al Zenâdika, (the ſingular of which is Zendîk) do alſo maintain, that whatſoever we ſee, or is in the world, is GOD[l]. And the famous Abu Moſlem, by whoſe conduct and ſucceſs the Khalifat was tranſlated, from the family of Omeya to that of Abbâs, is ſaid to have held the ſame opinion, and that all things returned at laſt into one common principle, or GOD; which opinion, ſome have ſuppoſed to be what the Arabian authors call the Metempſycoſis of reſolution[m], and differs little, if any thing, from that of a later ſect, who ſprang up among the Mohammedans about 300 years ago, and call themſelves Ahl al tahkik, or people of certainty: they believe, that there is no other God than the four elements, which, together with the world, and all its changes and viciſſitudes, they aſſert to be eternal; and that mankind, as well as other beings, are a compound of thoſe elements, of which they are formed, and into which they return, and are diſſipated. Of this ſect there are great numbers in the province of Lar in Perſia[n].

The dogm of the ſoul of the world.

THE dogm of the ſoul of the world, which is not only common at this time in the eaſt, but was ſo among the antients, and made the chief part of the Stoic ſyſtem, is at the bottom the ſame with that of Spinoza[o]: but as he differed from the Stoics, not only in contracting GOD's knowledge, which they allowed to be univerſal, and in denying his providence; but alſo in aſſerting the preſent diſpoſition of the world to have been neceſſary and eternal, and conſequently ſubject to no decay, contrary to their expreſs doctrine, it will be more proper to conſider that opinion under the next head. We ſhall only obſerve here, that ſome heterodox Stoics, as Boëthius in particular, did not only deny the world to be an animal, or intelligent being[p], ſubſtituting in the [k] POSSEVIN. Biblioth. Select. Tom. I. lib. x. cap. 11. p. 411, &c. See alſo BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Japon, Rem. D.

[l] Viaggi di PIETRO DELLA VALLE, Tom. III. p. 324.
[m] الشامع للاوكي EBN AL AMID, in vita Khalifæ al Mansûr. See a more preciſe account of this opinion in Mr. Sale's preliminary diſcourſe to his tranſlation of the Korân, p. 176, and 182. [n] DELLA VALLE, Tom. III. p. 392.
[o] V. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Spinoza, Rem. A. [p] DIOG. LAERT. in Vita Zenonis Cit. p. 455.

room

room of its mind or ſoul a plaſtic nature; but alſo aſſerted the world's eternity and incorruptibility, or one conſtant and invariable courſe or tenor of things[q]. The elder Pliny ſeems alſo to have been of this opinion; for he declares, that the world, and that which by another name is called heaven, by whoſe circular motion all things are governed, ought to be believed to be an eternal and immenſe deity, ſuch as was neither made, nor ſhall ever be deſtroyed[r].

SPINOZA taught, that there is no difference of ſubſtances, but that the whole, and every part of the material world, is a neceſſarily exiſtent being, and conſequently infinite[s]; that there is no other GOD but the univerſe[t], and that extenſion is one of his attributes[u]: that ſince it is abſolutely impoſſible for any thing to be created or produced by another, and alſo abſolutely impoſſible for GOD to have cauſed any thing to be, in any reſpect, different from what it now is[x]; every thing that exiſts muſt needs be ſo a part of the divine ſubſtance, not as a modification cauſed in it by any will or good pleaſure, or wiſdom in the whole (for he expreſly denies GOD to act by any freedom of will[y]; or for the ſake of final cauſes[z]) but as of abſolute neceſſity in itſelf, with reſpect to the matter of the exiſtence of each part, no leſs than with reſpect to the ſelf-exiſtence of the whole. So that the opinion of Spinoza evidently comes to this; that the univerſe, or material world is GOD, or the ſelf-exiſtent being; and that all particular beings, corporeal extenſion, the ſun, moon, planets, animals, men, their motions, ideas, imaginations, and appetites, are all neceſſary modifications of him[a]

The opinion of Spinoza.

THIS monſtrous ſyſtem, tho' it has met with ſome patrons, has yet been ſufficiently expoſed, and confuted by even the weakeſt of its adverſaries[b], and indeed carries its antidote along with it. For Spinoza, to avoid the abovementioned inſuperable objection made to the Eleatics, who held the univerſe to be immutable, falls into a worſe extremity, and attributes a continual change, and corruption to Confuted.

[q] PHILO JUD. de Incorruptibilitate Mundi, p. 947. Poſidonius and Panætius alſo maintained the World to be eternal Ibid.
[r] PLIN. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 2. c. 1. [s] SPINOZA, in Ethic. Part I. Prop. 6, 7, and 8. [t] Ibid. Prop. 14. [u] Ibid. in Schol. ad Prop. 15, & Part II. Prop. 2. [x] Ibid. Part I. Prop. 6, & 33. [y] Ibid. Prop. 32. Coroll. 1. [z] Ibid. in Append. ad Prop. 36.
[a] See Dr. CLARK's Demonſtr. &c. p. 28, &c. & BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Spinoza, Rem. DD. [b] Vid. BAYLE, ibid. Rem. M. & P.

the divine nature, in reſpect of its various modifications: which doctrine ſhocks common ſenſe, it being horrible to ſuppoſe the Deity both the cauſe, and ſubject of all the moral, and phyſical evils, which are ſo frequent in the world; and what can be more abſurd, than to imagine matter, the vileſt of all things, the theatre of all changes, and the field of battle of contrary cauſes, to be that ſupreme, perfect being, with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning[c]? The very foundations of this hypotheſis are in a moment overturned, if we admit either a vacuum, or the diviſibility of matter, the one deſtroying the infinity, and the other the unity of GOD[d]; and therefore the Spinoziſts conſtantly deny both, ridiculouſly pretending, that there can be no diviſion of matter, unleſs one part be ſeparated from the other by empty ſpace. It ſeems alſo impoſſible, according to this ſyſtem, that the Deity can be an intelligent being: for perception and intelligence being really a diſtinct quality, or perfection, and not a mere effect, or compoſition of unintelligent figure and motion, as has been well proved[e]; it follows, that GOD could not poſſibly be poſſeſſed even of that imperfect underſtanding, allowed him by Spinoza, which however being wholly ſeparate from any power of will or choice, is, in any reſpect, of any excellency, or indeed to any common ſenſe, the very ſame thing as no underſtanding at all[f]. Mr. Hobbes, who alſo held, that there was no ſubſtance diſtinct from matter, being preſſed in his own mind with the difficulty ariſing from the impoſſibility of ſenſe, or conſciouſneſs being merely the effect of figure and motion, is forced to recur to that prodigiouſly abſurd ſuppoſition of the antient Hylozoics, that all matter, as matter, is indued not only with figure, and a capacity of motion, but alſo with an actual ſenſe or perception; and wants only the organs, and memory of animals, to expreſs its ſenſation[g].

The opinion of thoſe who held the matter of the world to be eternal, but not the form.

THE ſecond opinion, that the ſubſtance of the univerſe is eternal, tho' the form be not, was generally embraced by the antients, who from that eſtabliſhed axiom, That nothing can be produced from nothing[h], concluded the creation of

[c] Jam. i. 17. See BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. ubi ſup. Rem. N. [d] Tho' Spinoza allows GOD to be one, yet he aſſerts, that GOD cannot be ſaid to be one, or a ſimple Being, in Propriety of Speech, Opera Poſthuma, Ep. 50. p. 557. [e] Dr. CLARKE's Demonſtr. &c. p. 61, &c. [f] Ibid. 55. [g] HOBBES Phyſic, cap. 25. Sect. 5. See Dr. CLARKE, ubi ſupra, p. 63. [h] Ex nihilo nihil.

matter

matter to be an abſolute impoſſibility; but at the ſame time thought, they had good reaſon to believe, the world had not always been in its preſent ſtate and diſpoſition. They who held this opinion may be divided into two claſſes. The firſt endeavoured to account for the generation of the world, or its reduction into the preſent form, from mechanical principles only, and the activity of matter, without having recourſe to the aſſiſtance of any divine power; the other introduced an intelligent mind, as the architect and diſpoſer of all things. But before we produce their ſeveral ſyſtems and notions, it may be proper to examine the principles they proceed upon more nearly.

THERE is no doubt, but that the creation of matter, on due weighing the arguments for and againſt it, will appear to be ſo far from impoſſible [i], that it muſt neceſſarily be admitted [k]. For if it be abſurd to imagine matter to be the only ſubſtance, as has been ſufficiently ſhewn, it is much more ſo to ſuppoſe two, or more, eternal beings; which yet was not by the antients thought to be contradictory. But this impious poſition, that GOD is not the creator of matter, being once laid down for truth, thoſe philoſophers who made GOD the former, preſerver, and director of the world, notwithſtanding their ſeeming orthodoxy, argued much more inconſiſtently, than thoſe who denied him to have any concern with it. For if matter was an eternal uncreated being, and diſtinct from GOD, it owed its exiſtence to its own nature only, depending on no other cauſe, either in reſpect of its eſſence, or its properties. And it is contrary to all rules of reaſon, that another being ſhould exerciſe ſo great a power over matter as entirely to change it, and form a world out of that which had been ſelf-exiſtent from all eternity without being a world. If GOD's right to act in this manner be founded on this ſuperior power, the ſame title would authorize all uſurpations, and confound all notions of right and wrong. If it be ſaid, that GOD dealt thus arbitrarily with matter out of a principle of goodneſs, on a ſuppoſition of its inſenſibility, and precedent imperfection; the anſwer which has been given is, that ſuch a work would not be ſo much an inſtance of GOD's goodneſs, as an effect of ſuperfluous diligence, in endeavouring to put in order what he had not created, as if any order or perfection could be wanting in a being which had eternally ſubſiſted of itſelf; for all acceſſions to ſuch a being muſt be foreign to its nature, and conſequently a defect. GOD therefore muſt in ſuch a caſe have begun his work by an ill action, in going about to diveſt of its natural ſtate a ſubſtance, uncreated as well as himſelf, and his own ſifter [l].

The abſurdity of ſuppoſing matter to be uncreated.

[i] See before, p. 2, & 3. [k] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Anaxagoras, Rem. G. p. 212. & Art. Hierocles Philoſophe, Rem A.

ON the other hand, they who attribute the formation of the univerſe to mere matter and motion, without the intervention of a Deity, tho' they avoid the above-mentioned abſurdities, yet fall into other difficulties as inextricable, by ſuppoſing the eternal motion of matter; which they are obliged to do, if they will not contradict their own maxim, and admit motion at leaſt to be produced out of nothing. But if motion be eternal, it was either eternally cauſed by ſome eternal intelligent being, which would again introduce the Deity whom they had excluded: or it muſt be of itſelf neceſſary and ſelf-exiſtent; whence it would follow, that it muſt be a contradiction in terms to ſuppoſe any matter to be at reſt, or to ſuppoſe that there might poſſibly have been originally more or leſs motion in the univerſe, than there actually was; both which are conſequences too abſurd and ridiculous for any to admit: or elſe, without any neceſſity in its own nature, and without any external neceſſary cauſe, it muſt have exiſted from eternity by an endleſs ſucceſſive communication; which is alſo a plain contradiction: for an infinite ſucceſſion of merely dependent beings, without any original cauſe, is a ſeries of beings, which has neither neceſſity nor cauſe, nor any reaſon at all of its exiſtence, neither within itſelf, nor from without; that is, 'tis an expreſs impoſſibility. A late author [m] indeed has ventured to aſſert, and pretended to prove, that motion, that is the conatus, or endeavour to move, is eſſential to all matter: but how philoſophically, may appear from this one conſideration. The conatus to motion in any one particle of matter muſt be either a conatus to move ſome one determinate way at once, or to move every way at once: a conatus to move ſome one determinate way cannot be eſſential to any particle of matter, but muſt ariſe from ſome external cauſe; becauſe there is nothing in the pretended neceſſary nature of any particle to determine its motion, neceſſarily and eſſentially one way, rather than another: and a conatus equally to move every way at once, is either an abſolute contradiction, or at leaſt can produce nothing in matter, but an eternal reſt of all, and every one of its parts [n].

[l] HIEROCLES, apud Photium in Biblioth. Cod. CCCLI. p. 1380. See BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Epicure, Rem. S. & Art. Hierocles, ubi ſupra. [m] Mr. TOLAND, Lett. 3. [n] See Dr. CLARKE's Demonſtr. p. 66, 14, and 25.

THE

THE ſtate, wherein theſe philoſophers conceived matter to have eternally been before the formation of the world, is alſo liable to ſeveral objections. They generally ſuppoſed the original of the earth to have been from a chaos, or dark, confuſed, fluid maſs, without diſtinction of elements, and made up of all variety of parts [o], but without order, or any determinate form. To this chaos they attributed a certain motion, ariſing from the action and reaction of the firſt four qualities, and the different tending of the particles of earth and water downwards, and their air and fire upwards. This motion they abſurdly enough imagined to have been irregular, and diſorderly [p], till it was ſtopped or changed into a regular and natural motion, either by chance, or divine power. But Ariſtotle has long ago obſerved, that the ſuppoſition of ſuch an irregular motion deſtroys itſelf; for it is impoſſible, that what is infinite and eternal ſhould be moved in a diſorderly manner, but muſt neceſſarily have a regular and natural motion; whence it follows, that the production of the world would rather have been an overturning, than introducing the true natural ſtate: for which reaſon he ſays, Anaxagoras ſeemed to have been in the right, when he began his formation of the world from matter entirely at reſt [q]. So that if we admit the motion of the chaotic particles to have been natural, and according to their ſeveral qualities and properties, the very poſſibility of matter's having continued in that ſtate from eternity is deſtroyed, becauſe we then introduce a principle, which will neceſſarily ſeparate the ſeveral kinds of bodies one from the other, and that in a certain limited ſpace of time. This principle alſo renders the aſſiſtance of a Deity unneceſſary; for if the chaos be acknowledged to have in itſelf all the internal power that is requiſite for the ſeparation of its parts, and the placing of every element in its proper ſituation, Objections to the ſtate of matter before the formation of the world, according to this opinion.

[o] Mr. BAYLE ſuppoſes Ovid took the chaos to have been entirely homogeneous, becauſe in his fine deſcription of it, in the firſt book of his Metamorphoſis, he ſays, that there was then but one face of nature in the world: which is inconſiſtent with what he preſently adds of the diſagreeing principles of which the chaos conſiſted. But that expreſſion may rather be underſtood of the uniformity of the whole, as being equally, in every part, a promiſcuous compound of all the elements. Vid. Dict. Hiſt. Art. Ovide, Rem. G. [p] PLATO in Timæo, apud ARISTOT. de Cœlo, lib. III. cap. 2. p. 370. Ovid. Metam. l. 1. [q] ARISTOT. de Cœlo, loco citato.

there can be no occaſion for the intervention of any external cauſe.

To reaſon well therefore concerning the production of the world, we muſt conſider GOD as the author of matter, and as the firſt and ſole principle of motion. If we cannot raiſe our minds ſo high as to conceive a creation properly ſo called, which way ever we turn, we ſhall find ourſelves driven to aſſertions and ſuppoſitions directly contrary to reaſon, and be involved in an endleſs labyrinth of abſurdities and contradictions [r].

Theſe philoſophers right in ſuppoſing the world had a beginning.

BUT however they who held this opinion were miſtaken in accounting for the origin of the world, they had great reaſon to aſſert that it had a beginning, and was once formed out of a confuſed chaos. For though the preciſe time of this formation could not have been exactly known, without revelation; yet even at this day, there are remaining many conſiderable, and very ſtrong rational proofs, which make it exceeding probable, that this preſent frame and conſtitution of the earth, at leaſt, has been of no very antient date. The changes which muſt neceſſarily fall out naturally in the earth in a vaſt length of time, by petrification, the ſinking and waſhing down of mountains, the daily encroaching of the land upon the ſea, the conſumption of water by plants, and innumerable other accidents; the univerſal tradition of the moſt antient nations, both learned and barbarous; the number of men with which the earth is at preſent inhabited; the late original and invention of all uſeful arts and ſciences; the ſhortneſs of the hiſtory of the world, which reaches up but to a very few ages; the manifeſt abſurdities and contradictions of thoſe few accounts, which pretend to a greater antiquity; the impoſſibility that univerſal deluges, or other accidents, ſhould at certain long periods have oftentimes deſtroyed far the greateſt part of mankind, with the memory of all former actions and inventions, and yet never have happened to deſtroy them all; theſe, and many more arguments drawn from nature, reaſon, and obſervation, make it exceeding probable, that the formation of the earth was novel, and of no great antiquity. And it is not to be doubted, but that the doctrine of thoſe antient poets and philoſophers, who taught, that the world had a beginning, was founded on ſtill more antient traditions, traditions, which were ſo many authorities to them, as their teſtimonies are at this day to us [r].

[r] See BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Ovide, Rem. G.

HAVING obſerved thus much, it is time to take a view of the different hypotheſes, which may be ranged under this head; and we ſhall begin with thoſe, who, excluding all divine interpoſition, accounted for the formation of the univerſe, from the properties and action of matter only.

AND with this doctrine the moſt antient profane accounts we have now remaining of the original of the world, viz. the Phœnician, Egyptian, and Babylonian, have been charged; but whether juſtly or no, muſt be left to the judgment of the reader, after we ſhall have laid before him, firſt the accounts themſelves, and then the obſervations which have been made on them.

The Phœnician coſmogony.

THE firſt of them is that of the Phœnicians, which has been tranſmitted to us by Sanchoniatho, one of their own writers, and was originally taken, as he aſſures us, from the coſmogony of Taautus, who was the ſame with the Egyptian Thoyth, or Hermes [t]. He wrote, that the firſt principle of the univerſe was a dark and ſpiritual (or windy) air, or a ſpirit of dark air, and a turbid obſcure chaos; and that theſe things were infinite, and for many ages had no bounds. But when the ſpirit was affected with love towards its own principles, and a mixture followed, that conjunction was called deſire. This was the beginning of the formation of all things; but the ſpirit did not know (or acknowledge) its own production. From this conjunction of the ſpirit was begotten Môt [u], which ſome call mud, others a corruption of a watry mixture; and of this came the ſeed of all creatures, and the generation of the univerſe. That there were certain animals which had no ſenſe, from which proceeded intelligent animals called Zophaſemin [x], that is, the contemplators of heaven, being formed alike in the ſhape of an egg: immediately Môt, with the ſun, moon, ſtars, and larger conſtellations, ſhone forth. That the air being intenſely enlightened by the violent degree of heat communicated to the ſea and earth, winds were generated, and clouds, and great deſcents and defluxions of the heavenly waters; and when they were ſeparated, and drawn from their proper place by the heat of the ſun, and then met all again in the air, and daſhed the one againſt the other, thunders and lightnings were engendered; and at the noiſe of the thunders the before-mentioned intelligent animals awoke, and were terrified with the ſound, and male and female moved in the earth and in the ſea [y].

[r] See Dr. NICHOLL's Conf. with a Theiſt, Vol. I. Part I. p. 26, &c. Dr. BURNET's Theory of the Earth, Book I. c. 4. p. 49. Dr. CLARKE's Diſcourſe concerning the evidences of natural and revealed Religion, p. 252. [t] SANCHONIATHO, apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 10. [u] Môt, BOCHART derives this word from the Arabic مادّ Madah, which ſignifies, as he ſays, the firſt Matter of Things. But as SANCHONIATHO makes the Chaos, and not Môt, to be the firſt material principle, Biſhop CUMBERLAND thinks it may better be accounted for from another Arabic Word, which needs no ſuch changes, as he is forced to preſume: and that is ماث Matha, which ſignifies to ſteep, or macerate in water; موث Mawth, the Noun, denotes ſuch a Confuſion, or Solution, as is thereby made; a Mucilage, as Phyſicians ſpeak. CUMBERL. Remarks on the Coſmogony of Sanchon. p. 4. By what is afterwards ſaid of Môt's ſhining forth with the Sun, Moon, and Stars, it ſeems THOYTH conſidered the Earth as a Planet. Vid. ib. p. 18.

Remarks thereon.

EUSEBIUS of Caſarea, to whom we are obliged for preſerving this fragment, obſerves, that this coſmogony of the Phœnicians directly brings in atheiſm [z], Sanchoniatho having thereing delivered no divinity or theology concerning the ſupreme GOD, nor concerning the inhabitants of heaven [a], or angels. Which animadverſion has been approved, and purſued by a late very learned man [b], who, with great reaſon, looked on this account of the origin of things as a profeſſed apology for the idolatrous worſhip paid to dead men, and the ſeveral parts of the univerſe; Thoyth having led his tranſcriber into the fouleſt ſink of heatheniſm, which his neglect of the ſovereign and only true GOD, in the making, and conſequently of the governing of the world; endeavoured to eſtabliſh the vain and fooliſh religion of the Phœnicians and Egyptians, who worſhipped the creature more than the creator [c], by pretending to give a generation of the world, without any help from GOD, and ſuppoſing, that the heathen deities, the Zophaſemin, which were the planets and fixed ſtars, paſſed gradually from the life

[x] ZOPHASEMIN. צופי שמים Sophe Shamaim in Hebrew, or Phœnician, ſignifies the Spies, or Obſervers of Heaven. Theſe Animals were not the Angels, as BOCHART imagines, but the Celeſtial Bodies, which SANCHON. ſuppoſes to be intelligent, and therefore were adored as Gods. Vid. ib. p. 21. [y] SANCHON. apud Euſeb. ubi ſupra [z] EUSEB. ibid. p 33. [a] Idem. l. 1. cap. 9. p. 31. [b] Biſhop CUMBERLAND, in his Remarks on the Coſmogony of Sanchoniatho. [c] Vid. Rom. i. 19, &c.

life of planets, which have no ſenſe (and yet ſome of them were worſhipped) through the ſtate of ſenſible animals, which were more ſolemnly ſerved, till at length they came to be perfect intelligences [d], and ſo worthy to challenge the higheſt worſhip which they gave to them, in which their ſtate-religion reſted.

ON the other hand it has been remarked, that it is well known, Euſebius took all advantages poſſible to repreſent the pagans to the worſt, and render their theology ridiculous and abſurd [e]; and that if the beſt interpretation be put on the words of Sanchoniatho, it is not improbable, that the Phœnicians ſuppoſed two principles, of which one was a turbid dark chaos, and the other a ſpirit [f], or an underſtanding prolifical goodneſs, forming and hatching the corporeal world into perfection [g], the eternity of which ſpirit ſeems alſo to be aſſerted by what follows, that it knew not its own generation, that is, had no original at all. But this Phœnician coſmogony being confeſſedly taken from that of Thoyth, and conſequently agreeing in ſubſtance with the Egyptian, which is therefore under the ſame imputation of atheiſm, judgment may be ſuſpended, till that be conſidered alſo.

The Egyptian coſmogony.

THE account of the origin of the univerſe, given us by Diodorus Siculus, is generally ſuppoſed to be the coſmogony of the Egyptians [h], though Diodorus himſelf does not ſay ſo much; and is as follows: When the univerſe firſt coaleſced, heaven and earth were of one form, their nature being blended together; but afterwards, as bodies ſeparated, the world took on it the entire diſpoſition wherein we now behold it, and the air began to have a conſtant motion; upon which its fiery parts flew to the upper regions, being naturally carried upwards by their own levity; and hence proceeded the rapid circular motion of the ſun and other ſtars. The muddy and turbid matter, after it had been incorporated with the humid, ſubſided in one place by its own weight, and being agitated with continual internal volutations, of the watery parts the ſea became formed, and of [d] Νοεραὶ. [e] CUDWORTH'S Intellect. Syſtem, p. 319.

[f] Πνεῦμα; which Biſhop CUMBERLAND tranſlates Wind.
[g] CUDWORTH, p. 21. [h] EUSEBIUS ſeems to be of the ſame Opinion, though he entitles the Chapter, wherein he tranſcribes this Paſſage from Diodorus, (being the 7th of his 1ſt Book de Præp. Ev. Of the Coſmogony according to the Greeks, in regard of their Agreement in general with it, the Grecian Philoſophers having, as is notorious, received their Phyſiology from the Egyptians.

the

the more ſolid the earth, which was ſlimy and very ſoft at firſt, but ſtiffening by the rays of the ſun, the ſurface began to ferment, by reaſon of the heat; and ſome of the humid parts ſwelled, and roſe by degrees into putrid puſtules, covered with thin membranes. The humid matter, being thus fœcundated by the genial heat, by night received nutriment from the miſt falling from the ambient air, and by day grew more and more ſolid by the ſun's warmth, till at length the incloſed brood being arrived at perfect maturity, and the membranes burnt up and burſt, all kinds of creatures were produced. Of which thoſe which had obtained the greater degree of heat, became volatiles, and flew upwards; thoſe in which the earthy concretion prevailed, were placed in the rank of reptiles, and other terreſtial animals; and the creatures which chiefly conſiſted of a watery nature, repaired to a congenial element, and were called fiſh. At length the earth, continually hardening more and more by the heat of the ſun, and by the winds, could no longer produce any of the larger animals; but they began to propagate their ſeveral ſpecies by generation. And, to obviate any objection againſt the poſſibility of the earth's producing living creatures, our author inſtances in the vaſt number of mice, which are ſaid to be bred in the Upper Egypt out of the putrified mud, after the overflowing of the Nile [l].

Remarks thereon.

THIS coſmogony, as has been obſerved [k], agrees in ſubſtance with the former, but is more large (as later commentaries uſed to be) in particulars, and nice attempts to a mechanic explication of the generation of the world, without any help from GOD [l]: which conſent is an argument that they took their notions from the ſame fountain, Thoyth. And Euſebius makes the ſame animadverſion on this latter, as he does on the former; that the name of GOD is not ſo much as mentioned therein, but a kind of fortuitous and ſpontaneous formation of the univerſe introduced [m]. To confirm which judgment, he in another place recites a paſſage of Porphyry, who, in his epiſtle to Anebo, an Egyptian prieſt, writes, that Chœremon, and others thought, there was nothing prior to the viſible worlds, and began their diſcourſes with the Egyptian gods, which were no other

[l] DIOD. SIC. lib. 1. p. 7, 8. The account of the coſmogony given in a ſpurious book, attributed to Hermes, entitled Divine Sermons, is purpoſely omitted, as of no authority or credit.

[k] Vid. GROTIUM de veritate Rel. Chriſt. l. 1. ſect. 16. in notis. [l] CUMBERL. on Sanchon. p. 9. [m] EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 7. p. 21.

ther than the planets, and ſtars which fill the zodiac, or thoſe which riſe with them; foraſmuch as they who made the ſun the Demiurgus, or architect of the world, interpreted their ſtories of Iſis and Oſiris, and the reſt of their ſacred fables, altogether into the ſtars and planets, and the river Nile; and explained all things univerſally into natural or inanimate, and nothing into incorporeal and living ſubſtances. From whence Euſebius infers, that even the ſecret theology of the Egyptians deified no other than the ſtars and planets, and acknowledged no incorporeal principle of the univerſe, nor any demiurgic reaſon, GOD, or gods, or intelligent and inviſible powers, but the viſible ſun only, referring the production of all things to the material, ſenſeleſs, and periſhable elements [n]. Herewith agrees alſo that conciſe account of the Egyptian philoſophy given us by Diogenes Laertius [o] from Manetho and Hecatæus; that matter was the firſt principle, out of which the four elements were afterwards ſeparated, and all kinds of animals perfectly formed; and that the ſun and moon were their gods, the one being called Oſiris, and the other Iſis.

FROM this imputation of acknowledging no Deity beſides ſtupid matter, the Egyptians have been ſtrenuouſly defended by a very able man [p], who thinks what Euſebius urges againſt them to be of the leſs weight, becauſe he plainly contradicts it elſewhere, by declaring, that that nation profeſſed the belief of a demiurgic reaſon, and intellectual architect of the world, whom, he tells us, from the ſame Porphyry, they called Cneph, and ſymbolically repreſented in the ſhape of a man of a dark blue complexion, holding a girdle and a ſceptre, with a royal plume on his head, and thruſting forth an egg out of his mouth, from whence proceeded another god, whom they named Phtha, and the Greeks Vulcan. The reaſon of which hieroglyphic is thus given: becauſe this intellectual being is difficult to be found out, hidden, and inviſible, and becauſe he is the giver of life, and king of all things, and becauſe he is moved in an intellectual or ſpiritual manner, which is ſignified by the feathers on his head. The egg, which proceeds from the mouth of this god, is interpreted to be the world [q]. The firſt moſt divine Being was alſo ſometimes deſcribed as a ſerpent with a hawk's head, beautiful to look on; who,

[n] Idem, ibid. l. 3. c. 4. [o] In proœmio, p. 8. [p] Dr. CUDWORTH, in his Intell. Syſtem, p. 317, &c. [q] EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 3. c. 11. p. 115.

if

if he opens his eyes, fills the univerſe with light in his firſt-born region; but if he winks, darkneſs is made [r]. And as for that paſſage in Porphyry's epiſtle concerning Chæremon, where he only propounds doubts to Anebo, as deſiring further information from him concerning them, Iamblichus has given an anſwer to it, under the perſon of Abammo, another Egyptian prieſt, who ſays, that Chæremon, and thoſe others who pretend to write of the firſt cauſes of the world, declare only the laſt, and loweſt principles, as likewiſe thoſe who treat of the planets, zodiac, and other aſtronomical matters: for the Egyptians did not reſolve all things into nature, but diſtinguiſhed both the life of the ſoul, and the intellectual life, from that of nature, not in the univerſe only, but in man alſo; acknowledging an intellectual mind and reaſon firſt to have exiſted of themſelves, and ſo this whole world to have been made [s]. From which teſtimony of Iamblichus, who was but little junior to Porphyry, and contemporary with Euſebius, and who had made it his buſineſs to inform himſelf thoroughly of the Egyptian theology, it plainly appears, that the Egyptians did not generally ſuppoſe (as Chæremon pretended concerning ſome of them) a ſenſeleſs inanimate nature to be the firſt original of all things, but that as well in the world, as in ourſelves, they acknowledged ſoul ſuperior to nature, and mind or intellect ſuperior to ſoul, this being the maker of the world [t], and many paſſages to the ſame purpoſe might be produced from the ſame writer, and from the Hermaic books now extant, among which tho' much is forged and ſpurious, yet it ſeems very probable, that they contain ſome remains and tincture of the old Egyptian, and Hermetic doctrine. But we cannot omit obſerving, that it was thought to be ſo notorious and confeſſed a thing, that the Egyptians held the world not only to have had a beginning, but alſo to have been made by GOD; that Simplicius, a zealous contender for the world's eternity, affirms the Moſaic hiſtory of the creation of the world by GOD, to have been nothing elſe but a fabulous tradition, and wholly drawn from Egyptian fables [u].

BUT theſe different authorities may be perhaps reconciled, by diſtinguiſhing between the religion of the Lower Egypt, whoſe inhabitants were groſs idolaters, and that of Thebais, where the worſhip of Cneph, the immortal and ſupreme

[r] Idem, ibid. l. 3. cap. 10. p. 41. [s] IAMBLICHUS apud CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſtem, p. 318, &c. [t] CUDWORTH, ibid. [u] SIMPLIC. in Ariſtot. Phyſ. l. 8. p. 268.

GOD,

GOD, ſo much prevailed, that they were not taxed towards the charge of maintaining the ſacred animals worſhipped by the others [x].

BEFORE we diſmiſs the Egyptians, it may not be amiſs to obſerve, that their prieſts alſo taught, that the earth had certain periods or revolutions, being deſtroyed alternately by water and fire, and renewed again [y].

The Babylonian coſmogony.

AS to the Chaldeans or Babylonians, Diodorus ſays, they held the nature of the world to be eternal, and that it had neither any original generation, nor is ſubject to any future corruption; yet that the order and beautiful diſpoſition of all things were cauſed by a divine providence, and that whatever are now in the heavens were not caſual, or ſpontaneous, but perfected by the determinate and eſtabliſhed decree of the gods [z]. But Beroſus, who ought to challenge the greater authority, both in reſpect to his antiquity, and his being himſelf of that nation, has left us the following account of their coſmogony, taken from what Oannes (of whom more hereafter) wrote concerning the origin of things. There was, ſays he, a time when the univerſe was darkneſs and water, wherein frightful animals of compounded forms were generated. That ſome men were born with two wings, others with four, and two faces: ſome having but one body and two heads, one of a man, the other of a woman, and double privities, of the male and of the female. That of other men, ſome had the legs and horns of goats, ſome horſes feet, others the hinder parts of horſes, and the fore parts of men, being in the form of Hippocentaurs. That bulls were generated having the heads of men; and dogs with four bodies, having in their hinder parts the tails of fiſhes; and horſes with Dogs heads: That there were alſo men, and other animals, which had the heads and bodies of horſes, but the tails of fiſhes; and other living creatures having the ſhapes of all kinds of beaſts. Beſides theſe, there were alſo generated fiſhes, and creeping things, and ſerpents, and many other animals very wonderful, and having the mixed ſhapes of one another; whoſe pictures are alſo kept in the temple of Belus. The governeſs of all theſe was a woman, named Omorbca [a], which in the Chaldee tongue is Thalatth

[x] PLUT. de Iſide & Oſirid. p. 359. See alſo CUMBERL. on the coſmog. of Sanchon. p. 12, &c. ORIGEN. contra Celſum, l. 5.

[y] PLATO, in Tim.

[z] DIOD. SIC. l. 2. p. 116.

[a] In Scaliger's edition Omorca. Our author having tranſlated this Thalatth [b], but in Greek ſignifies the ſea, and with equal propriety the moon. This being the conſtitution of the univerſe, Belus came and divided the woman in the midſt, and the one half of her made the earth, and the other half the heaven, and the animals which were in her periſhed. But he ſays, that theſe things are delivered concerning the nature of the world in an allegorical manner. For the world being humid, and animals generated therein, the aforeſaid god took away the woman's head, and the other gods mixed her body, which fell down with the earth, and formed men, for which reaſon they are intelligent, and partake of divine wiſdom. That Belus, whom they interpret Jupiter, cutting the darkneſs in the midſt, divided the earth and the heaven from each other, and reduced the world into order; whereupon the animals, not bearing the force of the light, became extinct. But Belus ſeeing the country deſert, tho' fertile, commanded one of the gods to cut off his own head, and to mix the earth with the blood which iſſued thence, and to form men and beaſts that could endure the air: and that Belus perfected the ſtars, and the ſun, and the moon, and the five planets [c].

Remarks thereon.

FROM this paſſage we learn, that the old Babylonians expreſly attributed the orderly diſpoſition of the world, the perfecting of the heavenly bodies, and the formation of men and animals to their ſupreme god, Bel; tho' they ſeem to have held the pre-exiſtence of matter. It muſt therefore be ſome theology of the later Babylonians, which could with juſtice be charged, as it has been, with paſſing over in ſilence the one principle of the univerſe [d]; wherein they muſt have departed from the tradition of their anceſtors, the antient Chaldeans, who were celebrated for their acknowledging one ſovereign deity, or maker of the world, as appears this name into Chaldee, it muſt be derived from ſome other language; but as he does not tell us what that language is, we ſhall not offer at an etymology of it.

[b] This word is ſo near in ſound to the Greek word Thalaſſa, the ſea, that one would ſuſpect it to be forged, at leaſt much corrupted. Perhaps it may have been written for the Chaldee, or Syriac ܬܠܝܠܘܬܐ Thalilûtho, which ſignifies moiſture, or humectation, and anſwers to the explication afterwards given. The ſea and the moon were reckoned the two ſources of moiſture. [c] ALEXANDER POLYHIST. ex Beroſo, apud CYNCELL. Chronogr. p. 29. & EUSEB. Chronic. Græc. Scaligeri, p. 6. [d] DAMASCIUS in fragment. MS. περὶ ἀρχῶν, apud CUMBERL. Review of the Coſmog. of Sanchon. p. 280.

from

from that oracle of Apollo, cited by Euſebius[e] from Porphyry, where the Chaldeans and Hebrews are alone declared to be poſſeſſed of true wiſdom, as worſhipping GOD, the ſelf-begotten king, in a holy manner.

The account of the cosmogony in the Chaldaic oracles.

WE have indeed another account of the coſmogony in the Chaldaic or Magic oracles of Zoroaſtres; but they have ſo little pretence to genuineneſs or antiquity, are ſo confuſed a medley of ill-digeſted notions, taken chiefly from the Platonics and Gnoſtics, very unſatisfactory as to the origin of the univerſe, and talk ſo much of unknown matter, the orders of inviſible things, myſtical numbers, jynges[f], and other unintelligible jargon, that we might be excuſed taking any notice of them; but as a very learned man has thought it worth his while to extract the ſubſtance of what is moſt intelligible in them[g], we ſhall ſubjoin it in his own words: The Chaldeans, ſays he, believe, that the firſt of all things is eternal, the ſupreme GOD. That GOD, who is an intellectual light, or fire, did not ſhut up his fire within his intellectual power, but communicated it to all creatures: firſt and immediately, to the firſt mind, and to all other eternal and incorporeal beings, under which notion are comprehended a multitude of gods, angels, good dæmons, and the ſouls of men. The next emanation is the ſupramundane light, an incorporeal, infinite, luminous ſpace, in which the intellectual beings reſide. The ſupramundane light kindles the firſt corporeal world, the empyreum, or fiery heaven, which, being immediately beneath the corporeal light, is the higheſt, brighteſt, and rareſt of bodies. The empyreum diffuſes itſelf thro' the æther, which is the next body below it, and the fire leſs refined than the empyreum: but that it is fire, the more condenſed parts thereof, the ſun and ſtars, ſufficiently evince. From the æther this fire is tranſmitted to the material and ſublunary world; for tho' the matter whereof it conſiſts be not light but darkneſs, (as are alſo the material or bad dæmons) yet this vivificative fire actuates, and gives life to all its parts, inſinuating, diffuſing itſelf, and penetrating even to the very centre, paſſing from above to the oppoſite part, thro' the centre of the earth.

The opinion of the antient pagan poets,

THE old pagan poets, who greatly contributed to the depravation of theology in general, have more particularly countenanced this opinion of the world's being produced

[e] EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 9. cap. 10. [f] See BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 21, 22. [g] Mr. STANLEY, in his Hiſt. of the Chald. Philoſ. Book I. Sect. 1. c. 2. p. 8.

produced from a chaos, without the influence of GOD. For tho' they make love to preſide, as it were, at the ranging of the confuſed matter, by which ſome would have us underſtand the Deity, or the active principle of the univerſe diſtinct from matter [h], yet it is moſt probable, they thereby meant no more than the agreement, or harmony, which enſued on the ceſſation of that inteſtine war of the elements: their love having his original from the chaos, as well as all the reſt of their gods, which were really no other than the heavenly bodies, elements, and other parts of nature, perſonated, and deified. For which reaſon the coſmogony of the poets was the ſame with their theogony, or generation of gods [i].

And of Orpheus in particular.

ORPHEUS, who was the great introducer of the rites of the heathen worſhip among the Greeks, being charged with having invented the very names of the gods, and declaring their generations, and their ſeveral actions, wherein he was for the moſt part followed by Homer [k], is yet ſaid to have been perfectly ſilent in his theology, as to any thing intellectual, as unſpeakable and unknown; and to have made one of his principles to be a dragon, having the heads both of a bull and a lion, and in the midſt, the face of a god, with golden wings on his ſhoulders [l]. But notwithſtanding the extravagancy of Orpheus's fancy, the generality of the Greek pagans, looking on the man, not as a mere poet, but a holy and profound philoſopher, ſuppoſed all his fables of the gods to be deep myſteries and allegories, which had ſome hidden and ſecret ſenſe under them, and therefore had a high veneration for him, as one divinely inſpired; inſomuch, that Celſus would have had the Chriſtians rather take Orpheus for a god than CHRIST, as being a man unqueſtionably endued with a holy ſpirit, and one who alſo died a violent death [m]. And tho' he were the great propagator of polytheiſm, yet it has been thought, that he acknowledged one ſupreme unmade Deity, as the original of all things, not only from the great eſteem he was in, with thoſe two moſt religious philoſophic ſects, the Pythagoreans and Platoniſts, he being commonly called by them the Theologer, but alſo becauſe

[h] Vid. CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſtem, p. 212. [i] Vid. eund. p. 334, &c. [k] ATHENAGOR. & JUSTIN. MARTYR, apud eundem, p. 298. [l] DAMASCIUS περὶ ἀρχῶν, MS. apud CUMBERL. Review of the Coſmog. of Sanchon. p. 280, & CUDWORTH, ubi ſupra. [m] CORN. CELS. l. 7. p. 367. apud CUDWORTH, ibid.

they

they were ſuppoſed, in great meaſure, to have owed their theology and philoſophy to him, as deriving the ſame from his principles and traditions[n].

THIS favourable opinion of Orpheus will yet be better founded, if we allow the epitome of the Orphic coſmogony, made long ago by Timotheus the chronographer, to contain the true doctrine of that poet: for he writes, that Orpheus gave an account of the generation of the gods, the creation of the world, and the formation of man, profeſſing, that he delivered nothing from his own invention, but as he was informed, on enquiry, by Phœbus, Titan, or the ſun. Which account in brief is, that in the beginning the æther, or heaven, was formed by GOD, and that on each ſide of the æther was chaos and dark night, which covered whatſoever was under the æther, thereby ſignifying that night was prior. He declared alſo, that there was a certain incomprehenſible Being, which was the higheſt and moſt antient of all things, and the maker of the univerſe, both of the æther itſelf, and of things under the æther. That the earth was inviſible, by reaſon of the darkneſs which was upon it; but the light, breaking forth thro' the æther, illuminated the whole creation; this light, which ſo brake forth, being ſaid by him to be that higheſt of all things before mentioned, whoſe name, as revealed by the oracle, was counſel, light, and the giver of life. That theſe three names manifeſt one and the ſame power and might of that inviſible, and incomprehenſible GOD, who is the maker of all things, and who bringeth that which is not, into a ſtate of exiſtence. By which power were produced all incorporeal principles, and the ſun, and the moon, and the ſtars, the earth, and the ſea, and all things therein, both viſible and inviſible. He likewiſe declared, that mankind was formed out of the earth by the ſame Deity, and received from him a rational ſoul, agreeably to what Moſes has recorded. Timotheus adds, that the ſame Orpheus alſo wrote, that all things were made by one godhead of three names, and that this GOD is all things[o].

IF this teſtimony be admitted, we need not appeal to the Orphic verſes, which are very full as to the aſſertion of the ſupreme Deity. It is true, many of thoſe verſes are ſuppoſititious, and manifeſtly forged either by Chriſtians or Jews; but all of them cannot be proved to be ſo; ſeveral being cited by pagan authors, as written, if not by Orpheus himſelf, yet by perſons of great antiquity, and well acquainted with his doctrine and traditions; and therefore, by men of good learning and judgment, thought genuine, and worthy of ſome regard[p]. However Orpheus's theology has been preferred to that of the other heathens by the chriſtian fathers[q]; and a late ingenious writer has ſurmiſed, that his eſtabliſhing of polytheiſm was owing rather to the neceſſity he was under of complying with the ſtupidity of the barbarous people, whom he firſt civilized, than his own approbation; being obliged to give them, not the religion which himſelf beſt approved, but ſuch a one as they were capable of receiving[r].

[n] CUDWORTH, ibid.

[o] TIMOTH. Chronogr. apud EUSEB. Chron. Græc. p. 4. & CEDREN. p. 57. Vid. etiam SUIDAM, in voce, Orpheus, & PROCL. in Tim. l. 2. p. 117.

BUT to return to the Orphic coſmogony, Syrianus ſays, that Orpheus held two principles, æther and chaos[s]; to which Simplicius adds a third, as prior to the other two, viz. time, the meaſure of the fabulous generation of the gods; after which, according to Orpheus, the æther and chaos were produced[t]. By which it ſhould ſeem he thought the æther and chaos were co-eval: but it has been obſerved, that the antients, or the later authors, who have handed their opinions down to us, do frequently confound the univerſe with this ſublunary world, and apply what relates diſtinctly to one of the two, to the other, or both promiſcuouſly; and that of the æther here mentioned, the celeſtial, or firſt fabric of things was made; and of the chaos, the ſublunary world, or our earth, and others like it, at ſeveral diſtant intervals. Which things ought to have been ſeparately treated, as well with regard to the matter, as to the time; tho' unſkilful authors have often neglected that neceſſary diſtinction[u].

Remarks thereon.

IT is proper here to obſerve, that Orpheus, among other eaſtern learning, ſeems to have firſt introduced among the Greeks the doctrine of the mundane egg, which, in all probability, he learned from the Egyptians, who repreſented the world by that ſymbol[x], as many other antient nations did. The Phœnicians, as we have ſeen, made their Zophaſemin, which were the celeſtial bodies, oviform; and

[p] Vid. CUDWORTH, ubi ſup. p. 295, & 300, &c. & BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 125. [q] BURNET, ibid. p. 127. [r] Idem, ibid. p. 120, &c. [s] SYRIAN. in ARIST. Metaph. c. 2. [t] SIMPLIC. in ARIST. de Auſcult. Phyſic. l. 4. [u] BURNET, ubi ſup. p. 130. [x] See before, p. 27.

worſhipped

worſhipped an egg, in the Orgia of Bacchus, as an image of the world [y]. And the ſame compariſon or reſemblance was made uſe of by the Chaldeans, Perſians, Indians, and Chineſe, as will be obſerved hereafter: and this not only for its external figure, but alſo for the inward compoſition of it; the ſhell repreſenting the heaven, the white the air, and the yolk the earth [z]; tho' others make out this reſemblance in a different manner [a]. Hence Plutarch [b] obſerves, that the queſtion, which was the elder, the egg or the hen, was not a trivial enquiry; but according to the Orphic doctrine, comprehended the antient generation of all things: and the author of the hymns attributed to Orpheus makes the firſt-born god, named by the Greeks Phanes, to be produced from an egg [c]. This was the firſt-begotten god, mentioned by Athenagoras to have been hatched from the egg, as the followers of Orpheus taught [d].

ANOTHER opinion of the Orphic theologers, which muſt not be forgotten, was, that GOD was all things; but this is not to be underſtood in a groſs ſenſe, ſo as to take away all diſtinction between GOD and the creature; for they taught this doctrine chiefly on the two following accounts: Firſt, Becauſe all things coming from GOD, they inferred, that therefore they were all contained in him, and conſequently were, in a certain ſenſe, himſelf. The ſecond is, Becauſe the world produced by GOD, and really exiſting without him, is not therefore quite cut off from him, nor ſubſiſts alone by itſelf as a dead thing, but is ſtill livingly united to him, eſſentially dependent on him, always ſupported, quickened, and pervaded by him. In the latter of which ſenſes, ſome chriſtian divines alſo have made GOD to be all; as when they affirm the whole world to be nothing elſe but GOD expanded, and when they call the creatures, as St. Jerom, and others often do, the rays of the Deity. But tho' the ſcripture itſelf may ſeem to give ſome countenance to theſe expreſſions, yet they ought to be uſed with great caution, being eaſily liable to miſtake and abuſe; and the miſtake and abuſe of this one thing, might poſſibly have been a chief ground of the both ſeeming and real polytheiſm, not only of the Greek and European, but alſo of the Egyptian and other pagans: they concluding, that becauſe GOD was all things, and conſequently all things GOD, therefore GOD ought to be worſhipped in all things, that is, in the ſeveral parts of nature [e].

[y] PLUT. in Sympoſ. l. 2. quæſt. 3. Vid. MACROB. Stat. l. 7. c. 16. [z] VARRO, apud Prob. Gram. in Ecl. 6. Virgil. [a] Vid. ACHILLEM TATIUM in Arati. Phænom. cap. 4. & BURNET. Theor. Sacr. Tellur. l. 2. c. 10. and Theory of the Earth, Book I. c. 5. p. 86. [b] In Sympoſ. l. 2. quæſt. 3. [c] Hymn. Πρωτόγονον. Vid. LACTANT. de falſa Rel. l. 1. cap. 5. [d] ATHENAG. Legat. pro Chriſt.

WHETHER the preceding opinions, as to the original of the world, be acquitted of the charge of atheiſm, or not, it is certain, that the philoſophy which derives all things from ſenſcleſs matter, in the way of forms and qualities, without the aſſiſtance of a GOD, was of great antiquity, and as old as any records of time among the Greeks; the antient phyſiologers generally making the ocean, or water, to have been the original of all things: for which reaſon the oath of the gods is ſaid to be by water, called by the poets Styx, which, being moſt antient, deſerved the greateſt reverence, and was conſequently moſt proper to ſwear by [f]. And hence the ocean is by Homer called the progenitor of the gods, and ſource of all things [g]: and Thales, the prince of the Ionic philoſophers, held water to be the firſt principle, whereof all things conſiſted [h]; and they alſo ſuppoſed, that at laſt all things ſhould be diſſolved, and return into water again [i]. But it ſeems, that thoſe antients, when they made water to have been the firſt principle, did not thereby mean the elementary water, but the chaos, which was fluid ſubſtance, as the Greek word ſignifies. For which reaſon Zeno and Plutarch took the chaos of Heſiod to have been water [k].

The coſmogony of Heſiod,

THE theogony of this laſt mentioned poet, which, as has been obſerved, is alſo his coſmogony, is ſomewhat confuſed, beginning twice from the chaos, and relating things rather in a poetical, than philoſophical order. The ſub-

[e] CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 307. [f] Vid. ARISTOT. Metaph. l. 1. c. 3. [g] HOMER. apud Plutarch. de Placit. Philoſ. l. 1. c. 3. [h] PLUTARCH. de placitis Philoſ. lib. 1. c. 3. DIOG. LAERT. in vita Thaletis, p. 17. CICER. in Lucullo, & de Nat. Deor. l. 1. This alſo agrees with a paſſage in ſcripture, the genuine ſenſe of which (according to the judgment of the beſt interpreters) is, that the material heavens, as well as earth, were made out of water. 2 Pet. iii. 5. Vid. CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 21. & BURNET, Archæol. l. 1. p. 138, and Theory of the Earth, Book I. c. 4. p. 63, &c. [i] HOMER. Il. H. PLUT. in Stromat. apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 8. [k] ZENO, apud Scholiaſt. Apollon. Argon. 4. & PLUT. in Tract. Aquáne an ignis ſit utilior, p. 955.

ſtance

ſtance of what he delivers is; That in the beginning the chaos firſt exiſted, then the wide-extended earth, and next love, the faireſt of the immortal gods; that the chaos produced Erebus and night, from the conjunction of which two proceeded Æther and day. After which he proceeds to give an account of the ſeparation of the heaven and ſtars from the earth, the raiſing of mountains, and ſinking of caves; and of the production of the ſea, from the heaven and earth together [l].

BUT there is a much more methodical, and complete deſcription of this antient coſmogony given by Ariſtophanes [m], whenceſoever he had it: He writes, that firſt were chaos, black Erebus, and wide Tartarus, but neither earth, nor air, nor heaven: that night, with ſable wings, laid the firſt egg of wind in the vaſt boſom of Erebus; from whence, in proceſs of time, iſſued amiable love, ſhining with wings of gold, like to impetuous whirl-winds; that love, coupling with the obſcure chaos, engendred animals and men; but that there were no gods before love mingled all things, from which mixture of things one with another, the heaven and the earth were generated, and the whole race of immortal gods. and Ariſtophanes

THIS paſſage, notwithſtanding it is ludicrouſly introduced in a comedy, is conceived, not without reaſon, to have been really a piece of the old atheiſtic ſyſtem, and may be thus explained; that chaos, or matter, confuſedly moved, being the original of all things, did from thence riſe up gradually from leſſer to greater perfection; firſt inanimate things, as the elements, heaven, earth, and ſeas, then brute animals, afterwards men, and laſt of all gods. As if not only the ſubſtance of matter and thoſe inanimate bodies of the elements, fire, water, air, and earth, were firſt in order of nature before GOD, as being themſelves alſo gods [n], but alſo irrational animals at leaſt, if not men too. And this is the atheiſtic creation of the world, gods, and all, out of ſenſeleſs and ſtupid matter, or dark chaos, as the only original deity [o].

WHETHER Thales, who was a Phœnician by extraction, acknowledged any divine or intelligent being, as aſſiſting in the formation of the world, is a great queſtion. Cicero indeed tells us, that he was the firſt who ſearched The opinion of Thales.

[l] HESIOD. Theog. verſ. 116. [m] In avib. [n] Vid. ARIST. de gener. & corrupt. l. 2. c. 6. [o] CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 121.

after ſuch things, and affirmed GOD to be that Mind, which created all things out of water [p]. And Laertius reports, that he uſed to ſay, GOD was the oldeſt of all things, and that the world was the workmanſhip of GOD [q]. But on the other ſide, there are a cloud of witneſſes [r], among whom are Cicero and Laertius themſelves [s], who with joint conſent give Anaxagoras, one of his ſucceſſors, the honour of having firſt rejected all chance in the diſpoſition of the univerſe, and introduced a pure intelligent mind, to ſeparate and compoſe the ſeveral parts of it. So that all the philoſophers of the Ionic ſect, who preceded Anaxagoras, being mere materialiſts, or Hylopathian atheiſts, Ariſtotle ſeems juſtly to have called Thales the prince or leader of that philoſophy [t]. The occaſion of his being thus differently repreſented may poſſibly have been, becauſe he left no philoſophic writings, or monuments of his own behind him (Anaxagoras being the firſt of all the philoſophic writers [u]); whence probably it came to paſs, that in after-times ſome interpreted his opinions one way, and ſome another, and that he is ſometimes repreſented as a theiſt, and ſometimes as an atheiſt [x].

Of Anaximander.

BUT if Thales be acquitted, yet his next ſucceſſor, Anaximander, can by no means be excuſed from this imputation; for he ſuppoſed a certain infinite firſt matter, which he did not define to be either air, or water, or earth, to be the ſole principle of the univerſe [y]; that the celeſtial bodies,

[p] CICER. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. p. 36. [q] DIOG. LAERT. in Thalet. p. 21. [r] PLATO in Phæd. p. 72. PLUT. in Pericle, p. 154. ARIST. Metaph. lib. 1. cap. 3. TERTULLIAN. de Anima. CLEMENS ALEX. Stromat. lib. 2. p. 364. EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 4. c. 14. p. 750. THEMIST. Orat. XV. AUGUSTIN. de Civit. Dei, l. 8. c. 2. PROCLUS in Timæum. SIMPLIC. in ARIST. de Phyſic. auſcult. THEODORET de Græc affect. Serm. II. p. 489. [s] CICERO de Natura Deor. l. 1. c. 35, 39. LAERT. in Anaxagorâ, p. 82. [t] More concerning this Queſtion may be read in BAYLE's Dict. Hiſt. Art. Anaxagor. Rem D. Art. Thales, Rem. A. Dr. CUDWORTH's Intell. Syſtem. p. 21, 124. [u] DIOG. LAERT. in Anaxagor. p. 81. THEMISTIUS (Orat. XX.) ſays, Anaximander was the firſt who publiſhed a Book of Natural Philoſophy. But THEOPOMPUS apud Laert. in Pherecyd. p. 74.) aſſerts, Pherecydes Syrus to have firſt written of Nature and the Gods to the Greeks, whoſe Treatiſe of the Beginning of Things was extant in the Time of Laertius, ib. 76. [x] CUDWORTH, ibid. 124. [y] PLUT. de Placitis Philoſ. l. 1. c. 3. DIOG. LAERT. in Anaximandro, p. 78. SIMPLIC. in ARISTOT. Phyſ. l. 1. c. 6.

and

and infinite worlds, were made of it by ſecretion, and that generation and corruption proceeded from their moving circularly together from eternity. He alſo aſſerted, that the generative principles of heat and cold being ſeparated, when this world was made, a certain ſphere of the fire firſt aroſe, and encompaſſed the air which ſurrounds the earth, as the bark doth a tree; this being afterwards broken, and divided into ſmaller ſpherical bodies, formed the ſun, moon, and ſtars [z]. He held alſo, that the firſt animals were generated in moiſture, and encompaſſed with certain thorny barks, by which they were defended; which, after further growth, becoming more dry and cracking, they iſſued forth, but lived only a ſhort time [a]. That men were at firſt generated in the bellies of fiſhes, and being there nouriſhed till they grew ſtrong, and were able to ſupport themſelves, they were afterwards caſt out upon dry land. And the reaſon of this ſtrange opinion, as to the original of mankind, was, becauſe other animals ſoon after their birth betake themſelves to their food; but man alone in his infancy needs to be nurſed up for a conſiderable time, and therefore could not be preſerved at firſt in any other manner [b].

FROM Anaximander's making this univerſal principle of his infinite, ſome late writers, and even Clemens Alexandrinus [c] among the antients, have groundleſly inferred, that he thereby meant GOD, according to the true notion of him, or an infinite mind, the efficient cauſe of the univerſe, and not ſtupid matter [d]. But it is plain, that the gods he acknowledged, owed their original alſo to that infinite matter, from which he ſuppoſed all things to be ſecreted, and into which they would return; for he held the gods to be generated, riſing, and vaniſhing again in long periods of time, and that theſe gods were innumerable worlds [e].

THE phyſiology of Anaximenes differed but little from that of his maſter Anaximander; for he held air to be the firſt principle, and infinite [f], but that the things which aroſe thereout were finite, and ſhould at laſt be reſolved into it again. He ſuppoſed, that all things were generated by a ſucceſſive condenſation and rarefaction of this air; the earth, water, Of Anaximenes.

[z] PLUT. in Strom. apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 8. [a] Idem de placitis Phil. l. 5. c. 19. [b] Idem, apud EUSEB. ubi ſup & in Sympoſ. l. 8. Quæſt. 8. [c] In protrept. p. 43. [d] Vid. CUDWORTH's Intell. Syſt. p. 124. [e] CICER. de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. [f] DIOG. LAERT. in Anaximn. p. 80. ARISTOT. de Auſcult. Phyſ. CICER. Quæſt. Acad. l. 2.

and fire being firſt produced thereout, and then the other parts of the univerſe: he held alſo, that motion was from all eternity; that the ſun gained its heat from the ſwiftneſs of its courſe; and that air held the world together in the ſame manner as the ſoul, which he took to be air alſo, did the human frame [g]. He did not, it ſeems, deny there were any gods, but was ſo far from allowing them to have formed the world, that he believed them likewiſe to have their riſe from the air [h]. Plutarch, after delivering the opinions of theſe two philoſophers, obſerves, that they were both of them in the wrong, in ſuppoſing the world to have been generated from matter only, without any efficient cauſe; matter of itſelf being able to produce nothing, no more than a veſſel can be made out of a maſs of ſilver, without the help of an artificer [i].

amended by Anaxagoras, and Diogenes of Apollonia.

ANAXAGORAS and Diogenes of Apollonia, two ſcholars of Anaximenes, attempted to remedy this grand defect in the Ionic philoſophy, by amending their maſter's hypotheſis. The firſt, by admitting an intelligent being diſtinct from matter, as has been, and will be more fully obſerved; and the other, by ſuppoſing the air, the firſt principle of the univerſe, to be endued with a divine reaſon, without which he conceived nothing could be produced from it [k]. So that this opinion differed very little from Spinoziſm.

THE manner in which this latter philoſophizes, as to the production of the world, has ſo near a conformity with the Carteſian hypotheſis, that it would be wrong to omit it: All things, ſays he, being in motion, ſome became condenſed, and others rarified; in thoſe places where condenſation prevailed, a whirling motion, or vortex was formed, which by its revolution drew in the reſt, and the lighter parts flying upwards, formed the ſun [l].

The atomic ſyſtem, by whom invented.

THE next atheiſtic ſyſtem of philoſophy is the atomic, which is generally ſuppoſed to have been invented by Democritus, who was elder than Ariſtotle and Plato; but Laertius attributes it to Leucippus [m], who was ſomewhat ſenior to Democritus, though he wrote not ſo much concerning it as [g] PLUT. in Strom. apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 8. & de placitis Philoſoph. l. 1. c. 3. [h] AUGUST. de Civit. Dei, l. 8. cap. 2. [i] PLUTARCH. de placitis Philoſoph. loco citato. [k] AUGUST. de Civit. Dei, l. 8. c. 2. Vid. etiam CICER. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. & ARISTOT. l. 1. de anima, c. 2. [l] PLUT. in Strom. apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 8. [m] DIOG. LAERT. in Leucippo, p. 567.

Democritus

Democritus did. Others make this phyſiology much more antient: Poſidonius [n] avouched it for an old tradition, that the firſt inventor of it was Moſchus, a Phœnician, who lived before the Trojan war [o], and is ſuppoſed to have been the ſame with Mochus, the Phœnician phyſiologer mentioned by Iamblichus [p], with whoſe ſucceſſors, prieſts, and prophets, he affirms, that Pythagoras, while he was at Sidon, had converſed. But as Cicero, though Poſidonius's ſcholar, ſcruples not to queſtion his veracity in ſome things, and expreſly affirms Leucippus, or Democritus, to have been the author of this philoſophy [q], we think his authority of little weight; much leſs can we approve, as Mr. Selden does [r], of the conjecture of Arcerius, the editor of Iamblichus, that this Mochus was no other than Moſes, the celebrated prophet of the Jews. However, it is probable from ſome other conſiderations, that Pythagoras was not unacquainted with the atomical phyſiology; for Democritus himſelf was of the Italic, or Pythagoric ſucceſſion, and is reported to have taken all his philoſophy from them [s]: and the famous monads of Pythagoras are by ſome ſuppoſed to have been nothing elſe but corporeal atoms [t]. That Empedocles, who was alſo a Pythagorean, took the world to be compounded of minute particles, is expreſly aſſerted [u], and will appear more plainly, when we come to give an account of his phyſiology: and the natural principles of Ecphantus the Syracuſian, another of that ſect, were indiviſible bodies, and vacuum. Nor were they the only antient philoſophers who went that way; Xenocrates, Heraclides, Aſclepiades, Diodorus, Metrodorus Chius, and the generality of the old phyſiologers, having alſo ſuppoſed indiviſible particles to be the firſt principles of bodies. Notwithſtanding which, Leucippus and Democritus are reputed the firſt inventors of the atomic philoſophy, either becauſe they brought it to greater perfection, or elſe, becauſe they firſt made it a complete and entire ſyſtem by itſelf, ſo as to derive the original of all things in the whole univerſe from ſenſeleſs atoms, which had figure and motion only, and [n] Apud SEXT. EMPIRIC. adv. Mathem. p. 367. & STRABON. lib. 16. p. 512. [o] STRABO, ibid. [p] De vita Pythag. c. 3. [q] CICER. de fato, & de Nat. Deor. l. 1. [r] SELDEN. de jure nat. & gent. juxta diſcipl. Hebr. lib. 1. cap. 2. See alſo La Vie de Pythagore, par Mr. DACIER, p. xxi. [s] DIOG. LAERT. in Democr. p. 570. [t] Vid. CUDWORTH's Intel. Syſtem, p. 13. [u] PLUT. de Placitis Philoſ. l. 1. cap. 24.

ſpace;

ſpace; from whence it would follow, that there could be no GOD, not ſo much as a corporeal one: for before them, the doctrine of atoms made not an entire philoſophy by itſelf, but was looked upon as a part, or member of the whole philoſophic ſyſtem, and that the meaneſt and loweſt part too; it being only uſed to explain that which was purely corporeal in the world; beſides which they acknowledged ſomething elſe, which was not mere bulk and mechaniſm, but life and ſelf-activity, that is, immaterial ſubſtance; the head whereof is a Deity diſtinct from the world. So that there have been two ſorts of atomiſts; the firſt, holding incorporeal ſubſtance, uſed that phyſiology in a way of ſubordination to theology: the other, allowing no other ſubſtance but body, made ſenſeleſs atoms, without any mind or underſtanding, that is, without any GOD, to be the original of all things: which latter ſyſtem is that vulgarly known by the name of the atomic philoſophy, which was founded by Leucippus and Democritus [x], and afterwards, with ſome alteration, taught by Epicurus, though he would not acknowledge that he had borrowed his hypotheſis from any [y].

Occaſioned a ſtricter method of philoſophizing.

BUT whoever firſt introduced it, this hypotheſis occaſioned a more ſtrict, and accurate method of philoſophizing, than had formerly been uſed. For the atomiſts, neglecting numbers, proportions, harmonies, ideas, qualities, and elementary forms, immediately proceeded to examine the bodies themſelves, and their phyſical and mechanical properties, their motion, figure, ſituation of parts, ſize, and the like; from whence they very rationally aſcertained their ſeveral powers, determined their actions, and explained their effects; though the notions they entertained of the indiviſibility of their atoms, their innate power of motion, inclinations to certain places, and the like, be not only without any foundation, but repugnant to reaſon [z].

The doctrine of Leucippus and Democritus.

THE doctrine of Leucippus and Democritus, as to the origin of the world, was, that the firſt principles were an infinite number of atoms, or indiviſible particles of different ſizes and figures, which moving fortuitouſly, or without deſign, from all eternity in infinite ſpace, and encountring one another, became variouſly implicated and entangled, and produced firſt a confuſed chaos of all kinds of particles, which afterwards by continual agitation, ſtrik-

[x] CUDWORTH, p. 16, &c. [y] CIC. de Nat. Deor. l. 1.
[z] BURNET, Archæol. l. 1. p. 167.

ing

ing and repelling each other, diſpoſed themſelves into a vortex, or vortices, where, after many convolutions and evolutions, molitions and eſſays, in which all imaginable ſhapes and combinations were tried, they chanced at length to ſettle into this preſent form and ſyſtem of things [a].

THIS hypotheſis, as to the formation of the principal parts of the world, agrees with that of Epicurus, as it is repreſented by Lucretius [b], excepting, that no mention is made of thoſe vortices, which yet were an eſſential part of the former. To the two properties, attributed to atoms by Democritus, magnitude and figure, Epicurus added a third, weight; without which he did not conceive they could move at all [c]. And one of the inevitable conſequences of the Democritic ſyſtem being abſolute fatal neceſſity, (for when they maintained, that the world was made by a fortuitous concourſe of atoms, it was not their meaning to deny the world to have been neceſſarily made, according to the eternal laws of motion of thoſe atoms, but only to exclude the direction of an intelligent cauſe) and ſuch neceſſity, in the opinion of Epicurus, overturning all morality, and reducing the human ſoul to be a mere machine; in order to account for freedom of will, beſides the twofold motion of atoms allowed by thoſe before him, perpendicular and reflexive, he introduced a third; ſuppoſing, that the atoms could of themſelves decline from the right line, and move obliquely, even in void ſpace, and without any colliſion at all [d]; from which, as he ſtrangely inferred, proceeded natural liberty. And this declination ſerved alſo another purpoſe, that is, to explain the meeting of the atoms; which if they all moved one way, would have been impoſſible [e]. But the moſt material difference between the two hypotheſes, though not often taken notice of, was, that Epicurus admitted no principle at all but the atoms themſelves; whereas Democritus believed them to be animated [f]; a ſuppoſition not a whit more abſurd than that of their exiſtence and ſpontaneous motion, and which would

Of Epicurus,

[a] Vid. DIOG. LAERT. in Leucippo, p. 567. and in Democrit. p. 573. PLUTARCH. de placitis Phil. l. 1. c. 4. & PLAT. de legibus, l. 10. [b] Vid. LUCRET. de Rer. Nat. l. 5. VIRGIL. Eclog. 6. PLUT. de placitis Phil. l. 1. c. 4. and STANLEY's Hiſtory of Philoſophy, part 13. p. 572, &c. [c] PLUT. ubi ſup c. 3. [d] Vid LUCRET. l. 2. v. 216, &c. [e] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Epicure, Rem. U. [f] AUGUST. Epiſt. 66.

yet

yet be of great uſe in obviating ſeveral objections to the atomic ſyſtem, otherwiſe unanſwerable [g].

As to the production of animals and mankind, the Epicurean philoſophy accounted for it in this manner: it was ſuppoſed, that the new formed earth containing in it the ſeeds of all things, the ſun, acting by its heat on the moiſter parts, raiſed ſmall bladders, like little wombs, in which the embryos, at firſt imperfect, were conceived, and through which they broke their way, when arrived at maturity; and that for their nouriſhment nature provided bags, like ſmall breaſts furniſhed with a milky juice. And it is pretended, that this fœcundity cannot ſeem ſtrange, in that juvenile vigour of nature, if we conſider, what numbers of ſmaller creatures and inſects are, at this day, bred in the ſame way. But at length, the ſeeds of the earth being exhauſted, ſhe like a woman paſt child-bearing, of courſe left off this way of producing the more perfect animals; whence it is, that every ſpecies is now propagated by copulation [h].

Reflections on this ſyſtem.

THIS atomic ſyſtem, which had been ſuperſeded by Plato and Ariſtotle, who brought in ideas, form and qualities, inſtead of the mechanical properties of matter, was raiſed by Epicurus to a high degree of reputation, and continued to flouriſh after his death, beyond any other philoſophy [i]; though it was juſtly decried by the other ſects, on account of the atheiſm which naturally flowed from its principles. Had Democritus only ſuppoſed GOD to be a mind, or intelligence, placed in a ſphere of fire, and the ſoul of the world [k], he would have been much more excuſable than in teaching, as he did, that the images of objects, which on every ſide preſent themſelves to us, and the nature which ſcatters round, or emits ſuch images, and even our own knowledge and underſtanding, were to be reckoned among the gods [l]. So that what Democritus called GOD, had neither the unity, nor eternity, nor immutability, nor other attributes, which are eſſential to the divine nature: and yet an opinion very like his was not long ago advanced [m], on the ſuppoſition that our ideas are in GOD, and that they cannot [g] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Lecucippe, Rem. E. & Art. Epicure, Rem. F. As to the other Differences between the Doctrines of Democritus and Epicurus, conſult CICER. de Finib. l. 1.

[h] Vid. LUCRET. ubi ſupra [i] LACTANT. Divin. Inſt. l. III. cap. 17. [k] PLUTARCH. de placitis Philoſ. l. 3. cap. 7. [l] CICER. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. [m] F. MALLEBRANCHE's Notion of ſeeing all things in GOD.

be

be a modification of a created mind; from which it ſeems to follow, that our ideas are GOD himſelf [n]. As to Epicurus, he acknowledged indeed, that there were gods, and that they deſerved to be worſhipped on account of the excellence of their nature, tho' no benefit was to be expected from them, nor any harm to be feared [o]: for he allowed them to be neither the makers, nor the governors of the world. And yet a very learned man has lately undertaken the defence of Epicurus, as to this latter point, and maintained, that he did not deny a divine providence [p]. He ſuppoſed the gods were immortal, and ſupremely happy, leading a life of perfect inaction and tranquillity; that they were of human form, yet had not real bodies and blood, but ſomething analogous to them [q]; and leſt he ſhould at once deſtroy their immortality, and ſubject them to deſtruction, he taught, that they were not compoſed of atoms, like other beings [r], though ſome have, by miſtake, affirmed the contrary [s]. It is well known, that this corpuſcular philoſophy has been revived by ſome moderns, who, rejecting the eternity of the atoms, and their fortuitous motion, but following, in almoſt all other reſpects, the old hypotheſis of Leucippus, have made a very fine ſyſtem of it. This is what Gaſſendi has done, who differs from Des Cartes, as to the principles of bodies, in nothing but the retaining a vacuum. The ſcholaſtic divines among the Mohammedans, who are very orthodox as to the creation of the world by GOD, do alſo admit both atoms and a vacuum: but their atoms are different from thoſe of Leucippus, for they have no magnitude, and are all like one another; and they ſuppoſe, as that philoſopher ought to have done, that every atom of a living body is alive, that every atom of a ſenſitive body is endued with ſenſe, and that the underſtanding reſides in an atom; though they differ as to the ſoul, and knowledge, whether they conſiſt in a ſingle atom, or a collection of ſeveral [t].

[n] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Democrite, Rem P. [o] Vid. CICER. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. SENEC. de beneficiis, l. 5. c 19. & GASSEND. de vita & moribus Epicuri, l. 4. c. 3: [p] Monſ. du RONDEL, de vita & moribus Epicuri. Amſt. 1693. in 12mo. [q] CICER. ubi ſupra. DIOG. LAERT. in Epicuro, p. 634, 655, 661. PLUT. de placitis Philoſ. l. 1. c 7. SEXT. EMPIRIC. contra Math. p. 312. [r] CICER. ubi ſupra LACTANT de ira Dei, cap. 10. [s] TERTULLIAN adv. Gentes, cap. xlvii. AUGUST. Epiſt. lvi. [t] Vid. MAIMONID. in more Nevochim, cap 73.

THOSE,

The opinion of those who, holding the eternity of matter, admit an intelligent mind as the disposer thereof; and I. Of those who suppose matter to be the only substance, and endued with understanding.

THOSE who, allowing the eternity of matter, introduce an intelligent mind as the disposer thereof into the form the world now bears, may be again subdivided into two classes: one, who, allowing no substance but matter, supposed it to be endued with understanding and life, and consequently to be GOD; and another, who held GOD and matter to be two distinct, and independent beings.

THE first opinion, which, as has been said, differs but little from Spinozism, seems to have been that of Diogenes of Appollonia[u], and was certainly maintained by Hippasus, of Metapontus, Heraclitus, and the Stoics.

The opinion of Hippasus, Heraclitus,

HIPPASUS and Heraclitus held fire to be the first principle, of which all things were made, and into which, after the revolution of certain periods, they will be again resolved, and that this fire was GOD[x]; whom Heraclitus described to be that most subtile and most swift substance, which permeates, or passes through the whole universe[y].

THE notions of Heraclitus seem to have been very confused, at least as they are now represented to us, which is no wonder at all, since he so much affected obscurity in what he wrote concerning natural philosophy, that he was thence surnamed the obscure[z]. He is said to have denied the world to have been made either by gods or men[a]; by which it is supposed he meant, that the world was not made by any whatsoever, after such a manner as an artificer makes an house, by machines and engines, acting from without upon the matter; but by a certain inward plastic nature of its own[b]. He asserted the fatal necessity of all things, but taught, that they were in a perpetual flux, nothing remaining at a stand. His account of the formation of the world was, that the fire being extinguished, the grossest parts of it coalescing, made the earth, which being loosened by the fire, produced water, and from the exhalation of water, the air was generated[c]. As the opinions of Heraclitus concerning the origin of things were adopted by the Stoics, (of whom immediately) we shall not enlarge here, but only observe, that the great physician Hippocrates had the same and Hippocrates.

[u] See before, p. 40. [x] PLUT. de placit. Phil. l. 1. c. 3. CLEM. ALEXANDR. in protrept. Vid. etiam CICERON. Acad. Quæst. l. 4 & de Nat. Deor. l. 3. [y] PLAT. in Cratylo. p. 413. [z] Σκοτεινὸς. Vid. Cicer. de finib. l. 2. CLEM. ALEX. Stromat. 5. [a] PLUT. de Animæ Procr. p. 1014. [b] CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst. p. 152, &c. [c] PLUT. de placit. Phil. l. 1. c. 3. Vid. etiam DIOG. LAERT. in Heraclit. p. 551, &c.

notion

notion of the deity with Heraclitus, declaring his belief to be, that heat or fire was immortal and omniſcient, and that it ſaw, heard, and knew all things, both preſent and future [d].

THE Stoics held two firſt principles, GOD, and matter void of all quality, the one active, and the other paſſive, and that they were both corporeal [e]; for they did not acknowledge any ſuch thing as incorporeal ſubſtance [f]: by which means they ſtrangely confounded themſelves, and reduced their two principles, in effect, to one and the ſame. They affirmed GOD to be an immortal, rational, and perfect animal, conſcious of his own happineſs, ſubject to no evil, governing the world, and all things in it, by his providence; and the architect, and, as it were, the father of the univerſe [g]. But they more uſually deſcribed him to be a fiery ſpirit, void of all figure, yet changing himſelf into all things; or an artificial fire, methodically proceeding to the generation of the world, and containing within himſelf all ſeminal reaſons or models, according to which every thing is formed purſuant to fate [h]; which is alſo their deſcription of nature [i]. This ſpirit, they ſay, quickens, ſuſtains, and pervades the whole world, and every part of it, as the ſoul does the human body, being called by ſeveral names, according to the different form of the matter which it animates. For which reaſon they hold the world itſelf to be GOD, and every part of it a member of him [k]. So that this ſect, in appearance, have confounded GOD and nature together, though their genuine doctrine ſeems to have been, that there was not only an intellectual conſcious ſoul preſiding over the whole world, yet lodged more immediately in the fiery matter of it; but alſo a certain plaſtic, or ſpermatic nature, contained under, or within the former, and which was properly the fate of all things [l]. And the admitting

The opinion of the Stoics.

[d] HIPPOCRAT. de princip. aut carnib. Sect. 1. [e] ARISTOCLES, de Philoſ. apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 15. cap. 14. DIOG. LAERT. in Zenon. Cittieo, p. 449. SENEC. Ep. 65. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 2. [f] Vid. LIPSIUM de Phyſiol. Stoic. l. 2. cap. 4, & 5. [g] DIOG. LAERT. ubi ſupra, p. 458. [h] PLUT. de plac. Philoſ. l. 1. cap. 6, & 7. [i] DIOG. LAERT. ubi ſup. p. 465. Cic. ubi ſup. [k] Vid. eoſd. & PLUT. ubi ſupra. c. 7. SENEC. Quæſt. Nat. l. 2. c. 45. & Epiſt. 92. LUCAN. Pharſal. l. 9. v. 578. DIDYMUM, apud. EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 15. c. 15, &c. VIRGIL. Georg. l. 4. verſ. 221. & Æneid. l. 6. verſ. 724. [l] Vid. CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 133, &c. 423, &c.

ting of ſuch a ſubordinate plaſtic nature or life, which acts in order to certain ends, though without any ſenſe or conſciouſneſs, has been thought very reaſonable by ſome, though exploded by others, and that for the avoiding of theſe two conſequences; either that, in the formation and organization of natural and animal bodies, every thing comes to paſs fortuitouſly, for the ſake of no final cauſes, and without the guidance and direction of any mind or underſtanding; to aſſert which ſeems irrational, and atheiſtical: or elſe, that GOD himſelf doth immediately form every the minuteſt thing, as it were with his own hands, which is very indecent to ſuppoſe [m]. There were ſome Stoics, it is true, who, rejecting all animality or conſciouſneſs in the world, made it to be governed by a vegetable or plaſtic nature only, as Boethius, whom we have already mentioned, in particular did; but their opinion ought by no means to be imputed to the whole ſect.

AS to the conſtitution of the world, the peculiar dogm of the Stoics, which Zeno, their maſter, ſeems to have borrowed from Heraclitus, was, that in certain periods, or alternate viciſſitudes of time, the univerſe is diſſolved by fire, and re-produced out of it; GOD withdrawing, or abſorbing all things into himſelf, by a general conflagration, and afterwards producing them out of himſelf again [n]. In which ſucceſſive conflagrations, they held, that not only the world, but all the inferior gods alſo are melted down into their ſupreme Deity, the intellectual fiery ſoul, or principle of the univerſe [o]; who, during that interval, reſts in himſelf, conſidering his providence, and entertained with thoughts becoming himſelf [p], till he again emits, and brings the world into being; the manner of which renovation Zeno thus deſcribes: GOD, being alone, changes all ſubſtance from fire, firſt into air, and then into water; and as the ſeed is contained in the plant, ſo GOD, being the ſeminal reaſon of the world, left ſuch a ſeed in the moiſture, as might afford proper matter for the generation of thoſe things which were to be produced; that the groſſer parts of this watery matter ſubſiding made the earth, the finer the air, and thoſe ſtill more ſubtilized the fire. The four four elements being thus generated, from the mixture of them proceeded plants, and animals, and all other ſpecies [q].

[m] Vid. eund. p. 148, &c. [n] DIOG. LAERT. in Zenon. p. 451. NUMENIUS, apud EUSEB. de Præp Ev. l. 15. c. 18, 19. [o] Vid. PLUT adv. Stoicos, p. 1075 & de defectu Oracul. p 420. [p] Idem, adv. Stoicos, p. 1077. SENEC. Epiſt. 6. ARRIAN. in Epictet. lib. III. cap. 13.

Of the Pendets in India.

WITH theſe notions of the Stoics, agrees the doctrine which is ſaid to be almoſt univerſal among the Pendets [r], (who are Indian gentiles) and ſecretly entertained by the Sûfis, and learned men of Perſia, being the ſame in ſubſtance with the philoſophy of Flud, which Gaſſendi has taken the pains to refute. Theſe Cabaliſts pretend, that GOD, or the ſupreme, immoveable, unchangeable Being, has not only produced the ſouls of Creatures out of his own ſubſtance, but whatever is material, or corporeal in the univerſe alſo; and that this production is not made ſimply in the way of efficient cauſes, but by an actual extraction, or extenſion of his own ſubſtance, which is creation, as deſtruction is nothing elſe but the reſuming of that divine ſubſtance into himſelf; which they illuſtrate by the following ſymbol. They feign, that a certain immenſe ſpider was the firſt cauſe of all things; which drawing the matter from its own bowels, wove the web of this univerſe, and diſpoſed it with wonderful art: ſhe, in the mean time, ſitting in the centre of her work, feels and directs the motion of every part; till at length, when ſhe has pleaſed herſelf ſufficiently in ordering, and contemplating this web, ſhe draws all the threads ſhe has ſpun out, again into herſelf, and having abſorbed them, the univerſal nature of all creatures vaniſhes into nothing [s]. Another compariſon made uſe of by them is, that GOD is like an immenſe ocean, wherein ſeveral phials full of water are ſwimming; that theſe phials, whitherſoever they go, are always in the ſame ocean, and in the ſame water, and when they break, the water contained in them will be united to their whole, that is, to the ocean, of which they are portions [t]. But this laſt is by no means a ſtrict parallel; for the matter of the phials is a ſecond ſubſtance, which, by its interpoſition, ſeparates the water, incloſed in thoſe phials, from the ocean: but if there was ſuch a thing as a ſoul of the world, it would be expanded through all parts of the univerſe, nothing could hinder the union of every particular ſoul with its whole, nor would death be a means of their re-union.

[q] DIOG. LAERT. ubi ſup. p. 450, 454. Vid. STOBÆI Ecl. Phyſ. c. 20. [r] We take this word to be the Malayan فندبت Pandit, which ſignifies a man of letters. [s] BERNIER, ſuite des Memoires ſur l'Empire du Grand Mogol, p. 202. &c BURNET. in Append. ad Archæol. p. 354. KIRCHER, China illuſtr. p. 155. [t] BERNIER, ibid.

Of certain ſects among the Chineſe.

THERE is alſo a ſect among the Chineſe, who acknowledge nature to be the ſole deity, thereby underſtanding that natural power, or operation, which, being the efficient cauſe of motion and reſt, produces, maintains, and preſerves all things. They take her to be the ſoul which univerſally informs matter, and call her a principle, independent of all others; but as they ſeparate this principle from all corporeal and ſenſible matter, its imperfections and definitions, they do in this particular differ ſomething from the Stoics; tho' they who incline to this ſect do believe, as they did, that the world hath had a beginning, and ſhall have an end, but ſhall afterwards begin, and end again as before, and ſo perpetually be renewed, and periſh. And according to this opinion, numerous worlds have already exiſted, and others, to an infinite number, will hereafter ſucceſſively make room for one another [u].

BUT the opinion more commonly embraced at this time by the Chineſe, and wherein the atheiſm, which has ſo generally infected them, conſiſts, comes rather nearer to the ſtoic doctrine, tho' not without ſome conſiderable differences; and it is this: That GOD is the material ſoul of the whole world, or rather only of its moſt excellent part, the heaven; and that his providence and power are finite and limited, tho' much excelling the prudence and power of man. That there are diſtinct ſpirits in the four parts of the world, the ſun, ſtars, mountains, rivers, plants, cities, houſes, and in a word, in all things: ſome of which ſpirits they ſuppoſe to be evil, making them the immediate cauſe of all the miſchiefs and diſaſters, to which human life is ſubject. By this diſtribution of ſouls throughout all nature, they are not at a loſs to account for its whole œconomy, and to ſupply the want of an almighty power, and infinite providence, which they allow to no one ſpirit, not ſo much as to that of the heaven. They ſuppoſe, indeed, that the ſoul of the heaven acts on nature with a power and prudence, incomparably greater than what man is endued with; but, at the ſame time, acknowledge in the ſoul of every other thing an inward power, naturally independent on that of the heaven, and which ſometimes acts even in contradiction to the deſigns of heaven. So that, according to them, the heaven governs nature as a mighty king, the other ſouls owe him obedience, which he almoſt always forces them to pay; yet there are ſome, which now and then diſpenſe with their duty in that reſpect, and refuſe to obey [x].

[u] Deſcript. of China, at the end of IDES's Travels, p. 171, 172.

forces

THIS laſt opinion differs widely from another entertained by a ſect of the ſame nation, and eſtabliſhed by royal authority in the year of Chriſt 65. Its founder was ſon of the king In fan vang, who was firſt named She, or She Kia [y], and afterwards, when he arrived at the age of thirty, Foe, that is, not a man [z]. The ſecret doctrine of this ſect, which is never diſcovered to the ſimple, or vulgar, is; that a void, or emptineſs [a] is the principle and end of all things; that our firſt parents ſprang from thence, and on their death returned into it; and that all men are likewiſe reſolved into that principle by death; that mankind, and the elements, and all creatures make a part of this void: ſo that there is but one ſubſtance in the univerſe, which is diverſified in particular beings only by figures and qualities, or interior configurations; in a manner as water, which is always eſſentially water, though it be in the ſhape of ſnow, hail, rain, or ice [b]. They deſcribe this original being, as a pure, limpid, ſubtil, infinite ſubſtance, which can neither be generated, nor corrupted, but is both perfect itſelf, and the perfection of all things, remaining in perpetual repoſe, but without heart, virtue, underſtanding, or power, the great property of its eſſence being neither to act, underſtand, nor will any thing [c]. This opinion is the fountain, from whence that, which we have mentioned to obtain among the Japaneſe [d], is derived; and differs from Spinoziſm, in allowing an emerſion of the world from a very different ſtate poſſible, if not actually to have been; as it does both from that and the ſtoic doctrine, in diveſting their firſt principle of activity and underſtanding. A follower of Confucius has refuted the extravagancies of this ſect, by that eſtabliſhed maxim, that nothing can be produced from nothing; by which he muſt have ſuppoſed, that they taught [x] LA LOUBERE, Deſcript. de Siam, Tom. I. p. 396, &c. [y] So we chuſe to expreſs what other authors, following the Portugueſe ſpelling and pronunciation, write Xe, or Xe Kia, intending throughout this work, to reduce the orthography of the Chineſe, and Japaneſe words, as near as poſſible, to the Engliſh pronunciation; of which the reader will be more particularly informed in the preface. [z] See the Acta Eruditor. Lipſiæ, 1688. p. 257, in the Extract of the Philoſ. of Confucius, printed at Paris, 1687. [a] The Chineſe words are Cung hia, the Latin tranſlation, Vacuum or inane. [b] Biblioth. Univ. Tom. VII. pag. 406. [c] Acta Eruditor. Lipſiæ, 1688, pag. 258. [d] See before, p. 15.

the firſt principle of all things to be nothing [c], and conſequently, that the world had a beginning, without either an efficient cauſe, or matter. But it is more probable, that by the words, void and emptineſs, they intended only to expreſs that which has not the properties of ſenſible matter, and underſtand thereby what the moderns underſtand by ſpace, which is conceived to be diſtinct from body, and whoſe indiviſible, impalpable, penetrable, immoveable, and infinite extenſion is ſomething real. It is eaſy to perceive, that ſuch a being could not be the firſt principle, if it were inactive, as theſe Chineſe philoſophers pretend: Spinoza has not been ſo abſurd; the abſtract idea which he gives of the firſt principle is no more, properly ſpeaking, than the idea of ſpace; but then he endues it with motion, from whence all the varieties of matter may proceed [f].

Of the Siameſe; THE Siameſe have alſo ſome agreement with the Stoics, in their notion of the alternate deſtruction and renovation of the univerſe. Their Talapoins teach, that the figure or model of the world is eternal, but that the viſible world is not; for whatever we ſee in it, lives, in their opinion, and muſt die; and there will at the ſame time be re-produced other beings of the ſame kind, another heaven, another earth, and other ſtars; and in this manner, they ſay, nature has periſhed, and been renewed ſeveral times [g].

and the later Jews. NOR was this doctrine unknown to the later Jews, whoſe cabaliſts are ſuppoſed to account for the origin of things, by making them emanations from a firſt cauſe, and therefore pre-exiſtent, though perhaps under another form. They ſpeak alſo of the reſuming or withdrawing of things into the firſt being, by a revolution and reſtitution of them to their firſt ſtate; as if they believed their En Soph [h], or firſt infinite Being, to contain all things, and that there is always the ſame quantity of being in the univerſe, whether in the created, or uncreated ſtate. When it is in its uncreated or antemundane ſtate, GOD is ſimply all things; but when it becomes the world, the degree or quantity of being or entity is not encreaſed, but GOD expands and unfolds himſelf by emanations and effluxes, from the ſuperior to the lower parts, whereby the different forms and orders of created beings are conſtituted. For which reaſon they often ſpeak of greater and ſmaller veſſels, as it were to receive thoſe efluxes; and of effluent rays; and of canals, through which they flow and are propagated; in a word, when GOD

[c] Acta Erudit. Lipſiæ, ubi ſupra. [f] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Spinoza, Rem. B. [g] LA LOUBERE, Deſcrip. de Siam. Tom I. p. 361. [h] אין סוף.

retracts

retracts thoſe rays, the external world periſhes, and all things again become GOD[i]: he ſendeth forth his ſpirit, and they are created, and he reneweth the face of the earth: he hideth his face, and they are troubled, he taketh away their breath, they die, and return to their duſt[k].

2. The opinion of thoſe who held two diſtinct co-eternal principles, GOD and matter.

WE come now to ſpeak of thoſe who held two diſtinct, and independent principles, co-exiſtent from eternity, GOD and matter; which is ſuppoſed to have been the opinion of Pythagoras, and Plato; and was certainly that of Anaxagoras, Archelaus, and ſeveral others.

The opinion of Pherecydes, Pythagoras.

WHAT was the opinion of Pythagoras's maſter, Pherecydes of Syros, as to the origin of the world, is ſomewhat uncertain; from the firſt words of a treatiſe of his, extant in the time of Diogenes Laertius, which are indeed ſomewhat corrupted and obſcure, it ſeems, he believed three eternal beings, Jupiter, or GOD, time, and the earth [l], But Pythagoras himſelf is ſaid to have aſſerted two ſubſtantial ſelf-exiſtent principles, a Monad, or unity, and a Dyad, or duality; by the former of which GOD, or an active principle or mind, is generally allowed to be meant (though ſome imagine the pythagoric monads were atoms [m]); but what the latter ſignified is uncertain, it being ſometimes interpreted to be a dæmon, or evil principle informing matter, or the viſible world [n], and at other times to be a paſſive principle, or matter itſelf [o]; the number two being uſed as a type, to ſhew the variety, inequality, diviſibility, and continual changes of matter, as one was to expreſs the unity, identity, indiviſibility, and unchangeableneſs of the divine nature [p]. Yet it may be queſtioned whether Pythagoras by his Dyad meant matter or no: for Porphyry thus interprets the two pythagoric principles. The cauſe, ſays he, of that ſympathy, harmony, and agreement which is in things, and of the conſervation of the whole, which is always the ſame, and like itſelf, was by Pythagoras called Unity, that unity which is in the things themſelves being but a participation of the firſt cauſe; but the reaſon of difference, inequality, and conſtant irregularity in things was by him called a Dyad[q]. Thus, according to Porphyry, by the pythagoric dyad, is not ſo much meant matter, as the infinite and indeterminate nature, and paſſive capability of things. So that the monad, and dyad of Pythagoras ſeem to have been the ſame with Plato's finite, and infinite[r]; the former of which two only is ſubſtantial, that firſt moſt ſimple being, the cauſe of all unity, and the meaſure of all things[s].

[i] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 63, &c. [k] Pſalm civ. 29, 30. [l] DIOG. LAERT in Pherecyde, p. 76. [m] See before, p. 41. [n] PLUTARCH de placitis Philoſ. l. 1. cap. 7. [o] Idem, ibid. cap. 3. Vid. NUMEN. apud. Euſeb de Præp Ev. & CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 371, &c. [p] Vid. DACIER, Vie de Pythagore, p. lv. [q] PORPHYR. in Vita Pythag. p. 203.

HOWEVER, if Pythagoras's dyad be to be underſtood of a ſubſtantial matter, there ſeems good reaſon to believe, that he did not ſuppoſe matter to be ſelf-exiſtent and independent upon the Deity; ſince, according to the beſt and moſt antient writers, his dyad was no primary, but a ſecondary being only, and derived from his monad, the ſole original of all things, as matter for the monad, or active principle, which in the beginning was alone, to work upon[t]. For whatever Ocellus Lucanus, Philolaus[u], and ſome other Pythagoreans imagine of the world's eternity, Pythagoras himſelf really believed it to have had a beginning, and to have been made by GOD[x]; which is confirmed by its being given as one reaſon of his ſuperſtitious abſtinence from beans; that at the beginning things being confounded, mingled, and putrified together in the earth, the generation and ſecretion of them afterwards proceeded by degrees, animals being produced, and plants ſhooting forth; at which time, from the ſame putrified matter, ſprang up both men and beans[y]. But his acknowledging the creation of the world by GOD is ſtill more expreſs, in thoſe verſes cited for his by Juſtin[z], We ſhall content ourſelves to add here the teſtimony of St. Cyril, who aſſures us, that he held one GOD of the whole univerſe, the principle and cauſe of all things, illuminating and quickening the whole, and the original of motion; from whom all things were derived, and brought out of non-exiſtence into being[a].

BUT Pythagoras, it ſeems, did not only call the ſupreme Deity a monad, but alſo a tetrad, or tetractys, the explica-

[r] Or rather determinate, and indeterminate; πέρας καὶ ἄπειρον. PLAT. in Philebo. [s] CUDWORTH, ubi ſup. 372. [t] ALEXAND. de Succeſs. Philoſ. apud DIOG. LAERT. in Pythagora, p. 507. HERMIAS, in Irriſione Philoſoph. gent. THEODORET. Therap. II. THEARIDAS Pythagoreus, apud Clement. Alex. Strom. 5. p. 611, & in admonit. ad Gentes, p. 47. SUIDAS, in voce Pythagoras. [u] Vid. CUDWORTH, ubi ſup. 393. [x] PLUT. de placitis Philoſ. l. 2. cap. 4. [y] PORPHYR. de Vita Pythag. [z] De Monarchia, p. 167. [a] CYRILL. cont. Julian. lib. 1.

tion

tion of which has tortured the wits of ſeveral ages [b]. It is, in the golden verſes, ſaid to be the fountain of the eternal nature [c]; and by Hierocles the maker of all things, the intelligent god, the cauſe of the heavenly and ſenſible god, that is, of the animated world or heaven [d]. The later Pythagoreans endeavour to give reaſons why GOD ſhould be called Tetractys, from certain myſteries in the number four [e]; but the late conjecture of ſome learned men [f] ſeems to be much more probable, that this name was really nothing elſe but the Tetragrammaton, or that proper name of the ſupreme GOD amongſt the Hebrews, conſiſting of four letters [g]; nor is it ſtrange, Pythagoras ſhould be ſo well acquainted with the name JEHOVAH, ſince beſides his travelling into other parts of the eaſt, he is affirmed by Joſephus, Porphyry, and others, to have converſed with the Hebrews alſo. The worſt of Pythagoras's theology was, that, repreſenting GOD as the mover of the univerſe, and the ſoul of the world, he taught, that our ſouls were portions of the divine ſubſtance [h].

THAT Pythagoras held numbers to be the principles of all things, is teſtified by all antiquity, and he thence accounted for the production of the world in this manner. He ſuppoſed that the monad and dyad were the two ſources of numbers, from whence proceeded points; from points lines; from lines plane figures; from planes ſolids; from ſolids ſenſible bodies; the elements of which are four; fire, water, earth, and air; and theſe are in perpetual change; from them the world was formed, being animated, intelligent, and ſpherical, containing in the midſt the earth, a globoſe body, and inhabited [i]. He taught, that the world began from fire, and the fifth element; and that there being five figures of ſolid bodies, called mathematical, or regular, the earth was made of the cube; fire of the pyramid, or tetrahedron; the air of the octahedron; water of the icoſahedron; and the ſphere of the univerſe of the dodecahedron [k].

[b] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 154, 157. [c] Verſ. 47, 48. [d] HIEROCLES, in Aur. Carm. [e] See CUDWORTH, p. 376. [f] PICUS MIRAND. SELDEN & GOTEF. WENDELIN. See alſo PHILO, in Vita Moſis, p. 519. [g] Vid. CUDWORTH, ubi ſup. & DACIER, Vie de Pythagore, p. lvii. [h] CICER. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. MINUT. FELIX, p. 151. LACTANT. l. 1. c. 5. [i] SUIDAS, in voce Pythagoras. DIOG. LAERT. in Pythag. p. 508. [k] PLUT. de placitis Phil. l. 2. c. 6. But the fifth figure, according to CLAVIUS and others, was added by ſome of Plato's followers.

Reflections thereon.

THIS method of philoſophizing, which was alſo adopted by Plato, if underſtood in the literal acceptation, has no manner of foundation in nature, nothing being more certain, than that numbers, if ever ſo variouſly combined, can generate nothing but numbers [l]. It is therefore more probable, that Pythagoras made uſe of them no otherwiſe than as emblems, or ſymbols: for ſuppoſing mathematical ſciences to poſſeſs a middle diſtance between corporeals and incorporeals, he began with them; thereby to wean the mind gradually from ſenſible things, and raiſe it to the contemplation of intelligible beings. And this is the reaſon why he had recourſe chiefly to numbers; for not being able ſufficiently to explain by words the firſt principles, he repreſented them by numbers [m]: which ſeems to be all Pythagoras deſigned, though his followers have ſought myſteries in his doctrine, which himſelf never dreamt of; yet it is not to be denied, that the great defect of that philoſopher, and of Plato alſo, was, that they reſolved natural things into mathematical reaſons, numbers, and proportions; as Ariſtotle afterwards did into logical reaſons.

THE monad, dyad, and tetrad we have already ſpoken of. As to the regular bodies, it is conjectured, that Pythagoras intended only to repreſent the elements under their forms, in imitation of other natural bodies. Thus he repreſented the fire by the figure of a pyramid, or tetrahedron, from its aſpiring to a point, or the acuteneſs of its flame; the air, being next in order to the fire, by an octahedron, which bears the neareſt reſemblance to the tetrahedron, being compoſed of two pyramids joined by a ſquare baſe; the water, becauſe of its fluidity, was repreſented by an icoſahedron; and the earth by a cube, to denote its ſtability; the cube being, of all the regular bodies, the leaſt adapted to motion [n]. Or if they were to be conſidered phyſically, perhaps Pythagoras ſuppoſed the conſtituent parts of the four elements to conſiſt of ſuch figures, according to their ſeveral ſpecific gravities: that the molæ, or primary particles of the earth, were cubes; for as the earth is the moſt ponderous of all the elements, ſo is the cube the heavieſt of all the regular bodies; that the particles of fire were tetrahedra, or triangular pyramids, fire being the lighteſt and moſt volatile element, as the tetrahedron is the

[l] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 158. [m] DACIER, Vie de Pythagore, p. lv. [n] SACROBIUS, apud Caſimir. Simienowicz. lib. 4. p. 263.

lighteſt

lighteſt of the ſame bodies; that the particles of the air had the form of an octahedron, which is the next lighteſt body of the five, as air is the next lighteſt to fire; and that the particles of water had the ſhape of an icoſahedron, which figure is a ſort of mean proportion between the cube and the octahedron, as the weight of water is between the weight of air and that of earth. As to the fifth body, the dodecahedron, which repreſents the heaven, or ſphere of the univerſe, it muſt be entirely emblematical, (if it be not rather a later addition to the pythagoric phyſiology, and no genuine part of it) the four faces of that figure being fancied to allude to the twelve ſigns of the zodiac [o], or elſe the four elements, ſeven heavens, and the firmament [p].

TIMÆUS LOCRUS, who was a Pythagorean, ſeems to have held the pre-exiſtence of matter, as if it were a ſelf-exiſtent principle together with GOD; for he affirms it to be eternal [q]: yet in another place he aſſerts the eternal GOD, who is viſible to the underſtanding only, to be the author and parent of all things, and that the world, which is viſible to our eyes, is the generated god [r]; and he diſtinguiſhes between the eternal duration of GOD, which had no beginning; and time, which was made together with the world, as an imitation of eternity [s]. He taught more particularly, that there were two principles of all things; Mind, the principle of thoſe things which are made according to reaſon; and Neceſſity, of thoſe which are produced by force, according to the powers of bodies; by which ſecond principle, he plainly means matter [t]. That before the making of the world, there were, beſides GOD, idea, or form, and rude matter; one being the intelligible pattern, or exemplar of all things, and the other the ſubject, which, being itſelf without figure, yet capable of all figures, was reduced by GOD into the determinate form of the viſible world; which, being the beſt production, is not corruptible by any other cauſe than the ſame GOD who compoſed it, if it ſhall at any time pleaſe him to diſſolve it [u]. So that Timæus ſeems really to have held two ſubordinate principles, matter and form;

The opinion of Timæus Locrus.

[o] Idem, ibid. [p] Vid. DACIER, Vie de Pythagore, p. cxxxiii. Vid. etiam TIMÆUM LOCRUM de Anima Mundi, Inter Opuſc. Mythol. &c. Edit. a T. Gale, 1688, p. 553, &c. [q] TIMÆUS, ibid. p. 544. [r] Idem, ibid. p. 549. [s] Ibid. p. 552. See alſo CLEM. ALEXAND. Strom. 5. p. 604. [t] Vid. MER. CASAUB. in Diog. Laert. in vita Plat. p. 207. [u] TIMÆUS, ibid. p. 543, &c. See STANLEY's Hiſt. of Philoſ. part IX. p. 419, 420.

wherein

and of Archytas of Tarentum.

wherein Archytas the Tarentine, who was also a Pythagorean, agreed with him, as supposing GOD to be the artificer and mover, matter that which is moved, and form the art introduced into the matter [x]; which was also the notion of Plato. We the rather take notice of the opinion of Archytas in this place, because he and Pythagoras are joined by Censorinus with Ocellus Lucanus, as believing mankind to have been from eternity [y].

The opinion of Plato.

PLATO, who, as well as his master Socrates, embraced the pythagoric notions as to the origin of the universe, held the three principles we have just mentioned, GOD, matter, and idea [z]; which are by Laertius reduced to two, GOD and matter [a]; the ideas, or original patterns of things conceived in the divine mind, being really no distinct principle from him, but the very mind of GOD, with whom they are often confounded, both by Timæus, and several of the Platonics [b]. It seems therefore certain, that Plato supposed matter to have been uncreated and eternal, as he often asserts it to be. But he has been defended in this respect by Hierocles [c], who, being himself convinced by the arguments on the other side, was willing to have it thought, for the honour of his sect, that its founder believed GOD capable of producing the world by a simple act of volition, though there was no pre-existent matter; and therefore maintained, that he really held an absolute creation out of nothing. Wherein Hierocles is thought to have been very singular [d]; and yet some moderns have followed him in that particular, supposing, that when Plato asserted matter to be eternal, he did not mean, that it subsisted visibly from all eternity, but only that it subsisted intellectually in the eternal idea of GOD [e]. And several passages have been cited from the works of that philosopher [f], which would give some grounds to suspect he really believed, that GOD created, or produced matter itself, as well as made and formed the world thereout, had he not so explicitly decla-

[x] STOBÆUS, Eclog. Phys. [y] CENSORINUS de die natali, cap. 3. where, instead of Ocellus, the common Editions have Cereius. [z] PLUTARCH. de placitis Philos. l. 1. c. 3. CHALCIDIUS in Timæum. APULEIUS, de doctrina Platonis, l. 1. [a] DIOG. LAERT. in Platon. p. 206, 212, &c. [b] Vid. MENAG. in Laert. p. 163, & MER. CASAUBON. in eundem loco jam citato. [c] HIEROCL. apud Photium, Biblioth. Cod. CCLI. pag. 1380. [d] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hist. Art. Hierocles, Philos. [e] DACIER. Vie de Platon. p. 123, &c. [f] Vid. ibid. & CUDWORTH's Intell. System, p. 404, 570, &c.

red

red the contrary. Another opinion imputed to Plato by Plutarch, viz. the ſuppoſing of two intelligent and independent principles, a good and an evil one, will be conſidered by and by.

As to the formation of the world, Plato taught, that matter being at firſt unformed, and without any determinate figure, and being moved in an irregular and diſorderly manner, GOD, who prefers order to confuſion, gathered it together; and converting this ſubſtance into the four elements, of them made the world, and all things therein, faſhioning it according to the archetypal idea, or model thereof, which he had conceived in himſelf; and that he gave it a ſpherical figure, as the moſt perfect, and that which contains the reſt; and endued it with an intelligent ſoul, becauſe an animated being is more excellent than an inanimate, which ſoul of the world Plato ſuppoſed to be formed before its material body [g]. He alſo aſſerted the world to be incorruptible, not by its nature, but becauſe it is ſupported by divine providence [h]: and held not only the animated univerſe itſelf, but the ſeveral parts of nature, which he likewiſe ſuppoſed animated, to be gods, inferior indeed to the ſupreme GOD, but ſuperior to men, and juſtly challenging honour and worſhip from them. Theſe gods of Plato were for the moſt part fiery, being the celeſtial bodies, though he ſuppoſed the earth alſo to be a god, affirming it to be the oldeſt of all the gods within the heaven [i]: and he for this reaſon found fault with the anaxagorean doctrine, which made the planets and ſtars nothing but inanimate ſtones and earth [k].

ANAXAGORAS, who was not more conſpicuous for his wealth and nobility of birth, than the greatneſs of his mind [l], did indiſputably hold two co-eternal principles, GOD and matter; being the firſt (of the Ionic philoſophers at leaſt) who, as has been obſerved, introduced an intelligent being to move, ſeparate, and put in order the chaotic matter: whence he obtained the honourable ſurname of Nous, or Mind [m]. He admitted as many ſorts of principles as of compounded bodies: for he ſuppoſed, that every kind of body was formed of a great number of ſmall ſimilar par- The opinion of Anaxagoras.

[g] DIOG. LAERT. in Platon. p. 206, &c. PLATO, in Timæo. See alſo STANLEY's Hiſt. of Philoſ. Part V. p. 186. & BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 176. [h] PLUT. de placitis Philoſ. l. 1. c. 4. [i] DIOG. LAERT. in Platon. p. 211. [k] PLATO de Legib. l. 10. [l] DIOG. LAERT. in Anaxag. p. 83. [m] Idem, ibid. PLUTARCH. in Pericle.

ticles ſ

ticles; that a bone, for example, was nothing but a compoſition of many inviſible bones, and that the blood, which we ſee, was made up of many minute drops, every one of which was blood [n]; from the ſimilitude of which principles he called them Homœomeriæ. But this obliged him to allow, that the ſeeds, or principles of all kinds are found in every body, which throws his ſyſtem into a ſtrange confuſion; not to mention ſeveral other inconveniencies and contradictions therein [o]. As to the formation of the world, his doctrine ſeems to have been, that the mind, or intelligence who preſided thereat, and whom he allows to be the original of motion [p], finding in the infinite matter a vaſt number of particles which were like one another, but promiſcuouſly mixed with, and ſurrounded by others which were unlike, ſeparated the one from the other, and, joining together the corpuſcles of the ſame kind, formed of ſome a ſtar, of others a ſtone, &c. Notwithſtanding which, he has been ſeverely cenſured by ſeveral, as allowing too much to material neceſſity, and endeavouring to account for things, as far as poſſible, from the inherent forms and qualities of matter only, or any way, rather than bring in the Deity, to whom he never has recourſe, but when he is abſolutely at a loſs [q], and without whoſe interpoſition or knowledge, he admitted, ſome revolutions in nature happened [r]. As to the formation of animals, he taught, that they proceeded from the earth, being firſt generated of moiſture and heat, and after by mixture of the ſexes [s].

Of Archelaus.

ARCHELAUS, the ſucceſſor of Anaxagoras, moſt probably held the ſame principles with his maſter, namely, an infinite number of ſimilar particles, as St. Auſtin and Simplicius [t] teſtify; tho' others [u] tell us, that he ſuppoſed infinite air, its rarefaction and condenſation, the one being fire, and the other water, to be the principles of all things. He alſo thought men and animals were produced by the heat of the [n] Vide LUCRET. de rer. Nat. l. 1. v. 830, &c. PLUT. de placitis Philoſ. l. 1. c. 3. DIOG. LAERT. in Anaxag. p. 84. ARIST. Phyſic. l. 1. c. 4.

[o] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Anaxagoras, Rem. C & G.

[p] DIOG. LAERT. ubi ſupra.

[q] ARISTOT. Metaph. l. 1. c. 4.

[r] CLEM. ALEX. Strom. lib. 2. p. 364. EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 14. c. 14. p. 750.

[s] DIOG. LAERT. in Anaxag. p. 85.

[t] AUGUSTIN. de civit. Dei, l. 8. c. 2. SIMPLIC. in Ariſt. Phyſ. lib. 1. Vid. etiam CLEM. ALEXANDR. in Protrept. p. 43.

[u] PLUTARCH. de placitis Philoſoph. l. 1. c. 3. Juſtin. Martyr, admonit ad Græcos. p. 4.

earth,

earth, which yielded a ſlimy ſubſtance like milk, ſerving for food[x].

EMPEDOCLES, who was an auditor both of Pythagoras and Anaxagoras, is ſaid to have followed the phyſiology of the latter. He held two cauſes of all things, contention and friendſhip, meaning thereby ſecretion and concretion, or the ſeparation and mixture of the primary matter, from which the elements were formed, and all things that have been, are, or ſhall be, plants, animals, men, and gods, derived their original[y]; yet he ſuppoſed, that contention and friendſhip did both depend on one ſupreme Deity, as their author[z]. For Empedocles, it ſeems, believed, that were it not for diſcord, or contention, all things would be one; ſo that, according to him, all things whatſoever proceeded from contention, together with a mixture of friendſhip, ſave only the ſupreme GOD, who hath no contention at all in him, becauſe he is eſſentially unity itſelf[a]. He taught, that the elements were compoſed out of ſmaller corpuſcles, which were moſt minute, and as it were the elements of the elements[b]. Agreeably to other atomiſts, he acknowledged no generation or corruption, properly ſo called, but aſcribed all to ſecretion and concretion[c]. He imagined the elements to have been produced in this order; firſt, that the æther was ſecreted, afterwards the fire, and then the earth, which being too cloſely preſſed by violence of the circumvolution, there iſſued thence water, from the evaporation of which proceeded the air. That the heaven was made of the æther, the ſun of the fire, and the things about the earth from the other elements[d]: ſo that the phyſiology of Empedocles was, at the bottom, the ſame with that of Democritus and Epicurus; only that he differed from them in ſome particulars, as in excluding a vacuum, and denying ſuch phyſical corpuſcles as were indiviſible, but chiefly in admitting an intelligent principle, by whoſe wiſdom the world was put into this order, as the beſt and moſt convenient for the good of the whole; tho' he ſometimes indulged too much to fortuitous mechaniſm, eſpecially in the ſtructure of animals[e]. We ſhall only obſerve further, that he held, according to the pythagorean doctrine, that there were two worlds, the one intellectual

Of Empedocles.

[x] DIOG. LAERT. in Archelao, p. 89. [y] DIOG. LAERT. in Emped. p. 538. CICER. de Amicitia. CLEMENS ALEX. in admon. ad Gentes. ARIST. Phyſ. l. 8. SUIDAS, in voce Manes, &c. [z] ARISTOT. in Metaph. l. 3. c. 4. & de Mundo, p. 26. [a] CUDWORTH's Intell. Syſt. p. 392. [b] PLUTARCH de placitis Phil. l. 1. c. 13. STOBÆUS, in Eclog. Phyſic. [c] PLUT. ubi ſup. l. 1. c. 24, & 30. [d] Idem, ibid. l. 2. c. 6. [e] Vid. CUDWORTH, p. 24, 25.

lectual, and the other ſenſible; the former of them being the model, or archetype of the latter [f].

Of Plutarch and ſeveral others.

THAT Plutarch maintained the eternity of matter is paſt all queſtion; he expreſly aſſerting, that the ſubſtance, or matter, out of which the world was made, was not itſelf made, but always ready at hand, and ſubject to the artificer, to be ordered and diſpoſed by him. For, in his opinion, the making of the world was not the production of it out of nothing, but out of an antecedent bad and diſorderly ſtate, like the making of a houſe, garment, or ſtatue [g].

IT is alſo well known, that Hermogenes, and other antient pretenders to chriſtianity, did in like manner aſſert the ſelf-exiſtence and improduction of matter, for which reaſon they were commonly called Materiarians; endeavouring by this means to give an account (as the Stoics had done before them) of the original of evils, and to free GOD from the imputation thereof. And they argued in this manner; GOD made all things either out of himſelf, or out of nothing, or out of pre-exiſtent matter: he could not make all things out of himſelf, becauſe himſelf being always unmade, he ſhould then really have been the maker of nothing; and he did not make all out of nothing, becauſe, being eſſentially good, he would have made every thing in the beſt manner, and ſo there could have been no evil in the world: but ſince there are evils, and theſe could not proceed from the will of GOD, they muſt needs ariſe from the fault of ſomething, and therefore of the matter out of which things were made [h]. Some modern ſects of the chriſtian profeſſion do alſo, at this day, aſſert the uncreatedneſs of matter; but theſe ſuppoſe, as the Stoics did, body to be the only ſubſtance [i].

BUT ſome went ſtill farther, and maintained, that the chaos, or original matter, was animated by an evil or maleficent ſoul, thereby conſtituting a third ſelf-exiſtent principle. And this was the opinion of Plutarch, whom we have juſt mentioned, and of Numenius and Atticus [k]. The firſt not only expreſly aſſerts, that a mad irrational ſoul, and an unformed diſorderly body did co-exiſt with one another from eternity, neither of them having any generation or beginning [l]; but diſcovers no ſmall fondneſs for this notion in ſeveral parts of his works [m], and profeſſedly endeavours to eſtabliſh

[f] SIMPLIC. in Phyſic. Ariſt. Vid. PLUT. ubi ſup. l. 1. c. 20. [g] PLUT. de Pſychog. Platon. p. 1014, 1015, &c. [h] TERTULLIAN. adv. Hermog. p. 282. [i] CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 197. [k] PROCL. in Tim. p. 116. [l] PLUT. in quæſt. Platon. p. 1003. [m] Idem, de Pſychog. Plat. & de Iſide & Oſiride, &c.

eſtabliſh it by the beſt arguments he can; pretending, that otherwiſe it would be impoſſible to account, in a ſatisfactory manner, for the original of evil. For as evil could not be produced without ſome poſitive cauſe, it being ridiculous to imagine it came into the world by accident; and as neither GOD, who is eſſentially good, nor mere inactive matter, void of all form and quality, could be the cauſe of evil; he therefore concluded, that it muſt proceed from a certain irrational and maleficent ſoul, or dæmon, unmade, and co-exiſting with GOD and matter from eternity. So that whatever is good in the ſoul and body of the univerſe, and likewiſe in the ſouls of men and dæmons, is to be aſcribed to GOD, as its only original; and whatever is evil, irregular, and diſorderly in them, ought to be imputed to that other ſubſtantial evil principle. And to ſupport this opinion by authority, as well as reaſon, he would perſuade us, that it was the conſtant belief of all the pagan nations, and of the wiſeſt men, and philoſophers that ever were among them [n]; imputing it to the Egyptians, who, as he imagines, repreſented the evil principle under the name of Typhon; to Zoroaſtres, and the Perſian Mages, who are alſo by Laertius affirmed to have maintained two principles, a good dæmon, and an evil one [o] (tho' it has been queſtioned, whether they really believed the evil principle to be eternal or not); to the Chaldeans, becauſe their aſtrologers ſuppoſed two of the planets to be beneficent, two maleficent, and three of a middle nature; and to the antient Greeks, becauſe they ſacrificed not only to Jupiter Olympius, but alſo to Hades, or Pluto, who was ſometimes called by them the infernal Jupiter: ſuppoſing alſo the monad and dyad of Pythagoras, the contention and friendſhip of Empedocles, the mind and infinite matter of Anaxagoras, to be no other than a good and evil GOD. But above all he endeavours to prove, that Plato was an undoubted champion for this opinion, and that chiefly for theſe reaſons: firſt, becauſe that philoſopher ſpeaks of a neceſſary and innate appetite, which may ſometimes turn the heavens a contrary way, and by that means cauſe the diſorder and confuſion [p]; ſecondly, becauſe he ſpeaks of two kinds of ſouls, whereof one is beneficent, but the other the contrary [q]; and laſtly, becauſe he ſuppoſes the matter to have been moved diſorderly before the world was made, which implies, there was a diſorderly and irrational ſoul exiſting with it, as the mover of it, matter being unable to move itſelf. But as to the firſt of theſe allegations, it has been obſerved, that Plato, as if it had been purpoſely to prevent ſuch an interpretation of his meaning, in the paſſage there quoted, as this of Plutarch's, adds, that it muſt not be ſuppoſed, there are two gods of contrary minds, turning the heavens ſometimes one way, and ſometimes another. Which might alſo ſerve for an anſwer to what is afterwards urged, as if Plato had affirmed, that there were two ſouls, the one beneficent, and the other the contrary, becauſe this would be all one as to introduce two gods: but in that place it is conceived, that Plato did only diſtribute ſouls in general into good and evil; thoſe moral differences properly belonging to that rank of beings called by him ſouls, and ariſing from them, according to his premiſed doctrine, that ſoul is the cauſe of good and evil, juſt and unjuſt: but, then, afterwards making enquiry concerning the ſoul of the world, or heaven, he poſitively concludes, that it was no other than a ſoul endued with all virtue[r], As to the laſt reaſon, that matter is ſaid by Plato to have been moved diſorderly, it is ſuppoſed, that he did therein only adhere to that vulgarly received tradition, that the world was formed from a chaos, or matter confuſedly moved, and afterwards brought into order[s]. And as to the origin of evil, Plato is conceived neither to have imputed it to GOD himſelf, nor derived it from unqualified matter, nor yet from any irrational and maleficent ſoul, but the neceſſity of imperfect beings[t].

[n] Idem, de Iſide & Oſiride, p. 369, &c. [o] DIOG. LAERT. in proœm. [p] PLAT. in Politic. [q] Idem, de Legib. l. 10.

irrational

HOWEVER, ſome mongrel chriſtians, as the Marcionites, Manichæans, and Paulicians, did really maintain this opinion of two ſelf-exiſtent gods, a good and an evil one, which latter Manes called Hyle, or matter[u].

The opinion of thoſe who held the world to be abſolutely created, and liable to diſſolution.

HAVING now done with the ſecond of thoſe opinions, under which we comprehended the ſeveral notions, which have been entertained concerning the origin of the univerſe, we come to ſpeak of the laſt, and only true one; that the world had a beginning, being abſolutely produced by GOD out of a ſtate of non-exiſtence, and conſequently, that it is of its own nature liable to diſſolution.

AND beſides ſuch of the nations, and philoſophers already mentioned, who moſt probably believed this creation of the world, though ſuſpected of contrary opinions, there were were ſeveral among the heathens who unqueſtionably did ſo.

[r] Idem, ibid. [s] CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 218, &c. Vid BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Zoroaſtre, Rem. E. [t] CUDWORTH, p 220. [u] AUGUST. contr. Fauſt. l. 20. c. 3.

WE ſhall firſt inſtance in the antient Tuſcans, or Etruri- The opinion ans, whoſe tradition we have from one of their own writers. of the anti-
He ſays, that GOD, the author of the univerſe, employed ent Tuſ-twelve thouſand years in all his creations, and diſtributed cans, them into twelve houſes. That in the firſt chiliad, or thouſand years, he made the heaven and earth; in the next, the firmament which appears to us, calling it heaven; in the third, the ſea and all the waters that are in the earth; in the fourth, the great lights, the ſun, and moon, and alſo the ſtars; in the fifth, every volatile, reptile, and four-footed animal, in the air, earth, and water; in the ſixth, man. It ſeems therefore, according to them, that the firſt ſix thouſand years were paſſed before the formation of man, and that mankind are to continue for the other ſix thouſand years, the whole time of conſummation being twelve thouſand years [x]. For they held, that the world was ſubject to certain revolutions, wherein it became transformed, and a new age and generation began: of ſuch generations there were in all, according to them, eight, differing from one another in cuſtoms and way of life; each having a duration of a certain number of years aſſigned them by GOD, and determined by the period which they called, the great year. The approach of ſuch a change in the world was judged, by the Tuſcan diviners, to be portended by a prodigy which happened in the time of C. Marius, when the air being perfectly clear and ſerene, there was heard a ſhrill and mournful ſound of a trumpet, to the aſtoniſhment and terror of every body [y]. And theſe are all the remains we now have of the old Etrurian phyſiology; which may be ſuppoſed to have been well worth our knowledge, that nation being particularly curious and diligent in their enquiries into nature [z]. Beſides thoſe we have already mentioned, who entertained this opinion of the mundane revolutions, the Druids alſo taught the alter- and of the nate diſſolution of the world by water and fire, and its ſuc- Druids.
ceſſive renovation [a].

THE Mages, among the antient Perſians, did alſo ac- The opinion knowledge the world to have been created by GOD, as of the Per-their ſucceſſors muſt certainly do at this day [b]; but being at ſian Magi.
a loſs otherwiſe to account for the original of evil, they held two principles, a good dæmon, or God, and an evil one [c]; the firſt the author of all good, and the other of all evil; the former they ſuppoſed to be repreſented by light, and the latter by darkneſs, as their trueſt ſymbols; and that of the compoſition of thoſe two, all things in the world are made. The good principle, or GOD, they named Yezad, or Yezdân, and Ormozd, or Hormizda, which the Greeks wrote Oromazes; and the evil dæmon they called Ahârîman, or Ahrîman, and the Greeks Arimanius [d]. Intending in the proper place to give a more particular detail of the antient religion of the Magi, and their ſeveral tenets, true or ſuppoſed, we ſhall only obſerve here, that though one ſect of them held, as the Manichæans, and ſome other heretics did, both theſe principles to have been from all eternity, yet they are reputed heterodox; the original doctrine being, that the good principle or GOD only was eternal, and the other created: which appears not only from the unanimous teſtimony of the eaſtern writers, but from what genuine remains we have of Zoroaſtres in the Greek, particularly the following deſcription of the ſupreme Deity, taken from the very words of Zoroaſtres himſelf; GOD, ſays he, has the head of a hawk (which muſt be a ſymbolical expreſſion), and is the firſt of all things, incorruptible, eternal, unmade, without parts, unlike any other being, the promoter of all good, impartial, the beſt of the good, the moſt prudent of the prudent; he is the father of equity and juſtice, ſelf-inſtructed, natural, perfect, and wiſe, and the ſole inventor of what is holy in nature [e]. And indeed that the evil dæmon was not believed to be ſelf-exiſtent, appears from what Plutarch himſelf, though he ſo confidently affirms the contrary, ſays of his future deſtruction, it being impoſſible, that what is uncreated ſhould ever be deſtroyed [f].

[x] Anonym. apud SUID. in voce Tyrrheni. [y] PLUTARCH. in Sylla, p. 456. [z] DIODOR. SIC. l. 5. p. 316. [a] STRABO, lib. 4. [b] See LORD's account of the religion of the Perſees, p. 5.

THAT writer gives the following account of the magian traditions in relation to their gods, and the introduction of evil into the world, viz. That Oromazes conſiſted of moſt pure light, and Arimanius of darkneſs; and that they were at war with each other: that Oromazes created ſix gods; the firſt the author of benevolence, the ſecond of truth,

[c] DIOG. LAERT. in Procem. p. 6. [d] Vid. HYDE, de Relig. veter. Perſar. cap. 9. [e] ZOROASTRES, in ſacra collectione rituum Perſ. apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. cap. 10. pag. 42. OSTANES the Mage alſo wrote in the ſame manner of the Deity, ibid. [f] Vid. CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 222.

the

the third of juſtice, the others of wiſdom, riches, and the pleaſure which attends good actions; and that Arimanius made as many; who were the authors of the oppoſite evils, or vices: that then Oromazes, triplicating himſelf, removed as far from the ſun, as the ſun is from the earth, and adorned the heaven with ſtars, appointing the dog-ſtar for their guardian and leader: that he alſo created twenty four other gods, and incloſed them in an egg; but Arimanius having alſo made an equal number, theſe laſt perforated the egg, by which means evil and good became mixed together. However, the fatal time will come, when Arimanius, the introducer of plagues and famine, muſt be of neceſſity utterly deſtroyed by the former, and annihilated; then the earth being made plain and even, mankind ſhall live in a happy ſtate, in the ſame manner, in the ſame political ſociety, and uſing one and the ſame language. Theopompus writes, that, according to the Magians, the ſaid two gods, during the ſpace of three thouſand years, alternately conquer, and are conquered; that for other three thouſand years, they will wage mutual war, fight, and deſtroy the works of each other, till at laſt Hades (or the evil ſpirit) ſhall periſh, and men become perfectly happy, their bodies needing no food, nor caſting any ſhadow: that GOD, who contrives this ſcene of things, reſts and repoſes himſelf for a certain ſeaſon, which is not long to him, but like the intermiſſion of ſleep to men [g].

A tradition of the modern Perſians.

THE modern Perſians have a peculiar tradition, which they pretend to have received from Zoroaſtres, that GOD created the world, not in ſix natural days, but in ſix times, or ſpaces of different length, called in their tongue Gâhanbârha, and making in all three hundred and ſixty five days, or a year complete: as to the ſeveral names of which, their order, number of days, and the ſeveral parts of the creation performed therein reſpectively, all authors agree; though they differ as to the particular part of the year from which they begin. Their names and order are as follow:

THE firſt time is called Mîd-yûzeram, and contains the ſpace of fifty five days; in which the heavens were created.

THE ſecond is Mîd-yûſham, or Mîd-yûſhaham, of ſixty days; in this the waters were created [h].

[g] PLUTARCH. de Iſide & Oſiride, p. 369. [h] Mr. LORD, in his account of the religion of the Perſees, p. 6, and 41, makes the work of this ſecond ſpace to be the creation of hell.

THE third, Pîtîſhahîm, or Pîtiſhahim-gáh, conſiſts of ſeventy five days; wherein the earth was created.

THE fourth is Iyâſeram, or Iyâſhebram, of thirty days; in which the trees and plants were created.

The fifth is Midiyârîm, containing eighty days; in which ſpace the animals were created.

THE ſixth, Hameſpitamidim, was that wherein man was created, being ſeventy five days [i].

The opinion of the old Brachmans, and modern Bramins.

THE old Indian philoſophers, called by the Greeks Brachmanes, held, that the world was generated or made, and alſo periſhable, being ſubject to ſucceſſive diſſolutions and renovations: that the principles of all things were different, but the formation of the world commenced from water [k]; and that the cauſe of GOD's making all things was his eſſential goodneſs [l]. And theſe are alſo the ſentiments of the modern Bramins, their ſucceſſors: but the particulars of their doctrines are related, by different authors, with a variety not eaſy to reconcile; the occaſion of which has been partly the reſervedneſs of the Bramins, who are extremely ſhy of converſing with ſtrangers, or making them the leaſt diſcoveries, but more the relators want of ſkill in their language.

THEIR tradition, as delivered by one writer [m], is, that the great GOD being alone, and intending to manifeſt his goodneſs and power, conſulted with himſelf about the creation of the univerſe, and, as the ground-work of this mighty frame, made four elements, which were at firſt confuſedly mingled together, but the Almighty ſeparated them in the following manner. Firſt, by ſome great cane, or like inſtrument, he blew upon the waters, which aroſe into a bubble of a round form, like an egg, which ſpreading itſelf farther and farther, made the clear and tranſparent firmament, that incompaſſes the world. After this of the remaining water, and its ſediment, GOD made a round ball, which he called the lower world; the ſolid part whereof became the earth, and the more fluid the ſea, both making one globe, which, by a great noiſe or humming ſound, he placed in the midſt of the firmament. Then he created the ſun and moon in the firmament, to diſtinguiſh times and ſeaſons. And thus the elements became ſeparated, and aſſigned to their proper places, and began to perform their offices, the air filling up all interſtices, the fire nouriſhing by its heat, and the earth and ſea bringing forth the living creatures proper to each. And to theſe GOD imparted a ſeminal virtue, that they might be fruitful; and thus was the world created.

[i] HYDE, Hiſt. Rel. veter. Perſar. p. 164, &c. [k] MEGASTHENES, apud Strab. l. 15. p. 713. [l] Vid. PHILOST°. in vita Apollonii, p. 142. [m] LORD's Diſcovery of the Banian Religion, extracted from their ſacred book called Shaſter.

by

GOD having thus made the world, he then created man, as a creature more worthy than the reſt; whom the earth, at GOD's command, produced from its bowels, his head firſt appearing, and afterwards the other parts of his body, into which GOD infuſed life, and afterwards made him a companion, which was a woman, reſembling him more in mind and diſpoſition than outward ſhape. The firſt man's name was Pourous, and the woman's Parcoutee; whoſe deſcendants being, for their wickedneſs, deſtroyed by a deluge, GOD afterwards created three perſons of greater perfection, called Bremaw, Vyſtney, and Ruddery, to each of whom he gave a different office and power; to the firſt, that of creating or producing men or other animals; to the ſecond, that of preſerving and feeding them; and to the laſt, that of deſtroying them; which charges they ſeverally executed, in the manner that ſhall be related in a more proper place.

ANOTHER [n] tells us, that the Bramins acknowledge one ſole and ſupreme GOD, but are not perfectly agreed which of their gods he is; one ſect affirming him to be Wiſtnou, another, Eſwara; and a third holding Wiſtnou and Eſwara to be one and the ſame: that they all teach, however, that his firſt and moſt antient production was a ſecondary god, named Bramma, whom the ſupreme GOD formed out of a flower, which floated on the great deep, before the creation of the world; and that GOD afterwards, on account of Bramma's virtue, gratitude, and fidelity, gave him power to create the univerſe.

BUT the proteſtant miſſionaries lately ſent to the coaſt of Coromandel, have given accounts ſomewhat different from the preceding, and which yet may, perhaps, deſerve more regard, as written by men who were not unacquainted with the Malabarian tongue. In one of their letters it is ſaid, that the Malabarians (who are one of thoſe nations which follow the religion of the Bramins) own but one divine Being the ſpring and original ſource of all other gods and things, called by them Iſparetta, which, in their language, imports as much as a Deity. This Iſparetta, they ſay, before any thing was created, transformed himſelf into an egg; out of which the whole ſyſtem of heaven and earth, and all things contained therein, were afterwards produced. From this divinity, as their tradition runs, did originally ſpring ſomething which they call Kiwelinga, and which they worſhip in their temples as a god. From this Kiwelinga, three other great gods took their riſe; Bramma, Wiſhtnum, and Iſpara. Bramma is ſaid to create and make all things; Wiſhtnum, to rule over things created; and Iſpara, to deſtroy them again °.

[n] ABR. ROGER. of the Religion of the Bramins, (ſaid to be taken from one of the ſacred Books called Vedam) Part 1. c. 3. and Part 2. c. 1.

In another letter we are told, the ſupreme Being is called Barbara Waſtu, who, as the Indians believe, does not concern himſelf immediately about things of ſmall moment; but having created ſome other great gods, as his vicegerents, he by them moves and influences the world, and all creatures contained therein. Theſe gods have again their ſubordinate gods, who have their particular ſtations and government of things aſſigned them. The theogony, or gradual production of which gods is deſcribed in the following ſeries. 1. The Being of all beings, or the ſupreme God, created eternity. 2. Eternity brought forth Tiſhiwen. 3. By this Tiſhiwen the goddeſs Tſhaddy was created. 4. The goddeſs Tſhaddy produced Putadi, or the elementary and ſenſitive world. 5. By Putadi a ſound or ringing was generated. 6. The ſound's off-ſpring was nature. 7. Nature afterwards begot the great god Tſhatatſhiwen. 8. Which laſt again produced another great god called Mageſhurn. 9. From Mageſhurn ſprang Ruddiren or Iſpuren. 10. From Ruddiren the great god Wiſhtnum. 11. This laſt created Bruma. 12. Bruma was the productive principle of the ſoul. 13. The ſoul at length created the heaven, or that vaſt expanſion between heaven and earth, which makes up the fifth element, according to their philoſophy, or rather the receptacle of the other four elements. 14. The heaven begat the air. 15. The air begat the fire. 16. The fire begat the water. 17. And the water the earth. Beſides a tedious genealogy of other gods and prophets, carried to a great length. They acknowledge their inferior gods to be ſubject to various changes, as well as the creatures themſelves: and that each of them has his fixed term of life and government allotted them: after the expiration of all which determined times, every thing ſhall return to the Being of all beings, and there ſhall follow a new creation. As to the creation of man, they ſay, that ſixty thouſand men were created at firſt, but that half of them turned devils ſoon after, and the other half remained men;

° Propagation of the goſpel in the Eaſt, Part 1. Letter 3.

both

both of them being, in proceſs of time, multiplied to infinite numbers [p].

The opinion of ſome among the Chineſe,

THOUGH the Chineſe have, for ſome time paſt, been generally infected with the impious opinions which have been taken notice of, it is however certain, that before idolatry prevailed in China, they acknowledged one GOD, or ſupreme, eternal, omnipotent ſpirit, the lord of heaven and earth, and the governor and director of all things, whom they worſhipped under the name of Shang ti. But this opinion now obtains with very few, and thoſe of the better ſort [q]. Theſe hold, that a chaos was the beginning of things, from which GOD produced and formed whatſoever is material in the univerſe. But this they diſtinguiſh into two principles, which they call Yn and Yang; Yn ſignifies hidden or imperfect; Yang revealed or perfect; which two principles by combination produce four images or ſigns, which ſeem to repreſent the four elements; whence proceed eight forms or ſymbols; and theſe repreſent certain general things, whereon the generation and corruption of all things depend, being the heaven, the earth, thunder, mountains, fire, clouds, waters, and wind; which again mutually combined, produce ſixty-four ſymbols, compleating, as it were, the number of the univerſe; concerning which they have much myſterious learning. They ſay the heaven was firſt perfected, then the earth, after which genii or ſpirits were produced, and then mankind; and that the firſt man, whom they call Puoncu, was generated from the chaos, as from an egg; the ſhell of which became the heaven, the white the air, and the yolk the earth: others ſay, he came out of a certain deſert, but that his original is unknown [r].

and Japaneſe;

THEY divide the period wherein the world was created, and will be deſtroyed, as they do their natural day, into twelve hours or times, conſiſting each of ten thouſand eight hundred years. The twelfth hour, or at midnight, the heaven was made; the earth, the firſt hour after midnight; and man, the ſecond. Their emperor Ya was created the ſixth hour, or at noon; and the age wherein we now live is the ſeventh hour (though ſome count a much larger number of years from the beginning of the world). The ninth hour, they ſay, there will be a great diſorder and confuſion of all things, cruel wars, commotions in kingdoms, and public calamities, till all things return to the chaos whence they firſt proceeded [r].

[p] Ibid. Part 2. Letter 3. See alſo KIRCHER. China illuſt. p. 154. &c. [q] MARTINII Hiſt. Sinic. l. 1 p. 11. [r] Ibid. p. 13, 14.

THERE are alſo ſome, even among the Japaneſe, who acknowledge this truth of the creation of the world, and entertain a much more noble idea of their god Amida, than the generality of them do. For they ſay, he is inviſible, diſtinct from the nature of the elements, and exiſting before the creation of heaven and earth, without beginning or end; that by him all things were created, his eſſence paſſing through heaven and earth, and beyond them; being limited to no place, and governing and preſerving all things; that he is immoveable, incorporeal, without any viſible accident, whereby he may be ſeen by the bodily eyes; and this god they hold in great reverence, as the perpetual fountain of all good [s].

and of ſeveral American nations.

SEVERAL nations in America alſo entertained the ſame belief of a creation; of which ſome inſtances might be given: but their opinions containing little curious, as to the original of things, we have, to avoid prolixity, choſen to omit them.

A general reflection.

SOME of the accounts we have given above will, no doubt, be taken by the generality of readers, to be very abſurd and ridiculous: but before they paſs an abſolute judgment, they are deſired to conſider the imperfection of philoſophy in thoſe early times, and that the antients, as well Greeks as Barbarians, wrapped up and concealed their true doctrines, particularly thoſe concerning the origin of things, under the vails of ſymbols, ænigmas, and myſtical allegories [u]; for which reaſon many things in the preceding accounts, which may ſeem ſtrange and fabulous, will not, perhaps, deſerve to be treated with all the contempt they muſt needs meet with, from thoſe who underſtand them in the obvious and literal ſenſe: nor, perhaps, is it poſſible for us, at this diſtance of time, to give any tolerable explications of them; and therefore, omitting ſuch diſquiſitions, we have confined ourſelves to the bare hiſtorical narration.

The Moſaic account of the creation.

AND now we come to the only authentic and genuine hiſtory of the creation; which has been left us by Moſes, and carries with it all the marks of truth and probability, even though it be regarded only as a human compoſition,

[r] Ex Libro Sinico de Natura, ibid. p. 13. [s] LUD. FROES. apud Kircher. Chin. illuſtr. p 142. [u] Vid. PHORNUT, de Nat Deor. c. ult. CLEM. ALEXANDR. Strom. 5. p. 556. & BURNET. Archæol. l. 1. p. 89. &c.

and

and ſeparate from divine authority: and it is to this purpoſe.

IN the beginning GOD created the heaven and the earth [x]. The earth, after its immediate creation, was for ſome time a promiſcuous dark, fluid, and unformed chaos, or maſs of matter [y], which GOD, in the ſpace of ſix days, diſpoſed and reduced into the preſent form of the world; his ſpirit moving, or brooding over the ſurface of the water, or fluid matter to influence and actuate the ſame.

THE firſt thing that appeared was light; the ſeparation of which from the darkneſs was the work of the firſt day [z].

THEN GOD made an expanſion [a] in the midſt of the waters, to divide the waters above from the waters below; which expanſion Moſes calls heaven: and this was the ſecond day's work [b].

ON the third day, GOD cauſed the earth to be drained, and the waters to be gathered together, chiefly into one great receptacle, or the ocean; whereupon the dry land appeared: after which the earth produced all ſorts of plants, herbs, and trees, bearing their ſeveral ſeeds and fruits, according to their various kinds [c].

THE fourth day GOD made the ſun and moon, and placed them in the heaven to illuminate the earth; to diſtinguiſh between day and night, and divide the ſeveral ſeaſons of the year; the ſtars were alſo made this day [d].

THE fifth day GOD created all the fiſhes, and inhabitants of the waters; and alſo the fowls of the air, which were likewiſe produced out of the water [e].

ON the ſixth day GOD made all the terreſtrial animals, the cattle, creeping things, and beaſts of the field. And laſt of all he created man, forming his body of the duſt of the earth, and animating him with a living ſoul [f]; and out of the man he made the woman, taking her out of his ſide, having firſt caſt him into a profound ſleep [g].

THIS is the ſubſtance of what Moſes has delivered concerning the creation of the world; which being ſhort, and rather ſuited to the capacities of the people he deſigned to inſtruct, than written for the ſatisfaction of a philoſophic [x] Geneſ. c. i. verſ 1. [y] Ib. verſ. 2. [z] Verſ 3, 4, 5. [a] This is the true ſignification of the Hebrew רקיע and not Firmament, which was taken from the Greek Interpreters. [b] Ibid. verſ. 6, &c. [c] Verſ 9, &c. [d] Verſ. 14, &c. [e] Verſ. 20, &c. [f] verſ. 26. [g] Cap. ii. verſ. 21, &c.

enquirer,

enquirer, has left room for various explications, and the ſetting up of ſeveral very different hypotheſes.

The Carteſian hypotheſis.

IT may be expected, we ſhould ſay ſomething of the hypotheſis of Mr. Des Cartes, though he has endeavoured rather to form a fine ſyſtem of his own, than to explain the Moſaical deſcription, and reconcile it with philoſophy. He agrees with Epicurus, in making matter and motion the principles of nature; ſuppoſing, however, the being of a GOD, who both created the matter, and impreſſed the firſt motion upon it; but then, after this motion once begun, and the wheels ſet a going, he leaves this vaſt machine to the laws of mechaniſm, which affect all things, both celeſtial and terreſtrial, without any farther aſſiſtance from the firſt impreſſor [h], after the following manner.

HE ſuppoſes, 1. That the matter of which the world is compoſed, being at firſt of one uniform nature, and infinitely diviſible, was actually divided into many particles of a moderate ſize, which had all ſuch a motion as is now found in the world. 2. That all theſe particles were not at firſt ſpherical, becauſe many ſuch little globes, joined together, will not fill up a continued ſpace; but that, of whatever figure they were at firſt, by their continual motion, and frequent occurſions againſt each other, their angles would be cut off, and they become ſpherical. 3. He aſſerts, that there is no ſpace left empty, and therefore, when theſe round particles, by being joined together, leave ſome intervals between them, he ſuppoſes, that there are other leſſer particles, ariſing from thoſe angles that were cut off, which, by the force and celerity of their motion, will be divided into innumerable ſtill leſs fragments, proper to fill up all the interſtices. 4. He ſuppoſes, that ſome of theſe fragments, taken from the angles of the ſpherical particles, will neceſſarily have very angular figures, and, upon that account, being not ſo fit for motion, will be apt to ſtick together, and transfer a great part of their motion to ſuch particles as are leſs, and conſequently move ſwifter. Theſe things being ſuppoſed, he proceeds to the formation of the world from his three elements, which conſiſt of the three ſorts of particles above-mentioned. The firſt element, which is the ſubtile matter cut off from the angles of the greater particles, is that of the ſun and fixed ſtars, and ſuſceptible of a much quicker motion than the other two: the ſecond element conſiſts of the ſpherical particles themſelves, of which the heavens were made: the third element conſiſts of thoſe angular particles which are leſs adapted to motion, motion, and thence proceeded the earth, planets, comets, and other appearances of nature [i].

[h] BAKER's Reflections on Learning, cap. 7.

HE ſuppoſes, that the ſolar ſyſtem is a vortex continually whirling round, whoſe matter (excepting the earth and planets) is very liquid and tranſparent, conſiſting altogether of the firſt and ſecond elements, and containing a greater quantity of the firſt, than is ſufficient to fill up the ſpaces between the particles of the ſecond. And ſince all bodies which move circularly endeavour to recede from the centre of their motion, and the more thick and ſolid parts, ſuch as the particles of the ſecond element, are obliged to fly off with a greater force than the reſt; the particles of the ſecond element muſt neceſſarily recede from the common centre, and approach one another, as much as their figure and motion will permit. After their interſtices therefore are filled up, the remaining matter of the firſt element takes the place left by the ſecond; by which means a maſs, or heap of the matter of the firſt element, ſettles, and is formed in the midſt of the vortex, which maſs we call the ſun [k]. Every one of the fixed ſtars he ſuppoſes likewiſe to be a ſun, and the centre of a vortex; and that the earth was originally ſuch a ſtar, whoſe vortex was adjoining to that of the ſun; but by degrees it was covered over, or incruſted with ſpots, ariſing on its ſurface, like the ſcum on a boiling pot, which ſtill increaſing, and growing thicker and thicker, the ſtar loſing its light and activity, and, conſequently, the motion of the celeſtial vortex about it growing more weak, languid, and unable to reſiſt the vigorous incroachments of the neighbouring vortex of the ſun; it was at laſt drawn in, and wholly abſorbed by it, and forced to comply with its motion, and make one in the choir of the ſun's ſatellites [l].

BUT this hypotheſis is liable to ſeveral objections, and ſome which abſolutely ruin it. The three elements of Des Cartes, and particularly the ſubtile matter of the firſt, have been ſhewn to be imaginary, and his vortices fictitious, and repugnant to the nature of things; his ſuppoſition of a plenum is alſo evidently falſe, not to mention the abſurdities which follow his making of matter and ſpace, or extenſion, to be the ſame [m]. However, we cannot but think the eſſay of Objections thereto.

[i] Vid. STILLINGFLEET, Orig. Sacræ. RAY on the Creation. CARTESII Princip. Philoſ. part 3. §. 52. ROHAULT. Phyſ. part 1. c. 21. [k] ROHAULT. ibid. par. 2. c. 25. [l] RAY's Phyſico-Theol. Diſcourſes, Diſc. 3. c. 5. ſect. 3. Vid. DES CARTES, Princip. Philoſ. part 4. §. 2. [m] Vid. NEWTON, Princip. l. 2. prop. 38, 40, 53, &c. Ejuſdem, Optic. p. 311, 342, &c. & Notas S. CLARKE ad ROHAULTI Phyſ. part 1. c. 8, & 12. & part 2. c. 25, &c.

that

that philoſopher, who endeavoured to account for the formation of the world, in a certain time, from a rude matter, by the ſole continuation of a motion once impreſſed, and reduced to a few ſimple and general laws; or of others, who have ſince attempted the ſame, with more applauſe, from the original properties of matter, with which it was endued at its creation, is ſo far from being criminal or injurious to GOD, as ſome have imagined, that it is rather giving a more ſublime idea of his infinite wiſdom.

WE cannot therefore excuſe ourſelves from repreſenting the theories of two very learned men of our age and nation; one of whom has excelled in the richneſs of his ſtile and fancy, and the other in the ſtrength of parts and contrivance.

The Theory of Dr. Burnet.

THE former of them, Dr. Burnet, omitting to ſpeak of the original of the univerſe, or even of the ſolar ſyſtem, as made long before the Moſaic creation [n], confines himſelf to the formation of the earth only, which he ſuppoſes to be done from a chaos, or confuſed maſs, conſiſting of the principles of all terreſtrial bodies, in this manner. He ſuppoſes, that the firſt change that would happen would be, that the heavieſt and groſſeſt parts would ſink downwards towards the middle of the maſs, (for there he ſuppoſes the centre of its gravity) and being more and more compreſſed, would harden by degrees, and conſtitute the interior parts of the earth. That the reſt of the maſs, which ſwam above, would alſo be divided, by the ſame principle of gravity, into two orders of bodies, the one liquid like water, the other volatile like air: for the more fine and active parts, diſentangling themſelves by degrees from the reſt, would mount above them; and, having motion enough to keep them upon the wing, would play in thoſe open places, where they conſtitute that body we call air: that the other parts, being groſſer than theſe, and having a more languid motion, could not fly up ſeparate from one another, but ſettled in a maſs together under the air, upon the body of the earth, compoſing not only water, ſtrictly ſo called, but the whole maſs of liquid bodies belonging to the earth. That there being two chief kinds of terreſtrial liquors, thoſe that are oily and light, and thoſe that are lean and more earthy, like common water, which naturally ſeparate from one another when they come to ſettle, the more oily and light part of this maſs would conſequently get above the other, and ſwim upon it. He proceeds to ſup-

[n] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 2. c. 8.

poſe,

poſe, that the air was, as yet, thick, groſs, and dark, there being abundance of terreſtrial particles ſwimming in it, after the groſſeſt were ſunk down; which by their weight made their way more ſpeedily: that the leſſer and lighter, which remained, would ſink too, but more ſlowly, and in a longer time; ſo as in their deſcent they would meet with that oily liquor upon the face of the deep, or upon the watery maſs, which would entangle, and ſtop them from paſſing any farther; whereupon, mixing there with that unctuous ſubſtance, they compoſed a certain ſlime, or fat, ſoft, and light earth, ſpread upon the face of the waters. That this thin and tender orb of earth increaſed ſtill more and more, as the little earthy parts, that were detained in the air, could make their way to it, ſome having a long journey from the upper regions, and others, being very light, would float up and down a long while, before they could diſengage themſelves and deſcend: but at length being all got thither, and mingling more and more with that oily liquor, they ſucked it all up, and were wholly incorporate together, and ſo began to grow more ſtiff and firm, making both but one ſubſtance, which was the firſt concretion, or firm and conſiſtent ſubſtance that roſe upon the face of the chaos, and became at laſt an habitable earth, ſuch as nature deſigned it. And ſuch a body as this, he doubts not, would anſwer all the purpoſes of a riſing world; for what can be a more proper ſeminary for plants and animals, than a ſoil of this temper and compoſition? a finer and lighter ſort of earth, mixed with a benign juice, eaſy and obedient to the action of the ſun, or what other cauſes were employed by the author of nature, for the production of things in the new made earth, and perfectly anſwering the antient deſcriptions of the primigenial ſoil, or ſlime.

The form of this firſt earth, both external and internal, is eaſily conceived from the manner of its formation. As to the external form, it would be ſmooth, regular, and uniform, without mountains and without a ſea. The internal form would conſiſt of ſeveral regions involving one another, like orbs about the ſame centre, or the ſeveral elements caſt circularly about each other; the water being entirely contained under the upper cruſt of the earth, which formed a wonderful vault, hanging above the deep, ſuſtained by nothing, but its own meaſures and manner of conſtruction [o].

[o] BURNET's Theory of the earth, l. 1. c. 5. & Archæo'. L. 2. c. 3.

To

To confirm ſo new and ſurpriſing a repreſentation of the form of the firſt earth, and to prove it muſt have been different from the preſent, he endeavours to ſhew, that if the earth had been always in the form it now bears, it would not have been capable of a deluge, which could not have been effected without ſuch an infinite maſs of water, as could neither be brought upon the earth, nor afterwards any way removed from it[p]: and that the chaos, as a fluid body, would naturally and neceſſarily ſettle and caſt itſelf into a ſmooth ſurface, every where equidiſtant from its centre, and not into a ſurface broken into ſo many irregularities as our earth is; nor could it poſſibly imitate the cavities, dens, and broken holes within it[q]. And theſe reaſons he backs by authority of ſcripture, which plainly intimates a difference between the form, or conſtitution of the old world and of the preſent, by reaſon of which difference, that was ſubject to periſh by a deluge, as this is ſubject to periſh by a conflagration[r]; beſides ſeveral paſſages, which ſeem to deſcribe the ſtructure of the antediluvian earth, as founded and eſtabliſhed on the waters[s], and ſet as an orb over the face of the deep[t]; conformably to which, on the renovation, or reſtitution of nature to its primœval ſtate, the new earth will appear without a ſea[u]. To which he adds the teſtimony of antient tradition, that the world was oviform, which was true of that original earth, not only in reſpect to its outward figure, but alſo to the inward compoſition of it; the central parts being repreſented by the yolk of the egg, the exterior region of the earth by the ſhell, and the abyſs of water by the white that lies under the ſhell[x]. The manner wherein he ſuppoſes this earth was ſupplied with water, will be taken notice of, when we come to conſider more particularly the ſtate of the antediluvian earth.

Objections thereto.

SEVERAL objections have been made to the philoſophy of this gentleman's hypotheſis, as that his laws of gravitation ruin the whole contrivance; becauſe if every thing ſubſided according to its ſpecific gravity, the earth being heavier than the water, muſt neceſſarily place itſelf nearer the centre, and ſo leave the waters to cover the face of the whole orb: that his fat, or oily liquid, to catch the terrene particles as they deſcended, is but a weak expedient, becauſe it is impoſſible, that oil, or any other liquor, ſhould ſuſtain

[p] Idem, Theory, l. 1. c. 2. [q] Ibid. c. 4. [r] 2 Pet. iii. 5, 6, 7. [s] Pſal. xxiv. 2. & cxxxvi. 6. [t] Prov. viii. 27. [u] Revel. xxi. 1. [x] BURNET, Theor. l. 1. cap. 5. & Tellur. Theor. ſacr. l. 2. c. 10.

ſuch

ſuch an immenſe heavy orb: that he has, without any reaſon, deprived the old world of the benefit and advantages of a ſea, mountains, and minerals[y]: but the great misfortune is, that ſo coherent and ſurpriſing a ſcheme does not in ſeveral particulars accord with the letter of the ſcripture, with which he has in many places taken great liberty, ſuppoſing that the ſacred books were not always to be ſo literally and naturally underſtood, as was generally believed hitherto. For conſidering the mean capacities of the Jews, which were not capable of ſuch points of philoſophic truths; conſidering the moſt antient ways of conveying (or rather concealing) ſublime theorems by parables, fables, and hieroglyphics; conſidering the ſcripture ſtile in ſome other caſes, very different from the preſent plain way of diſcourſe; conſidering the main end of thoſe writings, the benefit of the moral world, ſeemed not to require a ſtrict adherence to truth, in every circumſtance relating to the natural; and conſidering laſtly, that all ages had endeavoured in vain to clear theſe points, according to the ſtrictneſs of the moſt obvious ſenſe, and that the greater improvements in philoſophy ſeemed only to render them ſtill more unaccountable; all theſe conſiderations induced him to ſuppoſe, that the holy writers only ſecured the fundamental and general verities; involving the reſt under, and explaining the whole by a way of ſpeaking, which was myſtical and mythological, rather popular than true; and fitted more to the needs of men than the reality of things[z].

THE other theoriſt, Mr. Whiſton, not only ſhews a greater regard to ſcripture, and has avoided many difficulties, that were chargeable on the former; but proceeds on more philoſophical principles: He firſt lays down this propoſition, that the Moſaic creation is not a nice and philoſophical account of the origin of all things, but an hiſtorical and true repreſentation of the formation of our ſingle earth, out of a confuſed chaos, and of the ſucceſſive and viſible changes thereof each day, till it became the habitation of mankind[a]: which he proves from the firſt words of Moſes, In the beginning GOD created the heaven and the earth, which plainly imply, that the creation of the univerſe out of nothing, which we uſually ſtile creation, was precedaneous to the ſix days work; the hiſtorian immediately deſcending thence to the chaos of our earth, to which he afterwards

Mr. Whiſton's Theory.

[y] Vid. KEILL's Examinat. of Dr. Burnet's Theory. [z] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 2. c. 8. [a] WHISTON's new Theory of the Earth. Diſc. of the Moſaic creation, p. 3.

confines

confines himſelf: mentioning, indeed, the making of the ſun, and other celeſtial bodies, to accommodate his narrative to vulgar apprehenſion, and make it complete; but chiefly to ſecure the Jews from the worſhip of the hoſt of heaven [b]. He therefore ſuppoſes, that the ſun, moon, and ſtars were created before, and only made viſible and conſpicuous to the earth on the fourth day [c]: that the antient chaos, the origin of the earth, was the atmoſphere of a comet [d], which is no other than a planet unformed, or in its primœval ſtate, placed in a very excentrical orbit; to ſupport which propoſition he endeavours to ſhew, that the atmoſphere of a comet has thoſe ſeveral properties which are recorded of the antient chaos; that it has ſuch peculiar properties beſides, as lay a rational foundation for ſome of thoſe phænomena of our earth, which can ſcarce otherwiſe be philoſophically explained, and that no other body, or maſs of bodies, now known, or ever heard of in the world, can ſtand in competition, or pretend to the ſame character. He proceeds to ſuppoſe, that the ſix days of the creation were equal to ſix years; a day and a year being one and the ſame thing [e] before the fall of man, when the diurnal rotation of the earth about its axis, as he thinks, firſt began [f]: which ſuppoſition agrees with the letter of Moſes, and the ſtile of ſcripture elſewhere, wherein a day often denotes a year; and allows a convenient ſpace for the works of creation, which appear to have been leiſurely, regular, and gradual, without any precipitancy, or acceleration, by a miraculous hand on every occaſion; not to mention other arguments, drawn from the peculiar characters of the ſtate of nature before the fall, which will be obſerved hereafter.

ON theſe foundations, Mr. Whiſton proceeds to account for the formation of the earth in this manner: That ſuch formation was not a mere reſult from any neceſſary laws of mechaniſm, independently on the divine power; but the proper effect of the influence of interpoſition, and all along under the peculiar care of GOD, who not only created the matter of which the univerſe, and particularly the earth, was to conſiſt, out of a non-exiſtent ſtate, and endued it with its ſeveral properties and powers, but interpoſed more particularly

[b] Ibid. p. 4, &c. [c] Ibid. p. 24, &c. [d] WHISTON's Theory, B. II. p. 73 [e] EMPEDOCLES taught, that when mankind ſprang originally from the earth, the length of the day, by reaſon of the ſlowneſs of the ſun's motion, was equal to ten of our preſent months. PLUT. de Placitis Philoſ. l. 5. c. 18. a ſurpriſing teſtimony to this purpoſe. [f] WHISTON's Theory, B. II. p. 85, &c.

particularly in the formation of the earth, by changing the courſe and orbit of the chaos into that of a planet, by immediately forming the ſeeds of all animals and vegetables; by ordering every diſtinct day's work to be compleated in its proper period, that every thing ſhould follow in its own order and place; and principally in the creation of our firſt parents[g]. That at the time immediately preceding the ſix days creation, the face of the abyſs, or ſuperior regions of the chaos, were involved in a thick darkneſs; agreeably to the nature of a comet, which is repreſented as containing a central, ſolid, hot body, of many hundred, or thouſand miles in diameter, and beſides that, a vaſtly large, fluid, heterogeneous maſs, or congeries of bodies, in a very rare, ſeparate, and expanded condition, whoſe diameter was ten or eleven times as long as that of the central ſolid, which is the atmoſphere or chaos itſelf. But on the change of the comet's orbit from a very excentrical, to a moderately elliptical one, the commencing of the Moſaic creation, and the influence of the divine ſpirit, all things would begin to take their own places, and each ſpecies of bodies rank themſelves according to the law of ſpecific gravity. By which method the maſs of denſe fluids, which compoſed one part of the entire chaos, being heavier than the maſſes of earth, and water, and air, would ſink downwards with the greateſt velocity, and elevate thoſe maſſes encloſed among them upwards, which muſt diſtinguiſh the chaos into two very different and diſtinct regions; the lower and larger whereof would be a collection of denſe and heavy fluids, or a vaſt abyſs, immediately encompaſſing the central ſolid; the higher and leſſer would be a collection of earthy, watery, and airy parts confuſedly mixed, and encompaſſing the ſaid abyſs. And this he takes to be the ſtate of darkneſs; for the crowding together of all thoſe opake corpuſcles, which before roved about the immenſe regions of the atmoſphere, muſt, by conſequence, exclude the rays of the ſun much more than before[h].

THINGS being in this ſtate, the viſible part of the firſt day's work was the production of light, or its ſucceſſive appearance to all the parts of the earth; with the conſequent diſtinction of darkneſs and light, night and day, upon the face of it. And this was effected by the ſeparation of the upper and elementary chaos of earthy, watery, and airy corpuſcles, into two ſomewhat different regions; the one a ſolid orb of earth, with conſiderable quantities of water in its pores; the other an atmoſphere in a peculiar ſenſe, or maſs of the lighteſt earthy, with the reſt of the watery and airy particles, ſtill ſomewhat confuſedly mixed together. So that on this firſt day, or year of the creation, the earthy, or denſer parts, would take their places loweſt on the ſurface of the great abyſs, would ſettle in part into the ſame, and compoſe an orb of earth; and in its interſtices, and little cavities, all ſuch watery particles as were already in this region, or deſcended upon it before its conſolidation, would be encloſed; and that as far above the ſurface of the abyſs, as their quantity would enable them to reach. On this firſt day alſo, the upper regions of the chaos, now, in ſome meaſure, freed from thoſe earthy and opake maſſes, which before excluded the ſame, and cauſed the above-mentioned thick darkneſs, would, in ſome degree, admit the rays of the ſun. Now therefore that glorious emanation, light, would begin to appear on the face of the earth; and, by the annual motion, ſucceſſively illuminate the ſeveral parts of it, and conſequently occaſion the viciſſitude of night and day[1].

[g] Ibid. Book IV. p. 292, &c.

[h] Ibid. p. 307, &c.

THE viſible part of the ſecond day's work was the elevation of the air, with all its contained vapours; the ſpreading of it for an expanſum above the earth; the diſtinction thence ariſing of ſuperior and inferior waters; the former conſiſting of thoſe vapours raiſed and ſuſtained by the air; the latter of ſuch as either were encloſed in the pores, interſtices, and bowels of the earth, or lay upon the ſurface thereof. The heat of the ſun, at the concluſion of the former day, beginning conſiderably to penetrate the ſuperior regions of the chaos, and the lower earthy ſtrata continuing to ſettle ſomewhat cloſer together, the watery parts would ſubſide, and where they could get entrance, ſaturate their inward pores and vacuities, and the atmoſphere would free itſelf more and more from the heavieſt and moſt opake corpuſcles, and thereby become much more tenuous and clear than before. Whereupon, by the time the night, or firſt part of this ſecond day was over, and the ſun aroſe, the light and heat of that luminary would more freely and deeply penetrate the atmoſphere, and become very ſenſible in theſe upper or airy regions; and conſequently vaſt quantities of vapours would be elevated and ſuſtained there, and ſo increaſe the quantities which were there already; while in the mean time all the earthy corpuſcles, incapable of rarefaction, and with them all ſuch watery particles, as were ſo near the earth that the ſun's power could not ſufficiently reach them, were ſtill ſinking downwards, and the former increaſing the craſſitude and bulk of the ſolid earth, and the latter, if the earth was too ſolid to admit them, as by this time it would probably be, flowing down apace, and covering all its ſurface with water. So that the expanſum, or firmament, which was this day ſpread out above the earth, was plainly the air; the ſuperior waters, all thoſe freſh ones, which, in the form of vapour, a nine or ten months heat of the ſun, with the aſſiſtance of the central heat, could elevate, and the air ſuſtain, beſides thoſe vaſt quantities of ſalt ones, which had never yet left thoſe regions: the inferior waters were thoſe which were not elevated, but remained below in the bowels, or on the ſurface of the earth [k]

[1] Ibid. p. 311.

the

THE viſible parts of the third day's work were two; the former, the collection of the inferior waters, of ſuch as were now under the heaven, into the ſeas, with the conſequent appearance of the dry land; the latter, the production of vegetables out of that ground ſo lately become dry. In order to apprehend which, it muſt be conſidered, that the orb of the earth had been ſettling and fixing itſelf on the ſurface of the abyſs, from the very beginning of the creation; and was by the coheſion of its parts grown ſolid, ſome time before all the lighter and remoter earthy parts were deſcended upon it, ſuppoſe by the end of the firſt day: by which means, and by reaſon of the different denſity and ſpecific gravity of its columns, it was ſettled into the abyſs in different degrees, and thereby became of an unequal ſurface, diſtinguiſhed into mountains, plains, and vallies; which things being ſuppoſed, at the concluſion of the preceding day, the air being crowded with vapours to a prodigious degree, in the night, or former part of this third day, the ſaid vapours muſt needs deſcend on the earth in vaſt quantities, leaving the air by degrees pretty free, and becoming of celeſtial, terreſtrial waters: theſe waters being deſcended, by reaſon of the inequality of the earth's ſurface, and its ſolidity, muſt in ſome time have run down from the higher parts, by the declivities and hollows, into the loweſt vallies, and moſt depreſſed regions of all, and there compoſed the ſeas and lakes; ſo that in the morning, the entire face of the globe, which was before covered with the deſcending waters, muſt be diſtinguiſhed into overflowed vallies, and extant continents. The dry land being now diſtinguiſhed from the ſeas, and juſt become moiſt and juicy, like the primitive ſlime; on the ſun riſing, it was of all other the moſt fit ſeaſon for the germination of the ſeeds of vegetables, and the growth of trees, herbs, and plants; for which purpoſe, nine or ten months continual preſence of the ſun was a time very proper and natural [l].

[k] Ibid. p. 317, &c.

THE fourth day's work was the placing of the heavenly bodies, ſun, moon, and ſtars, in the expanſum, or firmament; that is, the rendring of them viſible and conſpicuous on the face of the earth: together with their ſeveral aſſignations to their reſpective offices there. For though the light of the ſun, penetrated the atmoſphere, in ſome ſort the firſt day, and in the ſucceeding ones had very conſiderable influence upon it, yet it is by no means to be ſuppoſed, that his body was viſible all that while; the air, even at this day, being not at all times ſo clear, as to render it diſcernible by us, though we are at the ſame time ſufficiently ſenſible of his force and influence in the conſtant productions of nature. But on the coming on of this fourth day, and the ſun's abode below the horizon for two or three months, thoſe vapours which were raiſed the day before, muſt fall downwards, and ſo, before the approach of the morning, leave the air in the greateſt clearneſs and purity imaginable, and permit the moon firſt, and then the ſun, moſt plainly to appear, and be conſpicuous to the earth. This fourth day therefore is the time, when both theſe heavenly bodies, though in being before, yet ſo as to be wholly ſtrangers to a ſpectator on earth, were rendred viſible: the whole inanimate world, with its vegetable productions, being now complete, according to the tradition of the Chineſe [m] inhabiting Formoſa, and other iſlands, who hold, that the world, when firſt created, was without form, or ſhape; but, by one of their deities, was brought to its full perfection in four years [n].

THE production of the fiſh and fowl out of the waters, with the benediction beſtowed on them, in order to their propagation, was the work of the fifth day, which was a very proper time for their introduction. The terraqueous globe being now become habitable, both to the ſwimming and volatile animals; and the air clear, and ſo penetrable by that complete heat of the ſun, which was requiſite to the generation of ſuch creatures; thoſe ſeeds, or little bodies of fiſh and fowl, which were contained in the water, (or moiſt fruitful ſlime of kin to it) were now expoſed to the kindly warmth of the ſun, and the conſtant ſupply of a moſt gentle and equal heat from beneath; being neither diſturbed by any ſudden alteration of the air from winds, nor by the agitations of tides, which in thoſe ſmall ſeas, and in the abſence of the di-

[l] Ibid. p. 320, &c. [m] Atlas Chinenſ. part. 2. p. 46. [n] WHISTON's Theor. ubi ſup. p. 325.

urnal

urnal rotation were imperceptible and gradual: which ſeeds being invigorated with the divine benediction, became now prolific; and a numerous off-ſpring of the ſwimming and volatile kind aroſe, whereby the two fluid elements, air and water, became repleniſhed with thoſe firſt pairs, which were enabled to propagate their ſpecies [o].

THE ſixth day's work was the production of all the terreſtrial, or dry-land animals. The brute beaſts were produced out of the earth; after which the body of Adam was formed of the duſt of the ground; and by the breath of life, breathed into him in a peculiar manner, he became a living ſoul: and ſome time after, on the ſame day, he was caſt into a deep ſleep, and Eve was formed of a rib taken from his ſide. The earth being now grown more ſolid and dry, and the air fully clear and fit for reſpiration, and the other diſpoſition of external nature being ſubſervient, it was a proper ſeaſon for the generation of the land-animals, and the introduction of the nobleſt of them, man [p].

Objections to Mr. Whiſton's Theory.

THIS is the ſubſtance of the latter theory, wherein, among many ingenious and probable ſolutions, there are ſome ſuppoſitions, which have been thought too bold and precarious.

IT has been objected, that he is probably miſtaken as to the extent of the Moſaic creation; it being pretty certain, that the moon was formed at that time, or at leaſt placed in its orbit, and made to turn round the earth; for no comets have any ſecondary planets: ſo that ſomething more muſt be intended by Moſes, than the bare rendring the moon viſible; and the word made, being equally applied both to ſun and moon, it is ſuppoſed, it ought in both places to be taken in the ſame, that is, a literal ſenſe.

THE atmoſphere of a comet could not, it has been thought, have been the primitive chaos, being not an obſcure, but a bright pellucid fluid, which is a conſequence of the intenſe heat of the central ſolid; and becauſe the greateſt part of the bodies which compoſe the upper ſtratum of the earth, would have been vitrified on the comet's near approach to the ſun, and ſo very improper for the formation of the earth.

THAT the diurnal rotation of the earth did not commence till after the fall, ſo that till that time days and years were exactly the ſame, has been held a paradox; conſidering the prodigious cold, that muſt be occaſioned by the total abſence of the ſun for one half of the year, and the intenſe heat, that muſt enſue upon its continual ſhining upon it for the other; which immoderate degrees of heat and cold muſt be pernicious to the antediluvian plants and animals, unleſs their bodies were of a very different conſtitution from what they are now. Nor can there be any neceſſity to lengthen a day into a year, for the ſake of a gradual and regular formation of things, without precipitance, or acceleration, where an Almighty Agent is acknowledged to be concerned [q].

[o] Ibid. p. 328. [p] Ibid. p. 329, &c.

IT may not therefore be amiſs, laying all hypotheſes aſide, briefly to propoſe ſuch an explication of the coſmogony, as may be moſt agreeable both to reaſon and the letter of ſcripture.

The Moſaic creation explained.

AND firſt, it is conceived, that the Moſaic creation is neither to be extended to the whole univerſe, nor yet confined to the terreſtrial globe alone; the middle opinion, that it included the ſolar ſyſtem, and that only, ſeeming the moſt probable, from the near ſimilitude and relation the ſeveral planets in that ſyſtem bear to one another, and their having the ſame common centre and luminary; ſo that though the hiſtorian chiefly regards the earth in his whole narration, yet there is reaſon to preſume, that the other planets were formed in the ſame manner, and in the ſame time, as the earth, of ſo many particular chaotic maſſes.

MOSES, after the general aſſertion, that both heaven and earth were originally made[r] by GOD, and before he begins his account of their reduction into the preſent ſyſtem, informs us, that the earth, in particular, was at firſt in an unformed and deſart ſtate, when, as a thing preparatory to the work, the ſpirit of GOD moved upon the face of the waters; by which ſpirit ſome underſtand the third perſon in the bleſſed Trinity[s], others, that plaſtic nature[t], which was ſubſervient to him on this occaſion, or ſome other emanation of the divine power; which it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe moved the chaotic maſs, whoſe ſurface was covered with water, or other fluid matter, and impregnated it with ſeveral kinds of vital influence, preparing every part to receive the intended diſpoſition, order, and life.

[q] Vid. KEILL's Remarks on Mr. Whiſton's Theory. [r] The original word בראּ is allowed not neceſſarily to ſignify a creation, or production out of nothing: yet as the Hebrew tongue has no other word to expreſs ſuch a creation, it is moſt likely Moſes uſes it here in that ſenſe. [s] GROTIUS, &c. [t] Dr. CUDWORTH's Intell. Syſt. p. 148. Yet others by this ſpirit of GOD underſtand no more than a violent wind, which they ſuppoſe was ſent to dry up the waters. Chal. paraphraſe, DRUSIUS, &c.

THINGS

THINGS being in this ſtate, the confuſed ſtagnating parts of matter began to range themſelves in order; and the groſſer parts ſubſiding, the lighter and more tenuous mounted up, by which means the atmoſphere being in ſome degree cleared, the luminous rays of the ſun began to pierce it, and cauſed an imperfect and glimmering light, yet ſufficient partly to diſpel the before total darkneſs, and to diſtinguiſh day from night. And this account of the light, which appeared on the firſt day, is much more reaſonable than to ſuppoſe the ſubſtance of the ſun, much leſs the fixed ſtars were then extracted from the chaos [u]; becauſe more than ninety nine parts in an hundred of the matter of the univerſe, are fiery corpuſcles, and if they were included at firſt in the chaos, it could not poſſibly have been dark or caliginous. Nor is it probable, that even the terrene matter of the planets was taken from the Moſaic chaos, not only becauſe it is expreſly called the earth, but becauſe ſuch an imagination is directly overthrown by the now undoubted property of the univerſal gravitation of matter; not to mention the falſe ſuppoſition, which muſt in that caſe be made, of the earth's being the centre of the world [x]. To account for this day's light, before the ſun is ſaid to be made, there is no occaſion to recur to the ſuppoſition of its being either the divine Shechinah [y], or any more than a temporary light, occaſioned by the rapid motion communicated by GOD to a portion of matter [z].

THE ſecond day, the expanſe, or air, called by Moſes heaven, was perfected, being now freed from the groſs terrene particles which before crowded it, and made capable of ſupporting clouds and aqueous vapours, which were the ſuperior waters, as thoſe on the earth were the inferior [a]. By the waters above the firmament cannot be underſtood the planetary waters [b], for the reaſons given above; and the notion, the old chriſtian fathers had of ſuper-celeſtial waters, is perfectly groundleſs.

THE former part of the third day's work was to gather the waters, which before covered the face of the earth, into ſeas and lakes, that the dry land might appear. How this was effected is not eaſy to determine. That GOD himſelf ſhould raiſe the mountains, and hollow the channels of the ſea for this purpoſe, appears not a little indecent; for which reaſon ſome have ſuppoſed, the mountains might have been thrown up by the force of a ſubterraneous fire, or flatus, in the ſame manner as earthquakes are now cauſed [c]: but the more philoſophical opinion is, that they were occaſioned by the different denſities of the ſeveral columns of the earth, when its ſurface was firſt formed, ſome ſinking lower into the abyſs than others; for it is more than probable, that the mountainous columns are much hollower and lighter than the other, notwithſtanding the vulgar opinion to the contrary [d]. The latter part of this day's work was the production of vegetables, which were deſigned as food for the future animals. But how great ſoever we ſuppoſe the fœcundity of the primigenial earth to be, it is ſcarce to be imagined, that trees and plants could arrive at full growth, and bear their ſeveral fruits and ſeeds in ſo ſhort a ſpace as a day, without the aſſiſtance of a ſupernatural power: and as GOD is on all hands allowed to have formed the ſeeds of thoſe vegetables, it may not, perhaps, be wrong to attribute their ſudden maturation alſo to his interpoſition; though it be well known, how much vegetation may be helped and forwarded by art, even at this day, of which there have been ſome ſurpriſing inſtances, and much more might be expected from nature in that vigorous ſtate.

[u] Which is the opinion of Dr. NICHOLLS, and others. See his Conference with a Theiſt, Vol. I. Part 1. [x] Vid. WHISTON, of the Moſaic Creation, p. 35, &c. [y] The notion of ABRAVANEL. [z] Vid. SAURIN, Diſſert. p. 2. [a] GROTIUS, &c.
[b] This is Dr. NICHOLLS's interpretation, ubi ſupra.

ON the fourth day the two great lights, the ſun and the moon, are ſaid to have been made and placed in the heaven. It muſt not, however, be ſuppoſed they were then firſt created, or aſſigned to their reſpective orbs; for the ſun was not only in being from the beginning of the Moſaic creation, but had all along great influence on the earth, its light and heat gradually increaſing, and influencing the earth and its productions with greater power, as the air became from time to time more and more pure and defæcated; and the moon, as well as the other planets, kept pace with the earth in its formation; but only, that the bodies of thoſe luminaries, which had been hid from the earth till the fourth day, when the air was perfectly freed from the heterogeneous particles, and the vapours, which before obſcured it, did then firſt appear to the earth, and viſibly begin to perform their ſeveral offices. The ſtars alſo are for the ſame reaſon ſaid to be made on that day; tho' the planets, as we have ſaid, were forming before; and the fixed ſtars were no part of this creation [e].

AFTER

[c] RAY on the creation, and Biſhop PATRICK in his Commentaries [d] See WHISTON's Theory, Book II. p. 82. [e] Dr. NICHOLLS (ubi ſupr.) ſupports the opinion of the creation of other worlds, or Syſtems before ours, by a criticiſm on the Hebrew words אֵת

in

AFTER the formation of the inanimate world, Moſes proceeds to the formation of animals, and he begins with fiſhes and fowls, which were both produced, on the fifth day, out of the waters in great numbers [f]. And as the original of fiſh and volatiles was from the ſame element, ſo there is ſuppoſed to be ſome congruity in their nature, being both oviparous, and their motions of ſwimming and flying ſomething alike.

IN the former part of the ſixth and laſt day, the terreſtrial animals were produced out of the earth.

Of the formation of plants and animals.

THE manner of the original formation of plants and animals, in which the wiſdom of the creator principally appears, has never been accounted for by any philoſopher with an tolerable ſucceſs; matter and the laws of motion having nothing at all to do in theſe things, whatever they have in the inanimate part of the world. How ridiculous and groundleſs thoſe hypotheſes are, which make them to be produced from the earth, ſuppoſed ever ſo fruitful, by the influence and heat of the ſun, appears from the late diſcovery made in philoſophy, that there is no ſuch thing as equivocal generation of any the meaneſt animal, or plant; the ſun, and earth, and water, and all the powers of nature in conjunction, being able to do nothing at all, towards the producing of any thing endued with ſo much as even a vegetative life [g]. It muſt be therefore neceſſarily allowed, that GOD himſelf, or ſome agent impowered by him, actually formed both plants and animals, making uſe of the earth and water, as the matter only whereof he conſtituted their parts. But whether theſe firſt vegetative and ſenſitive creatures were created in their ſeeds only, (which contain the plants and animals themſelves in little) and diſperſed over the ſuperficial part of the land and

(in Geneſ. i. 16.) which ſignify together with; and thence concludes, that by Moſes's text the moon was to rule the night and, or together with the ſtars, which ſhine then only; the words he made being interpolated in our tranſlation. By the ſtars coming in ſo abruptly in this place, ſome have been ready to think, thoſe words were added ſince Moſes's time, or crept into the text from a marginal annotation, made to obviate an objection from idolaters, that the ſtars were not made.

[f] Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl, &c. Geneſ. i. 20. But afterwards it is ſaid, that GOD formed the fowls of the air out of the ground, Geneſ. ii. 19. The Jews reconcile this, by ſuppoſing, that they were formed out of both elements mixed, viz. out of ſoft ooze. But CALMET (in his commentary) ſays, the firſt paſſage may be rendred, and let the fowl fly, &c.

[g] Dr. CLARKE's Demonſtration of the being and attributes of GOD, p. 64.

water,

water, which had power given them to hatch and bring them forth; or whether they were created in their full ſtate of perfection, ſeems not eaſy to decide. It has been thought by ſome modern philoſophers, that GOD at firſt created only two of each ſpecies of animals, from which all the reſt proceeded by generation: to ſupport which opinion, they obſerve, that there was but one man and one woman created, and at the deluge but two of each kind (of unclean beaſts) were preſerved in the ark. But it ſeems more conſonant to ſcripture, that a great number of every kind were formed at firſt: we are aſſured, the aquatic creatures and fowls were brought forth abundantly; and plants, having no locomotive power, muſt neceſſarily have been created diſperſedly all the world over. There has been alſo a farther queſtion moved concerning the creation of animals, viz. whether all animals, that already have been, or hereafter ſhall be, were at firſt actually created by GOD? or whether he hath given to each kind of animals ſuch a power of generation, as to prepare matter, and produce new individuals in their own bodies? and it ſeems to be the moſt reaſonable opinion, that GOD did himſelf, at firſt, actually create all the individual animals that ever were, or ever ſhall be; and that there is no ſuch thing as any production of new ones. For what were that but a creation of ſuch individuals? and what did GOD at the firſt creation more than, if this be true, we ſee every day done; that is, produce a new animal out of matter, which itſelf prepares? all the difference is, that GOD does that in an inſtant, which the creature muſt take time to do. Beſides, the parent animal cannot be the agent, or efficient in the generation, or forming and nouriſhing of the fœtus, becauſe that is a work of art and reaſon, which brute creatures are not endued withal; nor indeed does man himſelf underſtand any thing of the proceſs of generation in himſelf. Again, it is moſt probable, if not certain, that moſt animals have in them from the beginning, the ſeeds, or eggs, of all the young they ſhall afterwards bring forth; which when ſpent and exhauſted, the creature becomes barren: the females of all viviparous quadrupeds being brought forth with their teſtes, or ovaria; and all birds formed with their ovary, or egg-cluſter, containing the ſeeds of all the eggs they ſhall ever lay. Now had the creature a power of producing new ones, what need was there, that there ſhould be ſo many at firſt formed in them? Whereupon theſe philoſophers argue thus; Let us ſuppoſe, GOD did at firſt create two animals, a male and a female: the female muſt be created with its ovaries, which (as we have ſaid) contain ſo many ſeeds, or eggs, as the creature ture ſhould ever bring forth young. So it is clear, that not only the firſt pair, but the firſt generation of animals were actually created. Again, this generation, from their firſt appearance, had each of them (that is the females) its ovaria, containing in like manner, the ſeeds of its future off-ſpring; ſo that this ſecond generation was alſo created in the firſt. The ſame may be demonſtrated of the third and fourth; and ſo on of all the generations that ſhall be, as long as the world ſhall laſt [h].

The creation of man,

WHEN the creation had proceeded thus far, and every thing, that could be ſubſervient to man, or advance his felicity, was compleated; he, who was to be the lord of all, and for whoſe ſake the whole was framed, was brought into the world, being created in a ſolemn and immediate manner by GOD himſelf[i], after a conſultation, as it were of the holy Trinity [k], every Perſon wherein may juſtly be preſumed to have

[h] RAY's Phyſico-Theological Diſcourſes, chap. 4. [i] Mr. WHISTON, conceiving it unfit and impoſſible for the divine nature of the Father to be ſo much, and in ſuch a manner, concerned with the corporeal world, and the ſinful race of mankind, is of opinion, that the ſame divine perſon, who was afterwards frequenly converſant on earth, gave the law on mount Sinai, and took the title, adoration, and, to others, incommunicable name of the GOD of Iſrael; and who at laſt was incarnate, and died, and ſtill makes interceſſion for us with the Father, and will judge the world at the laſt day; was actually and viſibly on earth in a human ſhape, and truly and really employed in this creation of the world, ſo frequently aſcribed to him in the holy ſcriptures, and particularly in this formation of man. Vide his Theory, Book IV. p. 330. [k] Geneſ. i. 26. Moſt of the modern expoſitors take the plural number here uſed, Let us make, &c. to be no more than a majeſtic form of ſpeech, as princes now uſe. The Jewiſh doctors are of opinion, that this deliberation was real, and held with ſuch angelical beings as GOD might employ in the work of man's creation: and on this occaſion tell the following ſtory; That, as Moſes was writing his book by GOD's appointment, and theſe words came to be dictated, he made ſome difficulty to ſet them down, crying out, O Lord, wouldſt thou then lead men into error, and make them doubt of the doctrine of the unity? whereupon GOD anſwered, I command thee to write, and if any will err, let them err. Bereſhit Rabba. Philo the Jew ſays, the true reaſon of this expreſſion is known to GOD only; yet he conjectures, that man alone, of all creatures, being capable of the contraries of virtue and vice; the creation of ſuch a mixed being was partly proper, and partly improper for GOD himſelf, who therefore here beſpeaks his coadjutors, that what is irreprehenſible in have been peculiarly concerned in the production of that being, which was to bear the image of GOD, and be made capable, in ſome degree, of his immortality.

MAN then was, by a divine power, created on the ſixth day, after the terreſtrial animals had been produced; his body was formed out of the duſt of the ground [l], whence he had the name of Adam [m], and his ſoul immediately infuſed into him by his creator; in which better and immortal part more evidently conſiſted that image, or reſemblance of GOD, wherein he is ſaid to have been made [n]. The woman was formed alſo on the ſame day [o], out of the ſide [p] of the man, who had been caſt into a deep ſleep for that end [q]. And this original, it is to be ſuppoſed, was choſen, to conciliate the ſtricter love and union between them; the ſide being alſo the moſt proper part to denote that equality with the man, for which the woman was deſigned; whereas if ſhe had been taken from the head [r], it might have argued ſome intended ſuperiority, or if from the lower parts [s], the contrary. From what Adam ſaid on his firſt ſight of the woman, that ſhe was bone of his bone, and fleſh of his fleſh, it appears, he well knew whence ſhe was formed; whether he was ſenſible of the paſt operation, or had it otherwiſe revealed to him, as probably it was in a viſion as he ſlept. Beſides Eve, it is pretended by and of two man.

in the actions, or will of man may be attributed to GOD, and what is otherwiſe, to his ſubordinate agents. De mundi opificio, p. 15, &c.

[l] Geneſ. ii. 7. [m] אדמה Adamah in Hebrew ſignifies Earth, but more properly, as is ſaid, a ſort of red earth, or clay, from the root אדם to be red. Ludolphus derives it from the Æthiopic, Adama, i. e to be pleaſant or delightful, which epithets are attributed to the earth for its amenity, and might be to the firſt man for his beauty. But this name of Adam, it muſt be obſerved, is an appellative, rather than a proper name, and includes even both the ſexes. Ibid. According to ſome of the Perſian Mages (but not the more orthodox) the firſt human pair were named Miſha and Miſhâna. HYDE, Hiſt. rel. vet. Perſ. c. 10. [n] Geneſ. i. 26, 27. Ib. v. 1. [o] Ibid. i. 27. [p] The original word, which ſtrictly ſignifies a rib, may be alſo tranſlated ſide, as it is all along by the Septuagint. [q] Geneſ. ii. 21. [r] Which ſome have imagined. Vid. St. ROMUALD, Abrégé du Treſor Chronolog. Tom. I. p. 35 [s] Some Rabbins ridiculouſly fancy, that GOD at firſt made Adam with a tail, but finding it leſſened the beauty of his workmanſhip, he reſolved to cut it off; however, he made it ſerve for the matter whereout he formed the firſt woman. Vid. BARTOLOCCII Biblioth. Rabbin. Tom. I. p. 69.

ſome

ſome Rabbins, that GOD made another woman out of the earth named Lilith, of whom the Jews relate many ſtories [t].

THAT the firſt pair were created in an adult and perfect ſtate, immediately capable of the full exerciſe of their natural powers and faculties, is not to be doubted: nor is it to be imagined, but that they both came out of their maker's hands in the greateſt perfection both of body and mind [u]. But we muſt not hence entertain thoſe extravagant opinions, which ſome have held in thoſe reſpects. The Talmudiſts ſay, that Adam reached from one end of the earth to the other, when firſt created, but that when he had ſinned, GOD ſqueezed his ſtature to an hundred ells [x]: though others ſuppoſe this was done at the requeſt of the angels, who were terrified at his gigantic ſize, and that GOD ſtill left him nine hundred cubits high [y]; and that was not a great deal too much, if he waded through the ſea into our continent, after his expulſion from paradiſe, which, as ſome imagine, was ſeparated from this world by the ocean [z]. The Mohammedans alſo have a tradition from their prophet, that Adam was as high as a tall palm-tree [a]; but this would be too much in proportion, if that were really the print of his foot, which is pretended to be ſuch, being ſomewhat above two ſpans long, on the top of a mountain in the iſland of Ceylon, thence named Pico de Adam; and too little, if Eve were of ſo enormous a ſize, as is ſaid, that when her head lay on one hill near Mecca, her knees reſted on two others in the plain, about two muſket-ſhots aſunder [b]. The beauty of Eve is ſaid to have been ſo extraordinary, that the prince of the angels fell in love with her, which occaſioned his fall [c]: and to give as charming an idea of Adam's perſon, ſome have imagined, that GOD, at his creation, cloathed himſelf with a human body ſuperlatively beautiful, and by that model formed the body of Adam; which apparition was the firſt prelude of the incarnation [d]: and what is yet more wonderful, Adam all the while looked on, and ſaw his maker, in that lovely form, faſhioning every limb [e]. Nor have the gifts of his mind

Traditions concerning his ſize, beauty,

and knowledge.

[t] Vid. St. ROMUALD, ubi ſupra. HEIDEGGER, Hiſt. patriarch. Tom. I. p. 112. [u] Vid. PHILON. JUD. de mundi opificio, p. 31. [x] TALMUD, in libr. Sanhedrim. [y] Vid. BARTOLOCCII Biblioth Rabbinic. Vol. I. p. 65, 66. [z] BARCEPHA, in tract. de Paradiſo, cap. 14. [a] YAHYA, Comment. in Korân. [b] MONCONIS, Voyages, part I. p. 372, &c. [c] Vid. BARTOLOCC. ubi ſup. p. 322. [d] EUGUBIN. in Coſmopœia, apud Salian. Annal. Tom. I. p. 106. [e] The latin terms are, Cum fingeretur homo, manus illas divinas aſpexit ambroſioſque vultus illos, pulcherrima brachia corpus ſuum fingentia, fingulosque artus ducentia. Idem, ibid.

been

been leſs magnified than his ſtature and beauty: ſome Rabbinſt have been contented to equal him with Moſes and Solomon; others aſſert, that he was maſter of every ſcience and art; that he knew more the firſt day of his creation, than any other by the experience of a long life [g]; nay, that he ſurpaſſed the angels themſelves in knowledge [h]: allegorically interpreting what is ſaid of his ſtature's reaching from one end of the world to the other, of the extent of his underſtanding [i].

Suppoſed, by ſome, to have been created double.

BUT it is ſtill more groundleſs and extravagant to ſuppoſe, as ſeveral Rabbins have done, that Adam's body was created double, male on one ſide, and female on the other, being joined together by the ſhoulders, the heads looking directly contrary ways: and that GOD, when he had made Eve, had no more to do than to ſplit this body in two [k]. Others join them by their ſides, and ſay, the male body was on the right, which embraced the other round the neck with his left hand, while the other did the ſame to him with her right. Theſe dreams are ſufficiently refuted by the text of Moſes. It may not however be improper to add a word of the Hermaphrodites, or Androgynes, of which Plato has ſaid ſo much: they were bodies which had the two ſexes, with four arms, four legs, and two faces on one neck, turned one towards the other. This duplicity of numbers gave them a prodigious ſtrength, and conſequently inſpired them with great inſolence, and they thought of no leſs than making war againſt the gods: who conſulting on means to bring them to reaſon, the advice of Jupiter was approved, and that was, to ſplit them in two; which being done, each part ſtill preſerved a ſtrong inclination

Of the Androgynes of Plato.

[i] Apud RIVINI Serpent Seduct. p. 50. [g] Vid. SALIAN. ubi ſup. p. 107, 113. [h] To prove this, they pretend to alledge the teſtimony of GOD himſelf. They ſay, that the angels having ſpoken of man with ſome contempt, when GOD conſulted them about his creation, GOD made anſwer, that the man was wiſer than they; and to convince them of it, he brought all kinds of animals to them, and aſked them their names; which they not being able to tell, he put the ſame queſtion to the man, who named them one after another; and being aſked his own name, and GOD's name, he anſwered very juſtly, and gave GOD the name of JEHOVAH. RIVIN. Serpent. Seduct. p. 56. This ſtory has been adopted by Mohammed in his Korân, cap. 2. ver. 30, &c. [i] Ibid. p. 49, &c. [k] Vid. HEIDEGGER. Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom. I. p. 85. which author attributes this opinion to two famous Rabbins, Manaſſes Ben Iſrael (in Conciliat. in Geneſ.) & Moſes Maimonides (in More Nevoch. p. 2. cap. 30.), who yet rather approve a different ſentiment.

to

to unite itſelf to the other, and this was, according to him, the original of love [l].

Mohammedan traditions concerning the creation of man.

THE Mohammedans have ſeveral peculiar traditions about the creation of Adam. They ſay, that the angels Gabriel, Michael, and Iſrafil, were ſent by GOD, one after another, to fetch for that purpoſe ſeven handfuls of earth from different depths, and of different colours; (whence ſome account for the various complexions of mankind [m]) but the earth being apprehenſive of the conſequence, and deſiring them to repreſent her fear to GOD, that the creature he deſigned to form would rebel againſt him, and draw down his curſe upon her, they returned without performing GOD's command; whereupon he ſent Azrail on the ſame errand, who executed his commiſſion without remorſe; for which reaſon GOD appointed him to ſeparate the ſouls from the bodies, being therefore called the angel of death. The earth he had taken was carried into Arabia, to a place now between Mecca and Tayef, where, being firſt kneaded by the angels, it was afterwards formed by GOD himſelf into a human form, and left to dry for the ſpace of forty days, or, as others ſay, as many years; the angels, in the interim, often viſiting it, and Eblis (afterwards the devil) among the reſt: but he, not contented with looking on it, kicked it with his foot till it rung, and knowing GOD deſigned that creature to be his ſuperior, took a ſecret reſolution never to acknowledge him as ſuch. After this, GOD animated the figure of clay, and endued it with an intelligent ſoul; and when he had placed him in paradiſe, formed Eve out of his left ſide [n].

The Phœnician tradition.

THE firſt human pair, according to the Phœnician tradition, were begotten, or generated by the wind Colpias, and his wife Baau, which is interpreted night [o]; that is, by a hollow

[l] PLAT. in ſympoſ. pag. 1185. Ed. Francof. 1602. [m] AL TERMEDI, from a tradition of Abu Muſa al Aſhari. [n] KHOND AMÎR, JALLALO'DDIN, Comment, in KORAN, &c. Vid. D'HERBEL. Biblioth. Orient. p. 55. [o] SANCHONIATHO, apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 10. As to the words Colpias and Baau, Bochart takes the firſt of them to be the ſame with קול־פי־יה Col-pi-yah, i. e. the voice of the mouth of GOD; but this is improbable, becauſe it is plainly the name of a wind, derived from the Greek Κόλπος, which ſignifies a hollow place or cavity, whether thoſe little ones in our boſoms, garments, &c. or thoſe large ones which we call bays in the ſea-ſhore: nor is there ſuch a phraſe in the Hebrew tongue, as the voice of the mouth of Yah; beſides other reaſons. Baau he would correct Baut, which he affirms to ſignify the hollow wind acting on unformed matter: the meaning being no more than this, that a wind encloſed in ſeveral cavities of unſhapen matter, worked out of it the firſt man; the rude matter being the paſſive principle, or cauſe, and therefore here figuratively called the wife; and the encloſed wind being the active principle, and therefore here intimated to be as it were the huſband, in this firſt generation [p].

Of the human ſoul:

THAT the ſoul of man is a ſpiritual ſubſtance, independent on the matter it informs, is evident to any, who conſiders the power and freedom of its operations, which no accident can be ſuppoſed to have; and which matter, with all its refinements and muturations, can never be able to perform. It has however been queſtioned, whether the ſouls of men are infuſed into them immediately from GOD, or whether they are derived, ex traduce, from their parents. The latter opioion has been maintained, from all other creatures having the power of propagating their ſpecies in full perfection; by which it ſeems to follow, that mankind were endued with the ſame; from the likeneſs of temper and diſpoſition of mind, which children often take from their parents; and from the indecency of conceiving GOD to be inceſſantly making ſouls, whenever the ſexes are ſtimulated to ſatisfy their natural appetite. But it is ſcarce poſſible to maintain the immateriality and immortality of the human ſoul on this ſuppoſition: for if the ſoul be propagated by generation, it muſt, to our beſt apprehenſion, be material, and liable to corruption [q]; it is therefore more reaſonable to believe, that though GOD has committed the formation of our bodies to the agency of ſecond cauſes, yet he has reſerved the production of our ſouls to himſelf, who is the Father, and GOD of the ſpirits of all fleſh [r].

whether infuſed, or ex traduce.

Whether our ſouls were created at once, or ſucceſſively.

IT has alſo been doubted, whether the ſouls of mankind were all created at once, together with that of Adam, in order to be united to certain bodies, which ſhould be prepared afterwards for their reception; or whether they are ſucceſſively created, as the bodies they are to inform are made fit to receive them. Such of the old philoſophers who believed the ſoul to be a diſtinct ſubſtance from the body, as Pythagoras, Empedocles, and Plato, concluded, that all ſouls muſt pre-exiſt in the univerſe, before generation and tranſmigration into their

the night: but it is more probably the בהן Bohu of Moſes, as Scaliger and Grotius agree. Vid CUMBERLAND's Remarks on the Hiſt of SANCHONIATHO, p. 207

[p] CUMBERLAND, ibid. p. 209 Vid. CUDWORTH, Intell. Syſt. p. 38. [q] Numb. xvi. 22. Vid. Mr. STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 223, &c.

reſpective

reſpective bodies; and this doctrine was not confined to human ſouls only, but extended univerſally to all ſouls and lives whatſoever; for the antients were ſo far from denying the ſenſe and conſciouſneſs of brutes, that the generality of them allowed them the faculty of reaſoning[f], though they were not able to expreſs their thoughts as man did: for which reaſon they were ſuppoſed, by ſome, to tranſmigrate indifferently from men into other animals, and from animals into men; it being only the difference of the organs, and the modification of the matter to which they were united, wherein conſiſted the ſeeming diſparity of their powers. Several of the antient chriſtians have alſo believed the pre-exiſtence of ſouls, induced by this conſideration, that it was incongruous to bring GOD upon the ſtage perpetually, and make him immediately interpoſe every where in the generation of men, by the miraculous production of their ſouls out of nothing. Nay, the continual creation and decreation of the ſouls of brutes has been thought ſo improbable, that it has been fancied, they are but ſo many particular eradiations, or effluxes, from that ſource of life above, which animate ſuch matter, as is fitly prepared to receive and be actuated by them, ſo long as it continues ſuch; but when thoſe organized bodies, by reaſon of their indiſpoſition, become incapable of being further acted upon, are reſumed and retracted into that original head, or fountain; it ſeeming not at all abſurd to grant perpetuity of duration to the ſouls even of brutes, any more than to every the leaſt particle of matter[t]. Nor is this doctrine of pre-exiſtence unknown to the Mohammedans, who imagine, that GOD drew out of the loins of Adam all his poſterity at once, and made a covenant with them, that they ſhould acknowledge him for their lord[u]. They ſay, that all theſe men were actually aſſembled together in a valley near Mecca, or, as others ſay, in the plain of Dahia in India, in the ſhape of piſmires, which are endued with underſtanding; and after they had in the preſence of the angels, as witneſſes, confeſſed their dependance on GOD, they were again cauſed to return into the loins of their great anceſtor[x]. That the Jews had likewiſe ſome notion of the ſoul's exiſting before the body, appears from their queſtion put to our Saviour, whether the man that was born blind[y], had himſelf ſinned, or his parents, to deſerve that puniſhment; and as this opinion was not then contradicted, ſome have ſuppoſed it to have been thereby tacitly approved.

[f] Vid. PLUTARCH. de placitis Philoſ. l. 5. cap. 20. See BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Pereira, Rem. E. [t] CUDWORTH, ubi ſupra, p. 44, &c. [u] Al Korân. cap. vii. ver. 171. [x] See D'HERBELOT, Biblioth. orient. p. 54. MARRACCIUS in Alcoran. p. 290. [y] John ix. 2.

NOTWITHSTANDING which, the vulgar opinion of the ſucceſſive creation of ſouls, may with good reaſon be allowed; for why ſhould we imagine, that GOD put forth all his creative vigour at once in a moment, ever afterwards remaining a ſpectator only of the conſequent reſult, and permitting nature alone to do all, without any farther interpoſition [z]? and how is it poſſible, that if our ſouls were ever in ſuch a ſtate of pre-exiſtence, we ſhould have ſo perfectly loſt all memory and conſciouſneſs of any thing?

Whether men before Adam.

BEFORE we have done with this ſubject, the creation of man, we muſt take ſome notice of the opinion of thoſe who think mankind were in being before Adam, who was the progenitor of the Jews only. To ſupport which, they alledge, that Moſes makes mention of two diſtinct creations, one of mankind in general [a], and the other of Adam and Eve [b]; and in the progreſs of his hiſtory gives ſtrong intimations, that there were ſeveral more men in the world when they were created; elſe it is not eaſily to be conceived, how Cain could be a tiller of the ground [c], which muſt pre-ſuppoſe all the artificers that have relation to tillage; or what reaſon he had to apprehend, that every one that found him would ſlay him [d]; nor can his going into another country, marrying a wife, and building a city [e], be otherwiſe accounted for. From which they would infer, that Moſes intended only to give an account of the origin of the Jews, and not of the primitive parents of the whole human race [f]. Theſe objections are eaſily anſwered; for the paſſage, wherein the creation of man is mentioned the ſecond time, is plainly no more than a recapitulation of what had been ſaid before of the creation of the world in general, with a more particular detail of that of our firſt parents. And as to the numbers of men ſuppoſed to be in the world, about the time of the murder of Abel, it is by no means improbable, that theſe ſhould be the deſcendants of Adam and Eve, whoſe poſterity, in the ſpace of near one hundred and thirty years, (for it was in that year of Adam's age that Seth, who was given in lieu of Abel, was born) might, by a fair calculation, be multiplied to many thouſand ſouls, conſidering the primitive fœcundity, and that none are ſuppoſed to have died in the interim [g].

[z] CUDWORTH, ubi ſupra. [a] Geneſ. i. 27. [b] Geneſ. ii. 7. Ib. v. 1, 2. [c] Geneſ. iv. 2. [d] Geneſ. iv. 14. [e] Ib. ver. 16, 17. [f] Vid. PEYRERII Præadamit. l. 3. cap. 4. BLOUNT's Oracles of Reaſon, 218. [g] Vid. NICHOLL's conference with a Theiſt, Vol. I. part I.

BUT

BUT the moſt plauſible objection of the Pre-adamites is, that if Adam and Eve be allowed to be the progenitors of all mankind, there can be no tolerable cauſe aſſigned of the difference in colour between the whites and the blacks; it being very improbable, they were both the off-ſpring of the ſame parents. To this it may be anſwered, that the variety of complexions in the world may be rationally accounted for another way. We know how the hair and colour of mens bodies differ, according to the climate they inhabit, and their greater, or leſſer diſtance from the ſun: we may therefore well conclude, that the firſt colony, which ſettled in a very hot country, received a great change in their complexion, proportionable to the heat of the climate, and became very tawny, gradually inclining to blackneſs, as the ſun was more intenſe upon them. Hence, in a generation or two, that high degree of tawnineſs might become natural, and at length the pride of the natives. The men might begin to value themſelves upon this complexion, and the women to affect them the better for it; ſo that their love for their huſbands, and daily converſation with them, might have a conſiderable influence upon the fruit of their wombs, and make each child grow blacker and blacker, according to the fancy and imagination of the mother; the force of which is evident from many inſtances. Upon this ſuppoſition, the children thus produced muſt every birth approach nearer to an abſolute blackneſs; and as their tender bodies came to be expoſed naked (as the manner of ſuch countries is) to the violent heat of the ſun, their ſkin muſt needs be ſcorched in an extraordinary manner, and, perhaps, its very texture altered, and by that means contract a blackneſs far ſuperior to that of their parents. By ſuch degrees it is not improbable, that people of the faireſt complexion, when removed into a very hot climate, may, in a few generations, become perfect negroes. As to what ſome have imagined, that this blackneſs was at firſt ſupernatural, and a judgment inflicted upon Ham, the ſon of Noah, for diſcovering his father's nakedneſs [h], and that all people of that complexion are the progeny of that undutiful ſon [i]; this ſeems very unlikely, and without foundation, the curſe on that occaſion being laid on Canaan, the ſon of Ham, by name, and yet his poſterity are allowed not to have been black.

Their difference of colour accounted for.

THUS have we attended the earth through its ſeveral degrees of formation, ſeen it perfected, cloathed with trees and plants, and repleniſhed with animals; and at laſt man, for whom the whole was deſigned, and to whom the dominion of it was expreſly given by its maker, introduced, and placed in it.

[h] Geneſ. ix. 22. [i] Ib. ver. 25.

The time and ſeaſon of the creation.

WHETHER all this was really done in the ſpace of ſix days, has been a queſtion; ſome, as has been obſerved, thinking it much too ſhort for ſuch a work, and others too long [k], ſuppoſing, that the world was created in a moment, and that Moſes extends it to ſix days, the better to help the imagination of the people, that things may ſeem to riſe in ſome order and method, and to take off any image of haſte, or precipitancy. But we cannot ſee any reaſon to depart from the letter of Moſes in this particular, the creation deſcribed by him being not the creation of the ſubſtance of all things out of nothing, which was moſt probably the effect of one individual act, but the formation of one world, or ſyſtem only, out of matter before created [l].

It has been diſputed alſo in what ſeaſon of the year the world was made; which, it is to be preſumed, muſt be meant in reſpect of the place where Adam was created; for otherwiſe all theſe ſeaſons muſt have been in being at once in different parts of the world. Some have ſuppoſed the vernal equinox to have been the time; but others the autumnal; which opinion is the more generally received [m], and ſeems to be confirmed from the years antiently beginning from that time [n]. This indeed was afterwards altered by Moſes, who ordered the eccleſiaſtical year ſhould commence from the vernal equinox, or the month Niſan [o]: but the Jews in civil affairs ſtill continued to compute from the former, or the month Tiſri.

The place where Adam was created.

ANOTHER ſubject of enquiry has been the place where Adam was created. There is an antient tradition, that it was in Syria; near where Damaſcus now ſtands [p]; others will have it to have been in Armenia [q]; but it was, moſt probably, in, or near the garden of Eden, the ſeat deſigned for him, where-ever that was.

Things made prior to the creation.

THE Mohammedans, who have very right notions as to the creation of the world in ſix days, do however believe, that GOD previous to that creation, made the table whereon, as they ſuppoſe, his decrees are written; the pen wherewith they are written; the waters whereon his throne is eſtabliſhed; and the throne itſelf [r]: wherein they have imitated the Jews, who ſay, that GOD created ſeven things before the world;

[k] St. AUSTIN. PHILO. JUD. LE GRAND, Hiſt. ſacra. [l] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 2. p. 312. [m] Vid. JACOB. CAPPELLI Obſerv. in Geneſ. c. i. ver. 14. p. 583. [n] Vid. Exod. xxiii. 16. & xxxiv. 22. [o] Exod. xii. 2. [p] Vid. HEIDEGG. Hiſt. Patriarchar. Tom. I. p. 84. [q] CALMET's Comment. in Geneſ. [r] Vid. ECCHELLENS. Hiſt. Arab. c 9.

viz.

viz. paradiſe, the law, the ſouls of juſt men, Iſrael, the throne of GOD's glory, Jeruſalem, and the Meſſiah [r].

Of angels.

BEFORE we quit this ſubject, it may be expected we ſhould ſay ſomething of the creation of angels, who ſo eminently concerned themſelves in the affairs of mankind, at leaſt in the firſt ages of the world.

ANGELS, in the proper ſignification of the word [t], do not import the nature of any being, but only the office, to which they are appointed, eſpecially by way of meſſage, or intercourſe between GOD and his creatures; in which ſenſe they are called the miniſters of GOD, who do his pleaſure, and miniſtring ſpirits ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation. That there are ſuch beings as we call angels, that is, certain permanent ſubſtances, inviſible, and imperceptible to our ſenſes, endued with underſtanding and power ſuperior to that of human nature, created by GOD, and ſubject to him, as the ſupreme Being; miniſtring to his divine providence in the government of the world by his appointment, and more eſpecially attending the affairs of mankind; is a truth ſo fully atteſted by ſcripture, that it cannot be doubted, and was ſo generally acknowledged by the Jews, that it is ſcarce to be believed, that even the Sadducees themſelves utterly denied their exiſtence, but only that they had no notion of their appearing in thoſe latter times; as many Chriſtians, though they do not abſolutely impugn the being of ſpirits, yet are far from giving credit to the frequent ſtories of apparitions. Nay, the exiſtence of ſuch inviſible beings was generally acknowledged by the antient heathens, though under different appellations; the Greeks calling them dæmons, and the Romans genii, or lares [u]: Epicurus ſeems to have been the only one among the old philoſophers who abſolutely rejected them [x]; and indeed, the belief of middle intelligences influencing the affairs of the world, and ſerving as miniſters, or interpreters, between GOD and man, is as extenſive as the belief of a GOD; having never, as we know, been called in queſtion by thoſe who had any religion at all.

[r] Maſſechet Peſachim. [t] The word Angel is Greek, and ſignifies a Meſſenger: the Hebrew: מלאך, the Arabic ملك, and Perſian فرښتك, ſignify the ſame thing. The Angels are in Daniel (cap. iv. ver. 13, &c.) called עירים or Watchers, from their vigilance; for which reaſon they are, in the remains we have of the prophecy attributed to Enoch, named Egregori; which word imports the ſame in Greek. [u] Vid. PLUTARCH. de placitis philoſ. l. 1. c. 8. & VARRON. apud Auguſt. de civit. Dei, l. 7. cap. 6. [x] Vid. PLUT. ibid.

AND had we no ſuch revelation and tradition, it ſeems very reaſonable to ſuppoſe, there are intermediate beings to fill up the gap which would otherwiſe be in nature; for as there is a gradation of creatures on earth, ſome having barely being, as earth, air, and water; ſome that beſides being have life, as vegetables; ſome that beſides life have ſenſe and perception, as brute animals; and ſome that beſides ſenſe have reaſon and cogitation, as men: and as we ſee our ſenſitive part exiſts in beings beneath us; ſo it is very probable, that our more noble and intellectual part exiſts in beings, as much ſuperior to us as we are to brutes; and that there is a like gradual aſcent from the loweſt rank of them, which borders upon man, to the higheſt, which comes as near as a finite creature can, to an infinite deity [y].

When created.

THAT the angels were in being long before the Moſaic creation, is generally allowed [z], and indeed cannot be doubted, ſince they were actually preſent, if not employed in that creation, when the morning ſtars ſang together, and all the ſons of GOD ſhouted for joy [a]; and ſince it is more than probable, that the fall of the apoſtate angels was ſome time at leaſt before it.

Their nature, power, employment, &c.

AS to the natures of theſe beings, we are told, that they are ſpirits [b], but whether pure ſpirits diveſted of all matter, or united to ſome thin bodies, or corporeal vehicles, has been a controverſy of long ſtanding. Not only the antient philoſophers, but ſome of the chriſtian fathers [c] were of opinion, that angels were cloathed with ethereal, or fiery, bodies, of the ſame nature with thoſe which we ſhall one day have, when we come to be equal to them. But the more current opinion, eſpecially of later times, has been, that they are ſubſtances entirely ſpiritual, though they can at any time aſſume bodies, and appear in human, or other ſhapes [d].

THAT the angelical powers and abilities vaſtly excel thoſe of man cannot be denied, if we conſider, that their faculties are not clogged, or impeded, as ours are, by any of thoſe imperfections which are inſeparable from corporeal beings: ſo

[y] Vid. STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 185, &c. [z] Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 2. p. 300, &c. [a] Job. xxxviii. 7. Yet ſome have imagined, they were created the firſt day, and deſigned by Moſes under the name of light: Others, that they were created the ſixth day, after man, to crown and conſummate the creation, which roſe by degrees from the leſs to the more perfect Parts. [b] Vid. TILLOTSON's Serm. Vol. II. [c] S. BASIL, S. ATHANASIUS, and METHODIUS; and alſo St. AUGUSTIN. apud Sixt. Senenſ. l. 5. Annot. 8. Vid. Acta Concil. Nicen. 2. Act. 5. [d] MAIMONID. More Nev. p. 2. cap. 49.

that

that their underſtandings are always in perfect vigour; their inclinations regular; their motions ſtrong and quick; their actions irreſiſtible by material bodies, whoſe natural qualities they can controul, or manage to their purpoſes, and occaſion either bleſſings, or calamities, public or private, here below. Inſtances of which are too numerous to mention.

BESIDES their attendance on GOD, and their waiting and executing of his commands, they are alſo preſumed to be employed in taking care of mankind and their concerns: and that every man had ſuch a tutelar, or guardian angel, even from his birth, was a firm belief and tradition among the Jews; and our SAVIOUR himſelf ſeems to have been of the ſame ſentiment [e]. The heathens were alſo of the ſame perſuaſion [f], and thought it a crime to neglect the admonitions of ſo divine a guide [g]. Socrates publickly confeſſed himſelf to be under the direction of ſuch an angel, or dæmon, as ſeveral others have ſince done [h]. And on this tutelar genius of each perſon they believed his happineſs and fortune depended. Every genius did his beſt for the intereſt of his client; and if a man came by the worſt, it was a ſign the ſtrength of his genius was inferior to that of his opponent, that is of an inferior order; and this was governed by chance. There were ſome genii, whoſe aſcendant was ſo great over others, that their very preſence entirely diſconcerted them; which was the caſe of that of Auguſtus in reſpect of that of M. Anthony [i]: and for the ſame reaſon, perhaps, ſome perſons have wit, and ſpeak well, when others are abſent, in whoſe preſence they are confounded, and out of countenance. The Romans thought the tutelar genii of thoſe who attained the empire, to be of an eminent order, on which account they had great honours ſhewn them: nations and cities alſo had their ſeveral genii [k]. The antient Perſians ſo firmly believed the miniſtry of angels, and their ſuperintendance over human affairs, that they gave their names to their months, and the days of their month, and assigned them distinct offices and provinces [l]: and it is from them the Jews confess to have received the names of the months and angels, which they brought with them, when they returned from the Babylonish captivity [m]. After which, we find, they also assigned charges to the angels, and in particular the patronage of empires and nations; Michael being the prince of the Jews [n], as Raphael is supposed to have been of the Persians [o].

[e] Vid. Matth. xviii. 10. [f] Vid. MENAND. ARRIAN. in Epict. [g] Vid. M. ANTONIN. Meditat. l. 2. § 15. l. 5, § 19, &c. PLOTIN. Ennead. 3. l. 4. DIOG. LAERT. in Zenon. p. 418. [h] Particularly PLOTINUS, whoſe dæmon is ſaid to have appeared at the evocation of an Egyptian prieſt, in the temple of Iſis at Rome, in the preſence of Plotinus himſelf, and proved to be a god, and not a ſimple dæmon; whereupon Plotinus was immediately congratulated by the prieſt, on ſo extraordinary a prerogative. PORPHYR. in vita Plotini. [i] PLUTARCH. in Antonio, p. 930. [k] Vid. DODWEL. præl. II. ad Spart. Hadrian. p. 176, &c.

THE Mohammedans have so great a respect for the angels, that they account a man an infidel who either denies their existence, or loves them not. They believe them to be free from sin, enjoying the presence of GOD, to whom they are never disobedient: that they have subtil pure bodies, being created of light; and have no distinction of sexes, nor do they need the refreshment of food or sleep. They suppose them to have different forms and offices; that some adore GOD in several postures; others sing his praises, and intercede for men; some carry and encompass his throne; others write the actions of men, and are assigned guardians to them [p].

As the numbers of these celestial spirits are very great [q], it is likewise reasonable to believe, that there are several orders and degrees among them, which is also confirmed by scripture: whence some speculative men have distributed them into nine orders, according to the different names by which they are there called; and reduced those orders into three hierarchies, as they call them; to the first of which belong seraphim, cherubim and thrones; to the second, dominions, virtues, and powers; and to the third, principalities, arch-angels, and angels. They imagine farther, that there are some who constantly reside in heaven; others who are ministers, and sent forth, as there is occasion, to execute the orders they receive from GOD by the former. The Jews reckon but four orders, or companies of angels, each headed by an arch-angel; the first order being that of Michael, the second of Gabriel, the third of Uriel, and the fourth of Raphael; but though the Jews believe them to be but four, yet it seems there were rather seven [r]. The Persians also held, there were subordinate degrees among the angels [s].

[l] Vid. HYDE, Rel. vet. Pers. cap. 19, & 20. [m] TALMUD Hierosol. in Rosh ha shana. [n] Dan. xii. 1. [o] HYDE, ubi sup. p. 270, 273. [p] Compendium Theolog. Moham. c. 3. apud Reland. de Rel. Mohammed. [q] Revel. v. 11. [r] MAIMONID. More Nevoch. part 2. c. 10. [s] Revel. iv. 5. viii. 2. Tobit xii. 15. [t] Vid. HYDE, de Rel. vet. Pers. c. 12, & 20.

ALTHOUGH

ALTHOUGH the angels were originally created perfect, good, and obedient to their maſter's will, yet ſome of them ſinned [u], and kept not their firſt eſtate [x], but left their habitation, and ſo, of the moſt bleſſed and glorious, became the moſt vile and miſerable of all GOD's creatures. They were expelled the regions of light, and caſt down to hell, to be reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, until the day of judgment. With heaven they loſt their heavenly diſpoſition, which delighted once in doing good, and praiſing GOD; and fell into a ſettled rancour againſt him, and malice againſt men: their inward peace was gone; all deſire of doing good departed from them; and inſtead thereof, revengeful thoughts and deſpair took poſſeſſion of them, and created an eternal hell within them. Of the fallen angels.

WHEN, and for what offence theſe apoſtate ſpirits fell from heaven, and plunged themſelves into ſuch an abyſs of wickedneſs and woe, are queſtions very hard, if not impoſſible, to be determined by any clear evidence of ſcripture. As to the time, it is moſt reaſonable to believe, that their fall preceded the creation of the world; though ſome have imagined it to have been after, and that carnality, or luſting to converſe with women upon earth [y], was the ſin which ruined them [z]: an opinion built on a miſtaken interpretation of ſcripture, as if angels were meant by the ſons of GOD, who are ſaid to have begotten the mighty men of old on the daughters of men [a]. Others have ſuppoſed, that the angels, being informed of GOD's intention to create man after his own image, and to dignify his nature by CHRIST's aſſuming of it, and thinking their glory to be eclipſed thereby, envied man's happineſs, and ſo revolted [b]: and with this opinion that of the Mohammedans has ſome affinity, who are taught, that the devil, who was once one of thoſe angels who are neareſt to GOD's preſence, and named Azazil [c], forfeited paradiſe for refuſing to worſhip or pay homage to Adam, at the command of GOD [d]. But on what occaſion ſoever it firſt ſhewed itſelf, pride ſeems to have been the leading ſin of the angels [e]; who admiring, and valuing themſelves too much on the excellence of their nature, and the height of their ſtation, came The time of their fall, their offence, &c.

[u] 2 Pet. ii. 4. [x] Jude, ver. 6. [y] See hereafter p. 164, 165. a.
[z] JOSEPHUS, PHILO JUD. ORIGEN. TERTULLIAN, &c.
[a] Geneſ. vi. 2, 4. [b] IRENÆUS, LACTANTIUS, GREGORY NYSSEN, &c. [c] Vid. RELAND. de Rel. Mohammed. p. 189, &c. [d] Al Korân, cap. 2. ver. 34. [e] Vid. i. Tim. iii. 6. and the magnificent compariſon of the fall of proud Sennacherib to that of Lucifer; Iſaiah xiv. 12, &c.

at

at length to entertain ſo little reſpect for their creator, as to be guilty of downright rebellion and apoſtaſy [f].

IT is certain from ſcripture, that theſe fallen angels were in great numbers [g], and that there was alſo ſome order and ſubordination preſerved among them; one eſpecially being conſidered as their prince, and called by ſeveral names, Beelzebub, Satan, or Sammaël by the Jews; Ahàriman by the Perſians; and Eblis by the Mohammedans. Their conſtant employment is not only doing evil themſelves, but endeavouring by all arts and means to ſeduce and pervert mankind, by tempting them to all kind of ſin, and thereby bringing them into the ſame deſperate ſtate with themſelves.

Of intermediate ſpirits, or Genii.

BESIDES the angels and devils, the Mohammedans believe there are a ſort of intermediate creatures, which they call Jin or Genii of a groſſer fabric than angels; ſome of whom are good, and others bad, and capable of future ſalvation or damnation, as men are. The Orientals pretend, that theſe Genii inhabited the world for many thouſand years before the creation of Adam, under the reigns of ſeveral princes, who all bore the common name of Solomon: but falling at length into an almoſt general corruption, Eblis was ſent to drive them into a remote part of the earth, there to be confined: that ſome of that generation, ſtill remaining, were by Tahmûrath, one of the antient kings of Perſia, who waged war againſt them, forced to retreat into the famous mountains of Kâf. Of which ſucceſſions, and wars they have many fabulous and romantic ſtories. They alſo make different ranks and degrees among this kind of beings, (if they are not rather of different ſpecies) ſome being called abſolutely Jin, ſome Peri or faries; ſome Div or giants; others Tacwins or fates [h].

AS to the antient Greeks and Romans, we do not find, they had any notion of evil ſpirits, or devils, in the uſual ſenſe of the word, if we except only Plutarch's evil principle before mentioned. Their infernal gods were not conceived to be of an evil nature; and though they believed the furies were the tormentors of wicked men in another life, yet they looked on them as goddeſſes, and the avengers only of evil actions.

MUCH more might be added to what we have already ſaid on theſe ſubjects; but as we may be thought already to have exceeded the bounds of an introduction, we ſhall here conclude it, and haſten to the hiſtory itſelf.

[f] The opinion of St. CHRYSOSTOME, THEODORET, ATHANASIUS, &c. [g] Yet ſome have endeavoured to prove there is no more than one devil. Vid. Lettres de BAYLE, Tom. I. p. 360. [h] Vid. D'HERBELOT, Bibl. Orient. p. 369, 820, &c.

AN

A MAP of the most probable Place of the GARDEN of EDEN, PLAIN of SHINAAR, and Mountain where the ARK rested, according to this History

Ejmiadzin or 3 Churches
Erivan
M. VASIS where rested the ARK
R. Araxes or Aras
Nackshivan
R. Kor
PART of the CASPIAN SEA
R. Tigris or Hiddekel
Senjar
SHINAAR EDEN
Here or somewhere near
R. Euphrates or Frat
R. Shat al Arab
PART of PERSIA
KHUZESTAN or Country of CUSH
R. Pison
R. Gihon
HAVILAH
PART of ARABIA
PART of the PERSIAN GULF

40 39 38 37 36 35 34 33 32 31 30

D. Pomardi Sc.

A N

Univerſal Hiſtory.

BOOK I.

The ASIATIC Hiſtory to the Time of ALEXANDER the Great.

CHAP. I.

The General Hiſtory of the WORLD till the FLOOD.

SECT. I.

The Creation of Man, and the Situation of the Garden of EDEN.

IN the beginning GOD created the heaven and the earth. The earth was once in a confuſed and deſolate ſtate, but, by divine providence, and ſecond cauſes ſubſervient to that purpoſe, gradually, in the ſpace of ſix days, reduced into a habitable world; cloathed with trees, ſhrubs, plants, and flowers, and ſtocked with various kinds of animals. And when all theſe things were, by the care and beneficence of GOD, prepared for the reception of his principal gueſt, then, and not till then, was Man created, and introduced into the world [a]. Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

The creation of the world, and of man.

WHATEVER opinions the antient heathens might have of the origin of mankind, we are aſſured, by the moſt authentic records, that we are deſcended from two perſons, Adam and Eve [b]; who were formed by GOD in the moſt abſolute perfection both of body and mind, and ſubject to none of thoſe irregular appetites, diſeaſes, wants, and ſorrows, which they afterwards, by their rebellion, brought on themſelves, and their unhappy poſterity. And leſt any thing ſhould be want-

The happy ſtate of the firſt pair.

[a] Geneſ. i. [b] Geneſ. iii. 20.

ing

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

ing to compleat their happiness, a most delightful habitation was prepared for them in Eden by their gracious creator; a garden or paradise [c], whereon all the beauties of nature were profusely bestowed, well watered, and planted with all sorts of trees, that were either pleasant to the sight, or good for food. In the midst of which garden were two trees of a very peculiar, and, it seems, contrary nature; one called the tree of life, the fruit of which had the virtue of rendering those who eat it, in some degree at least, immortal; and the other the tree of knowledge of good and evil, the consequence of the tasting of which was so pernicious to them and their offspring [d].

Situation of the garden of Eden.

BUT before we proceed, it may be expected, we should say something with reference to the situation of this garden, concerning which there has been so great a variety of opinions among learned men.

Extravagant opinions concerning it.

SEVERAL of the primitive fathers believed, that there never was a local paradise, and that all which is spoken of it in scripture is to be understood in an allegorical sense: others, who allowed the reality of paradise, have swerved so far from the letter, as to suppose it not to be situated on any part of this terrestrial globe. They have placed it in the third heaven, within the orb of the moon, in the moon itself, in the middle region of the air, above the earth, under the earth, in a recess hidden and removed from the knowledge of men, in the place possessed at present by the Caspian sea, under the Arctic pole, and under the equator, with many more such extravagancies, which have been collected by several authors [e], some of whom have thought it worth while to give such whimsies a serious answer.

ON the other hand, many of those who have allowed a terrestrial paradise, have fallen into no less extravagancies. There is scarce a corner of the earth which has not been ransacked in search of it. They have looked for it in Asia, in Africa, in Europe, in America, in Tartary; upon the banks of the Danube, and the Ganges; in the isle of Ceylon, in Persia, in Armenia, in Mesopotamia, in Chaldea, in Arabia, in Palestine, in Syria; about the mountains of Libanus, and Antilibanus; near the cities of Damascus, and Tripoly; in Ethiopia, towards the mountains of the moon; and, which will doubtless be thought as much out of the way, in Sweden.

What owing to.

THIS diversity of opinions proceeds partly, from that humour which prevailed in the early ages of christianity, of allegorizing

[c] Genes. ii 8. &c. [d] Genes. ii. 17. [e] STEPH. MORINUS. dissert. de parad. terrest. præfix. oper. Bocharti, Edit. 1722. MOSES BAR CEPHA, de paradis. comment. P. DAN. HUET. de situ paradisi. BURNET's Theory of the Earth. RALEIGH's hist. of the world, &c.

gorizing all paſſages of ſcripture which had the leaſt appearance of difficulty in them, and partly from the little agreement to be found betwixt the geography of Moſes and that of the heathen authors, whoſe imperfections are not yet perhaps ſufficiently ſupplied, to reſolve this difficult problem. As for the Jews, from whom we might have expected ſome light into matters which concern their own antiquities, they are perfectly ignorant of the geography of their bible, and have run as much aſtray as other nations, in their deſcriptions of paradiſe; ſuppoſing, as Joſephus [f], and all the reſt of their authors have done, the Ganges and the Nile to be two of the four rivers, in which the chriſtian fathers have almoſt unanimouſly followed them.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

THERE are ſeveral places which bear the name of Eden; we find two mentioned in ſcripture, beſides that in the Moſaical deſcription, if it be not one of them; viz. one near Damaſcus in Syria [g], the other in, or about, Thelaſſar in Chaldea [h]. Ptolemy places an Addan in this laſt country, and another on the Euphrates. There is alſo another Eden in Syria near Tripoly [i], in the road to Damaſcus, as the former ſeems likewiſe to be. Cartwright, in his travels [k], gives an account of an iſland in the Tigris [l], called Eden, as he informs us, by the people of the country, and about twelve miles above Mauſel (A). There is a city near Tarſus in Cilicia, ſtill called Adena, and Aden is a very noted one on the coaſt of Yaman, or Arabia Felix, a little without the ſtraits of Bâb al Mondab; for Eden, or Aden, ſignifying pleaſure, that name was given to places remarkable for the delightfulneſs of their ſituation, conſidered either in themſelves, or comparitively with the adjacent country; and the laſt ſeems to be the caſe of Aden in Arabia, which has nothing more than ordinary to deſerve that name, but the barrenneſs of the neighbouring ſoil.

Several Edens.

[f] Antiq. Jud. lib. I. cap. i. [g] Amos i. 5. [h] 2 Kings xix. 12. Iſaiah xxxvii. 12. [i] MAUNDRELL's travels, p. 135. [k] Vid. The preacher's travels, p. 91, 95. [l] Vid. ASSEMANI Bibl. orient. tom. I. p. 526.

(A) This remark, whether true or falſe, ſeems to have occaſioned Raleigh's ſtraining the expreſſion in the Neſtorian epiſtles, (1) tranſlated into Latin by Maſius, where that iſle is not called Eden, but is ſaid to be in the Tigris, a river of Eden.

(1) Ad calcem Bar Cephæ, comment. de ſitu paradiſi, p. 264.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

The Mosaical paradise local, not imaginary.

It appears plainly from the Mosaical description, (B) however prepostterous a learned author [m] thinks it, that Moses had no imaginary paradise in view, but a portion of this habitable earth, bounded with countries and rivers, very well known by the names he gives them, in his time, and (as appears from scripture) for many ages after. Eden is as evidently a real country as Ararat, where the ark rested, and Shinaar, where the sons of Noah removed after the flood. We find it mentioned as such in scripture, as often as the other two; and there is the more reason to believe it, because the scenes of these three remarkable events are laid in the neighbourhood of one another, in the Mosaical history: but the Jews having, probably, during the distraction of their affairs about the time of the captivity, lost the remembrance of all the particulars relating to this account of Eden, (as indeed they have of most things relating to their antiquities) except that of the rivers Hiddekel and Frat; the christians, who have busied themselves much in search after it, have lost their way for want of guides, which has been the occasion of so many strange notions about it, as we have already mentioned: and there must always be a difference among men in opinions, where the uncertainty and defectiveness of the proofs leave room for controversy.

This enquiry uncertain and conjectural.

Some of the latest moderns [n], misled by the affinity of names, have supposed, they found the name of the Pison preserved in the Pasi-tigris, or rather (as they would have it, to favour their hypothesis) the Piso-tigris, whilst others [o] take it for granted, that it is the Phasis, as they conclude the Aras

[m] Burnet's Theory of the Earth, book II. chap. i. at the end.

[n] Francis Junius, Hugo Grotius. [o] Will. Sanson, in geograph. Asiæ. Reland, dissert. de situ paradisi, p. 7. Calmet. comment. sur la Gen. ii. 9.

(B) And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden (2). — And a river went out of Eden to water the Garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads (3). The name of the first is Pison [Fishon]: that is it which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold (4). And the gold of that land is good: there is bdellium [Bdolah] and the onyx-stone [Shoham] (5). And the name of the second river is Gihon: the same is it that compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia [Cûsh] (6). And the name of the third river is Hiddekel: that is it which goeth toward the the east of [or eastward to] Assyria [Ashur]. And the fourth river is Euphrates [Perath or Frat] (7).

(2) Gen. ii. 8. (3) Ibid. ver. 10. (4) Ver. 11. (5) Ver. 12. (6) Ver. 13. (7) Ver. 14.

to

to be the Gihon, from the conformity of the ſignification; both theſe terms being uſed by the Perſians to ſignify any great river in general. But at that rate, Eden may be any where, and every where, ſince a conformity of names, either in ſound or ſignification, may be found in all countries; and if that ſort of proof be admitted, unleſs under proper reſtrictions, it will be no hard matter to prove, that America was peopled immediately by the poſterity of Noah, as ſome have alledged. Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

THE Bdolah and Shoham, which were the produce of Havilah, being unknown names, as well as that of their native country, they are interpreted by every one ſo as to favour the ſcheme he eſpouſes. Thus the Bdolah is rendered bdellium, the carbuncle, the loadſtone, the oleaſter. Thoſe who place paradiſe in Armenia, will have it to be cryſtal [p], becauſe they find that ſtone thereabouts; and thoſe who ſituate it in Chaldea, towards the Perſian gulph, inſiſt, that it ſignifies pearl, which is fiſhed in great quantity in Bahrein near al Kâtif, on the Arabian coaſt, where the country of Havilah is to be found, according to this hypotheſis; and it muſt be owned, this conjecture ſeems to come neareſt to the truth, conſidering manna is compared [q] to the Bdolah for colour; and ſo the Talmudiſts deſcribe manna to be round as coriander-ſeed, and white as pearls. In like manner the Shoham is made by different authors to ſignify the beryl, and the emerald [r]; perhaps with as little propriety, as it is rendered in our bibles the onyx-ſtone, which tranſlation is condemned by Bochart [s] and others (C).

OF the three ſchemes which at preſent obtain amongſt the learned; the firſt, which places paradiſe near Damaſcus in Syria, The ſchemes which place Eden in Syria and Armenia ill-grounded.

[p] RELAND, ibid. p. 27. [q] Numb. xi. 7. [r] RELAND, ibid. p. 31. [s] Vol. I. p. 30.

(C) On this occaſion we cannot help obſerving, that our tranſlators have often ſwerved from the original Hebrew, to follow the Septuagint, if not the German verſion, eſpecially in names and terms. Thus Aram is generally rendered Syria; Khaſhdim, Chaldea; Mizraim, Egypt; Cuſh, Ethiopia; and the like: but we need not ſend the reader farther then the moſaical deſcription of Eden above-cited, in which it appears, that there are no leſs than ſix variations. They have moreover introduced a corrupt pronunciation, either by following the German orthography inſtead of the Engliſh, or continuing the orthography of the vulgate, which prevailed before the reformation. Thus they have conſtantly made uſe of the J conſonant inſtead of the Y: Jacob and Joſeph ſhould be written Yacob and Yoſeph, or rather Yoſef: Benjamin Benyamin, or rather Benyamim.

ria,

Year of the World. 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

ria, about the ſprings of Jordan, and has for its patrons Heidegger [t], Mr. le Clerc [u], Pere Abram [x], and Pere Hardouin [y], ſeems the worſt grounded, being deſtitute of all the marks ſpecified in the Moſaical deſcription, which ought always to be the principal teſt in this enquiry. The ſecond hypotheſis places Eden in Armenia, between the ſprings or heads of the Tigris, the Euphrates, the Araxes, and the Phaſis, and is eſpouſed by two great men, eminent for their skill in geography, namely, Sanſon, and the late Mr. Hadrian Reland [z], beſides Calmet [a]. But this ſcheme is not much better ſupported than the firſt; for, according to the modern diſcoveries, the Phaſis does not riſe in the mountains of Armenia, near the ſprings of the Euphrates, the Araxes, and the Tigris, as Strabo [b], Ptolemy [c], Dionyſius [d], and the reſt of the antients have wrongly informed us, which led them, without doubt, into this error; but by the map of Colchis, or Mingrelia, in Thevenot's collection, and the account of Sir John Chardin, in his travels, that river has its ſource far away in mount Caucaſus, and does not flow from ſouth to north, but on the contrary from north to ſouth; a great extent of country, and the river Kor (which by its ſituation would much better ſupply the place of the Piſon than the Phaſis) interpoſing; as may be ſeen by the map. As one miſtake generally draws on another, Reland, led again by that deceitful guide the ſimilitude of names, ſuppoſes Cuſh to be the country of the Coſſæans, or Cuſſæans; but if the Cuſſæans were the inhabitants of the mountains [e], which, with Parthia, bounded Media on the eaſt; and which, in all likelihood, as he conjectures, was Kuheſtân, or the mountain-country, as that name ſignifies; how could they be ſettled along the Araxes, which yet it was neceſſary they ſhould be, to favour his opinion? for Kuheſtân is the moſt caſtern, or north-eaſtern part of Irâk Ajami, a well-known province of Irân or Perſia at large, agreeable to Diodorus Siculus [f] and Arrian [g]; who makes the country of the Coſſæans a part of Media; though ſome place them in Perſia, and Ptolemy in Suſiana: beſides, the Phaſis and Scythia (which Sanſon underſtands by Cuſh, or the Coſſæans) ſeem to have been too remote to be known to Moſes. Neither does this hypotheſis account for that river which watered paradiſe, and from whence the other four had their riſe; and [t] Hiſtor. patriarch. p. 94. [u] In Gen. cap. ii. 8. [x] Pharus vet. teſt. l. 2. n. 16 p. 6. [y] In his Edition of Pliny. [z] Diſſertat. de ſitu paradiſi. [a] Dict. de la Bible, p. 150, & Commentaire ſur la Geneſe, cap. ii. 8. [b] Lib. X. & XI. [c] Tab. III. Aſiæ. [d] Periegeſis. [e] Strabo, lib. XIV. [f] Lib. XVII. cap. iii. [g] In hiſtor. Ind.

Reland

Reland will not allow it can be done, but by ſuppoſing a ſubterranean river, which may as well ſerve for the ſcheme of the Jews, followed by the Fathers, which makes the Piſon and Gihon, the Nile and the Ganges. Year of the World, 1: Year before Chriſt, 4305.

ACCORDING to the third opinion, Eden is placed upon the united ſtream of the Dijlat, or Hiddekel, and Frat, called by the Arabs, Shat al Arab, that is, the river of the Arabs; which [h] begins two days journey above Baſrah, and, about five leagues below, divides again into two or three channels, which empty themſelves into the Perſian gulph. By this hypotheſis the Shat al Arab is the river paſſing out of Eden, which river, conſidered according to the diſpoſition of its channel, and not according to the courſe of its ſtream, divides into four heads, or different branches; which make the four rivers; two below, viz. the two branches of the Shat, which ſerve for the Piſon and Gihon; and two above, viz. the Frat and Dijlat, or the Euphrates and Hiddekel. According to this diſpoſition, the weſtern branch of the Shat will be Piſon, and the adjoining part of Arabia, bordering on the Perſian gulph, will be Havilah; and the eaſtern branch will be the Gihon, encompaſſing the country of Cuſh, or Khuzeſtân, a province of Irân, as it is ſtill named by the Perſians. The third ſcheme moſt probable.

THIS opinion was firſt ſtarted by Calvin, and is, with ſome little variation, followed by Stephanus Morinus, Bochart, and Huet biſhop of Avranches; and, indeed, all the paſſages of ſcripture, where Eden is mentioned, concur to eſtabliſh it ſomewhere hereabouts. The prophet ſpeaking of Tyre ſays, Haran, and Canneh, and Eden were thy merchants [i]. Now if Canneh be Calneb, or Calyo, which is taken to be Cteſiphon, or Medain, the ſeat of the Parthian race of Perſian kings, then Eden muſt have been the ſouth of that city, according to the order of mentioning the places, which ſeems to be from north to ſouth. The ſame order is obſerved in two other places of the old teſtament, where mention is made of Gozan, Haran, Rezeph and the children of Eden which were in Telaſſar [k]. To this we may add an argument of ſome, that the city of Enoch, or rather Hanukh, built by Cain, and called after the name of his ſon, is placed to the eaſt of Eden [l]; and Ptolemy places a city, called Anuchta, in Suſiana, or the Country of Cuſh. Eden to be looked for in Chaldea.

WITH regard to the natural marks aſcribed to Havilah, authors mention that part of Arabia is productive of gold; and as for the Bdolah and Shoham, they may be made the produce of any country, as we have before obſerved. However, the Bdolah, being conſidered either as pearls, or bdellium, (ſuppoſed to be a tranſparent, odoriferous, but bitter gum) is allowed to be a native of Arabia.

[h] THEV. trav. Part. II. chap. ix. [i] Ezek. xxvii. 23. [k] Iſaiah xxxvii. 12. 2 Kings xix. 12. [l] Gen. iv. 17.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

Objections to the third ſcheme.

BUT though this hypotheſis ſeems the beſt of any that hath been yet advanced, and to account tolerably well for the Moſaical deſcription, yet is it liable to exception: for the two branches of the Shat al Arab, which by this ſcheme repreſent the Piſon and the Gihon, ſeem not conſiderable enough to deſerve the name of rivers, nor are of ſufficient length to encompaſs countries of any extent; the place where the Shat al Arab divides below Baſrah, being not above eighteen leagues [m] diſtant from the places where thoſe two branches fall into the ſea. Indeed, if we could be ſure there was a third branch, which, according to ſome accounts and maps, parting from the Shat about Baſrah, falls into the ſea at al Katif, it might ſerve tolerably well for the Piſon; and for the Gihon, we ſhould chuſe to ſubſtitute either the river Karon, or the river Karha; the firſt of which falls into the Shat al Arab, the other into the Tigris, and may much more properly be ſaid to encompaſs the whole land of Cuſh, as running through Khuzeſtân; whereas the eaſtern branch of the Shat waſhes only a corner of that country, or rather one ſide of an iſland made by it and the Caron.

New ſchemes propoſed.

OR ſuppoſe, we ſhould alter this ſcheme a little, and ſituate Eden above the confluence of Euphrates and Tigris, we ſhall find one, or two large arms, croſſing the intermediate country from one river to the other, which would much better ſupply the place of the Piſon and Gihon, than the branches of the Shat al Arab, provided, other circumſtances agreed with this alteration. If theſe branches of the Tigris had been known to Grotius and others, they would not perhaps have fallen into ſo groſs a miſtake, as to make the Nahar Malca, or Royal River, which paſſes from Euphrates to Tigris, the Gihon: it would better have ſuited with the Moſaical deſcription to have ſuppoſed it to be the river of Eden, which was divided into four heads, in which caſe the parts of thoſe rivers to the ſouth of the Nahar Malca, would ſerve for the Piſon and Gihon; and indeed, that would anſwer the Moſaical deſcription, as to the rivers, almoſt without exception. But the truth is, ſuch an hypotheſis cannot be admitted without overthrowing the credibility of the ſcripture, and allowing the moſt antient books in it were written after, or in the times of the Baby-

[m] THEVENOT's travels, Part II. chap. x. Teixeira, in his journey from Baſrah to Aleppo.

loniſh

Ioniſh captivity; for the Nahar Malca, or Baſilicos Potamos, as the Greeks called it, is an artificial canal ſtill in being, cut from Euphrates to Tigris, a little above Babylon, in the later times of the Babylonian empire. The oriental authors attribute this work to Nimrod [n]; perhaps it may be the ſame with the river Cutha, which, a Perſian author [o] ſays, was dug by a king of Babel of the ſame name, and ſuppoſed to be Cuſh the father of Nimrod. Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

THOSE who patronize the Armenian paradiſe, may likewiſe improve, or amend their ſcheme, out of the modern travellers and maps *, where they will find the Morad Shai, which falls into the Euphrates, and the Kor, which joins the Araxes, or Aras, either of them better fitted to ſupply the place of the Piſon than the Phaſis; or, if they chuſe to have the Euphrates and Tigris united with the other two Moſaical rivers, they may adopt the Sert, which falls into the Tigris at Heſn Keifa, and throw out the Aras and Kor, the head of which laſt Ptolemy has made to change place with that of the Phaſis. As a wrong, or confuſed account of the riſe and courſe of rivers, delivered by the antients, has been the occaſion of many of the miſtakes, into which authors have fallen in treating of this ſubject, the inquirer ought to have recourſe to the modern obſervations of geographers and travellers, which often help where the others fail, but have been too much neglected by the learned.

The Moſaical deſcription of Eden imperfect.

AFTER all, we ought not to be ſo earneſt about this matter; for, ſtrictly ſpeaking, the Moſaical deſcription does not agree with the ſtate of things, either as they now are, or ever were in all probability: for there is no common ſtream, of which the four rivers are properly branches, nor can one conceive, how a whole land can be encompaſſed by a river, as Havilah is ſaid to be by the Piſon, and Cuſh by the Gihon, without being an iſland. But we are to conſider paradiſe deſcribed according to Moſes's notion of things, and that imperfect knowledge of the world which they had in thoſe early times. It is abſurd in this caſe to alledge an alteration made by the deluge in the bounds of countries, or the courſe of rivers; for Moſes deſcribes things as they were ſuppoſed to be at the time he wrote; nor is it credible, that the Hiddekel and Frat were branches of a river before, and had ſprings of their own afterwards.

[n] Vid. HYDE, de Relig. vet. Perſar. p. 40. [o] TABARI, in cap. de morte Saræ apud HYDE, ibid.

* Particularly thoſe of DE LISLE, which are far the beſt.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

IT is observable, that there is no manner of doubt in authors, with relation to these two rivers; nor indeed is there the least room for it, they having retained their names nearly, if not exactly the same, to this day; for what the Hebrews called Hiddekel, the Arabs, and perhaps the Assyrians and Chaldeans, called Dijlat then, as they do at present; and the Pherath, Forat, or Frat, is still called Frat by the neighbouring people; for Euphrates is one of those corrupt names, which our translations have borrowed from the Septuagint version, and which probably the Greeks, as Reland [p] judiciously observed, took from the Persians, who often set the word Ab, or Au, which signifies water, before the names of rivers; of which word and Frat the name Euphrates is compounded. The other opinion which forms that name from a conjunction of Frat with the preceding particle hua, in the Hebrew text, is absurd; as supposing, the Greeks first came acquainted with that river, by reading this passage of Moses relating to the situation of Eden.

Several paradises.

THE oriental nations give the name of paradise to several places, rather for the deliciousness of their situation, than a real persuasion, that any of them was the paradise of Adam, which the Mohammedans in particular do believe not to be on earth, but in the seventh heaven [r]. And of the antient Persians, some thought it to be in the sun, as the Manichæans, and other heretics did; and others, that there is no paradise now in being, but after the resurrection the earth will be renewed, by being melted and changed into another form, and a paradisiacal state [t]; so that they seem to have believed the whole earth to have been paradise, before the curse given it at the fall [u]. However, the terrestrial paradises, mentioned by the Arabs and Persians, are, 1. The plain of Damascus, which they call al Gauta. 2. Obolla, a village in Irâk, on the western branch of the Shat al Arab, where there are most pleasant gardens. 3. Sheb Bawân, a place in Fars, or proper Persia, situate on the river Nilâb, near Nubendijân. 4. Sogd Samarkand, or the valley of Samarkand [w]. 5. Gangdiz, or the castle of the Ganges, called also Behisht Gang, or the paradise of Ganges, Arîm, or Arin, and Kubbat al ard, or the vertex of the earth, 6. Jam gherd. But these two last places are imaginary, and supposed to be situate eastward of China, in the middle of the sea, where the zodiac and equator intersect each other, exactly at one hundred and eighty degrees of longitude from the fortunate islands (or Canaries), where they

[p] De situ paradisi. [r] Vid. MARRAC. in Alc. p. 24. [t] See before, p 67. [u] HYDE de Rel. vet. Pers. c. xxxiii. p. 400. [w] Vid. D'HERBELOT. p. 378. & 361.

they place the other interſection. So that theſe two places are ſuppoſed to be paradiſiacal, as conſidered mathematically, and ſituate exactly under the interſection of the equator, where, they think, the temperance and clemency of the air muſt needs render ſuch a ſituation extremely delightful. The Indians place their earthly paradiſe in Caſhmîr, near the head of the Ganges, (whence that above-mentioned ſeems to have taken its name, though in another part of the world) and this not only on account of the amenity of that ſmall kingdom [x], eſpecially in reſpect of the more ſouthern parts of India; but becauſe the river Ganges, which that nation eſteems ſo ſacred, is ſuppoſed to take its riſe from thence [y]. But the more general tradition of the eaſt is, that paradiſe was in Serendib, or rather Selandiv (D), that is the iſland of Selan, or, as we corruptly call it, Ceylan, or Zeilan (E) [z]. The Arab writers alſo take notice of ſeveral paradiſes, as that of Iram, or Aram, in Yaman, or Arabia Felix, built by Shaddâd, the ſon of Ad, who being deſtroyed, together with his people, by a divine judgment, his palace and gardens, wherein he exceedingly prided himſelf, were rendered inviſible (though preſerved to this day), and never ſeen but by GOD's particular permiſſion; which favour one Colabah pretended to have received, in the reign of the Khalif Moawiyah [a]: and another planted by the Molâhidah, or Iſmaelians, a race of princes, called by the Europeans, Aſſaſſins, in a valley in Curdiſtân; which was deſigned, by its delightfulneſs, to raviſh the perſons to whom it was ſhewn, and make them believe it was in the prince's power to place them in paradiſe; and in hopes of that felicity, to engage them in an implicit obedience to all his commands, and to commit any villany, which he ſhould judge conducing to his deſigns.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

Nor were the antient heathens themſelves without ſome obſcure tradition concerning a paradiſe, or rather ſeveral paradiſes, in the earth; but they generally placed them out of our continent; in the ocean, or beyond it, or in another hemiſphere; as the garden of the Heſperides, the Fortunate Iſlands, Ogygia, and Taprobane [b], and the like; which as they were all characterized like ſo many paradiſes, ſo they were all ſeated out of

[x] Vid. BERNIER. [y] Vid. HYDE, ubi ſupra, c. x. p. 172, &c. [z] Vid. D'HERBELOT, ubi ſup. p. 378. [a] Vid. eund. p. 51, &c. [b] Vid. DIODOR. SIC. l. ii. p. 173.

(D) Div, in the Malabaric tongue, ſignifies an iſland.

(E) It is ſurprizing, that Mr. LE CLERC ſhould take Serendib for Madagaſcar (1).

(1) Comment in Gen. c. viii. p. 72.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

this continent by their geography and descriptions of them. From which tradition, and the general inclination of the christian fathers, as well as profane authors, to place paradise in the southern hemisphere, or beyond the equinoctial, a late learned man [c] was induced to believe the same thing; though he supposed the whole earth, before the fall, to be, in an eminent degree, paradisiacal.

SECT. II.

Of the fall of man.

Adam placed in paradise, and forbidden the tree of knowledge.

GOD having placed Adam, immediately after his formation, in the garden of Eden, whose situation we have been endeavouring to discover, to dress and to keep it, gave him leave to eat freely of the fruit of every tree in the garden, except only that of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which he strictly commanded him not to taste, under pain of death, the certain consequence of his disobedience [f].

He names the beasts and birds.

THE first thing which Adam did, after his introduction into paradise, and the very day of his creation, was to give names to all the beasts and birds which presented themselves before him, not only for that purpose [g], but to perform their homage, as it were, and make Adam sensible, that there was none among them fit to be a companion for him [h]. We might on this occasion say something of the original of speech, did we not reserve that enquiry for a more proper place.

Takes Eve to wife.

AFTER this, GOD having formed Eve out of the side of Adam, as he slept, brought her to him, who knowing her to be bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, took her for his wife, and lived with her, free from any sense of shame, though they were both naked [i].

The continuance of the state of innocence.

HOW long they continued in this happy condition, is very uncertain; it is probable, they did not immediately transgress the divine command, but it should seem, by the narration of Moses, that their fall was not long after their creation. The Jews in general, and most of the christian fathers, believe it to have been on the very day they were created [k]; but this is next to impossible; for a day would be a great deal too short for the several actions, that must on that supposition have been comprised in it. Besides, GOD himself, after the sixth day was past, declared (at the end of the preceding days) every thing to be very good [l]; which is not reconcilable with truth, if ſin, the greateſt evil, had then entered into the world. Some therefore conjectured, that this calamity happened the eighth day [m], and others the tenth of the world's age; ſuppoſing, that in commemoration thereof the great day of expiation, being the tenth day of the year, was inſtituted in after-times [n]. If we can ſubſcribe to the opinion of thoſe who make a day and a year to have been the ſame before the fall [o], there is indeed no difficulty in ſuppoſing it even on the ſixth day. Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

[c] Dr. BURNET in his Theory, l. ii c. 7. [f] Genes. ii. 15, &c [g] Genes ii. 19. [h] Ibid. ver. 20. [i] Ibid ver. 21, &c. [k] Vid. EDWARDS's survey, Vol. I.

thing

THE fall of man is ſuccinctly related by Moſes, in the following manner [p]; that the ſerpent, being more ſubtil than any beaſt of the field, aſked the woman, whether it was true, that GOD had not granted her and her huſband leave to eat of every tree of the garden? to which ſhe anſwered, that GOD had allowed them to eat of all, except only the fruit of the tree in the midſt of the garden; which he commanded they ſhould not taſte, nor ſo much as touch, leſt they ſhould die. The ſerpent replied, that they ſhould not die; for God knew the virtue of the tree, and that ſo ſoon as they eat of it their eyes would be opened, and they become like gods, knowing good and evil. Whereupon Eve, ſeeing the fruit tempting to the view, and deſirable to make one wiſe, took of the fruit of it, and eat; and gave alſo to her huſband of it, and he did eat. Immediately the eyes of both were opened, and they, knowing they were naked, ſewed fig-leaves together, and made themſelves aprons. After this, Adam and Eve, hearing the voice of GOD, walking in the garden in the cool of the day, hid themſelves among the trees; but on GOD's calling for Adam, he excuſed himſelf for not appearing, becauſe he was naked. Upon this, GOD demanded of him, who it was that told him he was naked, and whether he had diſobeyed his command, in eating the forbidden fruit? Adam did not encreaſe his guilt by denying it, but confeſſed, that the woman had offered him the fruit, and he had taſted it. She being examined likewiſe, acknowledged what ſhe had done, but ſaid, that the ſerpent had ſeduced and deceived her. GOD then proceeded to judgment: he firſt curſed the ſerpent above all beaſts, and condemned him to go on his belly, and eat the duſt; adding, that he would put enmity between him and the woman, and their ſeveral off-ſpring; and that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head, who ſhould bruiſe the other's heel. The fall, as related by Moſes.

[l] Geneſ. i. 31. [m] EDWARDS, ubi ſupra [n] Vid. USSER, ad ann. mundi, 1. & BAYLE. Dict Hiſt. Art. Abel, Rem. A. [o] Vid. WHISTON's Theory, l. 2. p. 96, &c. [p] Geneſ. iii. 1, &c.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

heel. The woman was punished with the pain of child-birth, and put in subjection to her husband; and as to the man, GOD cursed the ground for his sake, declaring, that it should bring forth thorns and thistles, and that he should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, till he returned to the dust from whence he was taken. And at last, God, having cloathed them both with skins, turned them out of the garden, lest they should take of the tree of life, and eat and live for ever: and to prevent any attempt to return to their former habitation, he placed cherubims at the east of the garden, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to guard the passage to the tree of life.

Some objections to the letter of that relation.

THIS concise account being, at first view, incumbred with some improbabilities, several learned and pious men have been inclined to believe, the whole ought to be taken in an allegorical sense, and not according to the strictness of the letter; alledging for their excuse, that the antients, and particularly the eastern nations, had two different ways of delivering their divinity and philosophy, a popular, and a mysterious, or hidden one: of which dubious sort of stile the scripture often makes use in explaining natural things; sometimes in accommodating itself to the capacities of the people, and at other times to the real, but more vailed truth; and that, to obviate the many difficulties which occur in the literal history of this sad catastrophe, the safest way is, to understand it as a parabolical story, under which the real circumstances are disguised and concealed, as a mystery not fit to be more explicitly declared.

THE first objection made to the letter of this history is in relation to the serpent, and particularly the improbability of his having the use of speech, and rational discourse; for to suppose an evil spirit, or the devil, made use of the organs of this animal, has no foundation in the text of Moses, who attributes the seduction of Eve to the natural craftiness of the serpent only. Besides, the very speech of such an animal, if Eve had taken it to be dumb, must have so frighted her, that she would scarce have staid and entered into a conference with it. And if the serpent had originally the gift of speech, but lost it, as a punishment of his crime in seducing the woman, Moses would surely not have passed it over in silence, and mentioned so small a penalty, as going on his belly and licking the dust; the meaning of which words it is not easy to explain, unless we say, that the serpent did before walk upright, or on four feet; for if he crept from the beginning, it seems ridiculous to impose, as a punishment for a crime, what he was by nature subject to.

As to the trees, the nature of them both seem to have been very extraordinary: the tree of life, it is said, had the virtue to prolong life considerably, if not for ever. But if the longævity, or immortality of men had depended only on one tree, what if Adam had not sinned? How could his posterity, when they were dispersed over the face of the whole earth, have been able to come and gather fruit from this tree? Or how could one tree have sufficed all mankind? The nature of the tree of knowledge is still more difficult to conceive; it seems to have instilled into our first parents a new sense of shame and modesty, to which, before the fall, they were utter strangers. But a very different virtue is intimated to have been in the tree, that on eating of it a man became as a GOD, knowing good and evil. Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

SOME further objections have been also made to this history; as the slightness of the crime for which so terrible a punishment has been laid on mankind (for which reason some have thought Moses's design in this relation was to authorize the rigour of his own laws); the improbability of Adam and Eve's sewing fig-leaves together without thread or needle, and of GOD's making them coats of skins, and consequently by himself, or (as is more decent to suppose) by an angel, killing and fleaing the animals; and the needless precaution of placing cherubims to guard the entrance of the garden, lest the exiles should endeavour to repossess themselves of it by fraud or force [q].

CONCLUDING therefore, that these things will not bear a literal construction, an allegorical or figurative sense has been put on this whole account: and it is pretended, that the history of the fall exhibits the defection of the soul; the serpent represents concupiscence; the man, to whom he durst not apply himself, is the picture of reason; and the woman, whom he so easily seduced and overcame, is the emblem of sense; and so on [r].

The literal sense defended.

BUT though it cannot be denied, that some of the antient philosophers affected such an allegorical way of writing, to conceal their notions from the vulgar, and keep their learning within the bounds of their own school, yet it is apparent, Moses had no such design; and as he pretends only to relate matters of fact, just as they happened, without art, or disguise, it cannot be supposed, but that this history of the fall is to be taken in a literal sense, as well as the rest of his writings.

[q] Sic vacat exiguis rebus adesse Deo. Vid. BURNET. Archæol. l. 2. c. 7. See also PHIL. JUD. de mundi opificio, p. 36. MAIMON. More Nevoch. Part II. c. 30. [r] Vid. SAURIN's Dissertations.

As

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

The tempter was the devil, who abused the body of the serpent.

As to the particular objections which have been mentioned, and first, as to the serpent; it is answered, that as Moses contents himself with relating facts as they appeared, without any comment or explication; he makes the serpent, it is true, who was the visible instrument, to have been the seducer of the woman, and says nothing of the latent efficient cause: for which reason some of the antient Jews were of opinion, that the whole passage is to be understood of a real serpent, which creature they suppose had originally the gift of reason and speech; so that Eve might well have understood him (F). Others, thinking it too difficult of belief, have imagined, that it was not a real serpent, but only the devil under that name: but this opinion is no less liable to exception. For though the devil is frequently stiled in scripture the serpent, and the old serpent, yet why he should be called the most subtil beast of the field, we cannot conceive; neither will the punishment inflicted on the serpent suffer us to doubt but that a serpent's body, at least, was employed in the transaction.

THE most common therefore, and indeed the only probable opinion is, that it was the devil, some wicked and malicious spirit, (probably the chief of those beings) who envied the happiness of mankind, and was thereupon resolved to bring them into the same miserable condition with himself, and his apostate companions; and that, to effect his purpose, he made use of a serpent's body (G), as the propereſt organ by which to carry on his fraud with success. And this seems reasonable, not only from the improbability of a brute beast's over-reaching mankind in their highest pitch of understanding, but from the attestation of other parts of scripture, where the devil is called the old serpent[t]; and is by our saviour himself said to have been a murderer from the beginning, or the first creation, alluding to his mischievous destruction of mankind at that

[t] Revel. xii. 9. Ibid. xx. 2.

(F) JOSEPHUS supposes, that all creatures at that time used the same language, and that the serpent, conversing familiarly with Adam and Eve, excited by envy of their happiness, maliciously persuaded the woman to taste of the tree of knowledge; for which among other punishments, he was deprived of the use of speech, and of his feet, and obliged ever after to crawl upon the ground (1). Of the same opinion are ABEN-EZRA, and others.

(G) The Arabs, before Mohammed believed, that the devils were transformed into serpents (2).

(1) Antiq. 1. c. 1. §. 4. (2) Reland. de Rel. Moham. l. 2. p. 271.

time:

time: the author of the book of Wisdom, who was well acquainted with the doctrines of the Jewish church, also telling us, that by the envy of the devil death came into the world [u].

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

WHY the devil should chuse the body of a serpent, rather than that of any other creature, was probably on account of that subtilty attributed to him by Moses; which may not, perhaps, so much denote the craft and insidiousness, as the familiar and insinuating nature of this creature (H). That the serpent before the fall was mild and gentle, and more familiar with man than any other creature; and that he did not then creep on the ground, but went erect (I), and had by his engaging behaviour gained, in some measure, the good will of our parents, is not only the sentiment of both Jews [x] and Christians [y], but seems likewise to have some foundation of scripture; for when GOD says, that he will put enmity between the serpent and the woman, and between his seed and her seed, it must be implied, that there was some kind of friendship between them before.

Why he made choice of that creature.

IT is no way unreasonable therefore to suppose, that this creature was beloved both by Adam and Eve: she especially might be delighted with it; she laid it perhaps in her bosom, adorned her neck with its windings, or made it a bracelet for her arms. So that its being so intimate with the woman, made it the properer instrument for the devil's purpose, who sliding into it, might wantonly play before her, until he insensibly brought her to the forbidden tree, and then twisting round its branches, might take of the fruit and eat, to shew her, by experience, that there was nothing of death contained in it, before he began to bespeak her; and his speech might be the less surprising to her, because she might probably think, (as he might positively affirm) that this new acquired faculty proceeded from the virtue of the fruit.

[u] Wisd. ii 24. [x] JOSEPH. Antiq. ubi supra. [y] BAZIL. Homil. de Paradiso. DAMASCEN. de Orthodox. Fid. lib. 2. c. 10.

(H) The Mohammedans have a tradition, that the devil, offering to go into paradise to tempt Adam, was not admitted by the guard. Whereupon he begged of the animals, one after another, to carry him in, that he might speak to Adam and his wife; but they all refused him except the serpent, who took him between two of his teeth, and so introduced him (3).

(I) The Mohammedans also say, that the serpent was then of a beautiful form, and not in the shape he now bears (4).

(3) See Marracc. in Alcoran. p. 22. (4) Vid. ibid.

BUT

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

Of what kind the serpent probably was.

BUT this conjecture is still more probable, if we will but allow, that the serpent, whose body the devil possessed, was not of a common ordinary species, but something like that flying fiery sort, which, as we are told, are bred in Arabia and Egypt. They are of a shining yellowish colour like brass, and by the motion of their wings, and vibration of their tails, reverberating the sun-beams, make a glorious appearance. Now if the serpent, whose body the devil abused, was of this kind (though perhaps of a species far more glorious) it was a proper creature for his purpose: for these serpents are called in scripture Seraphs or Seraphim[z], and gave name to those bright angelical beings, which we commonly understand by that appellation: it being very probable, from the representations of them tolerated in the Jewish church, that the angels, when they administred to Adam and Eve, were wont to put on certain splendid forms; some of them the form of Cherubim, or beautiful flying oxen, and others the shape of Seraphim, winged and shining serpents. The devil therefore might usurp the organs of one of these shining serpents, which, by his art and skill in natural causes, he might improve into such a surpassing brightness, as to represent to Eve the angelical appearance, or Shechinah (K), to which she was accustomed; and having done this, it was no wonder, that he so easily deceived her.

HOWEVER this be, it is reasonable to suppose, that it was some beautiful creature, whom Eve took to be an angel that wished her well, while he discoursed with her. For it is impossible to conceive, that she should be so simple and ignorant as to think that beasts could speak, much less that they knew more of GOD's mind than herself: nor seems it credible that she could be deceived, but by a creature which appeared so gloriously as to make her mistake it for an heavenly minister, who might come to explain to her the divine command. And if we observe in what manner the tempter addresses himself to her (L), we shall find this supposition confirmed.

IT

[z] Numb. xxi. 6.

(K) This seems to be the opinion of TERTULLIAN, when he tells us, that Eve gave attention to the serpent, as to the son of GOD, &c. (1).

(L) The learned ABRAVANEL supposes the whole to be only dumb shew, and that the serpent did not speak at all, neither did Eve say any thing to it; but that being a very nimble and active creature, it got upon the tree of knowledge, took, and eat of the fruit

(1) De Præscript. Hæret. p. 220.

IT is not improbable [a], that the ſeducer, before he ſpoke to Eve, repreſented himſelf as one of the heavenly court, who came to congratulate the happineſs that GOD had beſtowed on them in paradiſe, which was ſo great, that he could not eaſily believe he had denied them any of the fruit of the garden: he deſired therefore to be ſatisfied from her own mouth of the truth of what he pretended to have heard; and as the woman acquainted him with the whole prohibition, he firſt ſuggeſts, that ſhe miſtook the meaning of it, that death could not be the puniſhment of ſo ſmall a fault; and, to flatter her ambition, deludes her with a falſe promiſe, that on eating the fruit, which he pretended had a ſovereign quality to illuminate the underſtanding, and advance the other faculties of the ſoul, ſhe and her huſband ſhould immediately become as angels, nay, as Gods, and their happineſs be inconceivably great, and independent on any but themſelves.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

His accoſting Eve.

THIS ſeems to have been the purport of the ſerpent's words, by which he gained the ear of Eve; and ſhe, allured by the beauty of the fruit, and puſhed on by curioſity and vanity, could not reſiſt the temptation: and when ſhe had eat, was ſo far from being ſenſible of her condition, that fancying herſelf already in poſſeſſion of the chimerical happineſs which had been promiſed her, ſhe invited her huſband to partake with her. And he, it is probable, after ſome reluctance, was prevailed on, by her charms and endearments, to violate the command, contrary to his ſenſe of duty, and to ſhare the fate, which GOD's indignation, for her tranſgreſſion, ſhould bring upon her [b].

The puniſhment of the ſerpent reaſonable.

THE ſentence denounced on the ſerpent cannot ſeem ſtrange, if we conſider how different his original form was from his preſent, and that GOD probably intended the debaſement of that once glorious creature, not ſo much to expreſs his indignation againſt the beaſt, as to make it a monument of man's unhappy fall, and a teſtimony of his diſpleaſure againſt ſin: nor could this be unjuſt; the mere inſtrument of an enormous crime being deteſtable, and often deſtroyed by human laws; and this great change in the ſerpent perhaps not felt, fruit; that Eve, having ſeen it ſeveral times do ſo, and not die, concluded with herſelf, that the ſaid fruit did not occaſion death, and that it might not only be grateful to the taſte, but procure them that knowledge, which GOD ſeemed to have grudged them (2).

[a] See Biſhop PATRICK's Commentary.

[b] See STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 284, &c.

(2) Stackhouſe's Body of Divinity, p. 287.

at

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

at leaſt not diſtinguiſhed, or conceived by him as a misfortune [c].

The account of the two trees not incredible.

In reference to the two trees, which ſeem to be ſo very extraordinary, it is but reaſonable to imagine, there was a wide difference between the ſtate of innocence and our preſent condition; and conſequently, that there were ſome things conſonant to the firſt ſtate, which are very incongruous to our preſent. Now of thoſe Moſes has mentioned but a few, and among them theſe trees. As to the tree of life, nothing can be more agreeable to a ſtate of innocence, which ſeems to imply a ſtate of immortality; and ſomething was requiſite to make men immortal, when their bodies were not ſo; and what can be ſuppoſed more effectual than the fruit of ſuch a tree? When God had deſigned, that mens bodies ſhould never yield to death, it ſeems but reaſonable he ſhould direct them to the eating of ſuch a fruit, whoſe juice was of that ſpirituous nature, as to impregnate their blood with an indefatigable vigour, and to keep them up in conſtant youth, without pain, diſeaſe, or weakneſs, till ſuch time as he ſhould tranſlate them to a better world (M). Whether this tree was the only one of the ſpecies is uncertain; but if it was, it is probable, that, had there been no lapſe, many of them would have been tranſplanted to other parts of the world, as the innocent off-ſpring had encreaſed; and when mankind had ſinned, it is likely, God deſtroyed this ſpecies out of the world, as now grown uſeleſs and inconſiſtent with the curſe and puniſhment of man. And of this tree the heathens ſeem to have had ſome traditional notion, when they ſpeak of the Nectar and Ambroſia which maintained the immortality of their gods, and Moly, which was the great Panacea, or univerſal medicine celebrated by the poets [d].

The tree of knowledge of good and evil is conceived to have been ſo called, either becauſe it had really a virtue to [c] Vid. Nicholl's Conf. Vol. I. [d] Idem, ibid.

(M) It is the joint opinion of the beſt antient writers, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian, that in caſe our firſt parents had continued in their obedience, they would, after ſuch a time of trial, as the divine wiſdom ſhould think convenient, have been tranſlated, or removed from earth to heaven; and that their poſterity likewiſe would have been liable to no ſorrow or miſery of any kind, but poſſeſſed of conſtant happineſs, and, in their ſeveral courſes and ſucceſſions, taken up into a heavenly paradiſe. (1).

(1) See Bull's State of man before the Fall. Barcepha de parad. Part I. c. 22.

open

open man's underſtanding, and to make him diſtinguiſh between good and evil; or elſe becauſe the eating of it would eventually teach him the difference between the good of obedience and the evil of tranſgreſſion [e]: but others ſuppoſe it ſo called, merely from the devil's pretending it had a virtue to confer knowledge, having received its name from the unfortunate deception; though it be in a preceding paſſage, called the tree of knowledge of good and evil, by way of anticipation: and as to GOD's ſaying, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, that is taken to be a bitter irony, to upbraid man with his fooliſh diſobedience and diſappointment [f]. Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

BUT what particular tree this tree of knowledge was, has been a matter of much conjecture; the vine, the apple, the common, and Indian fig-tree [g] (N), and wheat though no tree, have

[e] Vid. BARCEPHAM de Parad. part I. c. 19. EDWARDS's Survey, Vol. I. [f] Vid. NICHOLLS, ubi ſupra. [g] Vid. BARCEPHAM, ubi ſup. p. 48.

(N) Goropius Becanus is moſt confident, it was the Indian fig-tree; which notion, however, he did not borrow from Moſes Barcephas, as Sir Walter Raleigh ſuppoſes (2). The chief reaſons urged why it ſhould be this tree, are 1. The goodneſs of the fruit, and fairneſs of the tree. 2. The breadth of its leaves, very commodious for hiding the nakedneſs of Adam and Eve, which it is ſuppoſed, they would cover as ſoon as ever they perceived it; and therefore from the forbidden tree, that being the next at hand. 3. The largeneſs and thickneſs of the tree, very proper to conceal them, as they imagined, from the preſence of GOD. But here Becanus, from the words of the vulgate verſion, in medio ligni, imagined they hid themſelves in the body of the tree itſelf, though the ſtem of the Indian fig-tree, notwithſtanding the extravagant ſize given it by ſome authors, be not very large. As Sir Walter Raleigh, who had himſelf ſeen many of theſe trees in America, has given a deſcription of them, we think it worth while to tranſcribe it. "They grow, ſays he, "in moiſt grounds, and in this manner: After they are firſt ſhot "up, ſome twenty or thirty foot in length (ſome more, ſome "leſs, according to the ſoil), they ſpread a very large top, having no bough, nor twig in the trunk, or ſtem; for from the "utmoſt end of the head-branches, there iſſueth out a gummy "juice, which hangeth downward like a cord, or ſinew, and "within a few months reaches the ground; which it no ſooner "toucheth but it taketh root, and then being filled both from "the top-boughs, and from his own proper root, this cord mak-

(2) Barcepha takes it indeed, to have been the fig-tree; but does not join the word Indian to it, as we can find. "eth have all put in their claims (O); and though the generality are for the common fig-tree, yet what Moses has so industriously concealed, is above the power of any to discover. Philo the Jew, according to his custom, allegorizes what is said of both these trees, supposing, that no such ever were, nor ever will be in the world [m] (P).

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

The trial, by forbidding a fruit, rational,

That the trial of man's obedience should be by such a prohibition, as is mentioned by Moses, seems perfectly rational, and adapted to the state of innocence; no moral precept could have been at all proper for that purpose, because there was then scarce a possibility of their transgressing any such: it must therefore have been some indifferent action, neither good, nor evil in itself, but so far only, as it was commanded, or forbidden. And what so natural and agreeable to the state of our first parents (considering they were to live all their lives in a garden) as the forbidding them to eat of the fruit of a certain tree in that garden? a tree near at hand, and which might give them every moment an opportunity of shewing their observance of the divine command, by their abstaining from it [n].

[m] Philo Jud. de mundi opificio, p. 35. [n] See Stackhouse's Body of Divinity, p. 281. Nicholls's Confer. ubi supra.

" eth itself a tree exceeding hastily. From the utmost boughs of " these young trees, there fall again the like cords, which in " one year and less, (in that world of perpetual spring), become " also trees of the bigness of the nether part of a lance, and as " strait as nature and art can make any thing, casting such a " shade, and making such a grove, as no other tree in the world " can do. Now one of these trees considered with all his young " ones, may, indeed, shroud four hundred, or four thousand " horsemen, if they please; for they cover whole vallies—— " But that they bear any such huge leaves, or any such delicate " fruit, I could never find (3)."

(O) The Mohammedans have the like different opinions among them relating to this tree; some affirm, it was an ear of wheat; others a fig-tree; and a third party a vine (4).

(P) Those who admire allegorical interpretations, will have the forbidden fruit to have been no other than the sensual act of generation, for which the punishment inflicted on the woman was the pain of child-birth (5). But this opinion has not the least foundation in the words of Moses; especially if we consider, that Adam knew not his wife till after their expulsion out of Paradise.

(3) Hist of the World, Part I. Book I. c. 4, § 2. (4) Vid. Maracc. in Alc. p. 22. (5) Vid Barcepham de Parad. ubi sup. Leon. Hebreu, Philosophie d'amour, Dial. 3. p. 620, &c.

And

AND this takes off the objection againſt the puniſhment, inflicted on man for his diſobedience, as too ſevere, and no way proportionable to the offence; for we are deceived, if we ſuppoſe, that good and evil is only in the nature of the thing, and not in the commands and prohibitions of GOD. And, conſidering this crime to have been a downright rebellion againſt GOD, and committed againſt the cleareſt conviction of conſcience, with other aggravating circumſtances, it will appear to have been a crime ſo heinous, that nothing now-a-days can be ſuppoſed to reſemble it.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

And the puniſhment conſequently juſt.

No ſooner was the intoxicating juice of the forbidden tree gone off, and the criminals began to return to their ſenſes again, but the eyes (Q) of their underſtanding were opened, and they perceived their own nakedneſs (R), and the foul degradation of their nature; to conceal which, as far as they were able, they twiſted, or platted the flexible branches of the fig-tree round their waiſts, ſo that the broad leaves hanging down might ſerve them inſtead of aprons: for we muſt not imagine, that they ſewed the leaves together, as taylors do their cloath, which is more than the words of Moſes imply (S).

The circumſtances of the aprons and coats explained.

JUDGMENT

(Q) The expreſſion, that the eyes of them were opened, occaſioned a popular belief, that Adam and Eve were blind till they had tranſgreſſed; which imagination St. Auſtin has taken the pains to refute (1).

(R) By perceiving their nakedneſs, a late writer conceives no more is meant, than that they were ſenſible of their tranſgreſſion. Thus, after the golden calf was conſecrated, Moſes is ſaid to have ſeen the people naked; (Exod xxxii. 25.) And in the new teſtament γυμνὸς is ſometimes taken for a ſinner. Others indeed ſuppoſe, that the fruit of this forbidden tree provoked our firſt parents to luſt, and ſome indecent motions of the body; for, according to the modeſty of the Hebrew tongue, nakedneſs may well enough denote an irregulal appetite to venereal pleaſures (and this is the opinion of St. Auſtin mentioned hereafter): But our author thinks this conjecture is without any manner of foundation, and that it is hard to conceive, how Adam and Eve ſhould not know themſelves to be naked before their fall; or why they ſhould be more aſhamed of their nakedneſs then, than they were before. When they were the only inhabitants of the world, their bed under the canopy of heaven, was equally as chaſt as if it had been covered and encloſed; and therefore this nakedneſs of theirs muſt, in his opinion, be underſtood in a figurative ſenſe (2).

(S) The original word חפר, which is tranſlated Sewed, ſignifies no more than to put together, to apply, or fit; in which have all put in their claims (O); and though the generality are for the common fig-tree, yet what Moses has so industriously concealed, is above the power of any to discover. Philo the Jew, according to his custom, allegorizes what is said of both these trees, supposing, that no such ever were, nor ever will be in the world [m] (P).

(1) Auguſt. de civit. Dei. l 14. c. 17. (2) Le Clerc's Diſſertat.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

The trial, by forbidding a fruit, rational,

THAT the trial of man's obedience should be by such a prohibition, as is mentioned by Moses, seems perfectly rational, and adapted to the state of innocence; no moral precept could have been at all proper for that purpose, because there was then scarce a possibility of their transgressing any such: it must therefore have been some indifferent action, neither good, nor evil in itself, but so far only, as it was commanded, or forbidden. And what so natural and agreeable to the state of our first parents (considering they were to live all their lives in a garden) as the forbidding them to eat of the fruit of a certain tree in that garden? a tree near at hand, and which might give them every moment an opportunity of shewing their observance of the divine command, by their abstaining from it [n].

[m] PHILO Jud. de mundi opificio, p. 35. [n] See STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 281. NICHOLLS's Confer. ubi supra.

"eth itself a tree exceeding hastily. From the utmost boughs of "these young trees, there fall again the like cords, which in "one year and less, (in that world of perpetual spring), become "also trees of the bigness of the nether part of a lance, and as "fruit as nature and art can make any thing, casting such a "shade, and making such a grove, as no other tree in the world "can do. Now one of these trees considered with all his young "ones, may, indeed, shroud four hundred, or four thousand "horsemen, if they please; for they cover whole vallies—— "But that they bear any such huge leaves, or any such delicate "fruit, I could never find (3)."

(O) The Mohammedans have the like different opinions among them relating to this tree; some affirm, it was an ear of wheat; others a fig-tree; and a third party a vine (4).

(P) Those who admire allegorical interpretations, will have the forbidden fruit to have been no other than the sensual act of generation, for which the punishment inflicted on the woman was the pain of child-birth (5). But this opinion has not the least foundation in the words of Moses; especially if we consider, that Adam knew not his wife till after their expulsion out of Paradise.

(3) Hist of the World, Part I. Book I. c. 4, § 2. (4) Vid. Marace. in Alc. p. 22. (5) Vid Barcepham de Parad. ubi sup. Leon. Hebreu, Philosophie d'amour, Dial. 3. p. 620, &c.

AND

AND this takes off the objection againſt the puniſhment, inflicted on man for his diſobedience, as too ſevere, and no way proportionable to the offence; for we are deceived, if we ſuppoſe, that good and evil is only in the nature of the thing, and not in the commands and prohibitions of GOD. And, conſidering this crime to have been a downright rebellion againſt GOD, and committed againſt the cleareſt conviction of conſcience, with other aggravating circumſtances, it will appear to have been a crime ſo heinous, that nothing now-a-days can be ſuppoſed to reſemble it.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

And the puniſhment conſequently juſt.

No ſooner was the intoxicating juice of the forbidden tree gone off, and the criminals began to return to their ſenſes again, but the eyes (Q) of their underſtanding were opened, and they perceived their own nakedneſs (R), and the foul degradation of their nature; to conceal which, as far as they were able, they twiſted, or platted the flexible branches of the fig-tree round their waiſts, ſo that the broad leaves hanging down might ſerve them inſtead of aprons: for we muſt not imagine, that they ſewed the leaves together, as taylors do their cloath, which is more than the words of Moſes imply (S).

The circumſtances of the aprons and coats explained.

JUDGMENT

(Q) The expreſſion, that the eyes of them were opened, occaſioned a popular belief, that Adam and Eve were blind till they had tranſgreſſed; which imagination St. Auſtin has taken the pains to refute (1).

(R) By perceiving their nakedneſs, a late writer conceives no more is meant, than that they were ſenſible of their tranſgreſſion. Thus, after the golden calf was conſecrated, Moſes is ſaid to have ſeen the people naked; (Exod xxxii. 25.) And in the new teſtament γυμνὸς is ſometimes taken for a ſinner. Others indeed ſuppoſe, that the fruit of this forbidden tree provoked our firſt parents to luſt, and ſome indecent motions of the body; for, according to the modeſty of the Hebrew tongue, nakedneſs may well enough denote an irregulal appetite to venereal pleaſures (and this is the opinion of St. Auſtin mentioned hereafter): But our author thinks this conjecture is without any manner of foundation, and that it is hard to conceive, how Adam and Eve ſhould not know themſelves to be naked before their fall; or why they ſhould be more aſhamed of their nakedneſs then, than they were before. When they were the only inhabitants of the world, their bed under the canopy of heaven, was equally as chaſt as if it had been covered and encloſed; and therefore this nakedneſs of theirs muſt, in his opinion, be underſtood in a figurative ſenſe (2).

(S) The original word תָּפַר, which is tranſlated Sewed, ſignifies no more than to put together, to apply, or fit; in which

(1) Auguſt. de civit. Dei. l 14. c. 17. (2) Le Clerc's Diſſertat.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

JUDGMENT being passed on all that were concerned in this unhappy affair, it is said, that GOD, before he drove Adam and Eve out of paradise, cloathed them with skins, which it is conceived is not necessarily to be understood, as if GOD himself, or even an angel, made the coats; it being common for the Hebrew tongue verbally to attribute things to GOD, which are not done by his immediate act, but by his direction, or even by the permission of his ordinary providence. So that it is probable, Adam and Eve only received instructions how to make them [o].

The cherubim and flaming sword, what.

As to the cherubim and flaming sword, placed to guard the way of the tree of life, there are several opinions concerning them. They who place paradise in the southern hemisphere, conceive the sword to have been no more than the torrid zone, which, in the parallel situation the earth is then supposed to have had, must have been a region of flame intolerably hot like a furnace, and consequently impassable; its encompassing the whole earth sufficiently answering the Mosaic description [p], that it turned every way. Others have thought it to have been a wall, or circle of fire, encompassing paradise [q] (T); and that this flame was an accension of some inflammable matter round about the garden, which excluded all comers to it, till the beauty of it was defaced: which opinion may be more probable to them who place paradise about Babylon, where there is such an abundance of naphtha and bitumen, and where there are fields, which even yet, at some time of the year, seem all on fire. And if it be objected, that the cherubim had nothing to do with such a wall; it is answered, that it is usual for the scriptures to express all extraordinary works of GOD by angels; as to call a plague, or famine, a destroying angel; and the like [r]. Some Rabbins [s] sense it is used Job xvi. 15. and Ezek. xiii. 18. And עלה, which we render leaves, signifies also branches of trees, such as were fit to make booths, or bowers; Nehem. viii. 15. (1).

[o] Ibid. [p] TERTULLIAN. Apolog. cap. 47. Vid. BURNET's Theory, Book II. c. 7. Theor. Sacr. Telluris, l. 2. c. 6. [q] Pseudo-Anselm. Elucid. c. 15. [r] NICHOLLS, ubi sup. [s] Vid. MAIMONID. More Nevoch. p. 1. cap. 49.

(T) The words commonly rendred flaming sword, are in the original the flame of cutting, or division, or a dividing flame; for the same word which signifies a sword, signifies also division; and is in the new testament translated both ways (2).

(1) Dr. Nicholls's Conf. ubi supra. (2) See Matth. x. 34. & Luke xii. 51. Nicholls, ubi supra.

are

are of opinion, that this flaming ſword was an angel; which they found on that paſſage, where it is ſaid, that GOD maketh his angels ſpirits, and his miniſters a flaming fire [t]. And hence it has been imagined, that this flaming ſword, which was eſteemed by the Jews a ſecond angel, was of a different kind from the cherubim, viz. a Seraph, or flaming angel, in the form of a flying fiery ſerpent, whoſe body vibrated in the air with luſtre, and may be fitly deſcribed by the image of ſuch a ſword [u].

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

HAVING thus examined the circumſtances of the fall, it may be proper to conſider the effects it had upon our firſt parents and their poſterity, and alſo upon the ground, which was curſed for their ſake.

The effects of the fall on man, and on the ground.

THE unhappy pair did not indeed die immediately, but they became ſubject to death, which continually hung over their heads; the time they had to live, being but as the ſpace between a criminal's condemnation and his execution. They had loſt GOD's favour, and forfeited paradiſe: the neceſſaries of life were now to be gotten by hard labour of the man, and child-birth was to be attended with great pain in the woman: ſo that the remembrance of their paſt happineſs, and the proſpect of the innumerable miſeries, to which they had made themſelves and their off-ſpring obnoxious, muſt needs fill them with regret and deſpair. For ſince they could not by generation tranſmit any thing to their poſterity, but what they had themſelves; their deſcendants were deſtined in like manner to undergo the troubles of life, and the pains and agonies of death, the neceſſary conſequences of Adam's tranſgreſſion: nor is there in this any injuſtice, we being thereby deprived only of what he had no title to. But that we are thereby become the objects of GOD's wrath, and deſerving eternal damnation, by the imputation of the guilt of Adam's ſin, (which is the doctrine of St. Auſtin and his diſciples, thence named Supralapſarians) has ſeemed to many a very harſh opinion, and to reflect on the goodneſs and juſtice of GOD.

As this is a point greatly controverted among divines [x], and foreign to our preſent deſign, we ſhall only ſay; that the general manifeſt depravity and corruption of human nature, ſo very different from what we muſt ſuppoſe it to have been in its original ſtate, would induce us to believe it the effect of our firſt parents tranſgreſſion; whereupon unruly paſſions and appetites got that ſuperiority over, and influence on, our wills, which reaſon alone ought to have; and this might be poſſibly occasioned, in some degree at least, by the infirmities which our bodies necessarily contracted, by proceeding from such a root, and by the great change brought on the earth, air, and other elements, by the curse. For whatever the antients have said of the plenty and happiness of the golden age, seems chiefly to have been some broken notions and traditions of man's first estate in paradise, and of that universal harmony wherein the world and all things would have continued, had not his fall introduced a change. The fruits of the earth were at first spontaneous, and the soil, without being torn and tormented, satisfied the wants and desires of man; but, upon his apostasy from GOD, as a punishment for his sin, GOD cursed the ground, which immediately brought forth thorns and thistles; for we must not suppose, with some, that the original fertility of the earth continued, till the destruction brought upon it by the universal deluge. The deluge was, indeed, the completion of the curse, but some considerable effects of it appeared before; otherwise how could Adam be said to eat bread in sorrow, and in the sweat of his face all the days of his life? As the earth was impoverished on man's transgression, so the air and other elements became disordered, in some measure unwholsome, and sometimes fatal. Hence proceeded famines, pestilences, earthquakes, storms, and all manner of natural calamities, which cause an innumerable variety of diseases and distempers [y].

[t] Pſalm. civ. 4. [u] TENNISON of Idolatry. [x] See STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 295, &c.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

BUT in order to give a more clear idea, in what degree and manner nature became impaired by the fall; it may be proper to consider the constitution of man's body, (for what concerns his soul is not properly within the compass of this design) and of the earth in that primitive state; and by what means they were reduced to their present condition.

The change in the constitution of man.

As to the constitution of man's body, it appears, that nakedness was then no inconvenience or shame, and consequently, there was no sense of any need to cover it. Those inclinations which provide for the propagation of mankind, were, it seems, so regular, and so entirely under the command of reason, that not so much as an apron was esteemed necessary to hide those parts, which all the world have since thought proper to conceal [z]. But some have imagined, that in case man had persevered in his state of innocence, there would have been no matrimonial commerce, but mankind would have

[y] Vid. STACKHOUSE, ubi sup.

[z] Vid. WHISTON's Theory, Book III. p. 238.

have been otherwiſe propagated (V); and this the antient fathers were inclined to believe, from their pre-poſſeſſion in favour of the merits and excellency of celibacy [a]. This opinion St. Auſtin combated by very ſtrong arguments [b], ſuch as the benediction of GOD, and his command to encreaſe and multiply; the diſtinction of the ſexes preceding the fall; and the abſurdity of ſuppoſing ſin to have been neceſſary for the propagation of mankind. Yet he agrees, that in the ſtate of innocence, the work of generation would have been carried on without any mixture of paſſion, or loſs of virginity; and that man would then have proceeded to the propagation of his ſpecies whenever he judged it requiſite, without any incitement of luſt. In the primitive ſtate alſo, the temper of the human body ſeems to have been more ſoft, pliable, and alterable, than now it is: ſome ſorts of fruits and food were able to cauſe a mighty change therein, either to fix and adapt it to its preſent condition, or diſcompoſe and diſorder it: thus the fruit of the tree of life had the virtue of rendering the body permanent and immortal, on the one hand; and that of the tree of knowledge, of bringing upon it diſeaſes, corruptions, and mortality, on the other; but the firſt effect of this latter fruit is ſuppoſed to have been the revolt of the parts ſubſervient to generation, which, it is pretended, appears from the ſhame which immediately ſeized thoſe who had taſted it (W). And, to ſay the truth, ſince man, in his fallen ſtate, was unable to conform himſelf to the dictates of reaſon, love was neceſſarily to be introduced into the world; for otherwiſe it is not conceived how mankind could have ſubſiſted: ſo that the paſſions were then raiſed, in order to produce men to do that to ſatisfy their appetites, which before they did merely from prudential conſiderations [c].

Year of the World. 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

[a] Vid. SALIAN. Annal. Tom. I. p. 174. CORNEL. a LAPIDE, in Gen. ii. BARCEPHA de Parad. part I. c. 25. [b] AUGUST. de Civit. Dei, l. 14 c. 21, &c. [c] Vid. BAYLE, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Eve, Rem. F.

(V) Paracelſus was ſo firmly perſuaded of this, that he maintained Adam and Eve to have been created without the parts of generation; which afterwards grew out of their bodies like excreſcences (1).

(W) Some Rabbins alſo ſeem to have attributed this to the natural quality of the forbidden fruit (2).

(1) Apud Voſſium de Philoſ. cap. 9. p. 71. (2) Vid. Bayle, Dict. Hiſt. Art. Eve. Rem. C.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

THERE was also a considerable difference between the condition of the woman before the fall, and that which she has since been in; particularly, she was then in a state of greater equality with the man, and little more subject to sorrow in the propagation of posterity than he [d]. Nay, the very animals seem to have been, at that time, in a state of greater capacities and operations; nearer approaching to reason and discourse, and partakers of higher degrees of perfection and happiness, than they have been ever since [e].

The change in the constitution of the earth, how effected, according to Dr. Burnet, WHEREIN the fecundity and amenity of the primitive earth consisted, and by what means it became so much altered for the worse, is difficult to be determined. It is indeed presently accounted for, if we have recourse to the divine interposition, and suppose, that the sterility of the earth, and malignity of the air, and the general depravation of nature was effected by GOD, or his subordinate agents. But to assign a probable natural cause of such effects is not so easy. Dr. Burnet's notion is, that the fertility and paradisiacal state of the first earth was entirely owing to a perpetual equinox, the consequence of the situation of its axis, which he supposed to have been then parallel to the axis of the ecliptic, in which it was carried about the sun with the other planets. And that it really had such a situation, he thinks needs no other proof than its own evidence; for it is the immediate result and common effect of gravity, or libration, that a body, left freely to itself in a fluid medium, should settle in such a posture as best answers to its gravitation; and the first earth being uniform, regular, and every way equally ballanced [f], there was no reason, why it should incline at one end, more than the other, toward the sun. And this position he supposes the earth kept till the deluge, when it was so broken and divided, according to his hypothesis, that it lost its equal poise; and the centre of its gravity changing, one pole became more inclined to the sun, and the other more removed from it, and so the parallel situation, which it had before, was changed to an oblique one; whence proceeded the variety of seasons, and those irregularities in the temperature of the air, which have since obtained [g]. But this does not account for the immediate effect of God's curse on the earth, which, as has been observed, must by no means be deferred so late as to the flood.

To avoid this difficulty, Mr. Whiston has supposed, that the earth in its primitive state had no diurnal motion about its own own axis, but only an annual motion about the sun; so that the sun and planets then rose in the west, and set in the east, contrary to what they have ever since done (X).

[d] Vid. WHISTON's Theory, Book III. p. 239. [e] Ibid. p. 240. [f] See the Introduction, p. 66, 67. [g] BURNET's Theory of the Earth, Book II. c. 3.

Year of the World, 1. Year Before Christ, 4305.

ON this supposition, as well as the former, there would also be a perpetual equinox through the world, which characters the fathers usually applied to the paradisiacal state, and the antient heathens to the golden age [h]. The great change therefore which was made in nature at the fall, he takes to be the commencing of a new motion, or rotation of the earth about its present axis: by this means the poles of the world, which to the first inhabitants of the earth (dwelling near the intersection of the antient ecliptic with the present northern tropic) were neither considerably elevated nor depressed, suddenly changed their situation; the northern pole appeared to be elevated above, and the southern depressed below, the horizon: and the course of the heavens seemed bent, or inclined to the southern parts of the world (Y). And the probable mechanical

And Mr. Whiston.

[h] Vid. BURNET's Theor. l. 2. c. 1. & 10. Archæol. l. 2. c. 5, & 6.

(X) This, he thinks, may have been the foundation of that story in Herodotus (1) who tells us, that the sun, in the space of eleven thousand three hundred and forty years, four times inverted his course, and rose in the west. But what he mainly depends on, is that discourse in Plato (2), where, relating some very antient traditions (as he expressly says they are, and delivered by our first parents to their posterity) about the primitive state of things, he says, that there was a great change made in the heavenly motions, the sun and other stars formerly setting in the same place where they now rise, and rising where they now set; which change he attributes to GOD, who sometimes directs the motion of the universe himself, and at other times, after so many periodical revolutions as he sees fitting, leaves it; whereupon it is, as it were, spontaneously carried about by a motion contrary to the former. And this change Plato reckons the greatest, and most entire of any, the heavenly bodies undergo.

(Y) The inclination of the earth is much insisted upon by the antients. Plutarch tells us, that Leucippus was of opinion the earth fell towards the south, because of the rareness of those parts; the northern regions being grown rigid and compact, while the southern were scorched, or on fire (3). Democritus and Empedocles gave nearly the same reason for it; and Diogenes and Anaxagoras specify the very time when this happened; viz. after the first coalition of the world, and the production of animals out mechanical cause of this commencement of the earth's diurnal motion, after its annual had continued some time, assigned by him is, the impulse of a comet, with little or no atmosphere, or of a central solid hitting obliquely upon the earth along some parts of its present equator: from which impulse both the annual orbit of the earth would be altered, and a vertiginous motion about a new and real axis would certainly commence. And he observes, that in all probability this comet was of the bigness of one of the small secondary, rather than of the large primary, planets; for otherwise, by its causing vast tides in the abyss, after it was passed by, it would have occasioned many more alterations in the earth, than we have reason to believe happened at that time[i] (Z).

(1) Herodot. l. 2. c. 142. (2) Plato, in Politic. p. 175. (3) Plut. de placit. philos. l. 3. c. 12.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

BUT besides the impression of this new motion, another effect of such a collision of a comet would be the change of the earth's orbit from an ellipsis, as it was before the fall, to a perfect circle. For Mr. Whiston supposes the reduction of the very oblong eccentrical orbit of the earth into a circular one, which he thinks it had before the deluge, was gradual, and not done all at once; the greatest part at the commencing of the Mosaic creation, and the rest at the commencing of the diurnal motion. All this being supposed, and that providence adjusted all circumstances, so as should be most for the advantage of the regions adjoining to paradise, where alone Adam and of the earth: and they thought this inclination was probably the effect of providence, on purpose that some parts of the world might become habitable, and others uninhabitable, by reason of the frigid, torrid, and temperate climates thereof (1).

[i] WHISTON's Theory, Book II. p. 98, &c.

(Z) That the diurnal motion did not begin till some time after the annual, Mr. Whiston imagines to be evinced from the late discovery (as it is called) of an internal magnet freely moving within the earth, and from which all the variations of the magnetic needle are supposed to arise. The poles of this interior magnet being, as they suppose, distant from the earth's axis, slowly change their places in respect of the external earth, by a motion westward: whence he concludes, that the inclosed magnet, or nucleus, has not attained the same velocity with the exterior parts in their diurnal revolution, because the impulse by which the diurnal motion was first impressed upon the external earth, has not yet been so perfectly communicated to the internal magnet, as to equal the first motion impressed and still preserved by the superior parts of the globe (2).

(1) Idem, ibid l. 2 c. 8. (2) Vid. Dr Halley's Theory of the variation of the magnetic needle, Philos. Trans. N°. 195.

the

the other creatures dwelt in this ſtate; we ſhall have the earth revolving in a moderately eccentrical ellipſis, without any diurnal rotation, about the ſun in the ſpace of a year; we ſhall have ſome diameter of the earth, which paſſed near paradiſe, parallel to the longer axis of its ellipſis, and the place of paradiſe reſpecting nearly the ſame fixed ſtars with the perihelion of the ellipſis. Which being again ſuppoſed, we may obſerve that as a circular orbit is much the beſt for a globe inhabited all round (as the earth was deſigned to be after the fall), that providing equally for the convenience of both hemiſpheres; ſo is this elliptic orbit the beſt for a globe inhabited but in one place, as the earth was in its primitive ſtate, this providing peculiarly for the happineſs of that particular ſpot, where alone the living part of the creation was to reſide. For the heat of the day-time would gradually increaſe before, and decreaſe after noon, but yet would never be over violent; becauſe the increaſe of the heat, by the ſun's riſing higher and higher above the horizon in the forenoon, or ſpring, would be prevented, in a great meaſure by the earth's real receding from him, and approaching nearer his aphelion during the ſame time: and vice verſâ in the afternoon, or ſummer, which would render the ſtate of the air more equal and uniform. And thus alſo the too long duration of the night would be entirely avoided: for the whole night-time would then bear a ſmall proportion to the day, and amount perhaps to no more than two months; out of which muſt be deducted the two twilights, each of near a fortnight, which would reduce the darkneſs of the night itſelf to about a ſingle month; out of which another fortnight is to be ſtill deducted for the time of the moon's being above the horizon, and enlightning the earth: ſo that at laſt, if the moon's crepuſcula be allowed for, as they ought to be, we ſhall ſcarce have a week of pure darkneſs in the whole year, to the great comfort and advantage of this truly paradiſiacal ſtate [k]; wherein there would be a conſtant warmth without the frequent interpoſition of cold; an air perfectly clear and homogeneous, and ſuſceptible of the utmoſt power of the ſolar heat, and the ſeaſons equable, or gradually diſtinguiſhed from one another, with other natural conſequences. But ſo ſoon as man had rendred himſelf unworthy of that happy ſtate, and GOD had pronounced a curſe on the ground, preſently the earth began a new and ſtrange motion, and revolved from weſt to eaſt upon its own axis: the ſucceſſion of day and night returned frequently, while the annual motion, performed on a different axis, diſtinguiſhed

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

[k] Ibid. p. 114, &c.

the

Year of the World, 1. Year before Christ, 4305.

the seasons, and, in conjunction with the diurnal, described the equator and the tropics; by which, and the polar circles, the face of the earth was distinguished into zones, with respect whereto the particular regions of the earth changed their situation; so that paradise, which was before near the middle or ecliptic, was now beyond the northern tropic. The figure of the earth, which was before truly spherical, degenerated into an oblate spheroid; the torrid zone rising about fifteen or sixteen miles upwards, and the frigid one subsiding as much downwards. The compages of the upper earth, and of its strata, became thereby chapped and broken, and so carried up the warm steams from beneath, arising from the hot central solid, to particular receptacles and volcanos, which before served, in a more equal and uniform manner, to heat and invigorate the entire earth and its productions[i]. In these and other circumstances was the state of nature altered for the worse on the fall, according to this gentleman's theory.

SECT. III.

The Chronology from the Creation to the Deluge stated.

BEFORE we enter on the history of the antediluvian world, it will be necessary, that we should settle the chronology of this period.

As Moses has not set down the particular time of any transactions before the flood, except only the years of the fathers age, wherein the several descendants of Adam, in the line of Seth, were begotten, and the length of their several lives; all we can do in this period is, to endeavour to fix the years of the lives and deaths of those patriarchs, and the distance of time from the creation to the deluge.

AND in this might be easily done, if there were no varieties in the several copies we now have of Moses's writings; which are the Hebrew, the Samaritan, and the Greek version of the Septuagint: but as these differ very considerably from one another, learned men are much divided in their opinions, concerning the chronology of the first ages of the world, some preferring one copy, and some another.

THAT the reader may the better judge of the variations in the three copies in this period, we shall in the following table subjoin the numbers of each; to which we take the liberty to add those of Josephus, as corrected by Dr. Wills, and Mr.

[i] Ibid. Book IV. p. 353, &c.

Whiston,

Whiſton, the numbers in the preſent copies of that hiſtorian being greatly corrupted.

A TABLE of the Years of the Antediluvian Patriarchs.

	Their Ages at their Sons Birth.				Years they lived after the Sons Birth.			Length of their Lives.
	Heb.	Samar.	Sept.	Joſeph	Heb.	Samar.	Sept.	Heb.	Samar.	Sept.
Adam, - -	130	130	230	130	800	800	700	930	930	930
Seth, - -	105	105	205	105	807	807	707	912	912	912
Enos, - -	90	90	190	90	815	815	715	905	905	905
Cainan, -	70	70	170	70	840	840	740	910	910	910
Mahalaleel, -	65	65	165	65	830	830	730	895	895	895
Jared, - -	162	62	162	62	800	785	800	962	847	962
Enoch, - -	65	65	165	65	300	300	200	365	365	365
Methuſelah,	187	67	187	187	782	653	802	969	720	696
Lamech, -	182	53	188	182	595	600	565	777	653	753
Noah was aged at the Flood,	600	600	600	600
To the Flood	1656	1307	2262	1556

To this Table it will be neceſſary, in order to explain the conſequences of theſe variations, to add ſeparate chronological tables, ſhewing in what year of his contemporaries the birth and death of each patriarch happened, according to the computation of each of the ſaid three copies.

A Chro-

A Chronological TABLE of the Years of the Patriarchs, according to the Computation of the Hebrew.

	Years of the World.	Years of Seth,	Years of Enos,	Years of Cainan,	Years of Mahalaleel,	Years of Jared,	Years of Enoch,	Years of Methuselah,	Years of Lamech,	Years of Noah,
Adam created, -	1
Seth born, -	130
Enos born, - -	235	105
Cainan born, -	325	195	90
Mahalaleel born	395	265	160	70
Jared born, -	460	330	225	135	65
Enoch born, -	622	492	387	297	227	162
Methuselah born,	687	557	452	362	292	227	65
Lamech born, -	874	744	639	549	479	414	252	187
Adam dies, - -	930	800	695	605	535	470	308	243	56
Enoch tranſlated,	987	857	752	662	592	527	365	300	113
Seth dies, - -	1042	912	807	717	647	582		355	168
Noah born, - -	1056		821	731	661	596		369	182
Enos dies, - -	1140		905	817	745	680		453	266	84
Cainan dies, -	1235			910	840	775		548	361	179
Mahalaleel dies,	1290				895	830		603	416	234
Jared dies, -	1422					962		735	548	366
Japhet born, -	1556							869	682	500
Shem born, - -	1558							871	684	502
Lamech dies, -	1651							964	777	595
Methuſelah dies,	1656		To the Flood - -					969		600

A Chro-

A Chronological TABLE of the Years of the Patriarchs, according to the Computation of the Septuagint.

	Years of the world.	Years of Seth,	Years of Enos,	Years of Cainan,	Years of Mahalaleel,	Years of Jared,	Years of Enoch,	Years of Methuselah,	Years of Lamech,	Years of Noah,
Adam created, -	1
Seth born, - -	230
Enos born, - -	435	205
Cainan born, -	625	395	190
Mahalaleel born,	795	565	360	170
Adam dies, - -	930	700	495	305	135
Jared born, -	960	730	525	335	165
Enoch born, -	1122	892	687	497	327	162
Seth dies, - -	1142	912	707	517	347	182
Methuselah born,	1387		852	662	492	327	165
Enos dies, - -	1340		905	715	545	380	218
Lamech born, -	1474			849	679	514	352	187
Enoch tranſlated,	1487			862	692	527	365	200
Cainan dies, -	1535			910	740	575		248	61
Noah born, -	1662				867	702		375	188
Mahalaleel dies,	1690				895	730		403	216	28
Jared dies, -	1922					962		635	448	260
Japhet born, -	2162							875	688	500
Shem born, -	2164							877	690	502
Lamech dies, -	2227							940	753	565
Methuselah dies,	2256							969		594
The Flood, -	2262									600

A Chro-

A Chronological TABLE of the Years of the Patriarchs, according to the Computation of the Samaritan Pentateuch.

	Years of the world.	Years of Seth,	Years of Enos,	Years of Cainan,	Years of Mahalaleel,	Years of Jared,	Years of Enoch,	Years of Methuſelah,	Years of Lamech,	Years of Noah,
Adam created, -	1
Seth born, -	130
Enos born, -	235	105
Cainan born, -	325	195	90
Mahalaleel born,	395	265	160	70
Jared born, -	460	330	225	135	65
Enoch born, -	522	392	287	197	127	62
Methuſelah born,	587	457	352	262	192	127	65
Lamech born, -	654	524	419	329	259	194	132	67
Noah born, - -	707	577	472	382	312	247	185	120	53
Enoch tranſlated,	887	757	652	562	497	427	365	300	233	180
Adam dies, - -	930	800	695	605	535	470		343	276	223
Seth dies, - -	1042	912	807	717	647	582		462	388	335
Enos dies, - -	1140		905	815	745	680		553	486	433
Japhet born, -	1207			882	812	747		620	553	500
Shem born, -	1209			884	814	749		622	555	502
Cainan dies, -	1235			910	840	775		648	581	528
Mahalaleel dies,	1290				895	830		703	636	583
Jared, Methuſelah, and Lamech die, —	1307	The Flood,				847		720	653	600

To the varieties exhibited in the two laſt tables, others might be added, by admitting the various readings of ſome numbers in the Samaritan and Septuagint: for as to the Hebrew copies, there is here a conſtant agreement among them (A).

THE manuſcript from which the Samaritan pentateuch was publiſhed (B), agrees exactly with the Samaritan num-

(A) It is obſerveable, that the Hebrew numbers were exactly the ſame when the two Talmuds were compoſed; and that the Chaldee paraphraſe of Onkelos, which is allowed to have been written about the time of our Saviour, does alſo agree with the Hebrew chronology.

(B) This MS. was written A. D. 1404 (1).

(1) Vid. Joan. Morin. in Præf. Ed. Septuag. Gr. Lat. Paris, 1618.

bers

bers given by Eusebius [a]. But St. Jerom tells us [b], that in his time there were some Samaritan copies which make Methuselah 187 years old at the birth of Lamech, and Lamech 182 at the birth of Noah, just as the Hebrew does. Now if these numbers be approved as the true original numbers, the interval from the creation to the flood will be 1556 years (C); differing from the Hebrew computation about 100 years, in the age of Jared at the birth of Enoch: and if this last be allowed to be a mistake of the transcriber, by his dropping a number, and writing 62 instead of 162, as has been suspected, the Samaritan will be perfectly reconciled with the Hebrew, and all difference between them vanish (D).

THERE are indeed some other variations in the Samaritan numbers, as given by Eusebius; but as they are plainly owing to the negligence of the copier, or the printer, we think it needless to trouble the reader with them.

SCALIGER, on the authority of an old Samaritan chronicle, having at the end a table of the years of the patriarchs to the time of Moses, would correct two of the Samaritan numbers in Eusebius; viz. instead of 65, the age of Mahalaleel when he begat Jared, he thinks it should be 75; and instead of 67, the age of Methuselah, when he begat Lamech, he would have it 77 [c]. By which alterations he reckons 20 years more to the flood than Eusebius and the manuscript; that is, 1327 (E). But as he acknowledges, the table, whereupon he grounds these corrections, contains some great absurdities, it seems unreasonable to oppose it to the joint authority of Eusebius and the Samaritan manuscript [d].

[a] In Chronic. Græ p. 3, 4. [b] In Quæst. in Genes. [c] SCALIGER in Græc. Euseb. p. 403. [d] Vid. LUD. CAPPELL. Chronol. Sacr.

(C) Mr. WHISTON, allowing of these two corrections, which are supported by the attestation of Josephus, follows this computation in his chronological table (1).

(D) This is the hypothesis of Father TOURNEMINE, who, in his Samaritan chronology, reckons 1656 years to the deluge.

(E) It is remarkable, that Scaliger, taking the Samaritan numbers to be brought down no lower than to the birth of Noah, computes 1947 years to the flood, according to that chronology; wherein he is again mistaken 20 years, in the adding of the 600 years of Noah's life to the former number. And he at the same time quarrels with Syncellus, for not committing the same fault [2].

(1) See also his Essay towards restoring the true text of the old Test. &c. p. 23. (2) Scalig. in Græc. Euseb. p. 403.

-ls.

As to the Septuagint, in the common editions of that version, the age of Methuſelah, at the birth of Lamech, is 167, and conſequently, the ſum total of this period, according to them, is more than 2242. But in this caſe Methuſelah will outlive the flood 14 years; and we may well wonder, with Euſebius [e], where he was preſerved. To obviate this objection, we are told, that in ſome copies Methuſelah is ſaid to have lived but 782 (not 802) years after the birth of Lamech, and no more than 949 in all [f]. But the Alexandrian manuſcript entirely takes away the difficulty, by giving the ſame number in this place with the Hebrew.

Pezron is of opinion, that the age of Lamech, at the birth of Noah, ſhould be but 182, as it is both in the Hebrew and in Joſephus, ſuppoſing with St. Auſtin, that the preſent number is the error of the ſcribe who firſt copied the original Septuagint manuſcript in Ptolemy's library [g]. So that he computes 2256 years to the flood. And if this correction be admitted, and one more mentioned alſo by St. Auſtin [h], viz. that Lamech lived 595 years after the birth of Noah, and not 565, as in the preſent copies, there will then remain no other difference between the Septuagint and the Hebrew than 600 years, added to the ages of ſix of the patriarchs when they begat their ſons [i], and Methuſelah will, conformably to the Hebrew and Samaritan, die in the year of the flood.

As we have choſen to follow the chronology of the preſent Samaritan copies, after the flood, for the reaſons which will be found in another place, we have done the ſame in our calculations in this period; which may, with very little trouble, be reduced to the chronology of the Hebrew, or Septuagint by thoſe who prefer the accounts of thoſe copies.

SECT. IV.

The Hiſtory of the Antediluvian Patriarchs.

Year of the World, 1. Year before Chriſt, 4305.

WHERE Adam dwelt after his expulſion from paradiſe, is uncertain; but it is likely he did not remove far off (F). He now conſummated his marriage with Eve, which, as [e] Chron. Græc. p. 4. [f] Ibid. [g] Augustin. de civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 13. [h] Ibid. [i] Vid. Pezron, l'Antiquité des temps retablie, p. 57, & Cappelli Chronolog. ſacr.

(F) The eaſtern tradition is, that Adam went into India (1), and did Penance on the mountain thence named Pico de Adam, in

(1) Vid. Eutychii annal. p. 15. D'Herbelot, Bibl. orient. p. 55.

the

as the words of Moſes ſeem to imply, he had not done before the fall [k] (G): a ſtrong argument for the ſhort duration of the ſtate of innocence. The eldeſt ſon of Adam, named Cain, was born probably in the firſt year of the world; and his ſecond, Abel (H), the year following (I). When they were grown Year of the World, 2. Year before Chriſt, 4304.

[k] Geneſ. iii. 24. iv. 1.

the iſle of Ceylon, for ſeveral years. Some Rabbins pretend, that he was ſeparated from Eve for 130 years, and lived with another woman, named Lilith, formed out of the ground like himſelf; during which time he begat dæmons on her, as the devils did on Eve 1). Maimonides ſuppoſes, that by thoſe dæmons were meant only wicked and impious men, as the race of Adam were before Seth, whom he is therefore ſaid to have begotten in his own likeneſs, and after his own image 2). The Mohammedans ſay, that when they were caſt down from paradiſe, Adam fell on Ceylon, and Eve near Joddah in Arabia; and that after a ſeparation of 200 years, Adam was, on his repentance, conducted by the angel Gabriel to a mountain near Mecca, where he found and knew his wife, the mountain being thence named Arafat; and that he afterwards retired with her to Ceylon, where they continued to propagate their ſpecies (3).

(G) Yet ſome Rabbins, as R. Solomon Yarbi, and R. Moſes Haddarſhan (4), were of a contrary opinion. Others of them indeed went much farther, as Father Bartolocci aſſures us, whoſe words we ſubjoin, (to ſhew what abominable imaginations ſome men are capable of) but deſire to be excuſed the tranſlating of them. De protoparente Adamo ita ſiniſtre ſentiunt, ut ipſum etiam nefariæ incontinentiæ, quod referre pudet, inſimulent; & ante Evæ formationem, omnia jumenta feraſque campi carnaliter cognoviſſe aiunt (5).

(H) Some Rabbins imagined, that Cain and Abel were twins, (which Calvin (6) alſo ſuppoſed) but that Cain was the off ſpring of the devil, or Sammael, who firſt lay with Eve; and that ſhe afterwards, by ſuperfetation, conceived Abel by Adam 7). Some heretics fancied both Cain and Abel to have been the iſſue of the devil (8).

(I) The name Cain ſignifies an acquiſition, or poſſeſſion, being derived (though not very regularly) from the verb קָנָה Kana, to acquire. Abel, or rather Hebel, ſignifies vanity, and not mourning, as Joſephus (9) and Euſebius (10) ſuppoſe.

(1) Vid. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom I. p. 112. & Bartolocc. Bibl. Rabbin Tom. I. p. 291 (2) Maim. More Nevoch. p. 1. c. 7. (3) Vid. D'Herbel. ubi ſupra. (4) Vid Heidegg. p. 111. (5) Bartolocc. ubi ſup. p. 75. (6) Vid Corn. a Lapide, in Geneſ. iv. 2. (7) Bartolocc. ubi ſupra. (8) Vid. Epiphan. Hæreſ. 40. (9) Antiq. l. 11. cap. 6. (10) De Præp. Ev. l. 2.

Year of the World 2. Year before Christ 4384.

grown up, they betook themselves to distinct employments; the former of them to husbandry, and the latter to the keeping of sheep [p]. And in their inward dispositions were still more different, Cain being wicked and avaritious, but Abel just and virtuous [q].

IN process of time the two brothers brought their respective offerings to GOD (K), Cain of the fruit of the ground, and Abel

Year of the World, 129. Year before Christ, 4177.

[p] Genes. iv. 2. [q] JOSEPH. Ant. l. 1. c. 2.

The Arab authors say, that before Cabil (for so they call Cain) Adam had a son named عبد الحارث Abd' alhâreth, on the following occasion. When Eve was big with her first child, the devil came to her and asked her, if she knew what she carried within her, and which way she should be delivered of it. She being unable to give an answer to this question, went in a fright to Adam, and acquainted him with the matter, who, not knowing what to think of it, grew sad and pensive. Whereupon the devil appeared to him, and told him, that as he knew the mysterious name of GOD, he would in virtue thereof, by his prayers, obtain of GOD, that Eve might be safely delivered of a son in his (Adam's) own likeness, provided he would promise to call his name Abd' alhâreth, or the servant of al Hareth (which was the devil's name in heaven) instead of Abd' aliah, or the servant of GOD, as Adam had designed. This Adam and his wife agreed to, and accordingly gave the child that name, upon which it immediately died (1). The parents are taxed with this in the Korân, as an act looking towards idolatry (2). But the whole story seems to have no other foundation, than Cain's being called by Moses Obed Adamah, i. e. a tiller of the ground, which might be translated by the Arabs Abd' alhâreth Abu'lfaragius (3) says, Cain was born in the thirtieth year of the world, with a twin-sister, whom that author calls Klimia; Eutychius (4) Azrûn, and others Kalmama. And that thirty years after, Abel was born with a twin-sister also, named Lebûdha; or Lesûra, by Eutychius (who says Lesûra was her Greek name) Owain, and by others Delborah (5).

(K) It has been supposed by some (but without any ground) that they brought their offerings to Adam to offer for them (6).

The oriental tradition makes these sacrifices to have been offered, and Cain's malice excited against his brother on the following occasion. When they were grown up, in the one hundred and thirtieth

(1) Vid. D'Herbelot. Bibl Orient. p. 438, &c. Selden de jure nat. &c. l 5. c. 8. Marace. in Alcor. p. 291. (2) Al Koran, c. 7. ver. 189, &c. (3) p. 6. (4) p. 15. (5) Vid. Perrerium in Genes. iv. 1. Heidegg. Hist. Patr. t. 1. p. 112. (6) Vid. Heidegg. ubi supr. p. 117.

year

Abel of the firſtlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof (L); but they met with very different ſucceſs: for GOD had reſpect to, or accepted the offering of Abel, but Cain's he did not accept (M). At this preference Cain was ſo enraged and tranſported year of the world, according to Abu'lfaragius, Adam propoſed to Eve, that Cain ſhould marry Abel's twin-ſiſter, and Abel Cain's. But this Cain refuſed to agree to, inſiſting to have his own ſiſter, who was the handſomer of the two. Adam hereupon was greatly diſpleaſed, becauſe it was againſt the divine command that he ſhould marry his twin-ſiſter (for it being the common opinion, that marriages ought not to be had in the neareſt degrees of conſanguinity, ſince Cain and Abel muſt neceſſarily marry their ſiſters, it ſeemed reaſonable to ſuppoſe they ought to take thoſe of the remoter degree), and ordered his ſons to make their offerings before they took their wives, referring the diſpute, probably, to GOD's determination. But while they went up the mountain for that purpoſe, the devil put it into Cain's head to rid himſelf of his brother; for which wicked intent, his ſacrifice was not accepted; and they were no ſooner come down from the mountain, than he fell on Abel, and killed him with a ſtone (1). Thus was a woman, according to this ſtory, the occaſion of the firſt quarrel in the world; Nam fuit ante Helenam, &c.

Year of the World 129. Year before Chriſt 4177.

Cain and Abel, their Offerings. Abel murdered.

(L) The opinion of thoſe who think Abel did not kill, or offer the Animals themſelves, but only their milk and wool, will be conſidered hereafter, when we enquire into the origin of Sacrifices.

(M) Though the difference put by GOD between the two offerings can be attributed to nothing, but the wickedneſs and ill diſpoſition of Cain, and the righteouſneſs and faith of Abel (2), yet it has been imagined, that Cain's ill ſucceſs was owing to ſome defect in his offering, or his preſenting the worſt part of it to GOD, and reſerving the beſt to himſelf. The reaſon given by Joſephus (3) is very frivolous: he ſays that GOD was more delighted with Abel's offering, as being the ſpontaneous production of nature; and diſpleaſed with Cain's, becauſe it was forced by the art and induſtry of a covetous man (4).

In what viſible manner GOD declared his acceptance of Abel's offering, is not expreſſed by Moſes. The common opinion is, that fire from heaven deſcended on the ſacrifice and conſumed it, but did not touch Cain's. This is ſupported by the verſion of Theodotion, who tranſlated the word שעה, which we render had reſpect unto, ἐνεπυρισεν, he ſet on fire; the uſual ſign whereby GOD has been pleaſed to teſtify his approbation in other inſtances. The Mohammedans likewiſe affirm the ſame thing (5). And the heathens themported with envy againſt his brother, that he could not help ſhewing it by his countenance. GOD however condeſcended to expoſtulate the matter with him, and asked him, what reaſon he had to be angry, ſince if he did well he ſhould be accepted; and he could blame none but himſelf for what was the conſequence of his own ill behaviour; and, in particular, he could not juſtly be angry with Abel, who had no deſign to ſupplant him, and ſhould always pay him the reſpect due to an elder brother. But this admonition had ſo little effect on Cain, that on a convenient opportunity, when they were together in the field, he roſe up againſt Abel his brother, and ſlew him [r] (N), and buried his body, in hopes of concealing the murder [ſ].

(1) Abu'lfarag. p. 6. 7. Eutych. p. 15, 16. (2) Vid Heb. xi. 4. (3) Antiq. l. 1. c. 2. (4) Vid. Heideg. Hiſt. Patr. t. i. p. 120. (5) Vid. Maracc. in Alcoran p. 229.

Year of the World 129. Year before Christ 4177.

AFTER

[r] Geneſ. iv. 3.—8. [ſ] JOSEPH. ubi ſup.

ſelves boaſted of the like extraordinary marks of the divine favour in ſome particular places (1).

(N) Before the commiſſion of the fact, Moſes tells us, according to the Engliſh tranſlation, that Cain talked with Abel his brother. The words ſtrictly ſignify, Cain ſaid unto Abel his brother: after which there is a blank ſpace left in the Hebrew copies, as if ſomething was wanting. The Samaritan pentateuch and Septuagint verſion ſupply this, by adding the words, Let us go into the field: but the Jeruſalem Targum, and that of Jonathan ben Uzziel have obliged us with the whole converſation. Says Cain, There is no future judgment, nor judge, nor life after this, nor reward for the juſt, nor puniſhment for the wicked: the world was neither created, nor is governed by the mercy of GOD, foraſmuch as thy oblation was accepted, and mine rejected. To which Abel anſwers, There is a future judgment, and a judge, and a life to come: there is both a reward for the juſt, and a puniſhment for the unjuſt: the world was created, and is governed by the mercy of GOD. And becauſe my works are better than thine, therefore was my oblation accepted, and thine rejected. Upon which enſued the quarrel, which ended in Abel's murder. An ill beginning of religious controverſy. Mohammed has alſo, in his Korân. 2), inſerted the debate between the two brothers, ſomewhat to the ſame purpoſe.

The time, place, and manner of this murder are all uncertain. It happened, very probably, not long before the birth of Seth, who was appointed inſtead of Abel: but St. Auſtin (3) will not allow Seth to be the next ſon which Eve had after Abel's death; ſuppoſing that expreſſion to mean no more, than that Seth ſucceeded that righteous perſon in his virtue and piety. Some are of opinion, (1) See Bayle Dict. Hiſt, Art. Egnatia. (2) Chap. 5. ver. 33, &c. (3) De civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 15.

that

AFTER the commission of this horrid fact, Cain being questioned by GOD about his brother, returned an evasive answer, that he knew not what was become of him, churlishly asking, if he was his brother's keeper? But GOD soon convinced him, that what he had done was not hid from him; and, as a punishment, condemned him to be a fugitive and a vagabond on the earth, and to till an ungrateful soil, which should not reward his labour, with the plenty and increase he had before experienced. This sentence, though it fell short of the heinousness of his guilt, was yet thought too severe by Cain, who complained, that his punishment was greater than he could bear; since he was to be banished from the presence of GOD, and from his near relations, and being a vagabond that Adam assigned his sons their several employments in the fiftieth year of the world (as Eusebius says he did), that Cain and Abel made their offerings A. M. 100, and that thirty years after Abel was killed. But neither reason nor scripture lead us to believe, that Cain concealed his resentment so many years (1). The place where Abel was slain, according to an antient tradition, is said to be still shewn at the foot of a hill near Damascus (2). As to the manner wherein Cain committed this murder, there is a great variety of opinions. Eutychius and the Arabs say, he struck him on the head with a stone; some Jews tell us, that he tore him in pieces with his teeth; others, that he killed him with the jawbone of an ass, which is the weapon the painters generally put into Cain's hand: some arm him with a fork; St. Chrysostome with a sword; St. Irenæus with a scythe, and Prudentius with a pruning-hook (3).

Year of the World 129. Year before Christ 4177.

Whether Abel was a married man or not has been disputed. Some of the antient fathers have maintained the affirmative (4), as did also some heretics called Abelians (5). But it is improbable he should continue single if he lived to be near one hundred and thirty: the world wanted peopling too much to allow any room for such continency. Nor do St. Jerom and St. Austin (6) seem to doubt of his being married, though Moses makes no mention of his offspring.

The Rabbins, and some Christians (7) say, that Adam and Eve mourned for Abel one hundred years, during which time they lived separate; Adam particularly in a valley near Hebron, thence named the valley of tears (8). The inhabitants of Ceylon pretend, that the salt lake on the mount of Colombo was formed by the tears, which Eve shed on this occasion (9).

(1) See Bayle Dict. Hist. Art. Abel, Rem. C. (4) Vid. Heidegg. Hist. Patr. t. 1. p. 126. (3) Vid. Bayle ubi sup. Rem. G. (4) Basil & Ambros. apud Corn. a Lapide in Genes. iv, & v. (5) Vid. Bayle Dict. Hist. Art. Abeliens. (6) Vid Salian. Annal. tom. 1. p. 184. (7) Eutych. p 16. (8) Vid. Salian. ubi sup. p. 190. (9) Vid. Chevreau, Hist. du Monde, tom 4. p. 255.

Year of the World 129. Year before Christ, 4177.

and friendless, would be in danger of being killed by the next that should meet him (O). But GOD told him, that whoever slew Cain, vengeance should be taken on him seven-fold; and the more effectually to secure him from that apprehension, was pleased to give him a sign (P) (probably by some sensible

(O) These words of Cain are variously interpreted. The first sentence, which our version renders, My punishment is greater than I can bear, some translate, My sin is greater than can be forgiven (for עון signifies iniquity rather than punishments, and נשא to forgive, as well as to bear; and others interrogatively, Is my sin too great to be forgiven? which last is the sense followed by the Hebrew expositors, and seems to be the best (12). The latter words, in the English translation, And it shall come to pass that every one that findeth me shall slay me, have also been rendered, I wish that any person that finds me may kill me (13).

That there were such numbers of men in the world, at the time of Abel's murder, that Cain might justly apprehend some danger from them, will appear from the calculations hereafter made of the increase of mankind before the flood. Mr. Bayle (14) thinks, that Cain was not so much afraid of his kindred, the descendants of Adam, (though he might justly fear the resentment of Abel's children, if he left any) but of some strangers whom he apprehended he should meet in his banishment, where he would be friendless, and have none to support him; and therefore supposes, that, in his flight, he either did not consider, there were no men in the world but what were the off pring of his father, or else feigned an apprehension, to move GOD's compassion. But we conceive, there will be no occasion for either of those suppositions, if we consider in how few descents the degrees of kindred, at least of affection, decrease, and at length vanish; and that Cain might justly be looked on, even among his relations, as a common enemy. Not to mention the vast numbers of men, which he could not but think, would in a few years to come overspread the earth, and have probably little knowledge of, or respect for him.

(P) This is the true sense of this passage, and not that GOD set a mark upon Cain (15), according to the common exposition; in pursuance of which, many ridiculous conjectures have been made as to that imaginary mark. Some say (that God stigmatized Cain on the forehead with a letter, which was to serve him as a passport, being taken either from the name of Abel (16), or the ineffable name of GOD (17), or from the word repentance; that every one might perceive Cain had repented. Others say this mark con-

(12) See Shuckford's Connexion, vol. 1. p. 6. (13) Lightfoot, vol. 1. p. 3. (14) Dict. Hist. Art. Cain, Rem. A. (15) Vid. Shuckford, p. 8. (16) Veters Hebræi apud Genebrard. (17) R. Solom. Yarhi. Vid. Selden. Otia Theol. p. 345.

sisted

fible miracle) that none that met him ſhould take away his life [t].

Year of the World 129. Year before Chriſt, 4177.

CAIN ſoon after this unfortunate affair, having wandered about ſome time, at length ſettled with his wife and family in the land of Nod, where he built a city, and called it after the name of his ſon, Enoch [u].

He goes into baniſhment, and builds a city.

WHERE the land of Nod (which word ſignifies wandering) was ſituate, is uncertain. Moſes places it, according to our tranſlation, on the eaſt of Eden; and it has been obſerved, that Ptolemy mentions a city called Anuchtha in Suſiana, or Khuzeſtan, a country lying eaſtward from Chaldea: which ſituation, and the near reſemblance of the name Anuchtha to the original Hanokh (for that is ſuppoſed to be only the Chaldee termination) induced the learned Huet to believe it to be the ſame with that built by Cain. But it ſeems very improbable, that the city of Enoch built before the flood, ſhould either withſtand the deluge, or retain its antient name after ſo great an alteration of the face of things. Beſides, Suſiana fiſted of three letters, which compoſed the name of the Sabbath (4), or elſe that it was the ſign of the croſs (5). Others ſuppoſe, that Abel's dog was given him as a conſtant companion, either to warn people not to attack him (6), or to prevent his taking any dangerous road (7). Others ſay, that his face was covered with leproſy (8). Others, that the mark was nothing but a wild aſpect, with bloody eyes, which rolled in a horrid manner 9. Moſt of the fathers imagined, that his body continually trembled to that degree, that he could not get his victuals to his mouth (10). The Septuagint verſion favours this opinion; for inſtead of a fugitive and a vagabond, they have tranſlated στένων καὶ τρέμων, lamenting and trembling; and the Hebrew words do indeed import a reſtleſsneſs and uneaſineſs of mind, with which Cain is ſuppoſed to have been afflicted all his life (11). Some ſay, that where ever he ſtopped, the earth ſhook and trembled around him (12). Others pretend, that GOD inſpired him with extraordinary courage, and rendered him void of all fear. And another notion, as well founded as any of the former, is, that Cain had a horn grew on his forehead, to warn folks to avoid him (13).

[t] Geneſ. iv. 9.—15. [u] Ibid. ver. 16, 17.

(1) In Tanchuma, fol 4. (5) Selden. ubi ſup. (6) Ibid. (7) Corn a Lapide in Geneſ. iv. (8) Selden. ubi ſup. (9) Vid. Sallian. annal. tom. 1. p. 102. (10) Procopius in Geneſ. iv. Vid. etiam Hieronym. Epiſt. cxxx. ad Damas. (11) Vid. Euſeb. p. 16. (12) Apud Selden. ubi ſup. (13) Apud Sallian. ubi ſup. Vid. Bayle Dict. Hiſt. Art. Cain, Rem. B. & Hottinger. Hiſt. Patr. tom. 1. p. 129.

Year of the World, 129. Year before Christ, 4177.

being a very fertile and pleasant country, it is not likely Cain should be banished thither, but rather to some barren and desolate land, remote from the place of his nativity, and separated by mountains, or other natural obstructions, from the commerce of his relations. For which reason Grotius and Junius are of opinion, that the country into which Cain retired was the desert Arabia; but that lying on the west, and not on the east of Eden, to remove so formidable an objection, it is said, that the words which we translate on the east of Eden, signify no more than before, or over against Eden, as the Septuagint have rendred it [w].

WHEN Cain built this city cannot be conjectured by any circumstance recorded by Moses; but it is probable he did it not till many years after his banishment, and when his posterity was greatly increased. Philo supposes he also built six other cities, named Maich, Jared, Tebe, Jesca, Selet, and Gebat, but what foundation he had for it we cannot conceive [x].

Grows more wicked.

JOSEPHUS says, that the punishment inflicted on Cain was so far from effecting any amendment in him, that he grew worse, and became a reprobate to all sense of goodness, indulging himself in all manner of pleasures, though he wronged his neighbours to procure them; that he got together abundance of wealth by rapine and violence, encouraging his followers in luxury and robbery, and becoming their instructor in evil courses. That he first corrupted that simplicity wherein men till then lived, by the invention of measures and weights, changing their innocence of life, which was happily ignorant of such things, and their greatness of mind, into fraud and cunning: and that he also first set bounds to fields and possessions, and walled the city which he had built, obliging his dependants to live in community [y], the better, it is probable, to secure their ill-gotten wealth.

Year of the World 130. Year before Christ, 4176.

SOON after the murder of Abel, and probably the next year, his loss was made up to his parents in another son they had, whom Eve named Seth, that is, appointed, because he was appointed instead of Abel whom Cain slew [z].

Seth born.

As the whole progeny of Adam, of whom we have any mention in scripture, were the descendants of Cain and Seth, it may be proper to give a genealogical table of the antediluvians.

[w] See WELL's Geogr. of the old Testament. RALEIGH's Hist. of the World, book I. c. 6. § 4. [x] See JOSEPH. Ant. l. 1. c. 2. See BAYLE Dict. Hist. Art. Cain, Rem. D. [y] Genes. iv. 25.

THE

Adam Eve
Cain
Abel
Seth
Enoch
Enos Irad
Cainan
Mehu-jael
Maha-laleel
Methu-sael
Jared
Adah
Lamech
Zillah
Enoch
Jabal
Jubal
Tubal-Cain
Naamah
Methu-selah
Lamech
Noah
Japhet
Shem
Ham

THE ſacred hiſtorian confining himſelf chiefly to the line of Seth, from whence Noah was deſcended, has acquainted us with very few particulars relating to that of Cain; nor can we thence form any conjectures, how long he (Q) or any of his deſcendants lived. All that we have recorded is, that Lamech, the fifth in deſcent from him, married two wives, Adah and Zillah [a], which is obſerved to be the firſt known inſtance of polygamy; that by the former he had two ſons, Jabal, who was the firſt that dwelt in tents, and fed cattle (R); and

Year of the World 130. Year before Chriſt, 4176

Of the line of Cain.

[a] Geneſ. iv. 19.

(Q) There is an oriental tradition, which was believed by ſeveral chriſtians in St. Jerom's time (1), that Cain was accidentally killed by Lamech, one of his own poſterity: for they ſay that Cain being old and dim-ſighted, and in continual terror on account of the murder he had committed, uſed to wander up and down in the woods, and one day ſat down in a thicket to reſt himſelf; and that Lamech, who was alſo blind, being a hunting, attended by a youth (whom ſome will have to be his ſon Tubal-Cain) either himſelf heard a ruſtling, or was informed by the lad, that there was ſomething in the buſhes which he took to be a wild beaſt, and thereupon letting fly an arrow, he ſtruck Cain (for it proved to be him) to the heart; when he came to know what he had done, he in a rage fell upon his conductor, and killed him alſo (2). Others relate the latter circumſtances differently, and ſay, that he killed Cain with a ſtone which he flung at him, and the youth ignorantly, as he clapped his hands in ſorrow for what he had done (3). And this, they ſay, was the occaſion of thoſe words of Lamech to his wives, mentioned in a following note. This accident ſome place in the ſeven hundred and thirtieth year of Cain's age (4), others in the years of the world ſeven hundred and one, or eight hundred and ſeventy five (5): According to Toſtatus, Cain lived near eight hundred years (6). There are ſome who fix his death in the year of the world nine hundred and thirty one, and pretend that he was knocked on the head by the fall of a houſe (7). Paul de Burgos makes him periſh in the deluge (8); and there are others who ſay he killed himſelf (9).

(R) This ſeems to be underſtood, as R. Solomon Yarhi explains the paſſage, of feeding cattle in the deſert, and removing with their

(1) Vid. Hieronym. in Epiſt. ad Damas. (2) R. Gedaliah in Shalſheleth hakkab. p. 92. Vid. Eutych. p. 22. (3) Elmacin. or rather Ebn al Amid. p. 7. (4) Eutych. ubi ſupr. (5) Apud Salian. annal. t. 1 p. 214. (6) Apud eund. Ibid. (7) St. Romuald Abregé Chronol. citing Cedrenus. Syncell p. 11. (8) Apud Pererium in Geneſ. iv. ver 23, 24. (9) Armeni apud Guidon. Carmelitam citante Prateolo, in elencho hæres. p. 63.

Year of the World 130. Year before Christ, 4176.

and Jubal, the inventor of musick: and by the other, a son named Tubal-Cain, who found out the art of forging and working of metals (S); and a daughter Naamah [b], supposed by some [c] to have invented spinning and weaving (T). And that on some occasion or other, Lamech made a speech to his wives [d], the explication of which has greatly puzzled the interpreters (U).

HOWEVER,

[b] Ibid. ver. 20, 21, 22. [c] R. LIPOMAN. in catena, & GENEBRARD in Chron. Vid. VOSSIUM de Idolol. l. 1. c. 17. [d] Genes. iv. 23, 24.

their tents and herds from place to place, as they found pasture, which is the way of life of the Arabs, thence called Scenitæ: for others, and in particular Abel, followed a pastoral life before Jabal (S).

(S) Josephus (9) commends Tubal-Cain (whom he calls Thobel) for his great strength and skill in war; to the perfecting of which art, he probably contributed by the invention of arms.

(T) Some imagine Naamah to have been the wife of Noah (10), others of Ham (11); and that she being saved from the destruction of the deluge, was therefore mentioned by Moses. Her name signifies delightful or beautiful; and her person is said to have been so charming, that Aza, and Azael, two angels, fell in love with her, and begat on her Dæmons called Gedim (12).

Many authors from some affinity in the names and inventions of these children of Lamech, have thought Jubal to have been the Apollo, Tubal-Cain the Vulcan, and Naamah the Venus, or Minerva of the heathens. And not to omit Jabal, it has been imagined he was their Pales (13). But these are at best suppositions only, and very precarious ones too, as will be shewn in a more proper place.

Josephus makes the whole number of Lamech's issue by his two wives to be seventy seven (14).

(U) His words, according to our translation, are; Hear my voice ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt. If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech seventy and sevenfold Almost to the same purpose are the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac versions; and they are commonly explained by the above-mentioned tradition of Lamech's unfortunately killing Cain, and the youth that attended him; which being an undesigned act, he had reason to think, he deserved a much less punishment than Cain (15).

(S) Vid. Heidegg. Hist. Patr. t. 1. p 141. (9) Antiq. l. 1. c 2. (10) Bereschit Rabb. R. Sol. Yarhi. (11) Cumberland's Rem. on Sanchoniatho, p. 107. (12) In libro Zohar. (13) Vid Heidegg. Hist. Patr. t. 1. p. 141. & seq. (14) Joseph. antiq. l. 1. c. 2. (15) Vid. Perer in locum.

Other[s]

HOWEVER, we are assured by other historians [e], and it is highly probable, that the posterity of Cain were enormously wicked, exceeding their father, if possible, in all manner of villainies; every succeeding generation growing worse than the former, and becoming wholly addicted to rapine and brutish lusts. This reprobate race is generally supposed to be meant by Moses under the designation of men, and the daughters of men, as the other family of Seth is by that of the sons of GOD [f].

Seth had this year a son named Enos; about which time it is thought that his descendants, who were as eminent for piety and virtue, as those of Cain were for the reverse, had the appellation we have just mentioned given them. For it is conceived, that those words [g] which in our translation are rendered, then began men to call upon the name of the LORD, properly signify, then men began to be called by, or after the name of the Lord, that is the sons of GOD [h]. But some take the words, according to the former version, to mean, that then the public worship of GOD was first set up, and proper ceremonies and stated times appointed for that service [i]: and

Year of the World 235. Year before Christ, 4071. Enos born.

[e] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 1. c. 2. EUTYCH. p. 25. EBN AL AMID, &c. [f] Vid. HEIDEGG. ubi supr. p. 136. [g] Genes. iv. 26. [h] Vid. HEIDEGG. Hist. Patr. tom. 1. p. 148. SHUCKFORD'S Connex. Vol. I. p. 41. [i] PERER. DRUSIUS, MERCERUS, &c. Vid. SIMSON Chron. col. 56.

Others take these words to be a thrasonical menace of Lamech, (whom they suppose to be a vindictive impious person) spoken on occasion of some quarrel he had with his wives; and that the sense is, I will, or would kill a man if he wounded me, and a young man if he hurt me, &c. (16).

The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel, and the Arabic translation read the passage interrogatively, or negatively, Have I slain a man? that is, I have not slain a man, that I should bear the guilt or be punished for it; nor have I killed a young man, that my seed should be destroyed for it. And it is thought Lamech spoke them on occasion of some terror, or apprehension his family were in, lest Abel's murder should be revenged on them; which fear he shews to be groundless, because he had done nothing to deserve any ill treatment (17). This interpretation seems the most reasonable, but cannot be depended on; the speech being introduced by Moses very abruptly, and without any connexion with what precedes, or follows it.

(16). Vid. Heidegg. ubi sup. p. 140. Bayle Dict. Hist. Art. Lamech, Rem. D. E. (17) See Shuckford's Connexion, Vol. I. p. 10, &c.

others,

Year of the World 235. Year before Christ, 4071.

others, particularly the Jews, suppose they intimate that idolatry, or the deifying of men, had its rise about this time, either adhering to the latter version, or translating the passage thus; Then men profaned in calling upon the name of the Lord [k] (X).

Of the three next descendants of Seth, Cainan, Mahalaleel, and Jared, and of Methuselah and Lamech, the grandfather and father of Noah, Moses has recorded no more than their several ages. The oriental authors commend them, as they do Seth and Enos, for their piety, and the salutary injunctions they left behind them, forbidding their children all intercourse with the race of cursed Cain [l].

Year of the World 887. Year before Christ, 3419.

Enoch translated.

Enoch, the son of Jared, and father of Methuselah, was a person of most extraordinary piety, walking with God, as the scripture expresses it, for at least the last three hundred years of his life: as a reward for which exemplary behaviour in so corrupt an age, he was taken up by God into heaven, without tasting death [m] (Y).

That

[k] Vid. Selden de diis Syris proleg. c. 3. [l] Vid. Eutych. p. 20, &c. Elmacin. [m] Genes. v. 22, & 24.

(X) The interpretation of Onkelos is, Then men left off calling upon the name of the Lord; as if the worship of God began then to be neglected.

Some of the Jews (particularly Maimonides) have gone so far as to charge Enos himself with being the author of idolatry, and inventing images, by whose mediation men might address themselves to God (1).

But the introduction of the idolatrous worship of the heavenly bodies and angels, is by the Sabians, the professors of it, referred to Seth himself. They give him also a son called Sabi, from whom the sect seems to have taken its name, unless it be rather derived from צבא Saba, or the host of heaven, the objects of their worship: of this sect we shall take occasion to speak more particularly hereafter, observing only in this place, that they call the book which contains the fundamentals of their religion and morality, the book of Seth, and reckon the patriarch Enoch also among the propagators of Sabiism (2).

(Y) Moses expresses it thus: and Enoch walked with God, and he was not: for God took him. Which passage the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews paraphrases in this manner; By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony.

(1) Vid. Hottinger, Smegma Orient. p. 230. Heidegg. ubi sup. p. 148. (2) Vid. Pocock. Specim. Hist. Arab. p. 138.

THAT Enoch was a prophet, and that ſome prophecy of his was preſerved either in writing, or (as is moſt probable) by teſtimony, that he pleaſed GOD (3). By which words it ſeems plain, that Enoch did not die, but ſuffered only ſuch a change as was neceſſary to fit him for the place whither he was going (4). Yet ſeveral of the Jews believe he actually died (5). Year of the World 887. Year before Chriſt, 3419.

The Jewiſh commentators ſuppoſe, Enoch was carried into the terreſtrial paradiſe (6). Of the ſame opinion were ſome of the chriſtian fathers (7). And it has been imagined, that both he and Elias will return from thence at the coming of Antichriſt, with whom they are to wage war (8). But theſe notions are juſtly rejected by the moſt judicious interpreters. The vulgate tranſlation of an apocryphal book ſays, indeed, that Enoch was tranſlated into paradiſe, Henoch placuit Deo, & tranſlatus fuit in paradiſum, ut det gentibus pœnitentiam (9); but it has been obſerved, that the greek ſays only, that he was tranſlated, without making any mention of paradiſe.

The Korân mentions the aſſumption of Enoch (10), who is there called إدريس Edris, which name is derived from דרש, in Hebrew, to enquire into, and in Arabic, to read or ſtudy with attention; and was given him for his ſuppoſed eminent learning and great knowledge. The Mohammedan commentators ſay, that Edris is now alive in one of the ſeven heavens, being carried thither after he had taſted death, but that GOD reſtored him to life (11).

The learning of Enoch, and particularly his ſkill in the mathematical ſciences, has been celebrated by Jews, Chriſtians, and Mohammedans.

The Jews ſay, he firſt invented letters, and became acquainted with the ſigns of heaven (12). They call him Metatron, (13) (though ſome take this to be a name of the angel Gabriel) (14), which the Targum of Jonathan ſeems to interpret by the following Words, the great ſcribe: but Buxtorf (15) is rather inclined to think it ſignifies the ambaſſador, or meſſenger of GOD, and is the ſame with the latin word Metator (16).

The Greek chriſtians ſuppoſed Enoch to be the ſame with the firſt Egyptian Hermes, who dwelt at Sais, that he firſt diſcourſed of ſupe-

(3) Heb. xi. 5. (4) Vid. 1 Corinth. xv. 50. (5) Aben Ezra, Hiſcuni, &c. apud Heidegg. ubi ſupr. p. 169. (6) Kimhi in lib. 2. Reg. ii. 1. (7) Irenæus, Procop. Gazeus, Juſtin Martyr. apud Heidegg. p. 171. See alſo Abu'lfarag. p. 7. (8) Heidegg. ibid. (9) Eccles. xliv. 16. (10) Al Koran cap. xix. ver. 54, 55. (11) Jallalo'ddin, &c. (12) Vid. Hotting. Smegma Orient. p. 239. (13) Juchaſin p. 5. Zohar ex Midraſh Ruth fol. 81. (14) Vid. Hyde de Rel. vet. Perſar. p. 263. (15) In Lexico Talmud. (16) Vid. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. tom. 1. p. 167.

rior

Year of the World 887. Year before Christ, 3419.

by tradition, even to our SAVIOUR's time, appears from the passage quoted thence by St. Jude [n]. However the piece under the title of the scripture, or prophecy of Enoch, of which we have some fragments extant (Z), is allowed to be a manifest forgery; though several of the fathers had a better opinion of it than it deserves [o]. Many passages are quoted thence [n] Jude v. 14. 15.

[o] TERTULLIAN. de habitu mulier. IRENÆUS, CYPRIAN, LACTANTIUS, &c.

rior substances, and foretold the deluge; and that he built the pyramids, engraving thereon the figures of artificial instruments, and the elements of the sciences, fearing lest the memory of them should perish in that general destruction (17). Eupolemus (18) also attributes the invention of astronomy to Enoch, and says, he was the same with Atlas, to whom the Greeks ascribe the same thing. Origen (19) mentions a book attributed to Enoch, different from his prophecy, containing secrets concerning the names of the parts of heaven, and of all the stars and constellations, which is said to be extant among the Ethiopians in their tongue (20). The learned Mr. du Peirese used his utmost endeavours to get it from thence, but to no purpose (21).

The Mohammedan authors say, that Edris received thirty books of revelations from GOD, wherein the secrets of the most occult sciences were written; and that he found out the use of the pen, the needle, (for they pretend he was a taylor, and the first of the trade) arithmetic, and astronomy. They also tell us, he was the first who took up arms for religion, or the cause of GOD; for being sent to preach to, and reclaim the posterity of Cain, who refused to give ear to him, he thereupon made war upon them, carrying their wives and children into slavery. The same authors say, that Enoch was the innocent cause of idolatry; for one of his friends missing him after his assumption, at the suggestion of the devil, made a statue of him, to which he paid peculiar honours, which in time degenerated into a superstitious adoration (22).

Father Bartolocci has endeavoured to shew, from the testimony of the more antient Jews, that Enoch, surnamed Edris, was a different person from the antediluvian Enoch, and that he lived many ages after him (23).

(Z) These fragments were first published by Joseph Scaliger, in his notes on the Greek Chronicon of Eusebius (24); and afterwards more correctly by J. Goar, in his edition of the Chronography of George Syncellus (25). We shall give the reader the substance of them by and by.

(17) Abu'lfarag. p 9. (18) Apud Euseb. de præp. Ev. l. 9. c. 17. (19) Homil. 28. in lib. Numer. & in Anaceph. l. de principe. (20) Genebrard Chronol. p. 14. (21) D' Herbel. Bibl. Orient. p. 310. (22) Vid. Reland. de Relig. Moham. p. 22. D'Herbelot ubi sup. Abu'lfarag. p 10. (23) Bibl. Rabbin. t. 2. p. 845. (24) p. 404, &c. (25) p. 11, &c. and p. 24, &c.

in that very antient writing, the Teſtament of the twelve patriarchs, and it is alſo cited by Clemens Alexandrinus [p], St. Auſtin makes mention of the ſcripture of Enoch, but denies it to be genuine [q]. And when Celſus objected its authority to Origen, he replied, that the books attributed to Enoch were not looked upon by the church as divine writings [r]. That there was a book, under the name of Enoch, in the hands of the Jews, appears from its being referred to in their antient book Zohar [s]. Year of the World 887. Year before Chriſt, 3419.

Adam, having ſeen a numerous poſterity iſſued from his own loins (A), after a life of nine hundred and thirty years (B), paid that natural debt, to which he had by his diſobedience ſubjected himſelf and them [t]. That he repented of his ſin, and made his peace with GOD, is very reaſonable to believe (C), notwithſtanding Year of the World 930. Year before Chriſt, 3376.

[p] In Eclogis ex prophet. p. 801, 808. [q] De civit. Dei, l. 15 c. 23. & l. 18. c. 38. [r] ORIGEN. contr. Celſ. l. 5. [s] Vid. HEIDEGG. Hiſt. Patr. tom. 1. p. 176. [t] Geneſ. v. 5. Adam dies.

(A) Beſides Adam's three ſons named by Moſes, and the ſuppoſed twin-ſiſters of Cain and Abel (5), we are told he had two daughters, one named Aſuam, or Saué, who married Cain, and the other Azúra, who was the wife of Seth (6).

(B) The oriental authors are ſo exact as to fix the very day and hour of the death of Adam, and alſo of ſeveral of the other patriarchs (7). But we preſume our omitting thoſe niceties will not be judged a fault.

(C) The Jews ſay, both Adam and Eve were very penitent (8), and that he in particular was ſo exceedingly afflicted for his ſin, that he had died of grief had not GOD ſent the angel Raziel to comfort him (9). They even acknowledged him to have been favoured with the gift of prophecy, and that he foretold the flood (10). The Mohammedans alſo do not only reckon him among the prophets, but make him one of the ſix (the others being Noah, Abraham, Moſes, Jeſus and Mohammed) who introduced a new diſpenſation; and ſay, that GOD gave him ten books of revelations, containing laws, promiſes, threatnings, and prophecies (11): which notion perhaps they borrowed of the Jewiſh authors, who pretend, that Adam wrote the book intitled Sepher Jeſira, or the book of the Creation (which others attribute to Abraham), and certain treatiſes

(5) See before, p. 146, in the Notes. (6) Syncellus ex parva Geneſ. p. 11. & Sethiani Hæretici, apud Epiphan. l. 1. p. 287. (7) Vid. Eutych. p. 19, &c. Elmacin. p. 6. &c. (8) Vid. R. Eliezer Pirk. c. 20. R. Gedal p. 92. (9) Lib. Jeſira. Vid. Reuchlin. de arte cabaliſtica, p 8. (10) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 2. (11) Vid. Hotting. Hiſt. Orient. p. 15. Reland. de rel. Moham. p. 21.

of

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

notwithstanding the uncharitable opinions of some to the contrary (D).

Conjectures concerning the place of his burial.

WHERE he was buried cannot be collected from scripture. St. Jerom [u] seems to approve of the opinion of those who imagine he was buried at Hebron (E) in the cave of Machpelah, or the double cave, which Abraham, many ages after, bought for a burying-place for himself and family [w]. The oriental christians say, that when Adam saw death approaching he called Seth, Enos, Cainan, and Mahalaleel to him, and ordered them to embalm his body with myrrh, frankincense, and cassia, and deposite it in a certain cave on the top of a mountain, which he had chosen for the repository of his remains thence named the cave of al Konûz [x] (F). The primitive of the deity (12). Some Rabbins make him to have been the author of the ninety second Psalm; and in some manuscripts the Chaldee title of that Psalm imports it to be the Hymn, which the first man sang on the Sabbath-day (13). Eusebius Nieremberg (14) has been credulous enough to give us two hymns, faithfully copied from the revelation of Amadeus in the library of the Escurial, as the genuine compositions of Adam; one being that which he repeated on his first interview with Eve, and the other the penitential Psalm sung by them after the fall.

[u] HIERON. in Matth. xxvii. [w] Genes. xxiii. 3, &c. [x] EUTYCH. Annal. p. 19. ELMACIN. p. 6.

(D) A certain heretical sect, named Tatianites, affirmed he was damned (15).

(E) This is offered to be proved by this passage of scripture, according to the vulgate translation, Nomen Hebron ante vocabatur Cariath-arbe: Adam maximus ibi inter Enacim situs est (16). But the name Adam is unwarrantably inserted in the text, the Hebrew plainly signifying (as the other versions render it) that Hebron was formerly called Kirjath-Arba or the city of Arba, who had been a great man among the Anakims. There is however another origin of that antient name of Hebron given by some writers, who taking the word Arba, which also signifies four, in that sense; and not for a proper name, say, that city was so called, because four couple were there buried, viz. Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, and Jacob and Leah (17).

(F) From the Arabic كنز kanaza, to lay up privately, as treasure, &c. Some Jews say, that this precaution was ordered by (12) Vid. Heidegg. Hist. Patr. tom. 1. p. 314. (13) Gaspar Schottus Techn. curiosa, p. 556. (14) Apud Schottum ibid. (15) Vid. Epiphan. Hæres. 46. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 4. p. 27. (16) Josh. xiv. 15. (17) R. Eliezer Pirke, c. 20. Vid. Heidegg. ubi sup. p. 106.

Adam

primitive fathers generally believe that he died in the place where Jeruſalem was afterwards built, and that he was interred on mount Calvary [y], in the very ſpot whereon CHRIST was crucified (G); which opinion opened a large field for rhetorical Year of the World 930. Year before Chriſt, 3376.

[y] Vid. SALIANI Annal. tom. 1. p. 225.

Adam to be taken, leſt his poſterity ſhould make his relicks an object of idolatry (2).

The Eaſtern chriſtians add, that he farther directed his family, that when they were obliged to leave the neighbourhood of paradiſe, they ſhould take his body with them, and place it in the midſt of the earth, becauſe thence ſhould come his ſalvation, and that of all his poſterity (3). Which order, it is ſaid, was repeated by Lamech to his ſon Noah, with this addition, that he ſhould take with the body gold, frankincenſe and myrrh, as offerings, and appoint one of his ſons to attend the corps to, and at, the new ſepulchre, who was to be a religious perſon, and unmarried; was to ſhed no blood, nor offer any ſacrifices but bread and wine only; was to be cloathed in ſkins, and ſhould neither cut his hair, nor pare his nails, and was to be called the prieſt of GOD; meaning thereby Melchizedek (4). And this Noah and Melchizedeck are ſaid to have performed.

(G) This opinion may be reconciled with the preceding, if we ſuppoſe the body was removed to Golgotha after the flood, in purſuance of the abovementioned orders. Jacobus Edeſſenus ſays (5), that Noah carried the bones of Adam with him into the ark, and when he came out of it, he divided them among his ſons, giving the ſcull to Shem, who coming into Judæa, repoſited it in the ſepulchre of Adam on mount Calvary.

A commentator has an odd ſtory, which is abſurdly enough fathered on ſome Jews; that Seth, at the command of an angel, put into Adam's mouth, when he was interred, a ſeed of the tree of knowledge, which afterwards grew to be a tree, and that CHRIST's croſs was made of it (6).

To accompany this ſtory, we ſhall add two more of the ſame ſtamp, though not ſo properly belonging to this place. One is, that Eve broke a branch from the tree of knowledge, of which ſhe made a cudgel, and by that cogent argument prevailed on her huſband to eat of the forbidden fruit (7). The other, that Seth planted a branch of the tree of life, which had been either brought to Adam by an angel, or begged by Seth at the gate of paradiſe; and that the ſame becoming a tree, Moſes afterwards from that tree took

(2) R. Eliezer ubi ſup. Juchaſin p. 5. (3) Eutych. p. 19. (4) Idem p. 32. (5) Apud Barcepham de Parad. part 1. c. 14. (6) Corn. a Lapide in Geneſ. ii. 9. citing Pinedo. (7) Apud Salden, Otia Theol. p. 607.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

notwithstanding the uncharitable opinions of some to the contrary (D).

Conjectures concerning the place of his burial.

Where he was buried cannot be collected from scripture. St. Jerom [u] seems to approve of the opinion of those who imagine he was buried at Hebron (E) in the cave of Machpelah, or the double cave, which Abraham, many ages after, bought for a burying-place for himself and family [w]. The oriental christians say, that when Adam saw death approaching he called Seth, Enos, Cainan, and Mahalaleel to him, and ordered them to embalm his body with myrrh, frankincense, and cassia, and deposite it in a certain cave on the top of a mountain, which he had chosen for the repository of his remains thence named the cave of al Konûz [x] (F). The primitive of the deity (12). Some Rabbins make him to have been the author of the ninety second Psalm; and in some manuscripts the Chaldee title of that Psalm imports it to be the Hymn, which the first man sang on the Sabbath-day (13). Eusebius Nieremberg (14) has been credulous enough to give us two hymns, faithfully copied from the revelation of Amadeus in the library of the Escurial, as the genuine compositions of Adam; one being that which he repeated on his first interview with Eve, and the other the penitential Psalm sung by them after the fall.

[u] Hieron. in Matth. xxvii. [w] Genes. xxiii. 3, &c. [x] Eutych. Annal. p. 19. Elmacin. p 6.

(D) A certain heretical sect, named Tatianites, affirmed he was damned (15).

(E) This is offered to be proved by this passage of scripture, according to the vulgate translation, Nomen Hebron ante vocabatur Cariath arbe: Adam maximus ibi inter Enacim situs est (16). But the name Adam is unwarrantably inserted in the text, the Hebrew plainly signifying (as the other versions render it) that Hebron was formerly called Kirjath-Arba or the city of Arba, who had been a great man among the Anakims. There is however another origin of that antient name of Hebron given by some writers, who taking the word Arba, which also signifies four, in that sense; and not for a proper name, say, that city was so called, because four couple were there buried, viz. Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, and Jacob and Leah (17).

(F) From the Arabic كَنَزَ kanaza, to lay up privately, as treasure, &c. Some Jews say, that this precaution was ordered by (12) Vid. Heidegg. Hist. Patr. tom. 1. p. 314. (13) Gaspar Schottus Technic. curiosa, p. 556. (14) Apud Schottum ibid. (15) Vid. Epiphan. Haeres. 46. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 4. p. 27. (16) Josh. xiv. 15. (17) R. Eliezer Pirke, c. 20. Vid. Heidegg. ubi sup. p. 106.

Adam

primitive fathers generally believe that he died in the place where Jeruſalem was afterwards built, and that he was interred on mount Calvary [y], in the very ſpot whereon CHRIST was crucified (G); which opinion opened a large field for rhetorical

Year of the World 930. Year before Chriſt, 3376.

[y] Vid. SALIANI Annal. tom. I. p. 225.

Adam to be taken, leſt his poſterity ſhould make his relicks an object of idolatry 2).

The Eaſtern chriſtians add, that he farther directed his family, that when they were obliged to leave the neighbourhood of paradiſe, they ſhouid take his body with them, and place it in the midſt of the earth, becauſe thence ſhould come his ſalvation, and that of all his poſterity (3). Which order, it is ſaid, was repeated by Lamech to his ſon Noah, with this addition, that he ſhould take with the body gold, frankincenſe and myrrh, as offerings, and appoint one of his ſons to attend the corps to, and at, the new ſepulchre, who was to be a religious perſon, and unmarried; was to ſhed no blood, nor offer any ſacrifices but bread and wine only; was to be cloathed in ſkins, and ſhould neither cut his hair, nor pare his nails, and was to be called the prieſt of GOD; meaning thereby Melchizedek (4). And this Noah and Melchizedeck are ſaid to have performed.

(G) This opinion may be reconciled with the preceding, if we ſuppoſe the body was removed to Golgotha after the flood, in purſuance of the abovementioned orders. Jacobus Edeſſenus ſays (5), that Noah carried the bones of Adam with him into the ark, and when he came out of it, he divided them among his ſons, giving the ſcull to Shem, who coming into Judæa, repoſited it in the ſepulchre of Adam on mount Calvary.

A commentator has an odd ſtory, which is abſurdly enough fathered on ſome Jews; that Seth, at the command of an angel, put into Adam's mouth, when he was interred, a ſeed of the tree of knowledge, which afterwards grew to be a tree, and that CHRIST's croſs was made of it (6).

To accompany this ſtory, we ſhall add two more of the ſame ſtamp, though not ſo properly belonging to this place. One is, that Eve broke a branch from the tree of knowledge, of which ſhe made a cudgel, and by that cogent argument prevailed on her huſband to eat of the forbidden fruit (7). The other, that Seth planted a branch of the tree of life, which had been either brought to Adam by an angel, or begged by Seth at the gate of paradiſe; and that the ſame becoming a tree, Moſes afterwards from that tree took rhetorical flouriſhes and alluſions [z]. The Mohammedans will have Adam's ſepulchre to have been on the mountain Abu-kabis, near Mecca; and the antient Perſians in Serendib, or Ceylon, where it was for ſome time, as they pretend, guarded by lions [a].

(2) R. Eliezer ubi ſup. Juchaſin p. 5. (3) Eutych. p. 19. (4) Idem p. 32. (5) Apud Barcepham de Parad. part 1. c. 14. (6) Corn. a Lapide in Geneſ. ii. 9. citing Pinedo. (7) Apud Salden, Otia Theol. p. 607.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

THE time of the death of Eve, the mother of all living (H), is not intimated in ſcripture, but there are ſome who venture to tell us, that ſhe out-lived her huſband ten years [b].

AFTER the death of Adam, the Eaſtern writers ſay, that Seth with his family ſeparated themſelves from the profligate race of Cain, and removed to the mountain where Adam was buried, which they choſe for their habitation; Cain and his family remaining below in the valley where Abel was ſlain [c]. But how this near neighbourhood is conſiſtent with ſcripture, which plainly intimates Cain's baniſhment into a country at ſome conſiderable diſtance from the reſidence of Adam and his poſterity by Seth, we cannot conceive: unleſs it ſhould be ſuppoſed, that Cain or his deſcendants, left their own ſettlements to diſpoſſeſs Seth and his offspring; or elſe, that the poſterity of both were by this time ſo greatly encreaſed, that after gradually extending their borders on both ſides, they at length met, and ſtraitned each other. However this be, the Eaſtern tradition is, that the progeny of Seth lived in the ſaid mountain in great ſanctity and purity of manners (I). Their conſtant employment was praiſing GOD, from which they had few or no avocations; for their only food was the fruits of the trees which grew on the mountain, ſo that they had no occaſion to undergo any ſervile labours, nor the trouble of ſowing or getting in harveſt; they were utter ſtrangers to envy, injuſtice, or deceit. Their only oath was by the blood of his rod, with which he performed ſo many miracles, the bough, with which he made ſweet the bitter waters of Marah, and the pole whereon he fixed the brazen ſerpent (8).

[z] See BAYLE Dict. Hiſt. Art. Adam, Rem. L. [a] Vid. D'HERBELOT. Bibl. Orient. p. 56. [b] Apud SALIAN. t. 1. p. 231. [c] EUTYCH. p. 19.

(H) From whence ſhe had her name, which is properly written Havvvah, and derived from the root חיה Haya, to live (9).

(I) Our authors, if we may credit them, tell us, that paradiſe was ſo little higher than the mountain, that the children of Seth could hear the voices of the angels celebrating the praiſes of GOD, and even join them in that ſervice (10).

(8) Vid. eund. p. 608. & Moebium de æneo ſerpente. (9) Geneſ. iii. 20. (10) Elmacin. p. 6. Eutych. p. 20.

Abel;

Abel; and they every day went up to the top of the mountain to worship GOD, and to visit the body of Adam, as a means of procuring the divine blessing [d]. Year of the World 930.

HOWEVER, what time they had to spare in these happy circumstances, they seem to have employed in cultivating their minds, and in sublime speculations; while the children of Cain, seeking no farther than present convenience and pleasure, were taken up with improving agriculture, and inventing mechanical arts and musical instruments. For it is said, that the offspring of Seth, by contemplation of the heavenly bodies, laid the foundations of the science of astronomy, and lest their inventions should be forgotten, or lost before they were publickly known, understanding from a prediction of Adam's that there would be a general destruction of all things, once by the rage of fire, and once by the violence and multitude of waters, they made two pillars, one of brick, and the other of stone, and engraved their inventions on each of them; that if the pillar of brick happened to be overthrown by the flood, that of stone might remain; which Josephus [e] tells us, was to be seen in his time in the land of Siriad (K). Year before Christ, 3376.

How

[d] EUTYCH. p. 20. ELMACIN. p. 6. [e] JOSEPH. Ant. l. 1. c. 2.

(K) Where this land of Siriad was, is a great dispute. The name is variously written in the manuscripts, κατὰ τὴν Σιριάδα, & Συριάδα; by others Σίριδα (1), and by Eustathius Σηριαδ, which last seems the more correct. Some place it in Syria; others (2), with a little more probability, have taken it to be the same with Seirath mentioned in scripture (3), and suppose the פְּסִילִים pesilim, which the English translation renders the quarries, near Gilgal, in the tribe of Ephraim, were the ruins of Seth's stone pillar. Yet others (4) understand those pesilim, or τὰ γλυπτὰ, the sculptures, as the Septuagint translate the word to have been certain idols, lately set up there by Eglon.

But the more certain opinion (5) is, that the Syriadic land was in Egypt; for we are told, that Manetho extracted his history from certain pillars there, whereon inscriptions had been made by Thoth, or the first Mercury, in the sacred letters and dialect; but were,

(1) Malela, Glycas, Cedrenus, & Vetus Interpr. (2) Vossius de LXX Interpr. p. 271. & de ætat. mundi. c. 10. Marsham Canon. Chron. p. 39. (3) Judg. iii. 26. (4) Chytræus, &c. (5) Vid. Dodwell. Dissert. de Sanchon. p. 26, 36. Fabric. Bibliotb. Gr. l. 1. c. 11. Stillingfleet Orig. Sacr. l. 1, c. 2. & alios.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

The defection of the sons of Seth.

How long the descendants of Seth continued thus religious, and imitators of their father's virtue, is uncertain. Moses says, That when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, the sons of GOD saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose[f]. By which it appears, that the beginning of their corruption was their marrying into the wicked family of Cain, by which means their manners were soon debauched, and at length degenerated so far, that the wickedness of man was very great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually[g]. Josephus writes, that the family of Seth persevered in the true worship of GOD, and in the pursuit of virtue for seven generations; after which, in process of time, they neglected both, shewing twice as much eagerness after wickedness, as they had formerly shewn zeal for virtue; by which means they drew down on themselves the indignation of GOD[h].

THE oriental writers place the beginning of this defection somewhat sooner, in the days of Jared[i], and in his fortieth year[k]; when they say one hundred of the sons of Seth, hearing the noise of the music, and riotous mirth of the

[f] Genes. vi. 1, 2. [g] Ibid. ver. 5. [h] JOSEPH. Ant. l. 1. c. 3. [i] ELMACIN. p. 9. EUTYCH. p. 27. [k] ABU'L-FARAG. p. 8. Vid. etiam EPIPHAN. Heres. l. 1.

after the flood, translated from the sacred dialect into the Greek tongue, but written in the sacred letters, and laid up in books by the second Mercury in the sacred receſſes of the Egyptian temples (6). Theſe pillars were in ſubterraneous caverns near Thebes, and beyond the Nile, not far from the ſounding ſtatue of Memnon, in a place called Syringes (7), which are deſcribed to be certain winding apartments under ground, and which (as it is ſaid) thoſe who were ſkilled in antient rites, foreſeeing the coming of the deluge, and fearing leſt the memory of their ceremonies ſhould be obliterated, built and contrived in vaults dug with vaſt labour in ſeveral places; cutting on the walls many ſorts of birds, and beaſts, and innumerable kinds of animals, which they called hieroglyphic letters (8). And that Seth was not a name unknown to the Egyptians, appears from Plutarch, who tells us, that they conſtantly called Typhon, which was a Greek name, Seth (9); and hence, it is probable, Joſephus was led into the miſtake of aſcribing theſe pillars to the ſon of Adam.

(6) Syncell. p. 40. Marcell. l. 22. p. 232. (7) Pauſan. l. 1. p. 78. (8) Ammian. (9) Plut. de Iſid. & Oſir. p. 351, & 357

Cainites,

Cainites, agreed to go down to them from the holy mountain. And on their arrival among them were so captivated with the beauty of the women, who were naked, that they immediately defiled themselves with them [l]. And so these sons of Seth perished by whoring with the daughters of Cain; for when they offered to return again to their former abode, the stones of the mountain (it is said) became like fire, and permitted them to pass no farther [m]. The lubricity of the Cainites is described in very strong terms. The men neighed after the women like horses, and the women in the same manner after the men, committing whoredom and all manner of filthiness promiscuously with one another in public; the old women being, if possible, more brutish and lewd than the young. The fathers lay with their daughters, and the young men with their mothers, so that the children could not distinguish their parents, nor the parents their children.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ 3376.

THE appellation of the sons of GOD, given by Moses to the children of Seth, led Josephus [n], Philo Judæus [o], and several of the fathers [p] into a strange interpretation of this passage, as if the angels, who are also called in scripture the sons of GOD [q], were thereby asserted to have had to do with women, and to have begotten on them the insolent and impious race we shall mention immediately (L). This supposition

The opinion of those who suppose angels defiled themselves with women.

[l] Idem, ibid. [m] EUTYCH. p. 27. [n] Jos ubi sup. [o] PHILO JUD. de gigant. p. 284. [p] JUSTIN M. TERTULLIAN, ATHENAG. CLEMENS ALEXANDR EUSEB. LACTANTIUS, AMBROSIUS, & alii apud Sixtum Senens. Bibl. S. l. 5. annot 77. SULP. SEVER. Hist. Sacr. l. 1. p. 8. [q] Job. i. 6. ii. 1. xxxviii. 7.

(L) This opinion seems to have been originally occasioned by some copies of the Septuagint, which in the days of St. Austin, had in this place the angels of God (1). Lactantius supposes the angels, who were guilty of this enormity, had been sent down by GOD to guard and take care of mankind, and being endued with free will, were charged by him not to forfeit the dignity of their celestial nature, by defiling themselves with the corruptions of the earth; but that the devil at length enticed them to debauch themselves with women. He adds, that being not admitted into heaven, by reason of the wickedness into which they had plunged themselves, they fell down to the earth, and became the devil's ministers. But that those who were begotten by them, being neither angels nor men, but of a middle nature, were not received

(1) August. de civit. Dei. lib. 15. c. 23.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

sition we think needs no refutation, being utterly repugnant to into hell, no more than their parents were into heaven. Hence arose two kinds of dæmons, celestial and terrestrial. These are unclean spirits, the authors of whatever evils are committed, and whose prince is the devil (2). From hence very probably proceeded the notions of Incubi, or dæmons, who are supposed to have carnal knowledge of women (3).

But the fancy of angels defiling themselves with women, has been greatly propagated by that forgery we have mentioned above, entitled the prophecy of Enoch. The fragments we have still extant of which, give a more particular history of these imaginary transactions; wherefore we shall here insert an extract of those fragments, though some particulars might perhaps be more properly reserved for another place.

When men were greatly encreased, they had daughters of such excellent beauty, that the Egregori, or watching angels (4), fell in love with them, and proposed to one another, that they should go down, and choose themselves wives of the daughters of men: to which Semiazas, their prince, replying, that he was apprehensive they would not go through with the affair, but leave him to bear the guilt alone, they all swore and bound themselves under imprecations, that they would not recede from their resolution. The number of these Egregori was two hundred, who, in the days of Jared, descended on the top of mount Hermon, which was so called from the oath they had taken. Their princes were twenty, whose names (if the readers have any curiosity to know them) follow:

Semiazas, their chief,	Zaciel,	Samiel,
Atarcuph,	Balciel,	Sarinas,
Araciel,	Azalzel,	Eumiel,
Chobabiel,	Pharmarus,	Tyriel,
Orammame,	Amariel,	Jumiel,
Raniel,	Anagemas,	Sariel.
Sampsich,	Thausael,

These, and the rest of them, in the year of the world one thousand one hundred and seventy, took themselves wives, and began to commit lewdness with them, which they continued to do until the flood; and the women bore to them three generations. The first generation were the giants, the giants begat the Nephilim, and the Nephilim those named Elud, and they were multiplied according to their stature, and taught themselves and their wives magic and enchantments. The tenth of their princes, named Azalzel, taught them to make swords, breast-plates, and instruments of war; as also the working of metals, particularly gold and silver, and fashioning to the notions we have of the nature of those spiritual beings who

(2) Lactantius de orig. err. l. 2. c. 15. (3) Vid. August. ubi sup. cap. 65. (4) See p. 101. before in the notes.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

fashioning various ornaments for the women: he also instructed them in the preparing of cosmetics, the polishing of precious stones, and the art of dying. These things the sons of men provided for themselves and their daughters, and they transgressed; and also seduced those that were virtuous among them, and wickedness prevailed greatly in the earth. Semiazas, the chief of these angels, taught the force of poisonous roots and herbs; Pharmarus the eleventh, charms and incantations; the ninth, astroscopy; the fourth, astrology; the eighth, aeroscopy; the third, the signs of the earth; the seventh, those of the sun; the twentieth, those of the moon; and in like manner each of them revealed certain secrets to their wives and children. Afterwards the giants began to devour human flesh: by which means the number of men daily decreasing, those that remained cried to heaven against their cruelty, and besought GOD to remember them. This the four arch-angels hearing, looked down upon the earth, and beholding a great deal of blood-shed thereon, and that all manner of impiety and disorder was committed, made their report thereof to GOD, and at his command bound the princes of those transgressors, and threw them into the abyss, there to be kept to the day of judgment (5). Uriel in particular was sent to Noah, the son of Lamech, to acquaint him, that the whole earth was to be destroyed by a deluge, and instruct him by what means to escape it. Raphael was ordered to bind Azael [Azalzel] hand and foot, and to throw him into darkness, in the desert of Dudael, and to lay him upon sharp stones, and cover him with darkness, that he might dwell therein for ever, being destined to the punishment of fire on the day of judgment. The words which follow, directing him to heal the earth of the wounds caused therein, by the secrets revealed by the Egregori, are something dark, and deserve not the trouble of an explication. Gabriel's charge was to destroy the giants, the sons of the Egregori, by exciting them to mutual and intestine wars, that they might fall by each others hands; and Michael was commanded to bind Semiazas, and the rest of his companions, and to lead them, after they had seen the slaughter of their beloved sons, to the utmost parts of the earth, where they were to be confined for seventy generations, till the consummation of all things, and the day of judgment, when they were to be thrown into the gulph of fire. The giants, being begotten by a mixture of spirit and flesh, were condemned to become evil spirits, doing mischief upon the earth, appearing as spectres, and taking no food; but were to rise with mankind at the general resurrection. Therefore from the day of the slaughter of the giants, the Nephilim, (5) Ex primo libro Enoch apud Syncellum, p. 11, 12, 13. Vid. 2 Pet. ii. 4.

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ 3376.

who are neither married nor given in marriage[r]; though it be hard to accuse, as some have done[s], those who have fallen into this mistake of heresy and blasphemy. Others indeed, and particularly several of the Jewish writers, by the sons of God, understand the fallen angels (M), who seeing the daughters of Cain walking in the nakedness of the flesh, and painting their eyes like whores, wandered after them, and took wives from among them [t].

While

[r] Matth. xxii. 30. Luke xx. 35, 36. [s] Philastrius Brixiensis. adv. Hær. cap. 108. Chrysost. Homil. 22. in Genes. c. v. [t] R Eliezer, c. 23.

the mighty men of the earth, and the great men of renown, the spirits which went forth from their souls, as from flesh, were to continue their mischievous employments till the last day. It was also decreed, that mount Hermon, where those angels mutually bound themselves by an oath, should never be without snow and cold till the day of judgment, when it should melt like wax. Mankind are also threatned with a general destruction, and that their life should be but one hundred and twenty years (6).

This is the substance of those fragments, many parts of which are so greatly corrupted, that it is difficult to make sense of them; but the best is, the loss is not great.

(M) Two of them were Aza and Azael, mentioned before (7). Shamhazai (whose name comes very near that of Semiazas) was another; he was the companion of Azael, and begat on some women Hiyah and Hhiyah, who begat Sihon and Og. Shamhazai is said to have repented of his crime, and in penance for the same to have hung himself up between heaven and earth, in which posture he still remains; but Azael continuing impenitent, presides over the womens toilets (8), and is the same with the goat Azazel mentioned by Moses (9). A fourth of these debauched angels, named Mahzael, is said to have lain with Ham's wife about the time of the flood, and Sihon, it is pretended, was the issue of that adultery (10)

These antient traditions concerning angels were not unknown to Mohammed. The Korân (11) mentions two, named Harût and Marût, who taught magic at Babel. These, the commentators say, were sent down to be judges on earth, which office they executed with integrity for some time, till Zohara, or the star Venus, descended, and appeared before them in the shape of a beautiful woman, bringing a complaint against her husband (though others say she was really a woman). As soon as they saw her, they fell in love

(6) Ex eod. ibid. p. 24, 25, 26. (7) Page 154. in the notes. (8) Bereshi Rabba in Genes. vi. 2. (9) Levitic. xvi. 8. (10) Juchasin. (11) Cap. ii. v. 102, &c.

WHILE we were on this head, it may not be amiſs to mention another opinion, more reaſonable than the laſt, which is embraced by the Jewiſh interpreters [u]; they ſuppoſe, that by the ſons of GOD in this place, are meant the princes, great men, and magiſtrates of thoſe times, who, inſtead of uſing their authority to puniſh and diſcountenance vice, were themſelves the greateſt examples and promoters of lewdneſs and debauchery, taking the daughters of men, or the inferior and meaner ſort of people, and debauching them by force (N). Year of the World 930. Year before Chriſt, 3376.

THE example of theſe ſons of Seth, who tempted by the allurement of the daughters of Cain, firſt left their ſeat of innocence, was afterwards followed by others, who from time to time deſcended in great numbers from the holy mountain, and took them wives in like manner of that profligate and abandoned race [w]. From theſe unhappy marriages iſſued a generation, which ſeem to have been no leſs extraordinary for their great ſtature and ſtrength, than for their monſtrous impiety and injuſtice. There were in thoſe days giants (O) in the earth [x], The iſſue of the Sethites and the daughters of Cain, and their impiety.

[u] TARGUMIM ONKELOS & BEN UZZIEL. R. SOL. YARHI, ABEN EZRA, &c. [w] EUTYCH. p. 27.

love with her, and endeavoured to prevail on her to ſatisfy their deſires; but ſhe flew up again to heaven, whither the two angels alſo returned, but were not admitted. On the interceſſion of a certain man, they were allowed to chooſe, whether they would be puniſhed in this life or in the other; whereupon they choſe the former, and now ſuffer puniſhment accordingly in Babel (12). This ſtory was taken directly from the Perſians, who make mention of two rebellious angels of the ſame names, now hung up by the feet, with their heads downward, in the territory of Babel (13).

(N) To ſupport this interpretation, they tell us that the verb לקח, which is generally rendered to take, ſignifies alſo to raviſh, or take by violence.

(O) The Hebrew word is נפילים Nephilim, from נפל Naphal, to fall; which derivation is urged in defence of that opinion, which makes them incarnate ſpirits, or the fallen angels, under the ſhape of men (14). The targum of Ben Uzziel agrees with this interpretation, and names two of thoſe angels then converſant on earth, viz. Shambazai and Uziel. But the root ſignifies alſo to fall upon, to ruſh with violence, &c. According to which ſenſe Symmachus tranſlates Nephilim βιαίους, & Aquila ἐπιπιπλοντας. The other tranſlations generally rendering it Giants.

(12) Vid. Maracc. in Alcor. p. 44. (13) Vid. Hyde de rel. vet. Perſar. cap. 12. (14) Vid. Paul. Burgenſ. in loc.

Some

Year of the World 930. Year before Christ, 3376.

earth [x], who being most probably of Cain's race, both by father and mother, and born before the conjunction of the two families [x] Genes. vi. 4.

Some take these Nephilim to have been men of ordinary stature, and so called on account only of their enormous impiety, rapaciousness, and insolence (15), which, as it seems, was the opinion of Josephus (16). But others, with greater reason, believe they were also of extraordinary stature and strength, (17); the word Nephilim being manifestly used elsewhere in scripture (18) to denote men above the common size. Not but that it may also signify those that fall away, apostates (19).

That there were in these antient times men of a gigantic size and strength, is a thing very credible, both from later instances, in historians, both sacred and prophane, and modern instances in our own times (20). But we must not hence conclude, as some have done, that mankind in general were in the first ages of a much larger stature than they are at present (21); giants being manifestly spoken of as rarities, and the wonders of their time, though their number seems to have been much greater before the flood.

The opinion of J. Bolduc (22), the Capucine, is too singular to be omitted. He supposes, that the different words by which giants seem to be intended in scripture, as Nephilim, Raphaim, Zuzim, Gibborim, Enakim, Zamzummim, Elim, &c. do not, for the most part, denote the uncommon size, but the strength and excellence of the piety and truth of the holy patriarchs, the first propagators of mankind and divine worship. The Nephilim, in particular, he imagines to be those who were distinguished from others, in that they worshipped GOD by falling down, or prostration; in the same manner as the fathers of the order of St. Francis of Assise are remarkable for adoring in the same posture, and kissing the earth, before the host.

Some authors have inquired into the original cause of this monstrous stature of the giants; St. Cyrill thinks it a judgment of GOD on the lust of their parents (23). They who suppose them to be the issue of the fallen spirits, say, it was by their artful promoting and raising the lechery and pleasure of the women with whom they had to do (24); some attribute it to the vigour of the sons of Seth (25);

(15) Philo Jud. de Gigant. Gorop. Becanus in Gigantomach. Temporarius. (16) Antiq. l. 1. c. 3. (17) Vid. August. de civit. Dei. l. 15. c. 4. Chyf. in loc. Theodoret. quæst. 48. in Genes. R. Sol. Yarhi, Aben Ezra. (18) Numb. xiii. 32, 33. (19) See 2 Kings xxv. 11. Jerem. xxxvii. 13. and xxxviii. 19. (20) Vid. Derham's Physico-Theol. b. v. c. 4. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. 1. c. 5. § 25. (21) Vid. Homer. Virgil. (22) In tract. de ecclesia ante legem. (23) Lib. 3. in Genes. (24) Vid. Fr. Vales. de Sacra Philos. c. 8. (25) Vid. Heid. Hist. Patr. t. 1. p. 202.

while

families (P), made use of their superior power to spoil and tyrannize over the weaker. And the same course of life was followed by the new mongrel offspring, who signalized themselves also by robberies and oppressions, and became mighty men, which were of old, men of renown [y].

MANKIND running thus headlong into all manner of vice, and the posterity of Seth, who had for some ages retained their integrity, becoming at length, by their imprudent alliance with the race of Cain, infected with the same contagion of profaneness and immorality, so that all sorts of wickedness began to overspread the earth; and this, notwithstanding the frequent admonitions they probably received by persons from time to time sent by GOD; the divine vengeance might with justice have been immediately executed on so perverse a generation: but GOD, out of his great mercy, was pleased to grant them a convenient time for repentance, no less than one hundred and twenty years; during which space, but no longer his spirit should strive with man [z], or endeavour to awaken and reclaim them from their wicked course of life (Q). Year of the World, 1287. Year before Christ, 3019.

The 120 years of God's forbearance.

AMIDST

[y] Genes. vi. 4. [z] Ibid. v. 3.

while others make Seth's descendants in general to have been of a very large size, and those of Cain on the contrary of a less (26).

(P) This the words of Moses seem to imply; There were giants (says he) in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of GOD came in unto the daughters of Men, and they bare children to them, &c. So that there appear to have been two distinct races of Nephilim; one of which arose pretty early in the world, being of the posterity of Cain; and another, which began some ages after, being the issue of the sons of Seth by the daughters of Cain (27); and both of them probably continued to the flood.

(Q) This passage of scripture is variously interpreted; the English translation seems to give the true sense of the Hebrew; but the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac versions render the word דין (which we translate) strive with, continue, or dwell in; supposing the meaning to be, either that GOD's spirit of admonition, or forbearance, would not always wait on man; or else that the spirit, or breath of life, should not always continue in him; that is, no longer than the space of one hundred and twenty years, after which if he continued impenitent, he should be destroyed. And this is the sense of Onkelos. The Jews have much useless learning in their comments on this text (28). But they who infer from hence, that the standard of man's life was now reduced and limited

(26) Chrysost. in loc. Eutych. (27) Vid. Heid. ubi supr. p. 185.
(28) Vid. eundem ibidem. p. 343, &c.

to

Year of the World 1287. Year before Christ 3019.

Noah preaches.

AMIDST this general corruption, one man however was found to be just and perfect in his generation (R), walking with GOD [a]. This extraordinary person was Noah (S), the son of Lamech, who, not thinking it sufficient to be righteous himself, unless he did his utmost to turn others likewise to righteousness, by admonition as well as example, became a preacher [b] to the abandoned race among which he lived, employing both his counsel and authority to bring them to a reformation of their manners, and to restore the true religion among them (T). But all he could do was to no purpose, for to one hundred and twenty years (13), are manifestly mistaken; for that reduction was not made immediately after the flood, nor till the days of Moses; and St. Peter plainly approves the other sense, when he observes, that the long suffering of God waited in the Days of Noah, while the ark was preparing (14): yet this notion spread even among the heathen writers (15).

[a] ibid. v. 9. [b] 2 Peter ii. 5.

(R) From this expression some Jews would infer, that Noah was a good man comparatively speaking only, in respect of the great wickedness of the rest of the world: but that had he lived in Abraham's time he would have had but a small share of reputation for virtue (16). But this unjust surmise, had it any foundation in the words of Moses, is refuted by the testimony of Ezekiel (17), who names him as one of the three that had been most eminent for righteousness, and should save their lives by their own merits in the most universal calamities. It is true, they give another reason for their opinion, viz. because Noah did not intercede for the old world as Abraham did for Sodom.

(S) Lamech gave his son this name, which signifies comfort; for this same, says he, shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, because of the ground which the Lord hath cursed. Which words, not expressing the means by which Noah was thus to comfort his friends, some writers have thence inferred, that he invented the tools and instruments of husbandry (18).

(T) The eastern christians say, that when GOD ordered Noah to build the ark, he also directed him to make an instrument of wood, such as they make use of in the East, at this day, instead of bells to call the people to church, and named in Arabic ناقوس, Nákûs, which he was to strike three times every day, not only to call together the workmen that were building the ark, but to give him an opportunity

(13) Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 3. Philo de gigant. Procop. in locum. (14) 1 Pet. iii. 20. Vid. Augustin. de civit. Dei. l. 15, c. 24. (15) Vid. Treb. Pollion. in Claud. (16) Philo Jud. de Abraham, p. 354. R. Sol. Yarhi in locum. (17) Ch. xiv. 14, 18. (18) Yarhi in locum. Zohar, paraſh. 1.

for they continued incorrigibly obſtinate; ſo that at length (as Joſephus [c] tells us) finding himſelf and family in imminent danger of ſome violence, in return for his good will, he departed from among them with his wife and children. Year of the World 1287. Year before Chriſt, 3019.

ON his departure, it is probable, they fell into greater diſorders than before, having now none to controul, or even to trouble them with unwelcome advice. Moſes aſſures us, that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was continually evil [d], and that the earth was corrupt and filled with violence, all fleſh (U) having corrupted his way upon the earth [e]. Which words leave no room to inquire into the particular crimes of the antediluvian world, which ſeems to have been over-run with a complication of all manner of debauchery and wickedneſs, and above all with violence and injuſtice towards one another. Whether idolatry was practiſed before the flood, is a queſtion we ſhall diſcuſs elſewhere; but the eaſtern authors are for the affirmative, and ſay, the children of Seth were ſeduced to it by the Cainites [f]. Mankind incorrigible.

THINGS being in this ſtate, GOD, as the ſacred hiſtorian pathetically expreſſes it, repented, that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart [g]. And the time of forbearance being elapſed, he paſſed the ſentence of their utter deſtruction by a flood of waters, and not only of them, but of the beaſts of the earth, and every creeping thing, and Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2909.

[c] Antiq. l. 1. c. 3. [d] Geneſ. vi. 5. [e] Ib. v. 11, 12.
[f] EUTYCH. Annal. p. 31. [g] Geneſ. vi. 6.

opportunity of daily admoniſhing his people of the impending danger of the deluge (2).

The Mohammedans likewiſe agree to make Noah a prophet, and, as has been obſerved, one of the ſix principal ones (3), though he had no written revelations delivered to him (4). The Kurân mentions his preaching to thoſe of his time in ſeveral places (5) Some of their writers pretend he was ſent to convert Zohâk, one of the Perſian kings of the firſt race, who refuſed to hearken to him. He then went to peach GOD's unity publickly, but could make no more proſelytes than eighty, who went with him into the ark (6).

(U) The oriental writers agree in making this defection ſo univerſal, that at laſt, they ſay, there was none left in the holy mountain, of all Seth's race, except only Noah and his wife, and his three ſons and their wives (7).

(2) Eutych. Annal. p. 37. (3) See before, p. 159. in the notes. (4) Vid. Reland. de rel. Moham. p. 34. (5) Cap. 11 v. 26. cap. 26. v. 105, &c. (6) Vid. D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. p. 675. (7) Eutych. Annal. p. 35.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ 2999.

of the fowls of the air [h], which became involved in the calamity of their masters. But Noah found grace in the eyes of the LORD [i], who had before, probably at the beginning of the one hundred and twenty years, acquainted him with his design of bringing a deluge on the earth; and as a means to preserve him and his from that calamity, directed him to make an ark, or vessel of a certain form and size, capable of containing not only himself and family (for he had three sons Shem, Ham, and Japhet, who were all married before the flood), but such numbers of animals of all sorts, which were liable to perish in the flood, as would be sufficient to preserve the several species and again replenish the earth, together with all necessary provisions for them [k]. All which Noah performed, and so, by GOD's peculiar favour and providence, he and those that were with him escaped this tremendous and, otherwise, general destruction; which event, the most extraordinary that is recorded in history, and deserving our greatest attention, must be the subject of a future discourse, after we shall have taken a view of what the prophane writers offer us towards the history of this period.

The whole world destroyed by a flood, except Noah and his family.

SECT. V.

The prophane history before the flood.

Accounts of antediluvian affairs besides that of Moses.

BESIDES the particulars in the preceding section taken from the writings of Moses, the only records to be depended on in these early times, we have some farther accounts relating to this period, transmitted to us by antient writers; particularly those of the Phœnician, Babylonian, and Ægyptian antiquites, which we must not omit; leaving, however, the reader to judge of their credibility.

Sanchoniatho's Phœnician history.

SANCHONIATHO, who wrote the Phœnician antiquities (X), began his history from the origin of the world and of mankind; but his work being apparently written with a design to apologize for idolatry [l], instead of deducing the history (as Moses has done) from Adam in the line of Seth, the worshippers of the true GOD, he has, according to the most probable hypothesis (Y), given us that of the idolatrous line

[h] Ib. ver. 7. [i] Ib. ver. 8. [k] Ib. ver. 14, &c. [l] See the introd. p. 24.

(X) The credit of the fragments we have remaining of this work and the age of its author, are inquired into in the preface.

(Y) Viz. That of bishop Cumberland, the substance of whose remarks the reader will find in the following notes.

of

of Cain; that the religion which this author, or those he transcribed, patronized, might appear to be introduced by the elder branch, a circumstance which they might think, gave it no small lustre and reputation.

IN the following extract from the remaining fragments of this author, we might justly be surprized to find not so much as the least mention of the deluge, did we not consider, that destruction was a judgment on the idolatrous world, with which the professors of the true religion probably reproached the heathens, and which the latter were therefore desirous to conceal, to bury, if possible, the very memory of so extraordinary a monument of divine vengeance and their own shame.

SANCHONIATHO having delivered his cosmogony, or ge- Generation neration of the other parts of the world [m], begins his history I. of mankind with the production of the first pair of mortals [n], whom Philo, his translator, calls Protogonus and Æon (Z), the latter of whom found out the food which is gathered from trees.

THEIR issue were called Genus and Genea (A), and dwelt Generation in Phœnicia: but when great droughts came, they stretched II. forth

[m] Vid. ibid. p. 23. [n] Vid. ibid. p. 95.

(Z) That these two were Adam and Eve, appears not only from their being the first of human kind, but also from their names, Πρωτόγονος the first produced, and Αἰὼν life (which is the signification of that word in the feminine gender, the masculine article τον, prefixed to it in the original, being a mistake of the transcriber;) the latter of them bearing a near resemblance to Eve both in sense and sound. What our author immediately mentions of the woman's first gathering food from trees, seems to allude to Eve's first eating the forbidden fruit (1).

(A) Genus abating the termination, makes a fair approach in sound to the name of Cain; and by its signification seems very proper to denote the man who was the first-begotten in the ordinary course of nature. The Greek word γνάω, whence the Latin gigno comes, being also probably derived from קָנָה Kana (K and G being letters of the same organ, and consequently easily changed into each other), the root from which the name of Cain was formed. Genea may signify only the wife of Genus, as Caia does the wife of Caius in the civil law (2).

As to what follows, that Cain and his wife dwelt in Phœnicia, this seems repugnant to the Mosaic history, where Nod is said to be

(1) Vid. Grot. de veritate Rel. Christ. in notis ad lib. 1. §. 16. Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 215, &c. (2) Cumberl. ibid. p. 219, &c.

forth their hands to heaven towards the ſun (B); for him they thought the only God and Lord of heaven, calling him Beel-ſamen, which in Phœnician is Lord of heaven, and in Greek Zeus. For we, ſays our author, not vainly, have frequently diſtinguiſhed thoſe names, but with reſpect to the later ſignification of names accruing to them from later things; which the Greeks not knowing, have conſtrued otherwiſe, being deceived with the ambiguity of their ſignifications.

Generation III. Afterwards from Genus, the ſon of Protogonus and Æon, other mortal iſſue was begotten, whoſe names were Phos, Pur, and Phlox, that is, Light, Fire, and Flame (C). Theſe found out the way of generating fire, by the rubbing of pieces of wood againſt each other, and taught men the uſe be on the eaſt of Eden. But it may not be impertinent to add, what has been obſerved, that there was a city in Canaan called Cain, within the bounds aſſigned to the tribe of Judah (3). In the beſt maps it is ſituated not far from the ſea, on a promontory lying within the country, which the Philiſtines kept long in their poſſeſſion; and it is not likely, that any who owned themſelves derived from Seth, ſhould build a city, and then brand it with the odious name of Cain; but it is poſſible, it might be either built by ſome of his family before the flood, and its ruins be repaired afterwards ſtill keeping his name; Joppa, another city in that Neighbourhood, being alſo ſaid to be more antient than the deluge (4). Or it might be built by the old Philiſtines before Joſhua's time; and they being deſcended from Mizraim, might, though falſely, believe, as Sanchoniatho reports, that he was of Cain's line, and thence might call this city by his name (5).

(B) This ſeems to have been the firſt introduction of idolatry, which began with the worſhip of the ſun; ſeveral of Cain's deſcendants added other methods of idolatrous worſhip, diſtinctly ſet down by this author; they proceeded to deify the ſeveral parts of nature and men after their death, and even to conſecrate plants ſhooting out of the earth, which the firſt men, or thoſe in the elder ages, judged to be gods, and worſhipped, as thoſe that ſuſtained the lives of themſelves and their poſterity, as well as of their anceſtors: to theſe they made their meat and drink offerings; which Sanchoniatho ſays, were the devices of worſhip agreeing with the weakneſs and want of boldneſs in their minds (6).

(C) Hebrew names like theſe, though unuſual among us, are mentioned in after times in ſcripture; as, Ur, Uri, Baar, and Lahabim, which ſignify fire and flames, and anſwer Philo's well enough. It is ſuppoſed, they were ſo called from their inventing the method of kindling and uſing fire (7).

(3) Joſh. xv. 57. (4) Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c 13. (5) Cumberl. ubi ſupr p. 220, &c (6) Sanchon. apud Euſeb. ubi infra. (7) Cumberl. ubi ſup. p. 237.

thereof.

thereof. Theſe begat ſons of vaſt bulk and height, whoſe names were given to the mountains on which they ſeized: ſo from them were named mount Caſſius, and Libanus, Antilibanus, and Brathys (D). Generation IV.

OF theſe laſt were begotten Memrumus and Hypſuranius (E), but they were ſo named by their mothers, the women of thoſe times, who without ſhame lay with any man they could light upon (F). Hypſuranius inhabited Tyre, and he invented the making of huts of reeds, and ruſhes, and the papyrus. He alſo fell into enmity with his brother Uſous (G), who firſt invented a covering for his body out of the ſkins of the wild beaſts which he could catch. And when violent tempeſts of winds and rains came, the boughs in Tyre being rubbed againſt each other, took fire, and burnt the wood there. And Uſous, having taken a tree and broke off its boughs, firſt was ſo bold as to venture upon it into the ſea. He alſo conſecrated two rude ſtones, or pillars, to fire and wind, and he worſhipped them, and poured out to them the blood of ſuch wild beaſts as had been caught in hunting (H). But when theſe were dead, Generation V

(D) This generation were inhabitants and lords in the great mountains which took their names from them. So Seir, a name of Edau, is ſuppoſed to have been given to the mountain which he poſſeſſed, though it be proleptically given to that country before his birth (2).

(E) Bochart makes theſe two but one perſon, reading, Memrumus, who is alſo called Hypſuranius, the latter name ſeeming to be a tranſlation of the firſt, which Bochart thinks has loſt a ſyllable, Mem being left inſtead of Samen, or שמים Shamaim, ſignifying heaven, to anſwer Ὕψιστος in Philo's tranſlation, as Rum does ὕψος or high. Scaliger thinks it only put inſtead of מרום Mimum, from on high. Biſhop Cumberland derives it with leſs change from רום Rum, and מים Maim, ſignifying waters from on high, or ſnow from above (3).

(F) The immorality of the womens proſtituting their bodies, ſo plainly confeſſed by our author, agrees with the intimation which Moſes gives concerning the debauchery of theſe ages, and the general corruption of the world which enſued upon it.

(G) Uſous is thought to be the ſame with עוץ Ous, i. e. ſtrong, a name long after given to the ſon of Aram, whom Joſephus calls Uſus, and we write Uz; the termination in Joſephus only differs from Philo's Ouſous. (4).

(H) The wind and fire, to which theſe two pillars were conſecrated, ſeem to have been thoſe violent ones that had burnt the wood. This is the oldeſt inſtance of worſhipping theſe lower to t forth their hands to heaven towards the ſun (B); for him they thought the only God and Lord of heaven, calling him Beelſamen, which in Phœnician is Lord of heaven, and in Greek Zeus. For we, ſays our author, not vainly, have frequently diſtinguiſhed thoſe names, but with reſpect to the later ſignification of names accruing to them from later things; which the Greeks not knowing, have conſtrued otherwiſe, being deceived with the ambiguity of their ſignifications.

(2) Vid eund. ibid. (3) Idem. ibid. p 231. (4) Idem ibid p 238.

Generation III. AFTERWARDS from Genus, the ſon of Protogenus and Æon, other mortal iſſue was begotten, whoſe names were Phos, Pur, and Phlox, that is, Light, Fire, and Flame (C). Theſe found out the way of generating fire, by the rubbing of pieces of wood againſt each other, and taught men the uſe be on the eaſt of Eden. But it may not be impertinent to add, what has been obſerved, that there was a city in Canaan called Cain, within the bounds aſſigned to the tribe of Judah (3). In the beſt maps it is ſituated not far from the ſea, on a promontory lying within the country, which the Philiſtines kept long in their poſſeſſion; and it is not likely, that any who owned themſelves derived from Seth, ſhould build a city, and then brand it with the odious name of Cain; but it is poſſible, it might be either built by ſome of his family before the flood, and its ruins be repaired afterwards ſtill keeping his name; Joppa, another city in that Neighbourhood, being alſo ſaid to be more antient than the deluge (4). Or it might be built by the old Philiſtines before Joſhua's time; and they being deſcended from Mizraim, might, though falſely, believe, as Sanchoniatho reports, that he was of Cain's line, and thence might call this city by his name (5).

(B) This ſeems to have been the firſt introduction of idolatry, which began with the worſhip of the ſun; ſeveral of Cain's deſcendants added other methods of idolatrous worſhip, diſtinctly ſet down by this author; they proceeded to deify the ſeveral parts of nature and men after their death, and even to conſecrate plants ſhooting out of the earth, which the firſt men, or thoſe in the elder ages, judged to be gods, and worſhipped, as thoſe that ſuſtained the lives of themſelves and their poſterity, as well as of their anceſtors: to theſe they made their meat and drink offerings; which Sanchoniatho ſays, were the devices of worſhip agreeing with the weakneſs and want of boldneſs in their minds (6).

(C) Hebrew names like theſe, though unuſual among us, are mentioned in after times in ſcripture; as, Ur, Uri, Baor, and Lehabim, which ſignify fire and flames, and anſwer Philo's well enough. It is ſuppoſed, they were ſo called from their inventing the method of kindling and uſing fire (7).

(3) Joſh. xv. 57. (4) Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 13. (5) Cumberl. ubi ſupr. p. 229, &c. (6) Sanchon. apud Euſeb. ubi infra. (7) Cumberl. ubi ſup. p. 237.

thereof.

thereof. These begat sons of vast bulk and height, whose names were given to the mountains on which they seized: so from them were named mount Cassius, and Libanus, Antilibanus, and Brathys (D). Generation IV.

OF these last were begotten Memrumus and Hypsuranius (E), but they were so named by their mothers, the women of those times, who without shame lay with any man they could light upon (F). Hypsuranius inhabited Tyre, and he invented the making of huts of reeds, and rushes, and the papyrus. He also fell into enmity with his brother Usous (G), who first invented a covering for his body out of the skins of the wild beasts which he could catch. And when violent tempests of winds and rains came, the boughs in Tyre being rubbed against each other, took fire, and burnt the wood there. And Usous, having taken a tree and broke off its boughs, first was so bold as to venture upon it into the sea. He also consecrated two rude stones, or pillars, to fire and wind, and he worshipped them, and poured out to them the blood of such wild beasts as had been caught in hunting (H). But when these were dead, Generation V

(D) This generation were inhabitants and lords in the great mountains which took their names from them. So Seir, a name of Esau, is supposed to have been given to the mountain which he possessed, though it be proleptically given to that country before his birth (2).

(E) Bochart makes these two but one person, reading, Memrumus, who is also called Hypsuranius, the latter name seeming to be a translation of the first, which Bochart thinks has lost a syllable, Mem being left instead of Samen, or שמים Shamaim, signifying heaven, to answer Ὑψιστος in Philo's translation, as Rum does ὕψος or high. Scaliger thinks it only put instead of מנרום Minrum, from on high. Bishop Cumberland derives it with less change from רום Rum, and מים Maïm, signifying waters from on high, or issue from above (3).

(F) The immorality of the womens prostituting their bodies, so plainly confessed by our author, agrees with the intimation which Moses gives concerning the debauchery of these ages, and the general corruption of the world which ensued upon it.

(G) Usous is thought to be the same with עוץ Ous, i. e. strong, a name long after given to the son of Aram, whom Josephus calls Ouses, and we write Uz; the termination in Josephus only differs from Philo's Ousous. (4).

(H) The wind and fire, to which these two pillars were consecrated, seem to have been those violent ones that had burnt the wood. This is the oldest instance of worshipping these lower sort dead, thoſe that remained conſecrated to them ſtumps of wood and pillars, worſhipping them, and kept anniverſary feaſts unto them (I).

(2) Vid. eund. ibid. (3) Idem. ibid. p. 231. (4) Idem. ibid. p. 238.

Generation VI. MANY years after this generation, came Agreus and Halieus (K), the inventors of the arts of hunting and fiſhing, from whom huntſmen and fiſhermen are named.

Generation VII. OF theſe were begotten two brothers, the inventors of iron and of the forging thereof: one of theſe, called Chry- of naturally immortal gods; which it is probable were worſhipped becauſe the fire and winds are of kindred to celeſtial or ethereal matter. The Greek does not expreſly ſay, that the blood of the wild beaſts was poured out, but it is conceived neceſſary ſo to underſtand the words σπένδειν ἐκ θηρίων, becauſe there is nothing elſe in them, beſides their blood, which can be poured out as a libation. This is therefore obſerved to be the firſt offering of blood to inferior deities. And becauſe this was that of hunted wild beaſts, of whoſe blood no great quantity could be gotten to be poured out of veſſels; we may infer, that Uſous offered ſome part of their fleſh, with their blood dropping out of their limbs. And ſince there is no reaſon to doubt, but he eat part of what he had taken in hunting, as he offered part; this is the firſt example of eating fleſh before the flood; and the reſtriction under which it was afterwards granted to Noah, ſeems to intimate, that the wild antediluvian ſons of Cain had fallen into the barbarity of eating raw and bloody fleſh, forbidden therefore to Noah and his poſterity, both in the caſe of ſacrifice and of ordinary diet, to prevent all correſpondence with their ſavage practices (5).

(I) Here is the connexion of the worſhip of men after death, with that of the parts of nature. But it does not appear, any ſacrifice or prayer was as yet made to them as gods, as is expreſly ſaid hereafter of Vulcan.

(K) Theſe names are Greek, and therefore Philo's tranſlation of ſome eaſtern names of like import. All that can be underſtood of this age is, that the arts or employments here mentioned, were then much improved, for Uſous was a huntſman before.

Though the connexion of this generation with the preceding, be expreſſed more ambiguouſly than any other in the whole pedigree, by the words, after much time; which may occaſion a doubt, whether this generation was the immediate offspring of the laſt or not; yet if we conſider, how far ſome of the antediluvians were advanced in years before their children were born, we muſt allow, that no argument can be built thereon for the negative. And an interpolation of other generations cannot be admitted without owning ſo many more generations in Cain's line before the flood, which would make his line to have more links in it than Seth's, a circumſtance we have no reaſon to believe (6).

(5) Idem, ibid. p. 239, 240. (6) Idem, ibid. p. 242, &c.

for (L),

ſor (L), the ſame with Hephæſtus, or Vulcan, exerciſed himſelf in words, and charms, and divinations; and he found out the hook, bait, and fiſhing line, and boats ſlightly built, and he was the firſt of all men that ſailed. Wherefore he alſo was worſhipped after his death for a god, and they called him Zeus Michius, or Jupiter the engineer (M); and ſome ſay, his brothers invented the way of making walls of brick.

AFTERWARDS from this generation came two brothers, one of which was called Technites, or the Artiſt, the other Gëinus Autochthon (N), the home-born man of the earth. Theſe found out to mingle ſtubble, or ſmall twigs, with the bricky earth, and to dry them in the ſun, and ſo made tiling. Generation VIII.

BY theſe were begotten others, of which one was called Agrus [Field] and the other Agrouerus, or Agrotes (O) [huſbandman] Generation IX.

(L) Bochart's origination of this name from חרש־אור Choresur, which he renders Πυριτεχνίτης, an artificer by fire, is not improbable. Yet Biſhop Cumberland rather derives it from a ſimple root חרץ Charas, to beſtir one's ſelf vigorouſly, to cut, &c. from whence χρῦσος, beaten, or cut gold, is allowed to come, and why not Chryſor? ſince it differs only in termination, and compoſitions muſt not be admitted in eaſtern words without neceſſity.

This Chryſor is the firſt man our author informs us of, who was worſhipped as a god after his death, a plain confeſſion that ſuch worſhip was not from the beginning. It is remarkable, that as this ſort of idolatry began in the eighth generation, and the flood was drawing near in the next generation but one, ſo it is more than probable, that all, or moſt of thoſe who were concerned in this firſt deifying of men, if they lived to be any thing near the age of their contemporaries of Seth's line, were drowned therein (1).

(M) The original is Diamichius. But our learned biſhop chooſes to divide the word, and derives Michius from מחי Machi, a machine (2).

(N) Technites ſeems to be a tranſlation of the eaſtern name Malachi, from מלאכה Malâca, workmanſhip, art. The other, Gëinus, ſignifying earthy has ſome affinity with Epher, and Ephron, Canaaniti/h names, and probably uſed by Sanchoniatho (3)

(O) This generation is remarkable, becauſe to the men thereof, the firſt ſtatue, or idol to be worſhipped, and the firſt temple we read of, was erected in Phœnicia; a ſmall temple, or rather tabernacle, it was like that of Moloch and his ſtar Chiun, or Remphan (4), and drawn by oxen, in the ſame manner as the ark, or epitome of GOD's tabernacle, was ſent home by the Philiſtines ſucceſſors to the old Phœnicians in their religion and abode, upon a new cart, drawn by milch-kine (5).

(1) Idem, ibid p. 244, &c. (2) Idem, ibid p. 232. (3) Ibid. p. 246. (4) Amos v. 26. Acts. vii. 43. (5) 1 Sam. vi.

[husbandman] who had a ſtatue much worſhipped, and a temple carried about by one, or more yoke of oxen in Phœnicia: and among thoſe of Byblus he is eminently called the greateſt of the gods. Theſe found out how to make courts about mens houſes, and fences, and caves, or cellars. Huſbandmen, and ſuch as uſe dogs in hunting, derive from theſe; and they are alſo called Aletæ, and Titans.

Generation X.

Of theſe were begotten Amynus and Magus (P), who ſhewed men to conſtitute villages and flocks.

The names of theſe men import gods of huſbandry, as Pan, Pales, and Sylvanus among the Greeks and Romans. Biſhop Cumberland gueſſes that in Sanchoniatho, the perſon whom Philo expreſſes by Agrus, might be called Siddim, or Sadid, a name whereby one of Cronus's ſons is afterwards called; either of which will anſwer the Greek (12).

The Egyptians whoſe religion and deſcent was the ſame with that of the old Phœnicians, beſides Pan, had an antient deity, named Aroueris, mentioned by Plutarch, and by ſome taken to be Apollo, by others Orus Senior, and by Scaliger (13) Anubis. But biſhop Cumberland thinks, he was the ſame that is here called Agrouerus; and if the g is allowed to melt away, as it often does, or if we take Ἄρῳὸς and Ἄρυρα as Synonima, the name is the ſame, for the termination is arbitrary (14).

(P) Amynus ſeems to import in this place a defender from enchantment, and Magus a ſorcerer; though both words are capable of a more favourable interpretation. Yet in the loweſt dregs of Cain's race. we may believe the worſt the words will bear (15).

This generation being the tenth from Adam incluſive, was that generation which, excepting Noah and his family, was entirely deſtroyed by the flood, together with their children. But thoſe idolaters, from whom Sanchoniatho took his genealogies, ſuppreſſed all mention of the flood, as he does; and pretended, that the line in which their idolatry began, was continued on to ſucceeding ages. And this being impoſſible to be done, in inſtances of men that ever had any being in the earth, any other way than by taking men out of Noah's line, and annexing them as ſons to the laſt men of that family, which in truth was wholly extinguiſhed in the flood, they proceed to carry on the genealogy with Miſor and Sydic, two perſons who in reality, as it will be attempted to ſhew, were deſcendants of Noah (16). Wherefore we reſerve the hiſtory of them and their poſterity until after the deluge.

(12) Cumberl. ubi ſupr. p. 247, &c. (13) De emend. temp. (14.) Cumberl. ubi ſup. p. 249. (15) Iaem ibid p. 250. (16) Idem ibid. p. 177.

In

IN theſe mens age there was one Eliun (Q) which imports in Greek Hypſiſtus [the moſt high], and his wife was named Beruth, who dwelt about Byblus; and by him was begotten one Epigeus, or Autochthon (R), whom they afterwards called Uranus (S) [heaven], ſo that from him that element which is over us, by reaſon of its excellent beauty, is called heaven; and he had a ſiſter of the ſame parents called Ge (T) [the earth], and by reaſon of her beauty the earth had her name given to it.

HYPSISTUS, the father of theſe, dying in fight with wild beaſts, was conſecrated, and his children offered ſacrifices and libations to him. But Uranus taking the kingdom of his father, married his ſiſter Ge, and had by her four ſons, Ilus, who is called Cronus [or Saturn] Betylus, Dagon, who is Siton, or the god of corn, and Atlas (U); but by other wives Uranus had much iſſue. THUS

(Q) In Hebrew עליון Elion. This perſon, as will appear when we conſider his deſcendants, muſt be Lamech, the father of Noah, of the line of Seth, which is here introduced abruptly and imperfectly, as being that of the profeſſed enemies of the falſe religion which our author patronizes (17).

(R) Theſe two Greek names having ſome relation to the earth, it is likely they tranſlate the title which Moſes gives Noah, who is here meant, viz. a man of the earth (18) which we render an huſbandman; and that may alſo be the reaſon why his wife's name is ſaid to be Ge, the earth (19).

(S) This name, and that of Eliun, are ſuppoſed to have been given to Noah and his father, by Thoth and other idolaters by way of ſneer, becauſe they worſhipped the only ſupreme GOD in heaven, in oppoſition to their earthly gods, which had been men (20) But a better reaſon is, that it was the conſtant cuſtom to give new and magnificent names to perſons deified (21), as Eliun and Uranus both were; though they had no conſiderable part of the idolatrous worſhip, which was chiefly employed in ſerving Cronus, and his wives and children (22).

(T) The Atlantian theology, which ſeems to agree with Sanchoniatho, in ſaying that Uranus gave his name to the heavens, to imprint a greater idea of himſelf in the minds of the people, tells us, however, that his wife's firſt name was Titæa, (perhaps from טיט Tit, mud) and that ſhe being, after her death, conſecrated into a goddeſs, was called Ge (23).

(U) The firſt of theſe four ſons was Ham, the arguments to prove which will be produced hereafter in a more proper place; who the

(17) Idem ibid. p. 152. (18) Geneſ. ix. 20. (19) Cumberl. ubi ſup. p. 151. (20) Idem ibid. p. 182, &c (21) Ibid. p. 291, &c. (22) Ibid, p. 152. (23) Diodor. Sicul. l. 3. p. 189, &c.

Thus far Sanchoniatho; the thread of whose history we break off here, and shall resume in the next period. But before we dismiss this author, we shall in the following table compare the pedigree of Cain's line given by him, with that given by Moses; first observing, that though Moses hath not recorded ten generations in this line, as Sanchoniatho has, yet it does not thence follow, that there were not ten generations in this line before the flood; for Moses does not tell us that those he has named were all the descents before the flood, nor that the last generation which he mentions was drowned, though probably it was so. However, it is very improbable, that eight generations in Cain's line should live as long as the ten in Seth's, especially considering that Cain in all likelihood had children before Seth was born: wherefore it is more reasonable to believe, that Moses has passed over two generations of Cain, as not worthy of mention; and the rather, because he does not say, that Enoch begat Irad, but only, unto Enoch was born Irad (X); which will be true if he was not his son, but his grandson, or great grandson; skipping over two generations, which added to the eight mentioned will make ten, as in Seth's line before the flood [o], thus:

A Table of the Descendants of Cain.

According to Moses.	According to Sanchoniatho.
1. Adam, Eve,	1. Protogonus, Æon,
2. Cain,	2. Genus, Genea,
3. Enoch,	3. Phos, Pur, Phlox,
4. -------	4. Cassius, Libanus, &c.
5. -------	5. Memrumus, Usoüs,
6. Irad,	6. Agreus, Halicus,
7. Mehujael,	7. Chrysor, or Hephæstus (Y)
8. Methusael,	8. Technites, Genus,
9. Lamech,	9. Agrus, Agrouerus,
10. Jabal, Jubal, Tubal-Cain.	10. Amynus, Magus.

[o] Vid. Cumberl. on Sanchon, p. 303, &c.

other three sons here named were, will also be considered elsewhere: we shall only observe here, that none of them are either Shem, or Japhet, who, according to the bishop's hypothesis, are found under other names, viz. those of Sydic and Nereus.

(X) The like expression to the same sense is found in another passage (22), where it is foretold, that Josiah should be born to the house of David, or be of the posterity of Rehoboam, then reigning, though he was many generations after him.

(Y) Sanchoniatho here places his chief artists in the seventh and eighth generation, whereas Moses, according to this table, places

22) 1 Kings xiii. 2.

them

THE Babylonian antiquities were collected by Berosus (Z), a Chaldean by birth, who lived in the time of Alexander the Great [p]. But of that work we have now remaining only some few fragments, the substance of which, so far as comes within the present period, we here subjoin. Berosus's Babylonian antiquities.

AFTER a description of Babylonia, he writes, that in the first year there appeared out of the red sea, at a place near the confines of that country, a certain irrational animal (A), whose name was Oannes. He had his whole body like that of a fish, but beneath his fishes head he had another head grew; he had also feet like a man, which proceeded from the fishes tail, and a human voice, the picture of him being preserved to that very day. This animal conversed with men in the day-time without eating any thing; he delivered to men the knowledge of letters and sciences, and skill in various arts; he taught them to dwell together in cities, to erect temples, to introduce laws, and instructed them in geometry; he likewise shewed them how to gather seeds and fruits; and in short, imparted to mankind whatever was necessary and convenient for a civilized life. But after this time there was no- The manner of mens acquiring the knowledge of arts and sciences.

[p] ALEX. POLYHIST. apud Syncell. p. 28.

them in the tenth. If we suppose the two last generations, and not the fourth and fifth, to be those omitted by Moses, they will come much nearer. Dr. Cumberland, to obtain a fuller agreement, conjectures, that these two links in Sanchoniatho, have been transposed, and that Chrysor should be in the eighth place, and Technites in the seventh; or else, that the father in the seventh generation might invent those arts, and on that account be celebrated by Thoth, or his scribes; and the sons might bring them to greater perfection in the eighth generation, and for that reason be rather taken notice of by Moses (23).

(Z) Of this author, the reader will find a more particular account in the preface.

(A) The Greek is ζῶον ἄφρενον; but the sequel plainly shews him to have been nothing less than irrational: some corruption may therefore very justly be supposed.

As to the names of Oannes and Annedotus given to this person, and those of the same appearance who are mentioned below, it may seem a Folly to offer at any explanation of them. By their coming up out of the sea, it is most probable, they were strangers, and arrived in Chaldea by shipping (24). The Syriac word ܐܘܢܕܐ Onûdo, signifies a traveller or foreigner, and might without much violence be converted into either of the said names.

(23) Cumberl. ubi sup. p. 232, &c. (24) Vid. Newton's Chronol. p. 210, 211.

thing excellent invented. When the ſun ſet, this animal retired into the ſea again, and ſtayed there in the night-time, being of the amphibious kind. After him there appeared ſeveral other animals of the ſame form, mentioned in the enſuing hiſtory. This Oannes did not deliver his inſtructions by word of mouth only, but as our author aſſures us, wrote of the origin of things [q], and of political œconomy [r].

Other authors have alſo made mention of this Oannes, Helladius calls him Oes (if it be not rather the ſcribes way of of abbreviating Oannes), and agrees in general with the foregoing account; but adds, that he had the hands, as well as the head and feet of a man; that it was reported, he was produced from the primigenial egg (as his name teſtified (B) and that he was in reality no more than a man, though he ſeemed to be a fiſh, becauſe he was compleatly dreſſed in a fiſhes ſkin [s]. Hyginus likewiſe writes, that Euahanes, a name not very diſtant from Oannes, came out of the ſea in Chaldea, and explained aſtrology [t].

The ante-diluvian kings of Chaldea.

Berosus proceeds to give us a ſeries of ten kings who reigned in Chaldea before the flood; but as there are ſome ſmall variations in the authors who have tranſcribed that hiſtorian, we ſhall here exhibit them to the readers view.

A Table of the Chaldean Kings before the Flood, from Berosus.

According to Africanus [u].	Sari.	Years.	According to Abydenus [w],	Sari.	According to Apollodorus [x].	Sari.
1. Alorus reigned	10		1. Alorus reigned	10	1. Alorus reigned	10
2. Alaſparus	3		2. Alaparus	3	2 Alapœrus	——
3. Amelon	13		3. Amillarus	13	3. Amelon.	——
4. Amenon	12		4. Ammenon	12	4. Ammenon	——
5. Metalarus	13		5. Megalarus	18	5. Megalarus	18
6. Daonus ——		99	6. Daos	10	6. Daonus	10
7 Euedorachus	13		7. Euedoreſchus		7. Euedoreſchus	18
8. Amphis	10		8. Anodaphus		8. Amempſinus	10
9 Otiartes	8		9. ——		9. Otiartes	8
10. Xixuthrus	18		10. Siſithrus		10. Xiſuthrus	18
	110	99		120		120

[q] See before, p. 29. [r] Alex. Polyhist. ex Beroſo apud Syncell. p. 28. [s] Hellad apud Photium, Bibl. Cod. cclxxix. col. 1504. [t] Hygin. fab. 274. The printed editions of Hyginus have Eubadnes. [u] Apud Syncell. p. 18. [w] Apud eund p. 38. C. [x] Apud eund. p. 39. B. Vid. Chron. Græc. Euseb. p. 5.

(B) An egg in Greek is called Oon.

The

THE reigns of theſe kings Beroſus computes by Sari, or decads of years (C), which ſeems to be a very convenient method in thoſe times, when the lives of men were at leaſt ten times as long as they have been in latter ages. According to which way of reckoning, the ſum of all their reigns amounts to twelve hundred, or more nicely eleven hundred and ninety nine years; which offers no violence to the Moſaic chronology. The length of thier reigns.

As theſe ten ſucceſſions exactly anſwer the ten generations from the creation to the flood, the firſt king Alorus has been ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Adam [y], as Xiſuthrus plainly appears to be Noah. Alorus gave out, that GOD himſelf had declared him the paſtor of the people [z]; and, indeed, if any man could pretend to dominion by divine right, it muſt have been Adam. Remarkable events under them.

OF Alaſparus, the ſecond king, nothing remarkable is related. His ſucceſſor Amelon, or Amillarus, was of the city of [y] PERIZON. Orig. Ægypt. c. 2. [z] ABYDEN. ex Beroſo apud Syncell. p. 38.

(C) Beroſus wrote his chronology by the computation of Sari, Neri, and Soſi; which being antient meaſures of time, and well known when the original records were written, could not, it is conceived, have wanted explanation in thoſe records. But Beroſus, or ſome later writers, have either out of ignorance, or deſign, magnified theſe meaſures of time beyond all imagination, and tell us, that the Sarus contained the interval of three thouſand ſix hundred years, the Nerus of ſix hundred years, and the Soſus of ſixty (1). However, other authors have taken thoſe years for days only, and blame Euſebius for not perceiving them to be days (2); and, as it ſeems, with great reaſon: for not to inſiſt on the incredible length of the reigns of thoſe princes, on the firſt hypotheſis, which no writer of common ſenſe or modeſty could offer to impoſe on the world, it plainly appears, they were no more than days, from the reign of the ſixth king, which is more exactly expreſſed in the firſt table to be ninety nine years, but in the others, by the round number of ten Sari, or 100 years; and the word Sarus, throwing away the termination, is no other than the Chaldee, or Syriac  'Sar, ten. The Sarus therefore contained three thouſand ſix hundred days, or juſt ten old Chaldean years of three hundred and ſixty days each: and that before the deluge, not only the civil year, but alſo the tropical ſolar, and lunar year conſiſted of juſt twelve months of thirty days a-piece, or three hundred and ſixty days in the whole, has been fully proved by a veary learned gentleman (3).

(1) Vid. Syncell. p. 17. & Abyden. apud eundem, p. 38, C.
(2) Annianus & Panodorus apud Syncell. p. 35. Vid. eund p. 17.
(3) Mr. Allin's Diſc. of the antient year, in Mr. Whiſton's Theory, book II. p. 144. Vid. etiam Scaliger. in Græc. Euſeb. p 406.

Pantibibla

Pantibibla (D): In his reign, according to Abydenus, a second Annedotus, or animal resembling the demi-god Oannes, arose out of the sea, twenty six Sari, or two hundred and sixty years after the beginning of this monarchy [a]; but Apollodorus writes, that he appeared under the next prince Amenon, after forty Sari, or four hundred years: which if they be computed from the creation (according to the Samaritan chronology) will end in that king's reign; but if from the first year of Alorus, will reach twenty years within that of Metalarus. Others, supposing this Annedotus was the hateful Oannes himself, blame Polyhistor for anticipating the time of his coming, by placing him in the first year [b].

AFTER Amenon and Metalarus, who were both of Pantibibla, succeeded Daonus, who was of the same city, and a shepherd. In his time four animals (E) of a double form, half man and half fish, came out of the sea to land, whose names were Euedocus, Eneugamus, Eneubulus, and Anementus [c].

UNDER the next prince, Eucdoreschus, who was likewise of Pantibibla, there appeared another animal, like the former, named Odacon. All these explained more particularly what Oannes had summarily and concisely delivered [d].

THE eighth and ninth kings were both of another city called Laranchi [e]. When the latter of them, Otiartes, or, as Polyhistor calls him, Ardates, was dead, he was succeeded by his son Xisuthrus.

The Chaldean account of the flood.

IN his reign happened the great deluge, of which our author gives the following account: Cronus, or Saturn, appeared to Xisuthrus in a dream, and warned him, that on the fifteenth of the month Dæsius mankind would be destroyed by a flood;

[a] Idem ib. & p. 39, C. [b] Vid. SYNCELL. p. 39, C. [c] ABYDEN. ib. [d] APOLLODOR. ex Berof. ib. [e] Idem, ib.

(D) Of this city of Pantibibla, as Scaliger observes (1), the antients have taken no notice. It seems to be the same with Sippara, hereafter mentioned, (probably the Sippbara of Ptolomy) where Xisuthrus deposited the records he wrote before the flood. This latter name may be derived from the Chaldee ספר Sephar, or Sphar, a book, or record, ; and Pantibibla is the translation of that name into Greek (2). Sir Isaac Newton (3) takes it to be the Sepharvaim of the scripture (4).

(E) Appollodorus says only that the fourth Annodotus appeared at at this time (8); but the reading of Abydenus seems the more correct.

(1) Ubi supra, p. 407. (2) See Cumberland on Sanchon. p. 255. (3) Chron. p. 275. (4) 2 Kings xix. 13. (8) Apud Syncell. p. 39. and and therefore commanded him to write down the original, intermediate ſtate, and end of all things, and bury the writings under ground in Sippara, the city of the ſun; that he ſhould alſo build a ſhip, and go into it with his relations and deareſt friends, having firſt furniſhed it with proviſions, and taken into it fowls and four-footed beaſts; and that when he had provided every thing, and was aſked whither he was ſailing, he ſhould anſwer, To the gods, to pray for happineſs to mankind. Xiſuthrus did not diſobey, but built a veſſel, whoſe length was five furlongs, and breadth two furlongs. He put on board all that he was directed, and went into it with his wife, children, and friends. The flood being come, and ſoon ceaſing, Xiſuthrus let out certain birds, which finding no food, nor place to reſt upon, returned again to the ſhip. Xiſuthrus, after ſome days, let out the birds again; but they came back again to the ſhip, having their feet daubed with mud: but when they were let go the third time, they came no more to the ſhip, whereby Xiſuthrus underſtood, that the earth appeared again; and thereupon he made an opening between the planks of the ſhip, and ſeeing that it reſted on a certain mountain, he came out with his wife, and his daughter, and his pilot; and having worſhipped the earth, and raiſed an altar, and ſacrificed to the gods, he and thoſe who went out with him diſappeared. They who were left behind in the ſhip, finding Xiſuthrus, and the perſons that accompanied him, did not return, went out themſelves to ſeek for him, calling him aloud by his name: but Xiſuthrus was no more ſeen by them; only a voice came out of the air, which enjoyned them, as their duty was, to be religious; and informed them, that, on account of his own piety, he was gone to dwell with the gods; and that his wife, and daughter, and pilot, were partakers of the ſame honour. It alſo directed them to return to Babylon, and that, as the fates had ordained, they ſhould take the writings from Sippara, and communicate them to mankind; and told them, that the place where they were was the country of Armenia. When they had heard this, they offered ſacrifice to the gods, and unanimouſly went to Babylon; and when they came thither, they dug up the writings at Sippara, built many cities, raiſed temples, and rebuilt Babylon again [i].

THE Egyptians, who would give place to no nation in point of antiquity, have alſo a ſeries of kings, who, as is pretended, The antediluvian kings of Egypt.

[i] ALEXAND. POLYHISTOR ex BEROSO, apud SYNCELL. p. 30, 31. & apud CYRIL. contra JULIAN. l. 1. ABYDENUS, ex eodem, apud SYNCELL. p. 38, 39. & apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. l. 9. c. 12.

reigned

reigned in Egypt before the flood; and, to be even with the Chaldeans, began their account the very ſame year that theirs does, according to Beroſus [g].

THERE was an antient chronicle extant among the Egyptians, not many centuries ago [h], which contained 30 dynaſties of princes who ruled in that country, by a ſeries of 113 generations, through an immenſe ſpace of 36,525 years (F): during which Egypt was ſucceſſively governed by three different races; of whom the firſt were the Auritæ, the ſecond the Meſtræi, and the third the Egyptians (G).

BUT this extravagant number of years Manetho (H) (to whoſe remains we muſt chiefly have recourſe for the antient [g] SYNCELL. p. 17. [h] Vid. eund. p. 51. & EUSEB. Chron. Græc. p 6.

(F) This number appears manifeſtly to have been not a real chronological, but a fictitious aſtronomical calculation, being produced by multiplying 1461 by 25; and is the period of the grand revolution of the zodiac, ſo famous in the Egyptian and Greek fables; at the end of which it will return to the point whence it began to move, viz. the firſt minute of the firſt degree of Aries (1).

From ſome ſuch computation, it is probable, Diodorus took the numbers he mentions of 18,000 years, the ſpace which the gods and heroes reigned, and 15,000 from Orus, the ſon of Iſis, the laſt of them, to the 180th olympiad, during which time Egypt was governed by men (2); or thoſe, which he elſewhere tells us were the number of years from Iſis and Oſiris to Alexander the Great, viz. above 10,000, or ſomewhat leſs than 23,000 (3). Other extravagant numbers were alſo by the Egyptian prieſts impoſed on Herodotus and Plato, as we may obſerve elſewhere.

(G) Theſe three races, if there be any ſhadow of truth in this account, ſeem moſt probably to have been the gods, demigods, and mortal men, which are by other authors ſaid to have reigned ſucceſſively in Egypt: the Auritæ (which name Goar (4) derives from Abaris, or Avaris, though that city was built long after the flood by the Paſtors; and Perizonius, more probably, from אור Our, light) being the gods, or antediluvian princes; the Meſtræi, the demigods, or poſtdiluvians of the race of Mizraim; and the Egyptians, the mortal kings, the firſt of whom was Menes (5): and this hypotheſis, as will be obſerved by and by, accounts tolerably well for the chronology.

(H) This writer was ſomewhat later than Beroſus. See the preface.

(1) Vid. Syncell. p. 52. (2) Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 41. (3) Idem ib. p. 20. (4) In notis ad Syncell. Vid. Marſham. Canon. Chron. p. 107. (5) Vid. Perizon. Antiq. Ægypt. p. 23, &c.

Egyptian

Egyptian history) has not adopted, however in other respects he is supposed to have been led into errors in chronology by this old chronicle [i], which yet seems to have been a composition since Manetho's time. That writer [k] began his history with the following 16 dynasties, or reigns of princes; the first of whom were called gods, and the other nine demigods. These, he says, reigned one thousand nine hundred and eighty five years (I); and the first of them, Vulcan, nine thousand (K).

A TABLE

[i] SYNCELL. ibid. [k] MANETHO apud SYNCELL. p. 18. & EUSEB. Chron. Græc. p. 7.

(I) This number of years in Manetho (which the modern chronologers unjustly correct to eleven thousand nine hundred and eighty five, or eleven thousand nine hundred and eighty eight, to make them agree with the larger numbers in the old chronicle, or in some other interpolators of Manetho) plainly shews the nine thousand years, if it be not a corrupted number, [or if those years were not lunar years] allowed here to the reign of Vulcan alone, did not belong to those dynasties themselves, but rather to that immense interval of time before the reigns of the antediluvian gods, or kings were reckoned, or before the present settlement of the world began. Accordingly the old chronicle, as will be seen by and by, ascribes no number of years to this Vulcan, but thirty thousand to the Sun. Diodorus also assures us, that some reckoned Vulcan as the first of those gods, and others the sun (1); which agrees well with the inscription on the Egyptian obelisk, to be produced hereafter, which calls Vulcan not an ordinary god himself, but the father of the gods (2).

(K) This exorbitant number of years has been taken by several of the later Greek historians not for solar, but lunar years or months; and accordingly, dividing the number of days of so many lunar revolutions by three hundred and sixty five, the number of days in a year, they reduce the nine thousand to seven hundred twenty four years and a half and four days; which way of reckoning though Syncellus ridicules (3), yet it should seem from the testimony of antient writers, to omit those of Africanus and Eusebius (4) to be the original computation; excepting only a small mistake which we shall mention presently. For Diodorus says, some of the most antient kings of the succession of the gods reigned above twelve hundred years apiece; and that this appearing incredible, some supposed, that the motion of the sun being not known in the first times, the year was described by the revolution of the moon (5); and with this

(1) Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 13. (2) Whiston's Appendix to his Essay to restore the true text, &c. p. CXC. (3) Syncell. p. 18. (4) Apud eund. p. 17, & 40. (5) Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 22.

A TABLE of the gods and demigods, who are ſuppoſed to have reigned in Egypt before the flood.

GODS.

	Yrs.	Mon.	Days.
1. Hephæſtus, or Vulcan, reigned	724	6	4
2. Helios, or the Sun, the ſon of Vulcan,	86
3. Agathodæmon,	56	6	10
4. Cronus, or Saturn,	40	6
5. Oſiris and Iſis,	35
6.
7. Typhon,	29

DEMIGODS.

8. Orus,	25
9. Ares, or Mars,	23
10. Anubis,	17
11. Hercules,	15
12. Apollo,	25
13. Ammon,	30
14. Tithoes,	27
15. Soſus,	32
16. Zeus, or Jupiter,	20

As to this table it muſt be obſerved, that the numbers were no part of the original record, but added by ſome moderns, who have mangled the chronology according to their own fancies[1], and therefore deſerve no regard; though we have tranſcribed them as we found them in Syncellus.

[1] See the Note (L).

this do other authors of good credit (6) agree, who aſſure us, that the old Egyptian year was lunar. It muſt only be obſerved, that the antediluvian year containing but three hundred and ſixty days (7), the abovementioned calculation muſt be rectified in that reſpect; and then the nine thouſand years of Vulcan's reign will make juſt ſeventy five Sari, or ſeven hundred and fifty years; which ſeems indeed a little diſproportionate to the reigns of his ſix ſucceſſors, which together can amount to no more than four hundred and fifty years. However, this way of computation will reduce this and the other extravagant numbers we meet with in the Egyptian hiſtory within ſome bounds of credibility.

(6) Plutarch in Numa, p. 72. Plin. Hiſt. nat. l. 7. c. 48. Macrob. Sat. l. 1. c. 14. Lactant. Inſtit. 2. 12. Eudoxus apud Proclum, in Tim. l. 1. p. 31. (7) See before, p. 185. in the notes.

THOUGH

THOUGH the transcribers of Manetho [m] have generally taken it for granted, that this succession of princes were supposed by Manetho himself to have reigned before the flood; yet we very much doubt, whether that historian really made the nine last, called demigods, to be antediluvians. For it appears from the sum of the years, which these gods and demigods are said to have reigned, that all of them could not possibly have reigned before the flood, even according to the Hebrew account; and if the epoch of the Egyptian kingdom began the same year with that of the Babylonians, as is expressly said, the total of the reigns of their antediluvian princes could not exceed twelve hundred years. Besides, the number of sixteen kings seems too large in proportion to that of the Babylonian kings, and of the generations of Moses in the same period. It is therefore more conformable to Manetho's chronology, to suppose the first seven only, whom he calls Gods, and the old chronicle Auritæ [n], were antediluvians; and that they reigned twelve hundred years, part of the nineteen hundred and eighty five (L), the remainder of which will be accounted for hereafter. And this hypothesis seems to be confirmed from the consideration of the last of these gods Typhon, who probably reigned immediately before the flood, and perished therein. For several circumstances of the deluge are mentioned in the history of Osiris and Typhon; particularly

The first seven of them only reigned before the flood.

[m] AFRICANUS, EUSEBIUS, PANODORUS, & SYNCELLUS.
[n] See the note (G) in p. 188.

(L) Mr. Whiston (1) says that this very number nineteen hundred and eighty five, for the antediluvian gods and semigods of Egypt, will not be at all too large for the present chronology, if we suppose it to extend from the beginning of the world to the death of the last of these semigods, Jupiter Hammon, or Ham; it only implying, that he then outlived the deluge either three hundred and twenty nine, or four hundred and twenty nine years, [that is, according to the Hebrew chronology, or the Samaritan of Mr. Whiston] which exactly agrees with the length of men's lives at that time. But this cannot be allowed by us, who follow the chronology of the present Samaritan copy; for then Ham would live six hundred and seventy eight years after the flood, which would be above one hundred and fifty more than Shem. Besides, it is unreasonable to suppose the first of these reigns commenced at the creation, and directly contrary to the original author, who makes the Babylonian and Egyptian kingdoms coeval, and to Mr. Whiston's own way of reckoning elsewhere (2): nor is it reasonable to continue Ham's reign (if he was Jupiter) immediately from the flood.

(1) Appendix, ubi supra, p. cxci. (2) In his Chronological Table.

cularly

cularly the very day when it began, or when Osiris (who is taken for Noah) was shut up in the ark [o]: the name of Typhon, according to some learned men, signifies also a deluge, or inundation (M); whence the Egyptian priests called the sea Typhon [p]: and Typhon, or, as the Latin poets call him, Typhœus, is represented as a monstrous gyant warring against heaven, and at last overcome by Jupiter, and submersed in water [q]. From all which it appears probable, that he was one of those mighty men which were of old, whose wickedness was so exceeding great, that it drew down that judgment upon them [r].

THE first of these gods, Vulcan, from his inventing the working of metals, and instructing mankind therein, which is on all hands attributed to him, has been thought to be the same with the Tubal-cain of Moses, and to have been contemporary with Noah [s]. But it seems a little inconsistent, that a person in the eighth generation from Adam, and the last recorded by Moses in the line of Cain, should have no less than six successors, whose reigns, together with his own, amounted to no less than twelve hundred years; when it cannot be supposed that Tubal-cain could be born at the soonest before the year of the world four hundred, according to the Samaritan, or five hundred according to the Hebrew chronology.

BY these gods Manetho, as he elsewhere explains himself, meant no more than mortal men, who for their wisdom and goodness were severally promoted to the regal dignity, and afterwards made immortal [t]. Their particular inventions, and prudent institutions, which gained them this honour from the people, we may more conveniently consider, when we enter on the history of the Egyptian nation: since, besides the interruptions which must be occasioned by attempting it in this place, there are so great disagreements throughout concerning these gods [u], that it would be in vain to endeavour to reconcile the foregoing table with the accounts of the Greek authors, which seem rather to relate to the times after the flood. For the Greeks were very liberal in bestowing the names of their gods, with, or without, foundation; and frequently

[o] PLUTARCH. de Isid. & Osir. p. 356. [p] Idem. ibid. p. 363. [q] APOLLON. Argon. l. 2. ver. 1215, &c. [r] Vid. Mr. ALLIN's Disc. of the antient year, in Mr. Whiston's Theory, p 169, &c. [s] TZETZES, Chiliad. 10. ver. 492, &c. [t] MANETHO, apud Euseb. de præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 1. p. 45. Vid. DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p. 8. [u] DIOD. SIC. ibid. p. 21.

(M) The Arabs at this day express the general deluge by the word الطوفان al tufan.

gave

gave the same name to several persons; which has introduced a confusion that might have been avoided, had they given us the true Egyptian names, instead of undertaking to interpret them. Nor is this the only instance in which those writers, especially the later Greek chronographers, have corrupted and confounded Manetho's history, as will be observed hereafter.

HAVING mentioned the old Egyptian chronicle, it may be proper to acquaint the reader, that, according to that record, Vulcan has no time assigned him, as appearing both night and day: the Sun, who was the son of Vulcan, reigned thirty thousand years: after him Saturn and the other twelve gods reigned three thousand nine hundred and eighty four years: then the eight demigods two hundred and seventeen years; after whom began the thirty dynasties [w].

THUS have we put together the most material pieces of history to be found in prophane authors, relating to the times preceding the flood; among which, though there be some which bear apparent marks of truth, yet we believe the greater part will be judged to deserve little credit: however, as every thing which has the least pretence to so great antiquity, cannot but be entertaining and curious, we hope our labour in collecting them will not be condemned as useless.

SECT. VI.

Of the Deluge.

THIRTEEN hundred and odd years after the earth was made and inhabited, it was overflowed and destroyed in a deluge of water. Not a deluge that was national only, or over-run some particular region, but over-spread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west, and that in such excess, that the floods over-reached the tops of the highest mountains; the rains descending after an unusual manner, and the fountains of the great deep being broke open; so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth and all things in it, mankind and other living creatures; excepting only Noah and his family, who, by a special providence of GOD, was preserved in a certain ark, or vessel, with such kinds of living creatures as he took in to him. After these waters had raged for some time on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great waves and fluctuations of this deep, or abyss, being quieted by de-

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

A short history of the flood.

[w] CHRON. VETUS apud Syncell. p. 51. & Euseb. Chron. Gr. p. 6.

cularly the very day when it began, or when Osiris (who is taken for Noah) was shut up in the ark [o]: the name of Typhon, according to some learned men, signifies also a deluge, or inundation (M); whence the Egyptian priests called the sea Typhon [p]: and Typhon, or, as the Latin poets call him, Typhœus, is represented as a monstrous gyant warring against heaven, and at last overcome by Jupiter, and submersed in water [q]. From all which it appears probable, that he was one of those mighty men which were of old, whose wickedness was so exceeding great, that it drew down that judgment upon them [r].

THE first of these gods, Vulcan, from his inventing the working of metals, and instructing mankind therein, which is on all hands attributed to him, has been thought to be the same with the Tubal-cain of Moses, and to have been contemporary with Noah [s]. But it seems a little inconsistent, that a person in the eighth generation from Adam, and the last recorded by Moses in the line of Cain, should have no less than six successors, whose reigns, together with his own, amounted to no less than twelve hundred years; when it cannot be supposed that Tubal-cain could be born at the soonest before the year of the world four hundred, according to the Samaritan, or five hundred according to the Hebrew chronology.

BY these gods Manetho, as he elsewhere explains himself, meant no more than mortal men, who for their wisdom and goodness were severally promoted to the regal dignity, and afterwards made immortal [t]. Their particular inventions, and prudent institutions, which gained them this honour from the people, we may more conveniently consider, when we enter on the history of the Egyptian nation: since, besides the interruptions which must be occasioned by attempting it in this place, there are so great disagreements throughout concerning these gods [u], that it would be in vain to endeavour to reconcile the foregoing table with the accounts of the Greek authors, which seem rather to relate to the times after the flood. For the Greeks were very liberal in bestowing the names of their gods, with, or without, foundation; and frequently

[o] PLUTARCH. de Isid. & Osir. p. 356. [p] Idem. ibid. p. 363. [q] APOLLON. Argon. l. 2. ver. 1215, &c. [r] Vid. Mr. ALLIN's Disc. of the antient year, in Mr. Whiston's Theory, p 169, &c. [s] TZETZES, Chiliad. 10. ver. 492, &c. [t] MANETHO, apud Euseb. de præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 1. p. 45. Vid. DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p. 8. [u] DIOD. SIC. ibid. p. 21.

(M) The Arabs at this day express the general deluge by the word الطوفان al tufan.

gave

gave the same name to several persons; which has introduced a confusion that might have been avoided, had they given us the true Egyptian names, instead of undertaking to interpret them. Nor is this the only instance in which those writers, especially the later Greek chronographers, have corrupted and confounded Manetho's history, as will be observed hereafter.

HAVING mentioned the old Egyptian chronicle, it may be proper to acquaint the reader, that, according to that record, Vulcan has no time assigned him, as appearing both night and day: the Sun, who was the son of Vulcan, reigned thirty thousand years: after him Saturn and the other twelve gods reigned three thousand nine hundred and eighty four years: then the eight demigods two hundred and seventeen years; after whom began the thirty dynasties [w].

THUS have we put together the most material pieces of history to be found in prophane authors, relating to the times preceding the flood; among which, though there be some which bear apparent marks of truth, yet we believe the greater part will be judged to deserve little credit: however, as every thing which has the least pretence to so great antiquity, cannot but be entertaining and curious, we hope our labour in collecting them will not be condemned as useless.

SECT. VI.

Of the Deluge.

THIRTEEN hundred and odd years after the earth was made and inhabited, it was overflowed and destroyed in a deluge of water. Not a deluge that was national only, or over-run some particular region, but over-spread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west, and that in such excess, that the floods over-reached the tops of the highest mountains; the rains descending after an unusual manner, and the fountains of the great deep being broke open; so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth and all things in it, mankind and other living creatures; excepting only Noah and his family, who, by a special providence of GOD, was preserved in a certain ark, or vessel, with such kinds of living creatures as he took in to him. After these waters had raged for some time on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great waves and fluctuations of this deep, or abyss, being quieted by de-

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

A short history of the flood.

[w] CHRON. VETUS apud Syncell. p. 51. & Euseb. Chron. Gr. p. 6.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

grees, the waters retired into their channels and caverns within the earth; and the mountains and fields began to appear, and the whole habitable earth in that form and shape wherein we now see it. Then the world began again, and from that little remnant preserved in the ark, the present race of mankind, and of animals, in the known parts of the earth, were propagated. Thus perished the old world, and the present arose from the ruins and remains of it [a].

THIS is a short story of the greatest event that ever yet happened in the world; the greatest revolution, and the greatest change in nature; which therefore justly deserves to be more particularly considered in all its circumstances.

Profane testimonies of this catastrophe.

THAT there was such an universal destruction by water, as is related by Moses, is confirmed by the concurrent testimonies of several of the most antient writers and nations in the world. What account the Chaldean records give of it, we have already seen [b]. The Indian and Persian traditions we may mention hereafter. That the Egyptians were no strangers to this event, appears, not only from those circumstances in the story of Osiris, and Typhon mentioned above [c], but from the testimony of Plato; who says, that a certain Egyptian priest recounted to Solon, out of their sacred books, the history of the universal flood, which happened long before the particular inundations known to the Grecians [d]. The inhabitants of Heliopolis in Syria shewed a chasm, or cleft in the earth in the temple of Juno, which, as they say, swallowed up the waters of the flood [e] (N). Nay, the very Americans are said

[a] Vid. BURNET's Theory, Book 1. c. 2. [b] Pag. 186, 187. [c] Pag. 191. [d] PLATO, in Timæo. [e] LUCIAN. de Dea Syria. t. 2. p. 882.

(N) The author, who mentions this, says, the Greeks gave an account of the universal deluge, [which they and others (1) have confounded with that of Deucalion] too curious to be omitted. The tradition goes, proceeds he, that the present race of men was not the first, for they totally perished, but is of a second generation, which, being descended from Deucalion, encreased to a great multitude. Now of these former men they relate this story: They were very insolent, and addicted to unjust actions; for they neither kept their oaths, nor were hospitable to strangers, nor gave ear to suppliants; for which reason this great calamity befel them. On a sudden the earth poured forth a vast quantity of water, great showers fell, the rivers overflowed, and the sea arose to a prodigious height; so that all things became water, and all men were destroyed:

(1) Vid. Ovid. Metam. l. 1. v. 260, &c.

said to acknowledge, and speak of it in their continent [f]: and we are told, that there is a tradition among the Chinese, that Puoncu, with his family, escaped out of the general deluge [g]; though another expressly asserts, the Chinese annals make no mention at all of the flood, and that it is a mistake in those who imagine they do [h]: however, it seems their historians do speak of a flood, which some suppose to be that of Noah [i], but they do not make it universal (O). Most nations have some stroyed: only Deucalion was left unto a second generation, on account of his prudence and piety. He was saved in this manner; he went into a large ark, or chest [λάρνακα] which he had, together with his sons and their wives; and when he was in, there entered swine, and horses, and lions, and serpents, and all other creatures which live on the earth, by pairs. He received them all, and they did him no hurt, but the gods created a great friendship among them; so they sailed all in one chest while the water prevailed. These things the Greeks relate of Deucalion. But as to what happened after this, there is an antient tradition among those of Hierapolis which deserves admiration; viz. that in their country a great chasm opened, and received all the water: whereupon Deucalion erected altars, and built the temple of Juno over the chasm. This same chasm, says our author, I have seen, and it is a very small one, under the temple; whether it was formerly bigger, and since lessened, I cannot tell, but that which I have seen is little. In commemoration of this history they do thus: twice in every year water is brought from the sea to the temple, and not by the priests only, but all Syria and Arabia; many come from beyond Euphrates to the sea, and all carry water, which they first pour out in the temple, and afterwards it sinks into the chasm, which, though it be small, receives abundance of water. And when they do this, they say, Deucalion instituted the ceremony in that temple as a memorial of the calamity, and of his deliverance from it (z).

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

[f] J. DE LAET. de orig. gent. Americ. p. 115. Vid. etiam ACOSTAM, HERRERAM, &c. [g] VOSSIUS, Ep. ad Andr. Colvium, p. 409. [h] COUPLET, Præf. ad Tab. Chronol. p. 3, 8. [i] Vid. MARTINII Hist. Sinic. l. 1. p. 12, & 39.

(O) An Arab, who travelled into China about the beginning of the ninth century, giving an account of a conversation he had with the emperor, among other things, says; that mentioning the flood to that prince, on occasion of a picture of Noah which he shewed him, and telling him, that that prophet, and those who were saved with him in the ark, peopled the whole earth; the emperor laughed and said, "Thou art not deceived as to the Name of some traditions of a deluge, which happened in their respective countries: but it must be owned at the same time, that several of them were particular inundations only, and therefore carefully to be distinguished from that of Noah; though antient and modern writers frequently confound them together (P), and relate circumstances of the one, which belong only to the other.

(z) Lucian. de Dea Syria. tom. 2. p. 822. Ed. Benedict.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

Topical.

Some difficulties, which seem to attend the Mosaic account of the deluge, such as the finding out waters sufficient to drown the world, and the improbability of all sorts of animals being preserved in the ark, have induced some, even men of learning, to suppose, that Noah's flood was not universal, but national only, and confined to Judæa, and the regions thereabouts (Q), or perhaps to that tract of land which lies between the four seas, the Persian, Caspian, Euxine, and Mediterranean [k], or at most reached no farther than the continent of Asia [l]. And to support this presumption they alledge, that since the primary design of the flood was to destroy mankind only, who could hardly be thought in so short a time to have overspread the face of the whole earth, there was [k] See Le Clerc's dissertations. [l] Stillingfleet, Orig. Sacr. Book 3. c. 4. p. 540. Vid. Vossium, de æt. mundi. p. 283.

" Noah; but as to the universal deluge we know nothing of it. " It is true, that the deluge did drown a part of the earth, but it " did not reach so far as our country, not yet to the Indies (3)." Ebn Shohnah ranks the Chinese among those who deny the flood.

(P) Not only Deucalion's flood in Thessaly, but those of Ogyges in Attica, and Prometheus in Egypt, have been thought the same with that of Noah (4). Those spoken of by the Americans seem to have been national; as was that of Asia minor, mentioned by Diodorus (5), from the Samothracian tradition; which yet they pretended was the most antient of all: to omit several others enumerated by Sir W. Raleigh (6), some of which he has taken from the spurious Xenophon of Annius.

(Q) Melo, who wrote a book against the Jews, speaking of the deluge, seems to make it topical, and not to have reached Armenia. His words are these: " At the time of the deluge, a man who had " escaped with his sons, went from Armenia, being driven out of " his possessions by those of the country; and passing over the " intermediate region, came into the mountainous part of Syria, " which was then desolate (7).

(3) Anciennes relations des Indes & de la Chine, p. 67. (4) Vid. Heidegger. Hist Patr. tom. 1. Exerc. 18. § 52. (5) Lib. 5. p. 322 (6 Hist. of the world, p. 1, b. 1. c. 7. §. 6. (7) Melo apud Euseb. de prep. Ev. l. 9. c. 19.

no

no neceſſity to carry the waters beyond the bounds of what was inhabited; and though in this caſe all the animals in the world (which were probably farther propagated than man, being created in greater numbers, and perhaps in divers parts) might not have been deſtroyed, yet it is conceived, that it was neceſſary to ſave ſome in the ark for future propagation, and that men might have them ready for their uſe preſently after the flood, which could not otherwiſe have been [m]. One author indeed has gone ſo far as to ſuppoſe, that all mankind did not periſh in the deluge, and has endeavoured to prove, from a peculiar expoſition of the curſes of Cain and Lamech, that the Africans and Indians are of their poſterity [n]. But as he has elſewhere himſelf confuted this opinion by the ſtrongeſt arguments [o], we ſhall ſay no more of it. And it is eaſy to ſhew, againſt thoſe who hold the former opinion, that they deny a matter of fact to get over a difficulty, and that the deluge was univerſal in its extent as well as effect.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt 2999.

FOR, 1. The ſcriptures put this matter out of doubt, expreſly telling us, that all the high hills under the whole heaven were covered by the waters, and that all fleſh died that moved upon the earth, except only Noah, and thoſe that were with him in the ark (R). Nor will the terms of Moſes allow the word

[m] STILLINGFLEET, ibid. [n] See BEDFORD's Scripture Chronol. p. 39. [o] See WHISTON's Theory, &c. p. 253, 288, &c.

(R) The words of Moſes, one would think, are too plain to admit any ſubterfuge. GOD looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt; for all fleſh had corrupted his way upon the earth. And GOD ſaid unto Noah, the end of all fleſh is come before me — and I will deſtroy them with the earth (9). Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to deſtroy all fleſh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth ſhall die (10).—Every living ſubſtance that I have made, will I deſtroy from off the face of the earth (11).--And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven were covered. Fifteen cubits upwards did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered. And all fleſh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beaſts, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man. All in whoſe noſtrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living ſubſtance was deſtroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were deſtroyed from the word earth in this place to be restrained, as it may in some others, to Judæa (S), or any other particular tract of land: for, unless the laws of nature were miraculously suspended, before the waters in one region, much less a whole continent, could exceed the tops of the highest mountains, they would certainly diffuse themselves, and overflow the rest of the earth. 2. If the deluge was topical, there was no need of the ark; Noah and his family needed only to have retired to another country, which he might do with more ease and in less time than build so vast a vessel; the beasts might have saved themselves by flight, or their loss, especially those of the unclean kinds, have been replenished from other places; and the birds might, without much difficulty, have flown to another continent. 3. The number of mankind before the flood, was vastly superior to what the present earth is, perhaps, capable of sustaining, as will appear hereafter; and the waters must therefore have overspread, in all probability, a larger part of the earth than is now known to be inhabited; and consequently the whole globe, that none might escape the divine vengeance, must have been overflowed. 4. The earth itself seems to offer us a demonstrative argument of the universality of the deluge, from the vast numbers of the shells, and teeth of fish, bones of animals, entire, or partial vegetables, and other strange things, which are to be found on the tops of the highest mountains, and in the bowels of the earth, at a great distance from the sea, and were probably left by the flood [p] (T).

(9) Geneſ. vi. 12, 13. (10) Ibid. v. 17. (11) Geneſ vii. 4.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

It

[p] Le Clerc's Dissert. Burnet's Theory, Book 1. c. 3. and Whiston's Theory ubi supra, & p. 275, &c.

earth; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark (12).

(S) Peyrerius, one part of whose præ-adamite system is, that the flood extended no farther than Judæa, which he supposes to be all that Moses meant by the earth, would also persuade us, that writer by mankind which were to be destroyed, intended the posterity of Adam; by the living creatures, the Gentiles or præ-adamites, mixed with the race of Adam; and by the great deep, the sea of Palestine (13).

(T) This argument is offered with some diffidence: for though the most experienced philosophers now agree, that these shells, &c. are not mock-productions of nature, or originally formed in the places where they are found by some plastic power of salts, or (12) Ibid. v. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23.

(13) Peyrer. præ-adamit.

othen

IT is now time to conſider, by what means this terrible devaſtation was brought on the earth, and in what manner thoſe that eſcaped it were preſerved.

IF the deluge were univerſal, the quantity of water required to effect it is ſo immenſe, that it has been generally thought extremely difficult, if not impoſſible, to ſay, whence it came, or whither it went. The proportion of water ſufficient to cauſe ſuch an inundation, has been computed at eight oceans[q]; but a perſon well able to make the calculation, ſays, that there muſt have been, at the loweſt computation, twenty-two oceans[r]. And where to find this is the queſtion. There are the clouds above, and the deeps below, and in the bowels of the earth; and theſe are all the ſtores we have for water (U):

Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2999.

Conjectures as to the manner wherein the deluge was effected.

[q] BURNET'S Theory, Book I. c. 2. [r] Dr. KEILL, in his Remarks on Whiſton's Theory. Vid. RAY'S Diſc. p. 118.

other minerals, (which was the conjecture of Dr. Plot (14), and other naturaliſts) inaſmuch as they are not to be diſtinguiſhed from real ſhells, teeth, &c. by the niceſt examination of the eye, and even the microſcope, and burn not immediately into a calx or lime, as all tophaceous, or ſtony ſubſtances do, but firſt into a coal, and then into a calx, which is the known quality of things of a bony, or fleſhy nature; yet they do not agree, that theſe things were brought in by the univerſal deluge, for this reaſon, among ſeveral others, that living animals, or fiſh, have been found in ſome of thoſe foſſil ſhells (15), and that ſuch marine ſubſtances are ſometimes formed and generated in human bodies (16); and therefore it is ſuppoſed, they were formed by a ſpermatic principle, as fiſh ſpawn received into the chinks, and other meatus's of the earth, and falling down in rains, &c. (17); which may be allowed, indeed of the ſeveral kinds of ſhell-fiſh, whoſe ſhells might preſerve them in the earth, but can hardly be admitted as to others of thoſe foſſils, ſuch as the Gloſſopetræ, or teeth of the ſhark, and the other bones of larger creatures. As to the ſubterraneous woods, and foſſil trees, there ſeems to be no great reaſon to believe, they were thrown down by the deluge, and have lain buried in the earth ever ſince; it being much more probable, that they either were occaſioned by inundations of the ſea, or were felled by men in the places where they now lie; as is undeniable of many of them, which ſtill ſhew the marks of the ax (18).

(U) Moſes, in his account of the creation, ſpeaking of waters above the firmament (19), though it be generally underſtood of the (14) Nat. Hiſt. of Oxfordſhire. (15) See Mr. LLWYD's letter in Mr. Ray's Phiſol. Diſc. p 181. (16) Ibid. p. 185. (17) Ibid. p. 190, &c. (18) Vid. Ray's Phiſol. Diſc. p. 228. (19) Gen. i. 6, 7.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

and Moses directs us to no other for the causes of the deluge; The fountains of the great deep, says he, were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened; and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights[r]. By the great deep some understand the ocean[t], but others, with more reason, the subterraneous abyss, or vast collection of waters in the bowels of the earth (X). But it is thought, the waters, which either the abyss or the rain could afford, will fall prodigiously short of the proportion required. According to the observations made of the quantity of water that falls in rain, the rains could not afford one ocean, nor half an ocean, and would be a very inconsiderable part of what was necessary for a deluge[u]. If it rained forty days and forty nights throughout the whole earth at once, it might be sufficient to lay all the lower grounds under water, but it would signify very little as to the overflowing of the mountains; so that it has been said, that if the deluge had been made by rains only, there would have needed not forty days, but forty years to have brought it to pass[w]. And if we suppose the whole atmosphere condensed into water, it would not at all have been sufficient for this effect; clouds and aqueous vapours sustained in the middle region of the air (20), yet some have fancied them to be waters placed above the heavens, and have been willing to make use of them for a supply, when they could not find enough under the heavens, to make up the mass of the deluge; though if these imaginary waters were there, how to get them down, or to lift them up again, is not easy to tell. But since the system of the world has been better known, and the nature of the heavens, it is presumed, there are none that would assert these super-celestial waters much less make that extravagant use of them, as to bring them down hither for a cause of the deluge (21).

[r] Genes. vii. 11, 12. [t] Vid. Cleric. Comment. in loc. [u] Vid. Mersenn. Cogit. Physico-mech. p. 221. [w] Auct. catenæ in Genes. vii. 4.

X) Notwithstanding the word תהום Tehom, depth, in some passages (22) is supposed to signify the sea, yet it may be there much better interpreted of subterraneous waters, as it manifestly must in other places (23). And being here joined with the epithet רבה rabbah, great, it seems Moses intended, that vast collection of waters, which the most sagacious naturalists place in the womb of the earth, the receptacle of the greatest part of that deep, which covered the earth at the beginning of the creation. (24).

(20) See the Introd. p. 87. (21) Burnet's Theory, Book 1, c. 2. (22) Psal. xxxiii. 7. Prov. viii. 27, 28. (23) Deut. viii. 7. Ezek. xxxi. 4. (24) Genes. i. 2. Vid. Burnet, ubi sup. c. 7.

for

for it is certain, that it could not have risen above thirty two foot, which is well known to be the usual height to which water can be raised by the pressure of the atmosphere [x]; for the weight of the whole air, when condensed into water, can be no more than equal to its weight in its natural state, and must become no less than eight hundred times denser, for that is the difference between the weight of the heaviest air and that of water [y]. And as to the abyss, if by it we intend the sea, that is not higher than the land, as some have formerly imagined, and therefore could contribute nothing to the deluge; it would keep its bed as it does now, and take up the same place: and if we understand the subterraneous waters, they would be quiet in their cells, and not ascend otherwise than by force; and if force were used to draw them out on the surface of the earth, their places must be filled again with other waters, so as this turns to no account upon the whole [z]. Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

THIS being the case, some cut the knot which they cannot loose, and shew us the naked arm of omnipotence; saying, that GOD created waters on purpose to make the deluge, and then annihilated them again when the deluge was to cease. But our business is not here to enquire what GOD could work by his almighty power, but to account for this event in the best manner we can from natural causes; nor are we rashly to fly to the divine omnipotence, especially for the creation of new matter. Moses plainly assigns natural causes of the deluge, forty days rain, and the disruption of the abyss; and St. Peter has assigned a cause also, the natural constitution of the world [a]; and neither of them mention a word of a new creation of waters. Others therefore, instead of a creation, suppose a transelementation, and say the air was changed into water, and that was the great instrumental cause of the deluge [b]. But this opinion agrees as little with the philosophy of Moses, or St. Peter as the last, and renders the opening of the abyss perfectly needless [c]: besides, such a transmutation would in effect be no more than a condensation, the insufficiency of which has been already shewn. According to a third expedient, the rain and sea-waters were rarefied so as to reach the determined height: but if the waters were fifteen times rarer than they naturally are (as in that case they must have been) it is hard to say how they could either drown man or beast, keep alive the fish, or support the ark [d]. A fourth opinion is, that the antediluvian earth, with all its stones, metals, mineral concretions, and all fossils whatsoever that had obtained any solidity, was totally dissolved in the deluge, the cohæsion of its parts perfectly ceasing: that the corpuscles of these solid fossils, together with the corpuscles of those which were not before solid, such as earth, sand, and the like; as also animal bodies and parts of animals, bones, teeth, shells; vegetables and parts of vegetables, trees, shrubs, herbs; in short, all bodies whatsoever which were either in the earth, or that constituted the mass of it, if not quite down to the abyss, yet at least to the greatest depth we ever dig, all these were promiscuously taken up into the waters, and made one common mass: that at length they subsided downwards together, generally, and as near as might be expected in such a confusion, according to the laws of gravity; and thus formed the strata of stone, marble, coal, and the rest, of which the earth manifestly consists; and there being bodies of different kinds and constitutions, which are nearly of the same specific gravity, it thence happened that bodies of quite different kinds subsided at the same instant, and fell together with the same stratum; for which reason the shells of cocles, escallops, and the rest, which have a greater degree of gravity, were enclosed and lodged in the strata of stone and marble, and the heavier kinds of terrestrial matter, the lighter shells not sinking down till afterwards, and so falling among the lighter matter, as chalk and the like [d]. But this strange and bold hypothesis, to which the author was driven to solve these phænomena of the interior parts of the earth, (which yet might possibly be otherwise accounted for [e]) is so little consistent with the Mosaic history of the deluge, takes so little notice of the opening the windows of heaven, and is so contrary to the universal law of mutual attraction, and the specific gravities of bodies, accounts for so few of the phænomena of the deluge, implies such a new sort of formation, or creation of the earth at the deluge without warrant for the same, and is so much more than his observations require, or will support, that it cannot engage the assent of any considering person [f]. A fifth opinion is, that though the rains might afford a vast quantity of water towards a deluge, yet the chief cause was the changing the centre of the earth, and setting it nearer to the centre, or middle of our continent; whereupon the Atlantic and Pacific oceans must needs press upon the subterraneous abyss, [d] Woodward's Nat. Hist. of the earth. [e] See before p. 199 and after § 7. [f] See Whiston's Theory, p. 276, &c. and Ray's Disc. p. 165, &c.

[x] VOSSIUS in epist. ad And. Colvium, p. 385. [y] See Dr. HALLEY's Dissert. in the Philos. Trans. Vol. XVI. p. 104. [z] BURNET ubi sup. [a] 2 Pet. iii. 5. [b] KIRCHER. de Arca Noc. l. 2. [c] Vid. BURNET ubi sup. & c. 3. [d] Vid. VOSS. ubi sup.

nion

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

and

and ſo by mediation thereof force the water upwards, and compel it to run out at thoſe wide mouths and apertures, made by the divine power breaking up the fountains of the great deep. - Theſe waters thus poured out from the orifices of the fountains upon the earth, the declivity being changed by the removal of the centre, could not flow down to the ſea again, but muſt needs ſtagnate upon the earth, and overflow it, and afterwards, the earth returning to its old centre, return alſo to their former receptacles. This hypotheſis gives a fair and eaſy ſolution of all the phænomena of the deluge, ſave only the generality of it, making it topical, and confining it to our continent: for which reaſon a very ſagacious naturaliſt, who otherwiſe approves it, propoſes a ſixth way of ſolving them; and that is, by ſuppoſing, that the divine power might at that time, by the inſtrumentality of ſome natural agent, to us at preſent unknown, ſo depreſs the ſurface of the ocean, as to force the waters of the abyſs through the before-mentioned channels and apertures, and ſo make them a partial and concurrent cauſe of the deluge. And it appears from inſtances, that there are, at ſome times, in the courſe of nature, extraordinary preſſures on the ſurface of the ſea (Y), which force the waters outwards upon the ſhores to a great height [g]. But this we fear is too occult a cauſe to give much ſatisfaction to a philoſophic enquirer.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2999.

WE have ſtill to conſider the hypotheſes of two perſons well known in the republic of letters, whoſe theories we have conſulted on other occaſions; Dr. Burnet and Mr. Whiſton.

To have a complete idea of that of the former, we muſt remember, that he conceives the firſt earth, from the manner of its formation, to have been externally regular and uniform, of a ſmooth and even ſurface, without mountains, and without a ſea; and that the waters belonging to it were wholly encloſed within, or under its upper cruſt, which formed a ſtupendous vault around them [h]. This vaſt collection of wa-

Dr. Burnet's Theory.

[g] RAY, ibid. p. 117, &c. [h] See the Introduction, p. 77.

(Y) We had upon our coaſts, not many years ago, an extraordinary tide, wherein the water roſe ſo high as to overflow all the ſea-banks, drown multitudes of cattle, and fill the lower rooms of the houſes of many villages that ſtood near the ſea, ſo that the inhabitants, to ſave themſelves, were forced to get into their upper rooms and garrets. And how this could be effected, but by an unuſual preſſure on the ſuperficies of the ocean, our author cannot well conceive (1).

(1) Ray, Diſc. c. 2. p. 119.

ters

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

ters he takes to have been the great deep, or abyss of Moses [i], and that the disruption of it was the chief cause of the deluge. For he supposes, that the earth being for some hundreds of years exposed to the continual heat of the sun, which, by reason of the perpendicular position he imagines the earth's axis then had to the plane of the ecliptic, was very intense, and not allayed by that diversity of seasons, which now keeps our earth in an equality of temper [k], its exterior crust was at length very much dried; and when the heat had pierced the shell, and reached the waters beneath it, they began to be rarefied and raised into vapours, which rarefaction made them require more space than they needed before, and finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch to make it yield to their dilatation. And as the repeated action of the sun gave force to those enclosed vapours more and more, and made them more strong and violent, so on the other hand it weakened more and more the arch of the earth that was to resist them, sucking out the moisture that was the cement of its parts, and parching and chapping it in sundry places; and there being no winter to close up its parts, it grew more and more disposed to a dissolution, and at length, when GOD's appointed time was come, the whole fabric broke, and the frame of the earth was torn in pieces as by an earthquake; and those great portions, or fragments, into which it was divided, fell down into the abyss, some in one posture, and some in another [l].

THIS hypothesis, the author thinks, not only agrees with the narration of Moses, and answers the assertion of St. Peter, that the first earth was obnoxious to a deluge from its constitution [m], but supplies all the defects of other explications. The fall of those prodigious fragments would raise a vast commotion in the abyss, and throw its waves to a great height, which would overwhelm the mountains, now first formed, for some time: for after the first violent shock, he imagines there were ever and anon some secondary ruins which broke, and made new commotions, till at length, when all the ruins were settled and fixed, the waters began to settle too, and the dry land to appear. Thus the earth put on a new form, and became divided into sea and land; the greatest part of the abyss constituting our present ocean, and the rest filling up the lower cavities of the earth, mountains and hills appeared on the land, islands in the sea, and rocks upon the shore.

[i] BURNET's Theory, b. 1. c. 7.
[k] See before, p. 136.
[l] BURNET ubi sup. c. 6. p. 95, &c.
[m] 2 Pet. iii. 5, 6, 7.

And

And so providence at one stroke dissolved the old world, and made a new one out of its ruins, which we now inhabit [n]. Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

But though it be reasonable to believe, the first earth had its axis inclined to the plane of the ecliptic as well as the present, and had the same vicissitudes of seasons; yet allowing the theorist's supposition of its parallel position to be true, it is not conceivable, the heat of the sun would even then have had the power he imagines, or affect the earth in such a degree as to cause great cracks or fissures in it, or to raise the water under it into vapours, since we find no such effects in the hottest country or season; nor is it probable, such rarefaction, were it possible, should be so extreme as to break through an arch of some hundred miles thick. Besides, it is to be feared, that if the action of the sun was so strong, the abyss, the only store-house of waters in the first earth, would have been near exhausted (Z) before the time of the deluge. This account also seems not very consonant to the Mosaic history, which describes a gradual rise and abatement, and long continuance of the flood, not a violent transient shock, which would not have lasted many days, if hours [o]: not to mention the little use our author makes of the rains, which he supposes indeed to have fallen throughout the earth (though he does not know how that could proceed from natural causes), and to have contributed to the disruption of the abyss, by weakening the arch of the earth, and stopping its pores, which would make the vapours struggle the more violently; and that nothing but a miracle could save the ark in so prodigious a storm and convulsion of nature [p].

THE expedient of the other learned theorist is the trajecti- Mr. Whiston's Theory.

[n] BURNET ubi sup. p. 101, &c. [o] Vid. KEILL's Examination of BURNET's theory. [p] BURNET ubi sup. p. 133, 136, &c.

(Z) Dr. Keill has made a plain calculation of this matter, and concludes that, since none of the antediluvian rivers, according to the theorist, returned into the abyss again, it must needs follow, that in eight hundred and twelve years it would be quite empty, upon supposition that there were as many rivers in the primitive earth, as are in ours: but as there was then twice the land, if there were no seas, so there must be allowed twice as many rivers, to water it; and by such a double quantity, the abyss would be emptied in half that time (1).

(1) Keill's Examination of Dr. Burnet's Theory. p. 164.

an

Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2999.

on of a comet (A), which he ſuppoſes paſſed ſo cloſe by the body of the earth, at the time of the deluge, as to involve it in its atmoſphere and tail. On which hypotheſis, he proceeds to account for the deluge in this manner:

He ſays, that when the earth had paſſed through the tail and atmoſphere of the comet, which he ſuppoſes to conſiſt of vapours rarefied, and expanded in different degrees, and in which it would remain, on calculation, for about two hours, it muſt have acquired a large cylindrical column of vapours, whoſe baſis were ſomewhat larger than one of the earth's greateſt circles, and whoſe altitude were equal to the diameter of the comet's atmoſphere: that theſe vapours would be impeded from deſcending towards the ſun by the earth's interpoſition and attractive power, and ſo would fall down with great violence on its ſurface; a great part of which being in a very rare and expanded condition, after their primary fall, would immediately be mounted into the air, and afterwards, on their condenſation, deſcend in violent and outrageous rains on the face of the earth, and very naturally occaſion the forty days and forty nights rain mentioned by Moſes.

That the preſence of this comet, as it approached and came below the moon, would cauſe a double tide, as well in the ſeas above, as in the abyſs below; that in the ſeas would be leſs conſiderable, but the other would be vaſtly great, and produce mighty effects. For on the neareſt approach of the comet, the ſurface of the abyſs would put on an elliptic, or oval, inſtead of its former ſpherical figure, and the orb of earth which reſted on it would be obliged to accommodate itſelf to that larger oval ſurface; which being impoſſible for it to do while it remained ſolid, it muſt of neceſſity enlarge it ſelf, and by the violent force of the increaſing ſurface of the abyſs be ſtretched, cracked, and have innumerable fiſſures made quite through it; or rather the tide muſt open and enlarge thoſe fiſſures, which were produced at the commencement of the diurnal rotation. Thus would the fountains of the deep be broken up, and ſufficient gaps made for a communication between the abyſs below and the ſurface of the earth above; which was no ſooner done, than the fall of the cometic waters began, and quickly covered the earth, and crouded the air with vaſt quantities thereof; which waters being adventitious, and of a prodigious weight, muſt preſs downwards with a mighty force, and endeavour to ſink the orb of earth deeper into the abyſs according as the entire weight of each column of earth and its incumbent water together did now require, agreeably to the laws of hydroſtatics; which laws he ſuppoſes not to have been exactly complyed with at the earth's firſt ſubſiding into the abyſs, otherwiſe he could ſcarce have expected any elevation of the ſubterraneous waters. But ſince the lower ſtrata of the earth were, according to him, in a good meaſure ſettled, and conſolidated together before the upper were all formed, the whole compages would arch-wiſe ſuſtain itſelf much higher than the law of ſpecific gravity would otherwiſe require; and ſo, upon the diſruption of the upper earth, its ſeveral columns, as there was room, would ſettle themſelves lower than they were at firſt, and their weight, augmented by the additional waters of the comet, would ſqueeze and preſs on the ſurface of the abyſs; which being a fluid maſs, and incapable of ſuſtaining a preſſure on one part without equally communicating it to all the reſt, muſt burſt out wherever ſuch preſſure was wanting, and throw itſelf up the fiſſures, through which it would aſcend with a mighty force, and carry up with it whatever was in its way, whether earth, or water, and thereby add to the quantity of water already on the face of the earth, and become a freſh augmentation of that deluge, which began already to overwhelm and deſtroy the inhabitants thereof [q].

(A) That a comet actually appeared at the deluge, is atteſted by ſeveral authors (1): Pliny (2) mentions one which appeared in the reign of Typhon, that is, at the flood, or immediately before it; and ſpeaks of the direful effects of it. And our author has endeavoured to prove, that the laſt moſt remarkable comet, which was ſeen in theſe parts in the year 1680, (whoſe revolution he computes to be in about 575 years, and whoſe trajectory Sir Iſaac Newton has delineated) was that very comet which came by the earth at the beginning of Noah's deluge, and which was the cauſe of the ſame (3)

(1) Vid. Hevelij cometograph. l. 12. p. 794. (2) Hiſt. nat. l. 2. 25. (3) Whiſton's Theory, p. 187.

enlarge

Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2999.

THE abatement and decreaſe of the waters of the deluge, our author ſuppoſes, was firſt by a wind, which dried up ſome; and ſecondly, by their deſcent through thoſe breaches and fiſſures, (at which part of them had aſcended) into the bowels of the earth, which received the reſt. To which latter alſo the wind, by hurrying the waters up and down, and ſo promoting their lighting into the beforementioned fiſſures, was very ſubſervient. The air he grants could ſuſtain a very inconſiderable quantity in compariſon of the entire maſs; but as he ſuppoſes the antediluvian earth, though it was not deſtitute of leſſer ſeas and lakes, yet to have had no great ocean, [q] WHISTON's Theory, p. 376, &c. 380, &c.

ſeparating

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

separating one continent from another, and covering so large a portion of it, as the present earth has[r]; he conceives the upper region of the earth, being generally dry and porous, and of a great thickness, was capable of receiving a much greater quantity of water, than was on the earth at the time of the deluge[s].

To this theory objections have been made, as well as to the former; for, though there are some surprising coincidents, which make it indeed probable, that a comet did really come very near, and passed by the earth when the deluge began, and might cause a prodigious tide in the sea, and in the abyss; yet it has been thought somewhat strange, that the swelling of the abyss should have such an effect as to make convenient fissures in the solid crust of earth which enclosed it, without shattering its whole frame. Nor has the theorist's account of draining off the waters from the surface of the earth been judged satisfactory; it being difficult to conceive, that those subterraneous cavities, which he supposes could contain but a small proportion of the waters requisite to make the deluge, should yet be capable of receiving the greatest part of them when it was over. These difficulties however might possibly receive a solution: but the greatest objection of all is, that it is far from being clear, whether the atmosphere of a comet be a watery substance or no; or if it were, that it should afford such a vast quantity of water as the theory has occasion for, on the earth's bare passing through it. For it is said the observations of the most curious enquirers make it not improbable, that the circle about the body of the comet is nothing but the curling and winding round of the smoak, rising at first to a determinate height from all parts of the comet, and then making off to that part of it which is opposite to the sun. And if this opinion be true, the earth, by passing through the atmosphere of the comet, ran a greater risque of a conflagration than a deluge[t].

The most rational account of the deluge.

It seems therefore, after all, that the divine assistance must be called in on this occasion. For though the waters which covered the earth at the creation, might be sufficient to cover it again, yet how this should be effected by mere natural means, cannot be conceived. The waters which were suspended in the clouds, might indeed descend upon the earth, and that in cataracts, or spouts of water (as the Septuagint interpret the windows of heaven) like those in the Indies,

[r] Whiston's Theory, p. 374. See also p. 61. [s] Ibid. p. 401, &c. [t] Vid. Keill's Remarks on Whiston's Theory, and Nicholl's Conference, Vol. I.

where

where the clouds frequently, instead of dropping, fall with a terrible violence in a kind of torrent [u]; and this alone might cause a great inundation on the lower grounds: but as the clouds could pour down no more water than they had, which would soon be exhausted at this rate, it seems from the length of the rains continuance, that the showers were rather moderate and gradual. The subterraneous stores would afford a much more plentiful supply to compleat the deluge, and probably contain more water than enough to drown the world to a greater height than Moses relates (B): the only difficulty is to draw it out of the abyss on the surface of the earth. And here, since we can assign no natural cause, we apprehend, we may, not unphilosophically, resolve it into the divine power, which might on this occasion so far controll (no greater a miracle than that of continuing) the usual course of nature, as to effect its purpose. And indeed the event was so extraordinary, and the consequences thereof so considerable, that it is very reasonable to believe, GOD did in an especial manner interpose therein. The Stoics, who supposed alternate destructions of the earth by fire and water, made no doubt of the possibility of a general deluge. "There are vast lakes, says Seneca, which we do not see, "great part of the sea lies hidden and concealed, and many "rivers glide in secret; so that there may be causes of a de-"luge on all sides, when some waters flow in under the "earth, others flow round about it, and being long pent

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

[u] Vid. PATRICK's Comment. and RAY ubi sup. 116.

(B) Though Sir W. Raleigh (1) allows thirty miles for the height of the mountains, yet the highest in the world will not be found to be above five direct miles in height. Olympus, whose height is so extolled by the poets, does not exceed a mile and a half perpendicular, and about seventy paces. Mount Athos, which is said to cast its shade into the isle of Lemnos (according to Pliny eighty seven miles) is not above two miles in height; nor Caucasus much more (2; nay the pike of Teneriff, reputed the highest mountain in the world, may be ascended in three days, (according to the proportion of eight furlongs to a day's journey) which makes it about the height of a German mile perpendicular (3). And the Spaniards affirm, that the Andes, those lofty mountains of Peru, in comparison of which, they say, the Alps are but cottages, may be ascended in four days compass (4).

(1) Hist. of the World, Book 1. c. 7. § 6. (2) Vid. Mos. in Melam. l. 2. c. 2. (3) Vid. Varen. Geogr. l. 1. c. 10. prop. 3. (4) Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacr. p. 554.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

separating one continent from another, and covering so large a portion of it, as the present earth has[r]; he conceives the upper region of the earth, being generally dry and porous, and of a great thickness, was capable of receiving a much greater quantity of water, than was on the earth at the time of the deluge[s].

To this theory objections have been made, as well as to the former; for, though there are some surprising coincidents, which make it indeed probable, that a comet did really come very near, and passed by the earth when the deluge began, and might cause a prodigious tide in the sea, and in the abyss; yet it has been thought somewhat strange, that the swelling of the abyss should have such an effect as to make convenient fissures in the solid crust of earth which enclosed it, without shattering its whole frame. Nor has the theorist's account of draining off the waters from the surface of the earth been judged satisfactory; it being difficult to conceive, that those subterraneous cavities, which he supposes could contain but a small proportion of the waters requisite to make the deluge, should yet be capable of receiving the greatest part of them when it was over. These difficulties however might possibly receive a solution: but the greatest objection of all is, that it is far from being clear, whether the atmosphere of a comet be a watery substance or no; or if it were, that it should afford such a vast quantity of water as the theory has occasion for, on the earth's bare passing through it. For it is said the observations of the most curious enquirers make it not improbable, that the circle about the body of the comet is nothing but the curling and winding round of the smoak, rising at first to a determinate height from all parts of the comet, and then making off to that part of it which is opposite to the sun. And if this opinion be true, the earth, by passing through the atmosphere of the comet, ran a greater risque of a conflagration than a deluge[t].

The most rational account of the deluge.

It seems therefore, after all, that the divine assistance must be called in on this occasion. For though the waters which covered the earth at the creation, might be sufficient to cover it again, yet how this should be effected by mere natural means, cannot be conceived. The waters which were suspended in the clouds, might indeed descend upon the earth, and that in cataracts, or spouts of water (as the Septuagint interpret the windows of heaven) like those in the Indies,

[r] Whiston's Theory, p. 374. See also p. 61. [s] Ibid. p. 401, &c. [t] Vid. Keill's Remarks on Whiston's Theory, and Nicholl's Conference, Vol. I.

where

where the clouds frequently, inſtead of dropping, fall with a terrible violence in a kind of torrent [u]; and this alone might cauſe a great inundation on the lower grounds: but as the clouds could pour down no more water than they had, which would ſoon be exhauſted at this rate, it ſeems from the length of the rains continuance, that the ſhowers were rather moderate and gradual. The ſubterraneous ſtores would afford a much more plentiful ſupply to compleat the deluge, and probably contain more water than enough to drown the world to a greater height than Moſes relates (B): the only difficulty is to draw it out of the abyſs on the ſurface of the earth. And here, ſince we can aſſign no natural cauſe, we apprehend, we may, not unphiloſophically, reſolve it into the divine power, which might on this occaſion ſo far controll (no greater a miracle than that of continuing) the uſual courſe of nature, as to effect its purpoſe. And indeed the event was ſo extraordinary, and the conſequences thereof ſo conſiderable, that it is very reaſonable to believe, GOD did in an eſpecial manner interpoſe therein. The Stoics, who ſuppoſed alternate deſtructions of the earth by fire and water, made no doubt of the poſſibility of a general deluge. "There are vaſt lakes, ſays Seneca, which we do not ſee, "great part of the ſea lies hidden and concealed, and many "rivers glide in ſecret; ſo that there may be cauſes of a de- "luge on all ſides, when ſome waters flow in under the "earth, others flow round about it, and being long pent

Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2999.

[u] Vid. PATRICK's Comment. and RAY ubi ſup. 116.

(B) Though Sir W. Raleigh (1) allows thirty miles for the height of the mountains, yet the higheſt in the world will not be found to be above five direct miles in height. Olympus, whoſe height is ſo extolled by the poets, does not exceed a mile and a half perpendicular, and about ſeventy paces. Mount Athos, which is ſaid to caſt its ſhade into the iſle of Lemnos (according to Pliny eighty ſeven miles) is not above two miles in height; nor Caucaſus much more (2); nay the pike of Teneriff, reputed the higheſt mountain in the world, may be aſcended in three days, (according to the proportion of eight furlongs to a day's journey) which makes it about the height of a German mile perpendicular (3). And the Spaniards affirm, that the Andes, thoſe lofty mountains of Peru, in compariſon of which, they ſay, the Alps are but cottages, may be aſcended in four days compaſs (4).

(1) Hiſt. of the World, Book 1. c. 7. § 6. (2) Vid Moſs. in Melam. l. 2. c. 2. (3) Vid. Varen. Geogr. l. 1 c. 10. prop. 3. (4) Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacr. p. 554.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

" up, overwhelm it; and as our bodies sometimes dissolve " into sweat, so the earth shall melt, and, without the help " of other causes, shall find in itself what shall drown it, " there being in all places, both openly and secretly, both " from above and from beneath, an eruption of waters, " ready to overflow and destroy it [w].

Of the Ark.

HAVING thus considered the efficient causes of the deluge, we must next take a view of the ark, whereby Noah and his family were delivered from this destruction.

Its size and figure.

WE might presume, if Moses had not told us so, that a vessel proportionable and adapted to the use designed, must have been of more than human contrivance, and built by the direction of GOD himself. The length of it was 300 cubits, the breadth 50, and the height 30; but what was the exact measure of the cubit here mentioned is disputed. Some fearing the capacity of the ark would be otherwise too small for the intended purpose, have enlarged the dimensions even to extravagance (C): but the general opinion of learned men is, that they were but common cubits [x], one of which, though formerly supposed equal to eighteen of our inches [y], is now allowed to contain almost 22, or more exactly 21.888 [z]. According to which measure the ark must have been 547.2

[w] SENEC. Nat. quæst. l. 3. c. 27. [x] Vid BUTEON. de Arca Noe. POOL's Synopsis, in loc. [y] Vid. BERNARD. de mensuris & ponder. antiq. l. 3. [z] See the preface.

(C) When Celsus objected, that the ark was a monster with all things in its belly (1), Origen answered, that the ark was like a great city, whose base was 90,000 cubits long, and 25,000 broad (2); but in another place he is more moderate, and without encreasing the number of the Mosaic cubits, supposes they were geometrical cubits, each containing six ordinary cubits (3); which last opinion is approved by St. Austin (4). Some, who cannot digest these geometrical cubits, suppose, the ark was measured by a larger cubit of three foot (5), or by the sacred cubit, which was larger by a hand's breadth than the common cubit (6), all without the least ground or intimation to that purpose in the sacred historian. Sir Walter Raleigh (7) supposes, the antediluvian cubit was larger than that which was after in use, because, as he imagines, mankind were then of a larger stature: but this gains no room in the ark, because the bulk of its cargo must have been encreased in proportion.

(1) Αλλήκοον ἅπαντα ἴνδον ἴχουσαν. (2) Origen. cont. Cels. l. 4. Vid. Kircher, de arca Noe, c. 8. (3) Idem, Homil. 2. in Genes. (4) De Civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 27. (5) Cappell. Hist. Sacr. p. 30. (6) Vid. Heidegg. Hist. patr. Tom. I. Exerc. 17. § 10. (7) Ubi sup. § 9.

English

English feet long, 91.2 broad, and 54.72 high, and the solid contents 2,730,781.9008 feet, almost double to what they would be by the former computation. The form of it was an oblong square, or parallelopiped, with a flat bottom, and a sloped roof raised a cubit in the middle [a]; it had neither sails nor rudder, nor was it made sharp so as to cut the water; which form, as it was admirably contrived for lying steadily on the water without rolling, which might have endangered the lives of the animals within it, so it was very unfit for swimming to a great distance, or for riding in a boisterous sea. It consisted of three stories, each of which, abating the thickness of the floors, might be about eighteen foot high, and was partitioned into a great many rooms, or apartments [b]. This vessel was without doubt so contrived as to have the benefit of the air and light on all sides (D), though the particular construction of the windows be not mentioned; and the whole seems to have had another covering besides the roof, probably made of skins, like that of the tabernacle (E).

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

THAT the space in the ark was abundantly sufficient to contain both Noah, and his family, and the animals, and all necessary provisions for them, does evidently appear from the geometrical calculations of learned men (F), who have yet generally

[a] Genes. vi. 14, 15, 16. [b] Ibid. v. 14, 16.

(D) There are various translations of the word צֹהַר Sohar (8), which is found but once in the whole bible in this sense. Our version renders it window, as it seems very properly; for the root in the Chaldee signifies to shine, or to give light; wherefore one of the paraphrasts (9) imagines Sohar to have been a precious stone, or carbuncle, which Noah was to fetch from the river Phison, to illuminate the ark. From the following words, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above, some have supposed the window was to have been a cubit square, or but a cubit high, which would have been much too small; but the relative it, being in the Hebrew of the feminine gender, and Sohar of the masculine, those two words cannot agree; and therefore the proper antecedent seems to be the ark, which was to be covered with a roof raised a cubit high in the middle.

(E) Noah is said, after the flood, to have removed the covering of the ark (10), which cannot well be supposed to have been the roof, but something flung over it, like that of the tabernacle, which is expressed by the same Hebrew word; and the use of it was probably to hang over and defend the windows in bad weather.

(F) Bishop Wilkins has reduced the number of species of animals, which at first view may seem almost infinite, within very mo-

(8) Genes. vi. 16. (9) Jonathan. (10) Genes. viii. 13.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

generally supposed the length of the cubit to have been but eighteen inches [c]; whereas, if we take the dimensions according to the larger measure abovementioned, the whole capacity will be nearly doubled [d], as may be easily proved.

BUT another objection has been raised against the preservation of animals in the ark, which may not be so easily answered; and that is, how the unknown kinds of serpents in Brazil, the slow-bellied creature of the Indies, and all those strange species of animals seen in the West-Indies, should either come into the ark, or be conveyed out of it into those countries, which are divided from that continent where Noah was, by so vast an ocean on one side, and at least so large a tract of land on the other, (supposing a passage out of one continent to the other, which has not been yet discovered) and some animals cannot live out of the particular clime wherein they are [e]. But to this it may be answered, that it is probable, that the temperature of the air, before the deluge, was so equal and serene, that all kinds, even of the American animals, might live and be found in those parts of Asia, when Noah went into the ark, though none of them could bear the climate since, by reason of the change in nature. The great difficulty is derate bounds; he reckons, they do not amount to one hundred of quadrupeds, and two hundred of birds; and of these must be excepted such as live in the water, such as proceed from a mixture of different species, and such as change their colour, size, and shape, by changing their climate; and thence, in different countries, seem to be of different species, when they are not. He afterwards enters into a particular detail of the animals, the quantity of food necessary for them, and of the capacity and proportion of the ark; and concludes, there was room enough and to spare: whereupon he observes, that had the most skilful mathematicians and philosophers been set to consult what proportions a vessel designed for such an use should have in the several parts of it, they could not have pitched on any more suitable to the purpose than those mentioned by Moses (11). It is not to be expected, we should here examine the several plans given of the ark, which may serve indeed to shew us the possible, but not the real disposition of it; however, for the readers satisfaction, we have inserted a view of the ark, according to that plan, which seems to us most likely to be the true one.

[c] BUTEO, de Arca Noe. Bishop WILKINS's essay towards a real character. [d] Vid. PELETIER Dissert. sur. l'arche de Noe. [e] STILLINGFLEET's Orig. Sacr. l. 3. c. 4. p. 542.

(11) Wilkin's Essay, &c. See also Temporarius, Chronolog. Demonstr. lib. 1. p. 32.

how

how to get them into America after the flood was over; and here we confeſs we cannot tell how that was done, any more than we can by what means America was peopled; and yet even thoſe who contend for a partial deluge, allow the inhabitants of that country to be the deſcendants of Noah (G). Year of the World 1307. Year before Chriſt, 2999.

THE timber of which the ark was framed, Moſes calls Gopher wood [f]; but what tree the Gopher was (H) is controverted; ſome will have it the cedar [g], others the pine [h], ſome the box [i], and others, particularly the Mohammedans, the Indian plane-tree [k]; but they ſeem to be in the right who ſuppoſe it to be the cypreſs [l]; which, beſides the reſemblance in name, is allowed to be a very proper ſort of timber for the building of ſhips [m], and not ſubject to rot [n]. To preſerve it from leaking, Noah was directed to pitch it with pitch both within and without; which requiring a very large quantity, ſome have ſuppoſed it to be not pitch, but bitumen, ſuch as was uſed in the building the tower of Babel; which is probable enough, though Moſes uſes a different word in that place. Its materials.

NOR is there leſs diſagreement as to the place where the ark was built, and the time ſpent therein. One ſuppoſes it was Where built.

[f] Geneſ. vi. 14. [g] Targum of Onkelos, and moſt of the old Rabbins. [h] MUNSTER. [i] Scholiaſt. Græc. [k] EUTYCH. p. 34. D'HERBEL. p. 675. [l] FULLER Miſcell. l. 4. c. 5. BOCHART. Phaleg. lib. 1. c. 4. [m] Vid. PLUTARCH. Sympoſ. lib. 1. quæſt. 2. VEGET. l. 4. c. 34. PLATO, de legib. l. 4. [n] VITRUV. l. 2. c. 9. PLIN. l. 16. c. 40. THEOPHRAST. Hiſt. Plant. l. 5. c. 5.

(G) Mr. Whiſton thinks it moſt probable, that ſome were preſerved from the deluge in the American continent as well as in this, tho' we have no records left among them to give us notice of it. The ſilence of the ſacred hiſtorian as to that world he takes to be no objection, becauſe he ſuppoſes the whole earth of Moſes comprehends no more than the then known parts of the world (12).

(H) Aben Ezra and Kimbi only ſay it is a ſort of wood ſo called, which is light, and ſwims on the water. The Vulgat and Septuagint take the word Gopher not to denote the ſpecies of timber, but for an adjective, the firſt tranſlating it ligna lævigata, ſmoothed, or planed timber, and the other ξύλα τετράγωνα ſquare timber (3); Voſſius endeavours to prove, that the expreſſion of this laſt verſion ſignifies not timber ſquared by the workman, but ſuch ſort of trees whoſe branches ſhoot quadrangularly, or by four and four at equal diſtances from the earth. Of which kind are the pine, fir, cedar, and ſome others; but not the cypreſs (14).

(12) Whiſton's Theory, p. 409, &c. (13) Vid. Eutych. p. 24. (14) VOSS. de Sept. Interp. c. 11.

Year of the World 1307. Year before Christ, 2999.

built in Paleſtine, and that Noah planted the cedars of which he made it in the plains of Sodom [o]; another takes it to have been built near mount Caucaſus, on the confines of India [p]; and a third in China, where he imagines Noah dwelt before the flood [q]. But the place ſeems rather to have been ſomewhere near Eden; from whence, it is to be preſumed, Noah would not remove far, though not for the reaſon alledged by ſome [r], viz. becauſe he was the eldeſt ſon in a lineal deſcent from Seth, which is no way certain from ſcripture; nor can we think it was far from Ararat where the ark reſted, that being a veſſel which could not be driven to a great diſtance. It was therefore probably built in Chaldea, in the territories of Babylon [s]; where there was ſo great a quantity of cypreſs in the groves and gardens in Alexander's time, that that prince built a whole fleet out of it for want of other timber [t]. And this conjecture is confirmed by the Chaldean tradition, which makes Xiſuthrus ſail from that country [u].

And in what time.

As to the time, a Rabbin ſays, the ark was fifty two years in building [w]: the fathers and oriental authors a hundred [x], becauſe Noah is ſaid to be five hundred years old before any mention is made of the ark [y]. Some, from the words of St. Peter, that the long-ſuffering of GOD waited while the ark was preparing [z], ſuppoſe, Noah was employed therein the whole time of forbearance [a], which was one hundred and twenty years [b]: and others think the time much ſhorter, becauſe Noah's three ſons, the eldeſt of whom was born in his five hundredth year, are not only mentioned before the directions given for the ark, but they and their wives are ordered to be taken into the ark in thoſe very directions [c], which ſeems to imply, they were then married; and yet they had no children till after the flood, unleſs they periſhed in the deluge. But there is no ſuch connection, or exact order of time kept in this whole narration, as to eſtabliſh any of theſe conjectures. All we can affirm is, that ſuch a veſſel as the ark, and the neceſſary preparations of timber for it, could not be the work of a few years.

[o] JACOB. EDESSEN, apud Barcepham, de parad. part. 1. c. 14. p. 38. [p] TEMPORARIUS Chronol. Demonſt. l. 1. [q] WHISTON's Theory, p. 387, &c. [r] Dr. WELL's Geogr. of the old Teſt. vol. I. p. 65. [s] Vid. BOCHART, ubi ſupra. HEIDEGG. Hiſt. Patr. tom. I. Exerc. 17. § 20: [t] STRABO, l. 16. p. 1072 & 1076. ARRIAN. de Exped. Alex. l. 7. [u] See before, p. 186, &c. [w] R. ELIEZER Pirke, c 23. [x] ORIGEN. GREGOR. AUGUSTIN., &c. ELMACIN. p. 11. [y] Geneſ. v. 32. [z] 1 Pet. iii. 20. [a] BEDFORD's Scripture Chronol. p. 21. Vid. R SOLOMON. [b] Geneſ. vi. 3. [c] Ibid. v. 18.

THE

THE appointed time of the deluge being come, and all things in readiness, Noah, at GOD's command, went into the ark with his wife, his sons, and his daughters-in-law (I); and

Year of the World 1308. Year before Christ, 2998.

Noah, &c. enter into the ark, and the flood begins.

(I) It is certain, both from the testimony of Moses and St. Peter (1), that eight persons and no more were saved in the ark; and though there be a tradition among the Mohammedans to the same effect, which is said to have been received from their prophet himself, yet others of them report this number variously: some say, they were but six; others ten; others twelve; others seventy eight; others fourscore, half men and half women (2); and that one of them was the elder Jorham (3), the preserver, as some pretend, of the Arabian language. But it is still more extraordinary, that a christian writer should encrease the number of Noah's family, by supposing he had daughters of his own, and their husbands, his sons-in-law, with him in the ark (4). The Mohammedans, on the other hand, also tell us, that the family of Noah were not all saved; but that one of his sons named Yam (5), or Canaan (6), whom some make his grandson, and the son of Ham (7), and others his wife's son by another husband (8), perished in the flood. The Korân says, Noah called to his son from the ark, saying, Embark with us, my son, and stay not with the unbelievers: he answered, I will get on a mountain which will secure me from the waters; to which Noah replied, There is no security this day against the decree of GOD, unless for them on whom he shall have mercy. And immediately a wave separating them, he was drowned (9). Some commentators (10) add, that Noah's wife likewise perished with her son.

The Eastern authors differ as to the name of Noah's wife. Some of the Jews call her Tisiah, or Arisisah (11), others say she was Naamah, the daughter of Lamech (12), of the race of Cain. The Gnostics called her Noria, for which Epiphanius (13) reprehends them, and says, her name was Barthenos. Eutychius tells us Noah's wife was Haical, the daughter of Namusa, the son of Enoch; and that Shem's wife was named Salit; Ham's, Nahlat; and Japhet's Arisisah; and that they were all three the daughters of Methuselah (14). But these deserve the same credit as the Sibyl, who pretends she was in the ark with Noah, being one of his daughters-in-law (15).

(1) 1 Pet. iii. 20. (2) Al Zamakhshari & Jallalo'ddin in Alcor. c. 11. v. 40. Ebn. Shohnah. (3) Idem. (4) Conft. Manasses apud Heidegg. Hist. Patr. Tom. I. Exerc. 17. § 23. (5) EBN. SHOHNAH. (6) Jallalo'ddin. (7) D'Herbel. Bibl. orient. p. 676. (8) Al Zamakhshari. (9) Al Korân, c. 11. v. 32. (10) Jallalo'ddin. & Al Zamakhsh. (11) Shalshel. Hakkah. p. 92. (12) Bereshit Rabba, & Shalshel Hakkah p. 7. 13) Hæres. 26. (14) Eutych p. 34. (15) Sibylla Erythr. l. 3.

Year of the World 1308. Year before Christ 2998.

and he took in to him, pursuant to the divine directions, of all kinds of beasts, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth on the earth; of the unclean by pairs, and of the clean by sevens, the male and his female[d] (K). Noah went into the the ark in the six hundredth year of his age, on the seventeenth day of the second month[e], which answers to our

[d] Genes. vii. 7. and 2, &c. [e] Genes. vii. 6, 11, 13.

The Eastern authors add, that Noah, in pursuance of the directions of Adam, handed to him for that purpose (16), took the body of that patriarch with him into the ark, and placed it in the midst of the vessel, as a barrier between the men and the women, who had no commerce during the deluge (17).

(K) It is a doubt, whether there went into the ark but seven of every clean, and two of every unclean species, or fourteen of the first, and four of the last. Some adhere to the former exposition (18), and others to the latter (19), which seems to be the natural sense of the Hebrew words, seven and seven; and two and two; the male and his female (20). Besides, if there were but seven of the clean beasts, one must have been without a mate; and if we answer, that the odd one was for sacrifice (21), it is more than Moses tells us, who, on the contrary, repeats it, that the animals all went in by pairs (22). If this be admitted, the capacity which we have allowed the ark, being double to what bishop Wilkins computes it, will be no more than necessary for double the number of animals; especially if we consider the birds all went in by sevens; unless the distinguishing word clean, which is inserted in the Samaritan text, and in the Septuagint, and Syriac versions should be supplied in the Hebrew (23).

If it be asked by what means Noah got all these animals together into the ark, the best answer that has been given is, that they came voluntarily, by a supernatural impulse from GOD (24); which seems to be intimated by the words of scripture (25), though others suppose it was done by the assistance of angels (26).

(16) See before, p. 161. (17) Eutych. p. 38. Vid. Eliezer. Pirke, c. 23. Yahya, in Al Korân. apud Maracc. 340. (18) Joseph. Ant. l. 1. c. 3. August. de civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 27. Hieronym. cont. Jovian. l. 2 &c. (19) Justin. Martyr. Origen. Aben Ezra, &c. (20) Genes. vii. 2. (21) Theodoret. quæst. 50 in Genes. R. Solomon. (22) Genes. vii. 9, 15, 16. (23) Vid. Cleric. in loc. Heidegg. ubi sup. § 25. (24) Vid. Philon. Jud de vita Mosis, l. 2. p 663. Jallalo'ddin in al Korân apud Maracc. ubi sup. (25) Genes. vi. 20. vii. 9. (26) Eliez. Pirke, c. 23.

second

second of December (L), while the reſt of mankind were in the height of ſecurity, and contemning the repeated admonitions of Noah, did eat, and drink, did marry wives, and were given in marriage, until the flood came and deſtroyed them all [f]. For on the ſelf-ſame day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened; and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights. The waters of the flood continued gradually to encreaſe for five months, till they reached their utmoſt height, which was fifteen cubits, or upwards, or twenty ſeven foot above the tops of the higheſt mountains; but they ſeem to have been free from ſtorms, or violent commotions, and to have raiſed and carried the ark gently along, that veſſel, as has been obſerved, being unable to abide a ſtormy ſea. Year of the World 1308. Year before Chriſt 2998.

AT the end of the five months, GOD cauſed a wind to paſs over the earth, and the waters began to aſſwage, the two ſources which fed them being ſtopped and reſtrained. On the very firſt day of their decreaſe, viz. the ſeventeenth of the ſeventh month, or the ſecond of May, they fell ſo much The waters aſſwage.

[f] Matt. xxiv. 38. Luke xvii. 27.

(L) Several writers have fallen into miſtakes as to the day when the flood began, by computing from the vernal equinox. But ſince the antediluvian year indiſputably commenced from the autumnal equinox, the ſeventeenth day of the ſecond month will fall about the time we have fixed it, according to the Samaritan chronology; and according to the Hebrew on the ſeventh of December, as archbiſhop Uſher computes (4); on the ſixth of November, as others reckon (5); or more exactly, on the twenty eighth day of November, which is the calculation of Mr. Whiſton (6).

It is remarkable, that the day aſſigned by Moſes for the beginning of the deluge, agrees exactly with the day wherein Plutarch tells us Oſiris went into the ark, viz. the ſeventeenth of Athyr, which month is the ſecond after the autumnal equinox, the ſun then paſſing through Scorpius (7). Nor does it differ above a day or two from that ſet down by Beroſus, if we allow what probably may have been the caſe, that that writer, or his tranſcribers fell into the miſtake abovementioned, and ſuppoſed the flood began the ſecond month from the vernal equinox, which was Dæſius (8); whereas the true month was Apellæus, the ſecond from the autumnal equinox.

The Mahammedans ſay the flood began the tenth day of Rajeb (9).

(4) Annal ad A. M. 1656. (5) Vid Cleric. in loc. (6) Theory, p. 218. (7) Plut. de Iſide & Oſiride, p. 356. D. (8) Vid. Galen. Coment. in l. 1. Epid. (9) Ebn Sholnah,

that

Year of the World 1308. Year before Christ 2998.

that the ark rested on the mountains of Ararat: and by the first of the tenth month, or fifteenth of July, the tops of the neighbouring mountains began to appear. Forty days after, or about the twenty third of August, Noah, the better to judge of the height of the waters, opened the window, or lattice of the room where the birds were kept, and let out a raven (M), which flew to and fro till the earth was dry, but gave Noah no satisfactory information; whereupon he sent out a dove (N) three several times, staying seven days between each; the first time the dove quickly returned, finding no place dry enough for her to rest on; the second time she came back in the evening, bringing in her mouth an olive leaf plucked off, which shewed a considerable abatement of the waters; and the third time she returned no more.

Year of the World 1909. Year before Christ, 2997.

On the first day of the first month, answering to our seventh of October, in the six hundredth and first year of Noah's life, that patriarch removed the covering of the ark, to have a more extended view, and saw the surface of the earth was Noah, &c. leave the ark.

(M) The raven is supposed to have been sent out, because Noah thought the smell of the carcasses would tempt him to fly to some distance (10); instead of which he kept hovering about the ark, having some jealousy, as the Jews pretend, of his mate (11). Though the Hebrew says the raven returned again, yet according to the Septuagint, Syriac, and vulgat versions, he did not return; wherefore it is thought he perished in the waters (12). The Rabbins have framed a dialogue on this occasion between Noah and the raven, who asking, why he was picked out to be sent on that errand, Noah told him, because the world might well be without ravens, which were neither fit for food, nor for sacrifice (13).

(N) The dove was probably sent, because of her tameness, her flying far, feeding on the ground, and returning to her nest from the greatest distance (14). Some of the Jews pretend, she took the olive leaf from paradise, others from mount Olivet: for they imagine Judæa was not drowned in the deluge (15). From the olive leaf Noah might infer, that the lower hills, where those trees chiefly grew, were left by the waters, and that the vegetables were not totally destroyed (16). The Chaldean tradition agrees with the Mosaic history in the circumstance of the birds being sent out by Xisuthrus (17). And Plutarch says that according to the mythologists, a dove was let out of the ark, and that her going out was to Deucalion a sign of fair weather, and her return of foul (18).

(10) Vid. Bochart, Hieroz. part. 2. l. 2. c. 12. (11) In Agudda. (12) Vid. Bochart. ubi sup. (13) Bereshit rabbah. § 33. (14) Bochart. ubi sup. l. 1. c. 6. (15) Bereshit rabba. ubi sup. (16) Bochart. ubi sup. (17) See before, p. 187. (18) Plutarch. de solert. animal. p. 968.

cleared

cleared of the waters; however, he ſtayed ſometime longer in the ark, till the twenty ſeventh of the ſecond month, or the ſecond of December, when by GOD's direction he came forth out of the ark, with his family, and all that were with him, having remained therein a year and ten days according to the antediluvian computation; and according to the preſent, a full year, or three hundred ſixty five days[g]. Year of the World 1309. Year before Chriſt, 2997.

The Perſian and Indian traditions of the flood.

WE ſhall conclude this ſection with adding a word or two concerning the Perſian, and Indian traditions relating to the deluge.

AN eaſtern writer tells us, that ſome of thoſe who embrace the Magian religion, are ſaid to deny the flood, or at leaſt the univerſality of it, pretending, it reached no farther than a cliff near Hulwân[h], a city of Irâk, bordering on Curdeſtân. Yet the orthodox among them acknowledge this general deſtruction by water, wherein all mankind periſhed, except ſome few that were preſerved by providence; and that it was ſent by GOD to puniſh the crimes of mankind, one of whom, named Malcûs, was a monſter of wickedneſs and impiety. One odd circumſtance mentioned by them is, that the firſt waters of the deluge guſhed out of the oven (O) of a certain old woman named Zala Cufa[i].

WE are told, by the ſame author, that the Indians acknowledge no deluge; but this muſt not be underſtood of all, for the Bramins ſay, that the four tribes, or caſts, of which the firſt race of men conſiſted, degenerating from their primitive innocence, the prieſt neglecting his piety, the ſoldier becoming inſolent and tyrannical, the merchant practiſing deceit in trade, and uſing falſe balances, and the artiſan ſpending the profits of his inventions in riot and exceſs; their impiety and wickedneſs grew at length to ſo inſufferable an [g] Geneſ. vii and viii. [h] EBN SHOHNAH. [i] Vid. HYDE, de rel. vet. Perſar. c. 10. and LORD's account of the religion of the Perſees, p. 9.

(O) Mohammed has borrowed this circumſtance, and inſerted it in his Korân (1). The commentators ſay, it was the ſign by which Noah knew the flood was coming (2). And ſome pretend it was the ſame oven which Eve made uſe of to bake her bread in, being of a form different from thoſe we uſe, having the mouth in the upper part; and that it deſcended from patriarch to patriarch till it came to Noah (3).

(1) Al Korân. c. 11. v. 40. and c. 23. v. 28. (2) Vid. Maracc. in Alc. p. 340. (3) Vid. D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. Art. Noah.

height,

Year of the World 1309. Year before Christ, 2997.

height, that God's indignation was justly provoked, and he sent a flood, which destroyed all nations without exception; after which God, to repair mankind, created three persons of greater excellency than those of the former generation; to one of whom, named Bremaw, he gave the power of creating men and animals, which he executed accordingly; the first human pair proceeding one from his right side, the other from his left. The man was called Manow, and the woman Ceteroupa, and by them was the earth replenished [k]. It must be observed, however, that these people believe several alternate destructions and reparations of mankind: and some of them say, there have been already no less than three destructions by water, and that another is yet to be expected by the same element [l].

SECT. VII.

Of the state of the antediluvian world, and the changes made in the earth by the deluge.

Of the state of the old world.

WE cannot dismiss the history of the old world, without taking a transient view of the antediluvian state of mankind, and of the alterations which have been wrought in nature by the flood.

The religion, policy, arts, and sciences of these first men would be a very entertaining subject, if the greatest part of what can be said on these heads was not reducible to a few conjectures.

The religion of the antediluvians.

The only thing we know as to their religious rites is, that they offered sacrifices, and that very early both of the fruits of the earth, and of animals; but whether the blood and flesh of the animals, or only their milk and wool were offered, is a dispute which we shall consider elsewhere. Some have endeavoured to prove, that all the patriarchs from Adam had stated places, and annual, and weekly times set apart for divine worship, and also a separate maintenance for the priests: all which particulars may be true, though they cannot be made out from scripture. But what is more extraordinary, they pretend to tell us the very day of the week on which the antediluvian sabbath was kept, and that it was the same with the christian sabbath, or sunday [a]; which notion

[k] Lord's Discourse of the Banian religion, c. 6. and 7. [l] Propag. of the gospel in the east, part. 1. lett. 3. See also the Introd. p. 69. [a] Smith's doctrine of the church of England concerning the Lord's day. Vid. Bedford's Scripture Chronol. p. 6.

we

we ſhall, in a proper place, ſhew to be very groundleſs and precarious.

Their arts and ſciences.

OF the arts and ſciences of theſe people we have not much more to ſay. They ſeem rather to have ſpent their time in luxury and wantonneſs, to which the abundant fertility of the firſt earth invited them, than in diſcoveries or improvements, which probably they ſtood much leſs in need of than their ſucceſſors. The art of working metals was found out by the laſt generation of Cain's line; and muſic, which they might be ſuppoſed to practiſe for their pleaſure, was not brought to any perfection, if invented, before the ſame generation. Some authors have ſuppoſed aſtronomy to have been cultivated by the antediluvians, though this is probably owing to a miſtake of Joſephus [b]: but it is to be preſumed, the progreſs they made therein, or in any other ſcience, was not extraordinary; it being even very doubtful whether letters were ſo much as known before the flood (as will be ſhewn in another place), whatever is pretended by ſome men, who have conceived ſo high an opinion of Adam's knowledge, that they ſuppoſe it to have been almoſt univerſal; nor can any thing be inferred from the books attributed to that patriarch, or to Seth, and Enoch [c], which are forgeries too groſs to deſerve any conſideration.

Their politics.

As to their politics and civil conſtitutions, we have not ſo much as any circumſtances whereon to build conjectures. It is probable, the patriarchal form of government, which certainly was the firſt, was ſet aſide when tyranny and oppreſſion began to take place, and much ſooner among the race of Cain than that of Seth. It ſeems alſo, that their communities were but few, and conſiſted of vaſtly larger numbers of people than any formed ſince the flood; or rather it is a queſtion whether, after the union of the two great families of Seth and Cain, there were any diſtinction of civil ſocieties, or diverſity of regular governments at all; it is more likely, that all mankind then made but one great nation, though living in a kind of anarchy, divided into ſeveral diſorderly aſſociations; which, as it was almoſt the natural conſequence of their having, in all probability, but one common language, ſo it was a circumſtance which greatly contributed to that general corruption, which otherwiſe perhaps could not have ſo univerſally overſpread the antediluvian world. And for this reaſon chiefly, as it ſeems, ſo ſoon as the poſterity of Noah were ſufficiently increaſed, a plurality of tongues was miraculouſly introduced, in order to divide them into diſtinct ſocieties, ſocieties, and thereby prevent any ſuch total depravation for the future.

[b] See before, p. 163. [c] See before, p. ibid.

THE ſtate of the natural world before the flood ſeems to have been exceedingly different from what it is at preſent.

The old world more populous and fertile than the preſent.

THE antediluvian world was, in all probability, ſtocked with a much greater number of inhabitants than the preſent earth either actually does, or perhaps is capable of containing, or ſupplying. This ſeems naturally to follow from the great length of their lives, which exceeding the preſent ſtandard of life in the proportion, at leaſt, of ten to one, the antediluvians muſt accordingly in any long ſpace of time double themſelves, at leaſt, in about the tenth part of the time in which mankind do now double themſelves; for they began to beget children as early, and left off as late in proportion as men do now, and the ſeveral children of the ſame father ſeem to have ſucceeded as quickly one after another as they uſually do at this day; and as many generations which are but ſucceſſive with us, were contemporary before the flood; the number of people living on the earth at once would be by that means ſufficiently increaſed to anſwer any defect, which might ariſe from other circumſtances not conſidered. So that, if we make a computation on theſe principles (P), we ſhall find, that there were a conſiderable number of people in the world at the death of Abel, though their father Adam was not then 130 years old, and that the number of mankind before the

(P) It is now generally owned, and that from good obſervations, that mankind do double themſelves in about three hundred and ſixty, or three hundred and ſeventy years; or allowance being made for all, but very uncommon and very rare caſes of general wars, famines, plagues, and ſuch like deſolations, in about four hundred years (1). So that allowing the period for the doubling of mankind from the creation to the deluge to be ten times ſhorter, by reaſon of their ſo much longer lives; if we have a ſeries of forty numbers beginning at two (for ſo many GOD created himſelf at firſt) and doubling themſelves in forty, or for convenience in forty one years at a mean, or one age with another, till the deluge, we ſhall, in ſome degree, obtain the ſum total of mankind at the deluge, and alſo in the ſeveral ages before that time; though this period of doubling muſt ſtill have been much ſhorter in the earlieſt, and longer in the lateſt times of the interval. Which computation Mr Whiſton (2), (to whom we are obliged for theſe obſervations) has given us in the following table.

(1) See Sir W. PETTY's Eſſay on the multiplication of mankind; and the Philoſophical Tranſactions, N° 196, p. 597, &c. (2) Theory of the earth, p. 249.

deluge

deluge would eaſily amount to above one hundred thouſand millions (even according to the Samaritan chronology) that is to twenty times as many as our preſent earth has, in all probability, now upon it, or can well be ſuppoſed capable of maintaining in its preſent conſtitution [d]. From whence it fol[d] WHISTON's Theory, p. 246, &c.

Series.	Years of doubling.	Years of the world.	Number of mankind.
1	2	2	4
2	4	6	8
3	6	12	16
4	8	20	32
5	10	30	64
6	12	42	128
7	14	56	256
8	16	72	512
9	18	90	1024
10	20	110	2048
11	22	132	4096
12	24	156	8192
13	26	182	16,384
14	28	210	32,768
15	30	240	65,536
16	32	272	131,072
17	34	306	262,144
18	36	342	524,288
19	38	380	1,048,576
20	40	420	2,097,152
21	42	462	4,194,304
22	44	506	8,388,608
23	46	552	16,777,216
24	48	600	33,554,432
25	50	650	67,108,864
26	52	702	134,217,728
27	54	756	268,435,456
28	56	812	536,870,912
29	58	870	1,073,741,824
30	60	930	2,147,483,648
31	62	992	4,294,967,296
32	64	1056	8,589,934,592
33	66	1122	17,179,869,184
34	68	1190	34,359,738,368
35	70	1260	68,719,476,736
36	72	1332	137,438,953,472
37	74	1406	274,877,906,944
38	76	1482	549,755,813,888

lows,

lows, that to ſuſtain ſo much larger a number of inhabitants (beſides the brute animals which were very probably as numerous in proportion) the earth muſt have been much more fruitful before that deſolation than it has been ſince [e], though it was then barren in compariſon of its primitive fertility before the fall.

Of the longevity of the antediluvians.

ONE of the moſt extraordinary circumſtances which occurs in the antediluvian hiſtory, is the vaſt length of men's lives in thoſe firſt ages in compariſon of our own. Few now arrive to eighty, or a hundred years, whereas before the flood they frequently lived to near a thouſand; a diſproportion almoſt incredible, were it not inconteſtably certain from the joint teſtimonies of ſacred and profane writers (Q); whoſe authority in this point being not to be eluded, ſome, to reconcile the matter with probability, have imagined, that the ages of thoſe firſt men might poſſibly be computed not by ſolar years, but months [f], which reduces the length of their lives rather to a ſhorter period than our own. But for this there is not the leaſt foundation; beſides the many abſurdities that would thence follow, ſuch as their begetting children at about ſix years of age, as ſome of them in that caſe muſt have done, and the contraction of the whole interval between the creation and the deluge to conſiderably leſs than two hundred years, even according to the larger computation of the Septuagint.

The cauſes of it.

THE cauſes of this longevity are variouſly aſſigned: ſome have imputed it to the ſobriety of the antediluvians, and the ſimplicity of their diet; that they eat no fleſh (R), and had none of thoſe provocations to gluttony, which wit and vice have ſince invented. This, were it true, might have

[e] Ibid. p. 256. [f] VARRO, apud Lactant. Inſt. divin. l. 2. c. 12. Vid. AUGUSTIN. de civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 12.

(Q) Joſephus reckons up the teſtimonies of Manetho, Beroſus, Mochus, Heſtiæus, Jerom the Egyptian, and the writers of the Phœnician antiquities. He ſays alſo that Heſiod, Hecatæus, Hellanicus, Acuſilaus, Ephorus, and Nicholaus wrote, that the antients lived a thouſand years (1). Of all which teſtimonies we have none now extant, except only that of Heſiod (2).

(R) A learned phyſician has advanced a very contrary opinion. Among ſeveral cauſes of the longevity of the firſt men enumerated by him, one is their eating of raw fleſh; the moſt nouriſhing and beſt parts whereof, he ſuppoſes are carried off in dreſſing by the action of the fire (3).

(1) Joſeph. Ant. l. 1. c. 4. (2) In oper. & dieb. v. 130, &c. (3) Bevêrovicius Theſ. Sanitat. l. 3.

ſome-

some effect, but not possibly to such a degree as we are speaking of, since we have had many temperate and abstemious persons, in latter ages, who yet seldom have exceeded the usual period. Others have imputed it to the excellency of their fruits, and some peculiar virtue in the herbs and plants of those days; but as the earth was cursed immediately after the fall, its fruits, we may suppose, gradually decreased in their virtue and goodness till the flood; and yet we do not see the length of men's lives decreased considerably, if at all, during that interval. Others have thought, that the long lives of those inhabitants of the old world proceeded from the strength of their stamina, or first principles of their bodily constitutions; which might indeed be a concurrent, but not the sole and adequate cause of their longevity: for Shem, who was born before the deluge, and had all the virtue of the antediluvian constitution, fell three hundred years short of the age of his fore-fathers, because the greatest part of his life was passed after the flood [g].

IT has therefore been more rationally supposed, that the chief cause of this longevity was the salubrious constitution of the antediluvian air, which after the deluge became corrupted and unwholesome, breaking by degrees the pristine crasis of the body, and shortening men's lives, in a very few ages, to near the present standard. But how the flood should induce, or occasion such a change in the air is not easy to comprehend [h].

The changes made in the world at the deluge, according to Dr. Burnet.

Dr. Burnet, as he attributes the fertility and paradisiacal state of the first earth to a perpetual equinox, the consequence of the direct, or parallel position which he supposes the earth then had to the sun; so he thinks the barrenness of the present earth, and the malignity of our air, are owing to the inequality of seasons introduced at the deluge, when the earth, being broken and shattered, lost its poise, and fell into that oblique situation which it now has [i]. Thence proceeded an unequal temperature of their air, violent exhalations, meteors, thunder, lightning, rain, snow, hail, ice, tempestuous winds, and the like, to which the earth was before an utter stranger, causing a sensible decay in nature, and a gradual contraction of human life [k].

—and Mr. Whiston.

Mr. Whiston is of the same opinion as to the different states of the air before and since the deluge, and the effects thereof on human bodies, as well as on the productions of the earth;

[g] BURNET's Theory, Book 2. c. 8. and 4. See STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 307, &c. [h] RAY on the deluge, p. 122. [i] See before, p 136 [k] BURNET's Theory, Book 2. c. 2. and 3.

but assigns very different causes for both. He thinks the purity and equality of the antediluvian air were the natural and regular properties of an original earth, such as one would rationally expect in a world newly come out of the hands of its creator, and such as the generality of our fellow-planets (especially our next neighbour the moon) as far as we can observe, are supposed to have had at first, and hitherto retained. So that all that can in reason be desired, is to give a plain account of those opposite phænomena of the earth which we are now so sensible of, and by what means the deluge could occasion the same [l]. And this he endeavours to do by supposing; 1. That the comet, which, according to his hypothesis, was the cause of the deluge, in passing by the earth, by its attraction accelerated the earth's annual motion, and changed its then circular orbit into an ellipsis [m]: and, 2. That the earth at the deluge carried off vast quantities of the gross, heterogeneous, and indigested masses with which the chaotic atmosphere of the comet was crouded; part of which were received into our air, and the other part being mixed with the waters derived from the comet, settled and formed a new Crust over the surface of the earth, which was somewhat increased by the dirt and soil thrown up by the subterraneous waters, and washed from the mountains [n].

These two great changes in the natural world would have very considerable consequences. That made in the earth's orbit, besides altering the form of the year (S), would by placing us at a greater distance from the sun, occasion a very sensible decrease in the heat of that luminary, which must (on calculation) have been a twenty fifth part greater before the flood than since [o]. The primigenial soil would lie buried under

[l] Whiston's Theory, p. 363. [m] Ibid. p. 207, &c. [n] Ibid. p. 275, 417. [o] Ibid. p. 363.

(S) The antediluvian year was, according to this gentleman, in absolute space of time nearly equal to our present and antient lunar one, and above ten days, or, more nicely, ten days, one hour, twenty eight minutes and an half shorter than our present solar year; yet it contained three hundred and sixty antediluvian days, which were equal to only three hundred and fifty five days, four hours, and about twenty minutes of our present days; the earth's diurnal motion having been retarded, and our days consequently lengthened in that proportion, partly by the quantity of foreign matter derived from the comet at the deluge, and partly from another cause (4).

(4) Whiston's Theory, p. 208, 209, 220.

the

the ſediment, or factitious cruſt, which he computes to be about one hundred and five foot thick [p], wherein the fertile mold would be much thinner ſpread than before the deluge; conſidering which circumſtances, together with the great damp put to the influence of the central heat, as well by the waters of the deluge, as the conſolidation of the adventitious ſediment, it naturally follows, that the preſent earth could be nothing near ſo fruitful and luxuriant in her productions as the antediluvian was [q]. This ſuppoſition of a new cruſt acquired by the earth at the flood, by the way alſo accounts for the phænomena we formerly mentioned of the bones, teeth, and ſhells of fiſh, and other marine, and vegetable productions ſo frequently dug up, even on mountains, and at great diſtances from the ſea [r]. The heterogeneous compoſition of our preſent groſs atmoſphere, acquired likewiſe from the comet, muſt neceſſarily occaſion great irregularities and depravations in the temperature and conſtitution of the air. For the difference of climates being not wholly owing to the ſun's heat, or the nature of the air, but partly to thoſe calorific and frigorific mixtures which are uncertainly contained therein; and our air being now in the torrid zone full of ſulphureous and ſultry, and in the frigid ones of nitrous and freezing effluvia, or exhalations, which may be removed, on the veering of the wind, from one region to another; thoſe extremities of heat and cold, and ſudden changes in the temper of the air, which we are now ſo ſenſible of, are thence eaſily accounted for; and the ſame nitro-ſulphureous and other heterogeneous mixtures and exhalations might likewiſe occaſion thoſe coruſcations, meteors, thunder, lightning, clouds, rain, winds, and ſtorms ſo common with us; from which, and their pernicious effects, the pure homogeneous antediluvian air was perfectly free [s].

As both the theoriſts deny, there was any rain, at leaſt in the habitable parts of the primitive earth, it may be asked, what expedients they have found out to ſupply it with water. Mr. Whiſton, who allows there were rivers, lakes, and ſeas (though no great ocean) in the firſt earth, effects this with little difficulty; ſuppoſing the vapours elevated by the ſun in the day, which the purity and thinneſs of the air hindered from condenſing and falling down in rain, deſcended however in regular and gentle miſts in the night [t]. But Dr. Burnet, in whoſe antediluvian earth there were neither mountains nor

[p] Ibid. p. 418.
[q] Ibid. p. 363, &c.
[r] Ibid. p. 423, &c.
[s] Ibid. p. 365, &c.
[t] Ibid. p. 369.

ſeas (T), and the whole element of water was locked up in the abyſs, is obliged to have recourſe to a more extraordinary explication. He ſays that the action of the ſun being very ſtrong and conſtant in raiſing vapours, and the earth at firſt moiſt and ſoft, as it grew more dry the rays of the ſun would pierce more deep into it, and reach at length the great abyſs which lay underneath, and was an inexhauſted ſtore-houſe of new vapours (U). Thoſe vapours would be hindered by the heat from condenſing into clouds, or rains in the warmer parts of the earth, and there being no mountains, nor contrary winds to ſtop, or compreſs them, would bend their courſe where they found the leaſt reſiſtance, and that would be towards the poles, or colder regions, where, when they were arrived, they would be condenſed and fall down in a continual rain, or dew upon thoſe parts of the earth; ſo that there would be a conſtant ſource of waters, which would neither fail, nor overflow, but find the earth with an equal ſupply throughout all the parts of the year. And to account for the flowing of theſe waters on the even ſurface of the earth, and of their forming themſelves into rivers, which

(T) To this form of the primeval world, and the change made therein by the deluge, Dr. Burnet (5) has met with a ſurprizing teſtimony from an Ethiopian tradition, delivered to the count Balthaſar Caſtiglione by a philoſopher of that nation then in Spain; which is to the following effect, viz. That the firſt earth was much more ſpacious than the preſent, and nearer to heaven; that it was perfectly round, without mountains or vallies, but all hollow, or full of cavities within, like a ſponge; that the inhabitants breathed a moſt pure air, and paſſed their lives happily; the earth ſpontaneouſly bringing forth moſt excellent fruits without plowing or ſowing: but after ſome ages, when mankind elated with pride, had degenerated from their primitive innocence, the angry gods ſhook the earth with ſo vehement a concuſſion, that the greateſt part of it fell down into the caverns below; and the water, before incloſed in thoſe hidden receſſes, was thereby violently forced out; and to this the fountains, rivers, lakes, and ſea, owe their original: that that part of the earth which had not fallen in, but ſtood above the reſt, appeared as mountains; and the iſlands and rocks in the midſt of the ſea, are nothing elſe but fragments of the hollow earth which remained after that ſudden diſruption and fall of the whole terreſtrial frame (6).

(U) Yet, if a calculation made be true, this ſtore-houſe would be quite exhauſted long before the deluge (7).

(5) See his Theory, p. 386. (6) Fr. Patricio, della Rhetorica degli Antichi, apud Ramazzin, de ſanctiſſimi Matriteſſimi ſcaturigine, p. 41. (7) See the note, p. 205.

ſeems

seems a difficulty not easily to be got over, he supposes, the earth was not exactly spherical but oval, the polar parts being higher than the equinoctial, that is, more remote from the centre; by which means the waters which fell about the extreme parts would have a continual descent towards the middle parts of it, forming by the way lakes, and dividing into lesser and lesser streams, till at length they were either exhaled again by the sun, or drank up by the thirsty sands of the torrid zone [t].

Whether any rainbow before the flood.

IF either of these hypotheses be admitted, the dispute whether there was any rainbow or not before the deluge must be at an end. For in an air, wherein there fell no rain in sensible round drops, to refract and reflect the rays of light, on which the rainbow entirely depends, the appearance of that beautiful phænomenon could not be expected; and indeed it is somewhat hard to conceive, how it could be a sign, or confirmation of the covenant which GOD made with Noah, that he would drown the world no more with water, if it had been in the clouds before, and with no regard to this promise. For if we suppose it even an arbitrary sign, and to have no connection with the effect, it seems, that to make it significant and satisfactory, it must be something new, otherwise it could not signify a new thing, or be the confirmation of a new promise. And accordingly it has been observed, that the signs by institution only, mentioned in scripture, have all something new and strange, as a mark of the hand of GOD: at least it must be acknowledged, that if Noah had never seen a rainbow before, that sign must have made a much more lively impression on him, and given him much greater comfort and assurance in GOD's promise, than if it had been no more than what he must have often observed before the late terrible devastation [v].

Whether flesh might be eaten before the flood.

WHETHER flesh was permitted to be eaten before the deluge, is also a question which has been much debated [u]. By the permission expresly given to Noah for that purpose after the flood [w], and GOD's assigning vegetables only for food to man as well as beast at the creation [x], one would imagine it was not lawful before; yet others have supposed, that it was included in the general grant of power and dominion given to Adam by GOD over the animal creation [y]; and the distinction of beasts into clean and unclean, which was well known before the flood [z], is insisted on as a strong argument on this side, and which it is not easy to answer. To say that distinction was used proleptically, is a mere subterfuge; and to suppose it made solely to distinguish what was lawful or unlawful to be sacrificed, and not what might or might not be eaten, is little better; it being the custom to offer to God such fruits and animals as were fit for food and sustenance, and not such as were of no use or benefit to mankind in that respect.

[t] BURNET's Theory, p. 310, &c. [v] BURNET's Theory, p. 324, &c. Vid. HEIDEGG. Hist. Patr. Tom. I. Exerc. 15. [u] Vid. Ibid. Exerc. 10. § 26, &c. [w] Genes. ix. 3, 4. [x] Genes. i. 29, 30. [y] Ibid. v. 26, 28.

SECT. VIII.

An enquiry concerning the situation of mount Ararat, and the various opinions about it.

IT may be proper before we close this chapter, to give some account of the mountains of Ararat, whereon the ark rested, the situation of which is rendered, in some measure, uncertain by the different traditions concerning it.

THE Sybilline verses place mount Ararat in the borders of black Phrygia, near Celænæ, at the springs of the river Marsyas [a], which rises out of the same lake with the Mæander, and falls at length into it [b]. But it appears from good authorities, that there is really no mountain at all in that place, at least none near so high as Ararat must needs have been, but only a small hill, or eminence [c]. This fancy therefore seems to have taken its rise from Apamea, another city near Celænæ being sur-named Cibotes, or the ark; not, as Bochart observes [d], from any tradition of Noah's ark, but from its situation, being shut up like an ark, or chest, by three rivers which encompassed it; as the port of Alexandria in Egypt was called Cibotes from the bay surrounding it: besides, Cibotos was a new name which does not seem to have been known in those parts till given to Apamea, built by Seleucus, or Antiochus Soter; and Celænæ [e] had a prior right to it, if there had been any such tradition; so that what is farther alledged of the Apameans coining medals having on the reverse the impression of an ark, as may be seen on three severally struck

[z] Genes. vii. 2 [a] XENOPHON, LIVIUS, l. 38. [b] STRABO, l. 12. MAX. TYRIUS, Serm. 38. [c] STRABO ubi supra. PTOLEM. lib. 5. cap. 3. STEPHAN. in Κίβωτος. [d] Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 3. [e] STRABO ubi supra. LIVIUS ubi sup.

ſtruck in honour of Adrian [f], Septimius Severus, and Philip the Arabian [g], is of no weight.

BEN GORION ſeems to extend the name of Ararat to Caucaſus [h]: but by the mountains of Ararat have been generally underſtood, both by antient and modern authors, thoſe of Armenia. Ararat is by the Septuagint [i], and in the Vulgat [k], rendered Armenia (X); and there is actually a province of that country named Ararat [l], or Airarat, from a plain therein ſo called in memory of Arai the eighth king of that nation, who was ſlain in battle there [m]; Arayi arat [n] ſignifying the ſlain of Arai. But though authors have generally agreed in placing Ararat in Armenia, yet they differ as to the particular ſituation of the mountain where the ark reſted, there being two opinions concerning it, each of which is ſupported by a tradition.

First tradition about mount Ararat.

THE firſt opinion is, that it was one of the mountains which divide Armenia on the ſouth from Meſopotamia and that part of Aſſyria inhabited by the Curds, from whom thoſe mountains took the name of Curdu, or Cardu, by the Greeks turned into Gordyæi, and other names (Y). It is called by the Arabs al Jûdi [o], (if it be not a miſtake for Gordi [p], or a corruption of Cordi, or Jordi (Z), as it ought to be writ-

[f] CALMET Dict. de la Bible, Art. Apamée. [g] Vid. FALCONERIT differt. de num. Apam. apud Kircher. Arca Noæ. l. 2. c. 6. [h] Lib. 6. cap. 96. [i] Iſa. xxxvii. 38. [k] Geneſ. viii. 4. 2 Kings xix. 37. [l] V. La Notice des Egliſes qui dependent du Patr. d'Armenie publiée par le P. SIMON a la fin de ſon Hiſtoire critique de la Creance & des Coutumes des Nations du Levant, & SCHROEDER. differt. de rebus Armenicis. [m] MOSES CHORENENSIS, Compend. Geogr. univerſal. p. 46, 52.
[n] [illegible] [o] EUTYCH. Annal. p. 41. D'HERBELOT Bibl. Orient. Art. Gioudi. [p] BOCHART. Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 3.

(X) The Samaritan verſion tranſlates it Serendib, which is the name the eaſtern writers give to the iſland Ceylon. See before p. 117.

(Y) The Greek and Latin writers name them Carduchi, Cardiei, Cordyæi, Cordueni, Gordi, Cordæi, Curdi, &c. the orientals call them alſo Cardon, Cordyn, Curuk, &c. Bochart (8) ſuppoſes they are the ſame which are called by miſtake in Joſephus Ceron (9).

(Z) גורדי Jordi may be changed into יודי Judi by an eaſy miſtake of the Re for the Vaw; but it is odd ſuch an error ſhould be ſo univerſal.

(8) Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 3. (9) Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 2.

ten by the Arabs [q];) and also Thamanin [r], probably from the town hereafter named, at the foot of it.

The tradition which affirms the ark to have rested on these mountains must have been very antient, since it is the tradition of the Chaldeans themselves [s]: the Chaldee paraphrasts consent to this opinion [t], which obtained very much formerly, but when we come to enquire into the particular part of these mountains, whereon the ark rested, authors seem to place it out of Armenia; Epiphanius in the country of the Cordyæans [u], or between the Armenians and Cordyæans on the mountain Lubar [w]: the eastern authors, as well Christians as Mohammedans, on mount Thamanin, or Al Jûdi [x], which overlooks the country of Diyar Rabiah [y] in Mesopotamia, near the cities of Mausol, Forda (A), and Jazîrat ebn Omar (B) [z], which last one affirms to be but four miles from the place of the ark [a].

Remainders of the ark to be seen for a long time on the Cardu mountains.

To confirm this tradition, we are told, that the remainders of the ark were to be seen upon these mountains: Berosus and Abydenus both declare, there was such a report in their [q] Golius in Not. ad Alfragan, p 287. [r] Geogr. Nubiens. p. 202. [s] Berosus apud Josephum Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 4. [t] Onkelos & Jonathan in Genes. viii. 4. [u] Epiphan. Hæres. 18. [w] Idem, ibid. lib. 1. § 4. [x] Geogr. Nubiens. p. 202. Ebn Shohnah, MS. [y] Ebn Amîd, l. 1. c. 1. [z] Eutych. Annal. p. 41. Vid. etiam D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 404. Art. Gioudi & p. 676. [a] Benjamin Tudelens. Itiner. p. 61.

(A) If this name were not usually written Forda by the Arabian authors, we should judge it ought to be Korda, from the name of the mountain D' Herbelot mentions a town called Corda at the foot of Al Jûdi (10).

(B) Jazîrat ebn, or beni, Omar is a city in an Island of the Tigris, so named from the Khalifah Omar ebn Abd'alazîz, of the family of Ommiyah, who, if you will believe Benjamin the Jew (11) (tho' he by mistake calls him Omar ebn al Khettâb), removed the remains of the ark into that city, and built a Mohammedan temple therewith. The Syrians call it Gezarta, or the island; but we must not confound it, as Assemani does (12), with the Gezarta of Masius, called by some the isle of Edon, which is no more than twelve miles above Mausol; whereas Jazîrat ebn Omar is ninety miles above that city (13), in one of the roads from Aleppo to Tauris (14).

(10) Bibl. Orient. Art. Gioudi. (11) Itiner. p. 61. (12) Bibl. Orient. Tom II. dissert. de Monophys. & Tom. I. p. 540. (13) Geog. Nubiens. p. 202. (14) Tavernier, Voyage de Perse, liv. 3. c. 4.

time

time [b]; the first observes farther, that several of the inhabitants thereabouts scraped the pitch off the planks as a rarity, and carried it about them for an amulet: and the latter says, they used the wood of the vessel against many diseases with wonderful success. The relics of the ark were to be seen also in the time of Epiphanius, if we may believe him [c]; and we are told, the emperor Heraclius went from the town of Themanîh up the mountain Al Jûdi, and saw the place of the ark [d]. This town of Themanîn is, or was, situate at the foot of the mountain Al Jdûi [e]; the name signifies eighty (and not eight, as Bochart, Calmet, and others would have it) in memory of the eighty persons, who, according to a Mohammedan tradition, were saved in the ark [f]; though the christian writers among the Arabs, who say this city was built by Noah and his sons near Forda, not approving that tradition, suppose it called so because they were eight [g].

THERE was formerly a famous monastery, called the monastery of the ark, upon the Cardu mountains, where the Nestorians used to celebrate a feast-day on the spot where they supposed the ark rested; but in the year of CHRIST 776, that monastery was destroyed by lightning, with the church, and a numerous congregation in it [h]. Since which time probably the credit of this tradition hath declined, and given place to another which at present obtains. Monastery of the ark formerly there.

THE second opinion therefore places mount Ararat towards the middle of Armenia, near the river Araxes, or Aras, above 280 miles distant from Al Jûdi to the north-east. Second tradition about mount Ararat.

JEROM seems to be the first who hath given an account of this tradition: Ararat, says that father, is a champion country, incredibly fertile, through which the Araxes flows, at the foot of mount Taurus, which extends so far. Wherefore by the mountains of Ararat, whereon the ark rested, are not to be understood the mountains of Armenia in general, but the highest mountains of Taurus, which overlook the plains of Ararat [i]. These probably are the plains mentioned before which gave name to the country. An author of the middle age observes, that near the city of Naxuan [Nakh-chuvân] are the mountains on which the ark rested, having the Araxes

[b] BEROSUS apud Josephum Antiq. l. 1. c. 4. ABYDENUS apud Euseb. Chron. Græc. & præp. Evang. l. 9. c. 4. [c] Hæres. 18. [d] EBN AMÎD Hist. Arabum. l. 1. c. 1. [e] D'HERBELOT, ubi sup. Vid. AGATHIAM, l. 4. p. 135. [f] D'HERBELOT, p 677. [g] Vid. EUTYCH. & EBN AMÎD ubi supr. [h] Vid. Chronic. DIONYSII Patriarch. Jacobitar. apud Asseman. Bibl. Orient. Tom. II. p. 113. [i] HIERONYM. in Esai. 37.

running

running at the foot of them [k]; and since that time all the travellers into those parts speak of no other mountain of Ararat.

THIS tradition would appear of equal antiquity with the former, could we be certain this was the high mountain Baris (C), in the province of Minyas (D) in Armenia, to which, according to a tradition reported by Nicholas of Damascus [l], many people in the time of a deluge fled for sanctuary; and upon the top of which a certain man struck with his vessel. As it is no new thing to find the same relicks in two different places at once, the same author also assures us, that several pieces of the timber of that vessel were to be seen on the mountain Baris, a long time after it had landed there [m]: but this circumstance may be urged as an objection against Baris being the same with the last mentioned mountain, which is said to be inaccessible. However, at the foot of it they also [k] RUBRUQUIS de Tartaris, c. 48. [l] Apud JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 4. [m] Ibid.

(C) Bochart (15) supposes Baris, in the Armenian tongue, to be the same with ἀποβατήριον, the descent, or going forth, as we are told that nation called the place where Noah came down from the ark (16); and has found an Arabick word of that signification something like it; but we doubt much, whether he could find an Armenian one: բարձր bardsr, signifies high in that tongue, and might be given to this mountain on account of its height; but this is only conjecture. Others tell us Baris, in the Egyptian language, signifies a sort of a ship (17), and therefore think, the name has some reference to the ark; and that the same may be alluded to in the names of the temple of Baris, and the mountains Imbar, and Nibar, in that neighbourhood (18) (though their situation be very uncertain) as well as the Lubar of Epiphanius (19).

(D) Some will have Minyas to be written Mihyas (20); but the first seems to be the true reading, since we find Minni joined with Ararat in scripture (21). Sir Isaac Newton makes one name of Ararat Minni (22); and perhaps Armenia is only a contraction, or compound of Har and Minni, which signifies the mountain, or mountainous country of Minni; though the Armenians themselves derive the name from Aram, one of their kings (23).

(15) Phaleg. l. 1. c. 3. (16) Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 4. Euseb. de locis Hebr. ex interpr. Hieron. (17) Herodot. Euterp. Hesych. (18) Strabo, l. 11. p. 799. 803. (19) Vid. Fuller. Miscell. Sacr. l. 1. c. 4. (20) Vossius, apud Berkel. in Steph. voce Μιλυας. (21) Jerem. li. 27. (22) Chronol. p. 323. (23) Moses Choren. Hist. Arm. p. 49.

shew

ſhew a town called Cemain, which comes pretty near to Shemonah [n], ſignifying eight, the number of perſons who came out of the ark, and, as the Armenians ſay, built it [o].

AN objection indeed has been ſtarted by a late traveller, which tends to overthrow both traditions: he ſays, he does not ſee where the dove could find an olive-branch, if the ark be ſuppoſed to have reſted on any of the mountains of Armenia, for the olive is not found thereabouts [p]; nor (we are told) in any part of Aſia beyond Aleppo, except one ſingle place near Caſbin [q] in Perſia. However, it ſeems to have been otherwiſe antiently, for the ſcripture mentions Aſſyria as a land of oil-olive [r]; and we are told, that the olive grew in Gogarene, a province of Armenia [s]. Another has obſerved, that this mountain is ſo pointed at the top, that he could not eaſily conceive how the waters of the deluge could withdraw quick enough, juſt when the ark was over it, ſo as to leave it on ſo narrow a ſpace [t]. Objections to it.

BUT the Armenians are not to be convinced by any arguments, that this is not the very mountain on which the ark reſted; they call it Masis [u]: and derive the name from Amaſia (E) the third ſucceſſor of Haikh [w], the founder of their nation. Called Masîs by the Armenians.

[n] שמנה. [o] Vid. RUBRUQUIS ubi ſupr. [p] TOURNEFORT Voyages, lett. 7. [q] TAVERNIER Voyage de Tunquin. p. 181. [r] 2 Kings xviii. 32. [s] STRABO, l. 11. p. 800. [t] POULLET, Nouv. relat. du Levant, part. 1. c. 10. p. 132. [u] RUBRUQ. TOURNEFORT, ubi ſupr. GOL. Not. ad Alfrag. p. 237. [w] MOSES CHOREN. p. 47.

(E) This etymology overthrows Chardin's Armenian derivation from Mas, or Meſech, the ſon of Japhet, whom he ſays that nation conſider as their founder; and his Perſian derivation from Aziz, an Arabic word ſignifying dear, or beloved (24); which laſt, however, might have been an epithet of this mountain, ſince a traveller calls it Aſſe Maſis, (25), which perhaps he miſtook for Aziz Masîs. Other travellers write it Meſſis Saur (26), and Maſeſuſar (27), and ſay, it ſignifies the mountain of the ark; but this is alſo a miſtake; for though the Armenians call a mountain Sâr, yet Masis does not ſignify an ark. They ſhould have written Masîs Sâr, which ſignifies no more than mount Masîs: but faults of this kind in travellers are numberleſs, they being ſeldom acquainted with the language of the countries they viſit.

(24) Chardin, Voyage en Perſe, Tom. I. p. 157. Lucas, Voyage 1. Tom. 2. chap. 2. (25) Newberry in Purchas, part 2. 1417. (26) Cartwright, ubi ſup. Tavernier Voyages, liv. 1. cap. 4. (27) Gemelli Voyages, tom. 2. liv. 1. chap. 2.

From

nation. The Turks name it Agri dagh, that is, the heavy, or great mountain [x], and Parmak daghi, or the mountain of the finger, in allusion to its appearance (F) [y]: it stands about twelve leagues to the east [or rather south-east] of Erivan [a] and of Ejmiadzin, or the three churches, (from which last it is two short days journey) four leagues from the Aras [b], and ten to the north-west of Nackhchuvân (G). Here we must observe a mistake of the modern as well as antient geographers, who have placed this mountain several degrees more to the west than it ought to be. This error of theirs hath misled many historians, and made them look for Ararat somewhere else, since they could not reconcile the situation, which the maps give it, with scripture. Sir Walter Raleigh set the example to our English historians, and rests the ark not upon the mountains of Armenia, but some of those between Persia, Tartary, and India: he takes the mountains of Ararat in a more extended sense, than either the antient traditions, or scripture will allow; and to serve his turn, supposes the mountains of Caucasus, towards Bactria and Scythia, to be part of a branch of Taurus, which in its way through Asia crossed Armenia [d], but for this there does not appear the least authority from the observations of travellers in those countries.

[x] Cartwright's Travels, p. 33. Chardin. Voy. en Perse, Tom. I. p. 157. Tournefort, ubi supr. [y] D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. p. 404. [a] Chardin, ubi supr. [b] Tournefort, ubi supr. [c] Idem, ibid. [d] Raleigh Hist. of the world, book 1. ch. 7. § 10.

From Masis doubtless the antients made their Mons Masius, the situation of which they have delivered with as much uncertainty as the moderns (28).

(F) Perhaps our author mistook this for another mountain so called by the Turks, which stands near the Caspian sea, between Niasabâd and Shamakhi, and seems to deserve the name better (29).

(G) It is said, the memorial of the ark's resting here is preserved in the name of this city, Nak signifying in Armenian a ship, and bivan, rested (30); but this seems to be an etymology no better grounded than those abovementioned; the Persians saying it was named Nakkash jehân, from the great numbers of painters settled there; for the Persians call one of that profession (by an Arabic word) نقاش Nakkâsh; and in Armenian also Նկարող Nakarâr, is a painter; and Նկարել nakarel to paint.

(28) Vid. Cellarii Geogr. Antiq. Vol. II. lib. 3. cap. 11. p. 232. (29) Vid. Olearius's Travels, l. 1. c. 5. (30) Tavernier ubi supra.

However

However his opinion hath been followed by ſome of our lateſt writers [e], not conſidering, perhaps, that Sir Walter took his notion from Goropius Becanus, one of the moſt fanciful authors that ever wrote; and that this laſt was led into it by the before-mentioned miſtake of the geographers (H).

Deſcription of mount Maſis.

MOUNT Maſis is encompaſſed by ſeveral petty hills, on the tops of which are found many ruins, thought to have been the buildings of the firſt men, who feared for a time to deſcend into the plains [f]: it ſtands by itſelf in form of a ſugar-loaf, in the midſt of one of the greateſt plains that is to be ſeen [g], detached as it were from the other mountains of Armenia, which make a long chain [h]: it conſiſts of two hills [i]; the leſſer is the more ſharp and pointed [k]; the higher, which is that of the ark, lies north-weſt of it [l], and raiſes its head far above the neighbouring mountains [m]: it ſeems ſo high and big, that when the air is clear it does not appear to be above two leagues from Erivan [n] (whence one writer, deceived by the ſight, computes the diſtance but at one league [o]), and may be ſeen four or five days journey off [p]. Yet travellers agree, that the height of it is not extraordinary [q]; one thinks, he hath paſſed a part of Caucaſus which was higher [r]; and another ſays, it is not above twice as high as mount Valerian, near Paris [s]: they therefore impute its being viſible ſo far off to its lonely ſituation in a vaſt plain [t], and upon the moſt elevated part of the country, without any mountains before it to obſtruct the view [u]. As for the ſnow, with which according to [e] SHUCKFORD's Connect. Vol. I. p. 98, 103. [f] CARTWRIGHT, or the Preachers Travels, p. 30, 31. [g] TOURNEFORT, ubi ſup. [h] TAVERNIER, ubi ſup. [i] POULLET, p. 131. RUBRUQUIS, ubi ſup. [k] TOURNEFORT, ubi ſup. [l] NEWBERRY in Purchas, part. 2. p. 1417. [m] TAVERNIER, POULLET, ubi ſup. CARTWRIGHT, p. 32. [n] CHARDIN, ubi ſup. [o] POULLET. ubi ſup. [p] Idem. p. 130. TAVERNIER, ubi ſup. [q] RUBRUQUIS, NEWBERRY, & POULLET, ubi ſup. [r] CHARDIN, ubi ſupr. [s] POULLET, ubi ſup. [t] TOURNEFORT. ubi ſup. [u] POULLET, ubi ſup.

(H) This author among other out of the way conceits, holds the mountain Parapaniſus, or Paropaniſus (a branch of Taurus, not of Caucaſus) to be Ararat. He imagines, that the place firſt inhabited after the flood was Margiana, a province of Perſia, from whence thoſe colonies came with Nimrod, which built Babel: his reaſon for this opinion is, becauſe they went from the Eaſt (31) to the plain of Shinaar; whereas Armenia (ſays he) bears ſomewhat weſtward from thence (32).

(31) Geneſ. xi. 2. (32) Goropius Becanus Indo-Scythia, p. 473.

all

all accounts, it is perpetually covered from the middle upwards [w] (as it is often with clouds during two or three months of the year [x]) we are told that is no rule to judge of the height by, since the loweſt mountains in thoſe countries, paſſed with the ſame eaſe as the plains, are covered with ſnow [y], which even in the hotteſt ſummer lies on the leaſt hills in Armenia [z], as it does on thoſe ſmall ones ſurroúnding Ararat [a].

Fables of the Armenians concerning it.

THE Armenian monks tell a thouſand idle ſtories concerning the ark, the whole [b], or a part of which, they pretend, is ſtill to be ſeen on the top of the mountains [c], ſomething always appearing there black, which they imagine to be the ark [d]; though at the ſame time they affirm none ever was, nor can get there [e]; thoſe who have attempted to aſcend the hill out of zeal, or otherwiſe, having been puniſhed, or at leaſt brought back again by angels at night to the place they ſet out from in the day, to prevent their approaching that veſſel [f], as happened, they ſay, to a monk of Ejmiadzin, afterwards biſhop of Niſibîn, called James; though GOD at length ſo far complied with his deſires, as to ſend an angel to him with a piece of the ark, who bid him, at the ſame time, not fatigue himſelf in vainly endeavouring to aſcend the mountain, for that GOD had prohibited the acceſs to the top of it [g], and would not ſuffer men to pull in pieces a veſſel which had ſaved ſo many creatures [h]: but if they are aſked, whether they have any relicks of the ark, they gravely anſwer, that it ſtill lies buried in the vaſt heaps of ſnow [i]; which indeed is the charm that hinders the aſcent [k], as one Armenian author confeſſes [l], and is ſufficient to defend the ark without the help of an angel. Yet a certain miſſionary conceits, that the earthly paradiſe ſtill remains in ſome agreeable plain of this mountain, which GOD preſerves from heat and cold, and where the prophets Enoch and Elias enjoy a thouſand ſorts of delights, and are to eat of the tree of life till the end of the world [m]. Indeed the plain under the mount might be allowed its claim to the terreſtrial paradiſe, was it to be decided by the beauty and delightfulneſs of the ſituation.

[w] TAVERNIER, CHARDIN, TOURNEFORT, &c. ubi ſupr. [x] TAVERNIER, ubi ſupr. [y] POULLET, ubi ſupra. [z] TOURNEFORT, ubi ſupr. [a] CARTWRIGHT, ubi ſupr. [b] POULLET, CHARDIN, ubi ſupr. [c] CARTWRIGHT, ubi ſupr. [d] HAITHO de Tartaris, lib. 1. cap. 9. [e] RUBRUQ. NEWBERRY, CARTWRIGHT, CHARDIN, &c. ubi ſup. [f] CARTWRIGHT, p. 34. POULLET & CHARDIN, ubi ſup. [g] RUBRUQUIS, CHARDIN, and TOURNEFORT, ubi ſupr. P. PHILIPPE Voy. 1. Tom. II. c. 2. [h] TOURNEFORT, ubi ſupra. [i] Ibid. [k] Vid. CHARDIN, TOURNEFORT, POULLET, LUCAS, &c. ubi ſup. [l] HAITHO de Tartaris, lib. 1. cap. 9. [m] P. PHILLIPPE, ubi ſup.

WITHOUT doubt the Armenian prieſts would be glad to produce better credentials in behalf of their tradition; accordingly, they ſometimes tell travellers the ſaid monk had been at the top of Ararat [n]. The Armenian patriarch informed Tournefort, that GOD had favoured one ſaint with the ſight of the ark itſelf [o]. And Rubruquis was aſſured by a biſhop, that the before-mentioned piece of the ark [brought to James] was in their church [p]; and the Copts ſhew part of a beam of that veſſel in theirs at old Cairo in Egypt [q]. What credit ought to be given to theſe venerable teſtimonies, will beſt appear from the account Tournefort has left us of his attempt to climb this mountain (I), in which having ſpent a whole day with infinite [n] NEWBERRY, ubi ſup. [o] TOURNEFORT, ubi ſup. [p] RUBRUQUIS, ubi ſup. [q] DE BRUYN Voyage au Levant, Vol. I. c. 35. p. 190.

(I) "We began, ſays that author (33), to aſcend mount Ararat "about two o' clock in the afternoon, but not without difficulty. "We were forced to climb up in looſe ſand, where we ſaw no- "thing but ſome Juniper and goats-thorn. This mountain is one "of the moſt ſad and diſagreeable ſights upon earth; there are "neither trees, nor ſhrubs upon it, nor any convents of religious. "Struys would have done us a favour, if he had told us where the "Anchorites he mentions reſided; for the people of the country do "not remember to have heard, there ever were in this mountain "either Armenian Monks, or Carmelites; all the monaſteries are in "the plain. I do not believe the place is inhabitable in any other "part, becauſe the whole ſoil of Ararat is looſe, or covered with "ſnow; it ſeems too as if this mountain waſted continually. From "the top of a great abyſs, oppoſite to the village [of Akurla in "the road from Erivan] from whence we came, there conti- "nually fall down rocks of a blackiſh hard ſtone, which make a "terrible noiſe. There are no living animals but at the bottom, "and towards the middle of the mountain: they who occupy the "firſt region, are poor ſhepherds and ſcabby flocks, among which "one finds ſome partridges: the ſecond region is poſſeſſed by "crows and tygers, which paſſed by us not without giving fear. "All the reſt of the mountain, that is, the half of it, has been "covered with ſnow ever ſince the ark reſted there, and theſe "ſnows are covered half the year with very thick clouds. That "which is yet more inconvenient and troubleſome in this mountain "is, that the ſnow which is melted, runs into the abyſs by a vaſt

(33) In loco ſuperius citat.

"number infinite fatigue, he was obliged, by the ſnow and intenſe cold, to

" number of ſources, which one cannot come at, and which are as " foul as the waters of a land-flood in the greateſt ſtorm. All " theſe ſources form the ſtream which runs by Akurla, and which " never becomes clear: They drink mud there all the year; but " we found it more delicious than the beſt wine: it is always cold " as ice, and has no muddy taſte. Notwithſtanding the amaze- " ment this frightful ſolitude caſt us into, we endeavoured to find " the pretended monaſtery, and enquired, whether there were any " religious ſhut up in caverns. The notion they have in the " country that the ark reſted here, and the veneration all the Ar- " menians have for this mountain (for they kiſs the earth ſo ſoon " as they ſee it, and repeat certain prayers, after having made the " ſign of the croſs) have made many imagine it muſt be filled with " religious; and Struys is not the only perſon who has told the " public ſo. However they aſſured us, there was only one for- " ſaken convent at the foot of the gulph; that there was no foun- " tain throughout the whole mount, only the ſtream of the abyſs, " which we could not come at to drink, but near that convent; and " that we could not go in a whole day to the ſnow, and down a- " gain to the bottom of the abyſs; that the ſhepherds often loſt " their way, and we might judge what a miſerable place it was, " from the neceſſity they were under to dig the earth from time to " time, to find a ſpring of water for themſelves and their flocks; " and that it would be to no purpoſe to aſcend higher in ſearch of " plants, becauſe we ſhould only find rocks hanging over our heads, " and heaped one upon another.

" After this we began to travel towards the firſt range of rocks, " with one bottle of water: but notwithſtanding we had made " pitchers of our bellies, in two hours time they were quite dried " up; and water ſhook in a bottle is a very diſagreeable ſort of " drink: our only hope therefore was to come at the ſnow, and " eat ſome of it to quench our thirſt. It muſt be acknowledged, " that the ſight is very much deceived, when we ſtand at the bot- " tom and gueſs at the height of a mountain, and eſpecially when " it muſt be aſcended through ſand as troubleſome as the ſyrtes of " Africa. It is impoſſible to take one firm ſtep upon the ſand of " mount Ararat; in many places, inſtead of aſcending, we were " obliged to go back again down to the middle of the mountain; " and in order to continue our courſe, to wind ſometimes to the " right, and ſometimes to the left. When we met with any " Mouſe-ear which was too ſhort to brouze, it made our boots " as ſmooth as glaſs, and ſo ſlippery, we were forced to ſtand " ſtill.

" To avoid the ſand, which fatigued us intolerably, we took " our way to the great rocks heaped one on another. We paſs " under " under them as through caverns, wherein we are ſheltered from " all the injuries of the weather, except the cold, which we felt

" there very ſenſibly, and ſerved a little to allay our thirſt. We " were obliged to leave this place quickly, leſt we ſhould get a " pleuriſy; and came into a very troubleſome way, full of ſtones,
" and were forced to leap from one ſtone to another. We came " about noon to a place more pleaſing, for it ſeemed as if we were " ready to take hold of the ſnow with our teeth. But our joy laſt-
" ed not long; for what we had taken for ſnow was only a chalk
" rock, which hid from our ſight a tract of land about two hours " journey diſtant from the ſnow, and which ſeemed to us to have " a new kind of pavement, not of little flints, but ſmall pieces of " ſtone broken off by the froſt, and whoſe edges cut like flints.
" We kept in very good order; we aſſured our guides, that we " would go no farther than a heap of ſnow, which appeared
" ſcarce bigger than a cake; but when we came to it, we found
" the heap was above thirty paces in diameter. We every one of " us eat more or leſs, as we had a mind; and by agreement re-
" ſolved to advance no farther. This ſnow was above four foot " thick; and being frozen hard, we took a great piece to fill our " bottle. It cannot be imagined, how much the eating of ſnow
" revives and fortifies: we deſcended therefore from the ſnow with " a wonderful vigour, which was not of long duration; for we " came to ſands which lay behind the abyſs, and were full as " troubleſome as the former. When we endeavoured to ſlide " along, half our bodies were buried; beſides, we could not keep
" the direct way, but were obliged to go to the left to come to " the edge of the abyſs, of which we had a mind to take a " nearer view. And indeed it is a moſt frightful ſight; to look " on the horrible precipices ever ſo little, will make the head
" turn round. The noiſe made by a vaſt number of crows, who " are continually flying from one ſide to the other, has ſomething
" in it very frightful. To form an idea of this place, you muſt
" imagine one of the higheſt mountains in the world opening it's
" boſom, only to ſhew the moſt horrid ſpectacle that can be thought " of. All the precipices are perpendicular, and the extremities
" are rough and blackiſh, as if a ſmoak came out of the ſides and " ſmutted them. About ſix o'clock in the afternoon we found our-" ſelves quite tired out and ſpent. However, at length obſerving
" a place covered with Mouſe-ear, whoſe declivity ſeemed to fa" vour our deſcent, that is to ſay, the way Noah took to the bot" tom of the mountain; we ran thither in haſte, and then ſat down
" to reſt ourſelves, and found there more plants than we had all the " journey beſides: and what pleaſed us mighty well was, that our " guides ſhewed from thence, but at a great diſtance, the mona" ſtery whither we were to go to quench our thirſt. We laid our-" ſelves on our backs, and ſlid down for an hour together upon this
" green plat, and ſo paſſed on very agreeably, and much faſter
" than we could have gone on our legs. The night and our thirſt to return without accomplishing his design, though it was then in the middle of summer (K).

THE situation of Ararat, whether it be Mount Masis, or the mountain of Cardu, is very convenient for the journey of the sons of Noah from thence to Shinaar, the distance not being very great, and the descent easy, especially from the latter, into the plains of Mesopotamia, of which Shinaar is a part. We discover plainly, through the Mosaic history, a neighbourhood between the land of Eden, where man was created, that of Ararat, where the remains of mankind were saved, and that of Shinaar, where they fixed the centre of their plantations. And certainly it was more natural it should be so, than to separate those scenes at such a distance from each other, as some have done.

" were a kind of spurs to us, and caused us to make the greater " speed. We continued therefore to slide in this manner as long " as the way would suffer us, and when we met with small flint " stones which hurt our shoulders, we turned and slid on our bel- " lies, or went backwards on all four. Thus by degrees we " gained the monastery, but so disordered and fatigued by our " manner of travelling, that we were not able to move hand or " foot. To our great misfortune also we found there neither " wine nor water, so were forced to send to the river, the descent " to which was near a quarter of a league down-right, and the " way very rugged."

(K) Yet, if you will believe a certain Dutch traveller (34), these difficulties may be surmounted; for he assures us, he went five days journey up mount Ararat to see a Romish hermit; that he passed through three regions of clouds, the first dark and thick, the next cold and full of snow, and the third colder still: that he advanced five miles every day; and when he came to the place where the hermit had his cell, he breathed a very serene and temperate air: that the hermit told him, he had perceived neither wind nor rain all the twenty five years he had dwelt there, and that on the top of the mountain there still reigned a greater tranquillity, whereby the ark was preserved uncorrupted. He farther pretends, that the hermit gave him a cross made out of the wood of the ark, together with a certificate, a formal copy of which the author has given in his sham relation.

(34) Struys's Voyages, chap. 17.

CHAP.

NOAH'S ARK

D. Pomarede Sc.

CHAP. II.

The General Hiſtory from the DELUGE to the Birth of ABRAHAM.

SECT. I.

The Chronology from the Deluge to the Departure of Abraham from Haran ſtated.

PURSUANT to our intended method, before we proceed to the poſtdiluvian hiſtory, we ſhall ſettle the chronology of this firſt period of it, which, as well as that of the preceding, can be adjuſted only from the records of Moſes.

THIS is one of the moſt difficult periods to ſettle in all chronology, not only, becauſe we have no aſſiſtance therein from profane hiſtory, but alſo on account of the great diverſity between the ſeveral copies of the Moſaical writings. It is a great misfortune, that there ſhould be any uncertainty with regard to the times next after the flood. For the planting of the world, the forming of ſocieties and governments, the riſe of arts and ſciences, and the beginning of ſtates and monarchies, falling within theſe limits, nothing could have been more ſerviceable to hiſtory than a fixed and uniform chronology of theſe early ages: whereas authors, being divided in their judgments about the authenticneſs of the ſeveral copies, have every one choſen to follow that which agreed beſt with his own notions, or hypotheſis; whereby they have ſo perplexed and confounded all tranſactions, both ſacred and profane, which fall within this period, that the hiſtory thereof can be compared to nothing but the original chaos.

HOWEVER, it is no ſmall ſatisfaction, that the great differences between the ſeveral copies end here; and that being once got below the birth of Abraham, we enter upon a more certain ſeries of time, about which chronologers are more generally agreed; the variety of the ſeveral copies making a difference of but a few years, not ſeveral ages, as we find the difference ariſes to in this period: for the better exhibiting of which we have inſerted the following tables, adjuſted in the ſame form with thoſe we have given of the antediluvian patriarchs.

A TABLE of the Years of the poſtdiluvian Patriarchs, to the birth of Abraham.

	Their Ages at their Sons Birth.				Years they lived after their Sons Birth.			Length of their Lives.
	Heb.	Joſ.	Sam.	Sept.	Heb.	Sam.	Sept.	Heb.	Sam.	Sept.
Shem after the flood --	2	2	2	2	500	500	500	600	600	600
Arphaxad —	35	135	135	135	403	303	430	438	438	565
Cainan———	0	0	0	130	0	0	330	0	0	460
Salah ———	30	130	130	130	403	303	330	433	433	460
Eber,———	34	134	134	134	430	270	370	464	404	504
Phaleg, ——	30	130	130	130	209	109	209	239	239	339
Reu,———	32	132	132	132	207	107	207	239	239	339
Serug, ———	30	130	130	130	200	100	200	230	230	330
Nahor, — —	29	29	79	79	119	69	129	148	148	208
Terah, — —	130	70	130	130	75	75	75	205	205	205
Sum to Abraham's birth, —	352	892	1002	1132

A Chro-

A Chronological TABLE of the Years of the poſtdiluvian Patriarchs, to the call of Abraham, according to the Computation of the Hebrew.

	Years of the Flood.	Yrs. of Noah,	Yrs. of Shem,	Yrs. of Arphaxad,	Years of Salah,	Years of Eber,	Years of Peleg,	Years of Reu,	Years of Serug,	Years of Nahor,	Years of Terah,	Years of Abraham,
The Flood - -	0	600	98
Arphaxad born,	2	602	100
Salah born, - -	37	637	135	35
Eber born, - -	67	667	165	65	30
Peleg born, Confuſion of tongues, and diſperſion of mankind, - -	101	701	199	99	64	34
Reu born, - -	131	731	229	129	94	64	30
Serug born - -	163	763	261	161	126	96	62	32
Nahor born, -	193	793	291	191	156	126	92	62	30
Terah born, - -	222	822	320	220	185	155	121	91	59	29
Haran born, - -	292	892	390	290	255	225	191	161	129	99	70
Peleg dies, - -	340	940	438	338	303	273	239	209	177	147	118
Nahor dies, -	341	941	439	339	304	274		210	178	148	119
Noah dies, - -	350	950	448	348	313	283		219	187		128
Abraham born, -	352		450	350	315	285		221	189		130
Reu dies, - -	370		468	368	333	303		239	207		148	18
Serug dies, - -	393		491	391	356	326			230		171	41
Terah dies, and Abraham is called from Haran, - -	427		525	425	390	360					205	75

A Chronological TABLE of the Years of the poſtdiluvian Patriarchs, to the call of Abraham, according to the Computation of the Septuagint.

	Years of the Flood.	Yrs. of Noah,	Yrs. of Shem,	Yrs. of Arphaxad,	Years of Cainan,	Years of Salah,	Years of Eber,	Years of Peleg,	Years of Reu,	Years of Serug,	Years of Nahor,	Years of Terah,	Years of Abraham,
The Flood, - -	0	600	98
Arphaxad born, -	2	602	100
Cainan born, -	137	737	235	135
Salah born, -	267	867	365	265	130
Noah dies, - -	350	950	448	348	213	83
Eber born, - -	397		495	395	260	130
Shem dies, - -	502		600	500	365	235	105
Peleg born, Confuſion of tongues, and diſperſion of mankind, --	531			529	394	264	134
Arphaxad dies, -	567			565	430	330	170	36
Cainan dies, -	597				460	360	200	66
Reu born, - -	661					394	264	130
Salah dies, - -	727					460	330	196	66
Serug born, - -	793						396	262	132
Peleg dies, - -	870						473	339	209	77
Eber dies, - -	901						504		240	108
Nahor born, -	923								262	130
Reu dies, - -	1000								339	207	77
Terah born, -	1002									209	79
Serug dies, - -	1123									330	200	121
Abraham born, -	1132										209	130
Terah dies, and Abraham is called from Haran, - - -	1207										284	205	75

A Chro-

A Chronological TABLE of the Years of the poſtdiluvian Patriarchs, to the call of Abraham, according to the Computation of the Samaritan Pentateuch.

	Years of the Flood.	Yrs. of Noah,	Yrs. of Shem,	Yrs. of Arphaxad,	Years of Salah,	Years of Eber,	Years of Peleg,	Years of Reu,	Years of Serug,	Years of Nahor,	Years of Terah,	Years of Abraham,
The Flood, - -	0	600	98
Arphaxad born, -	2	602	100
Salah born, - -	137	737	235	135
Eber born, - -	267	867	365	265	130
Noah dies, - -	350	950	448	348	213	83
Peleg born, Confuſion of tongues, and diſperſion of mankind, -	401	499	399	264	134
Arphaxad dies, -	440	538	438	303	193	40
Shem dies, - -	502	600		365	255	101
Reu born, - -	531			394	264	130
Salah dies, - -	570			433	303	169		39
Peleg dies, - -	640				373	239		109
Serug born, - -	663				396			132
Eber dies, - -	671				404			140	8
Reu dies, - -	770							239	107
Nahor born, -	793								130
Terah born, - -	872								209	79
Serug dies, - -	893								230	100	21
Nahor dies, - -	941									148	69
Abraham born, -	1002										130
Terah dies, and Abraham is called from Haran, - - - -	1077										205	75

There is no difference in this period between the Hebrew and the Samaritan, but what ariſes from the different computation of the years of the genitures of the patriarchs; the great difficulty, in both copies, conſiſts in Terah's age at the birth of Abraham: ſome will have him born in the ſeventieth year of Terah, which cannot be, unleſs Abraham were the eldeſt ſon, as it is evident he was not (for Lot, Haran's ſon, was near as old as Abraham) or unleſs Haran was born ſome years before his father was ſeventy, which ſeems to be not agreeable to the text; and if Terah was two hundred and five years old at his death, Abraham being then but ſeventy five, he muſt be one hundred and thirty when Abraham was born (K). The Samaritan copy indeed helps this matter, by making Terah's age, at his death, no more than one hundred and forty five; but then the firſt objection as to Haran's ſeniority remains: ſo that in this point the fault ſeems to be in the Samaritan (L), for, it muſt be confeſſed, the Hebrew number is here moſt fit to be relied on.

(K) This, we think, has been ſatisfactorily proved by Mr. Whiſton, in his ſhort view of the chronology of the old Teſtament (35).

(L) The gentleman juſt mentioned, ſince the publiſhing his ſaid Chronology, has thought fit to change his opinion in this matter (36), and produces ſeveral arguments to prove the Samaritan to be the true reading, and the Hebrew number a corruption. He relies on two paſſages, one of Philo, the other of Joſephus. The former ſays, that Abraham (born when his father Terah was ſeventy) was ſeventy five years old when he departed from Haran; though Terah lived there till his death (37). But Philo here only copies Moſes; ſo that his concluſion, whatever it was, does not decide any thing as to the true age of Terah at that time, which muſt have been more than ſeventy from the plain ſenſe of the text, when attended to. Joſephus's words are, They buried Terah when he died at Haran, after he had lived two hundred and five years; for the life of man was already cut ſhort and did become ſhorter till the birth of Moſes (38). Now ſince he expreſly mentions the age of Terah to have been two hundred and five, we cannot ſee any ground to ſuppoſe it a corruption for one hundred and forty five, though he elſewhere mentions Abraham to be born in the ſeventieth year of his father; for the inconſiſtency has been overlooked by many beſides Joſephus; much leſs can we conclude it ſuch from his reaſoning about the length of mens lives being ſhortened; which may be juſt, notwithſtanding Terah lived to be older than his father.

(35) Pag. 31. (36) See his Eſſay towards reſtoring the true text of the old Teſtament, p. 27, &c. (37) Philo de Somniis, p. 572. (38) Joſeph. Ant. l. 1. c. 6.

THE

THE call of Abraham, where the period ends, is by ſome reckoned five years ſooner, when he left Ur; but this will not agree with ſcripture, as ſhall be ſhewn when we come to ſettle the next period.

THERE are ſome variations between the preſent copies of the Septuagint; but as moſt of them relate to the length of ſome of the patriarchs lives, a circumſtance not very material, and which makes no difference in the computation, we ſhall paſs them by, and only obſerve, that ſome copies place the birth of Arphaxad twelve years after the flood, which will encreaſe the total of this period ten years; and that ſome make the age of Nahor, at the birth of Terah, 179 (M).

WE have choſen to follow the readings of the Alexandrian manuſcript, according to which the only difference between the Septuagint and the Samaritan in this period, is 130 years given to Cainan, who is added between Arphaxad and Salah. but is to be found neither in the Hebrew, nor the Samaritan, nor in the chronology of thoſe times, given us from the Septuagint itſelf, by Africanus, and Euſebius [a]: which circumſtances we look upon as ſufficient authority to reject him out of the number of the patriarchs, notwithanding his name is inſerted in St. Luke [b]; which may eaſily have happened, by its being added from ſome erroneous copies of the Septuagint, and firſt, as is moſt probable, put in the margin, though it has ſince crept into the text.

THE difference between the Hebrew reckoning and the Samaritan in this period is very conſiderable, being no leſs than 650 years, in which the Hebrew is defective, and in all probability has been corrupted; we reſerve for another place the examination of the authenticneſs of the various copies of the Pentateuch; at preſent we ſhall make uſe of ſome arguments drawn from reaſon, to ſhew that the Samaritan is to be preferred to the Hebrew.

[a] Vid. EUSEB. Chron. Græc. p. 9. [b] Luke iii. 36.

(M) Father Petron, following the preſent copies of Joſephus, places the birth of Terah in the 129th year of Nahor, which agrees with the Hebrew, and the amended number of Joſephus, with the addition only of 100 years; and thus the total of this period will be 1257 (39). But afterwards taking in the 10 years, added as above, between the flood, and the birth of Arphaxad, he in his ſecond computation makes the whole 1267.

(39) See his Antiq. des temps reſablies, p. 61.

IN

IN the first place, this period seems much too short, according to the Hebrew, for the historical facts belonging thereto. We shall shew, when we come to speak of the dispersion, how inconsistent it is in all respects with that transaction, and to what extreams it hath driven those who follow the Hebrew chronology, to place the birth of Peleg, when that dispersion happened, at no greater distance from the flood than 101 years; and how improbable it is, that in the space of 427 years, the world should be in such an improved state, as it appears to have been in the time of Abraham; when cities were built, kingdoms erected, and monarchs extended their dominion even from Persia to Canaan: But we shall confine ourselves at present to some other observations arising from the consequences of the Hebrew numbers, which we shall give in the words of a learned writer[c].

1. IT is not probable, that the seven first patriarchs after the flood, who lived 300 and 400 years, should beget at thirty, or thereabouts, as the present Hebrew is; and yet the following Patriarchs who did not live half so long, should not beget their first-born till double the age: Terah at seventy, Abraham at eighty seven, Isaac at sixty, Jacob at eighty four, Levi, Kohath, and Amram at about sixty each of them; for from the birth of Levi to the birth of Moses the son of Amram, were about 180 years.

2. (N) IT is not probable that Noah, who lived 600 years before the flood, should see nine generations succeed each

[c] Dr. WILLS, in his Appendix to his learned Discourse of the chronology of Josephus.

(N) In this paragraph we have accommodated Dr. Wills's reasoning to our own table of the Hebrew chronology, differing somewhat from his, which follows the shorter calculation, making Abraham born in the seventieth year of Terah, and consequently placing his birth sixty years earlier; that is, in the year of the flood 292, whereby there happens some variation between our calculations, in comparing the years of the deaths of the patriarchs together; and as we have not brought in Joktan with his sons, any more than Peleg, into the first dispersion, we have omitted the third reason urged by the Doctor against the Hebrew numbers. However, for the reader's satisfaction, we shall subjoin them both, by way of note, in his own words.

2dly, Says that author, it is not probable that Noah, who lived 600 years before the flood, should see ten generations succeed each other after the flood, and live till the fifty eighth year of Abraham; that Shem should see nine generations after him successively die, and live many years after the death of Abraham, the ninth person lineally each other after the flood, and live till the 128th year of Terah, within two years of Abraham's birth; that Arphaxad ſhould outlive Peleg, Reu, Serug, Nahor, and Terah, for five generations lineally deſcended from him. And what is more ſtrange, that Shem ſhould ſurvive Arphaxad, and ſee eight generations after him ſucceſſively die; and live till the fiftieth year of Iſaac, within fifteen years of Abraham's death; that Eber, ſhould outlive Abraham himſelf, the ſeventh in deſcent from him, though Abraham dies in a good old age, an old man [d]. Thus the great anceſtors, which in courſe of nature ought to die firſt, die laſt; by reducing the ſtandard of the length of human life too faſt, for the ſhortneſs of the ſpace allowed from the flood to the birth of Abraham; and hence, among other abſurd conſequences which follow from this chronology, occaſion was given to that notion of the Jews, followed ſtill by many modern writers, that Melchizedeck was Shem.

SECT. II.

The Hiſtory of Noah after the Flood, and of his deſcendants to Abraham.

THE time of Noah's going forth of the ark is fixed in ſcripture [e], to have been on the twenty ſeventh day of [d] Gen. xxv. 8. [e] Gen. viii. 13.

Year of the Flood, 1. Year before Chriſt; 2997.

Noah comes out of the ark. The precepts given him by God.

lineally deſcended from him; who yet died in a good old age, an old man (40), that Salah ſhould outlive Phaleg, Ragau, Lamech (41), Nahor, Terah, and Abraham, for ſix generations lineally deſcended from him; and even the laſt of them lived to be an old man: that Heber ſhould outlive Phaleg, Ragau, Lamech (42), Nahor, Terah, Abraham, and Iſaac, ſeven ſucceſſive generations that deſcended from him, and yet Abraham and Iſaac ſhould both live to be old men (43).

3dly, It is not poſſible, that Joktan ſhould have thirteen ſons when Phaleg was born at the diviſion of tongues, if Phaleg was born in the thirty fourth year of Heber, as it is in the Hebrew; and to fancy Phaleg firſt called ſo at the time of his death, is ridiculous, and expreſly contrary to Joſephus. At the diviſion of tongues we are told, that Mizraim, Canaan, Sidon, Elam, Aſſur, Aram, &c. gave names to countries, and yet they died before Phaleg. Shem, Arphaxad, Salah, Heber, &c. according to the Hebrew, were alive when God inſtituted circumciſion; and yet none of them ordered to be circumciſed, which was then the ſign of being in covenant with God.

(40) Gen. xxv. 8. (41) A miſtake of the printer for Serug. (42) Serug. (43) Gen. xxxv. 25.

the

Year of the Flood, 1. Year before Christ, 2997.

the second month, in the six hundred and first year of his age (O). The first thing he did upon his landing, was to build an altar, and offer a burnt sacrifice of every clean beast, and every clean fowl [f] (P). GOD having accepted the sacrifice, blessed Noah, and gave him power over all living creatures, with a permission to eat of them as freely as of the produce of the ground; however, he forbad him to eat the blood of animals, or to shed that of man, ordering him to punish man-slaughter with death, and to people the world as fast as he could [g].

IT is not to be thought, that these three injunctions contained all that was obligatory on Noah and his posterity, till the promulgation of the law at Sinai, there being nothing here required of his duty towards God, the whole consisting in moral precepts; but we are to consider them either as explanatory of, or additional to the laws, which Noah had received in common with the rest of the antediluvians, and which were derived from Adam. The permission to eat flesh, now first explicitly given, seems to intimate, that it was not allowed before the flood: but to avoid repetitions, we refer the reader to what we have already said on that subject [h].

THE Rabbins pretend, that GOD gave to Noah and his sons certain general precepts, which, according to them, contain the law of nature, common to all men indifferently, and for the non-observance of which the Gentiles themselves have been punished by GOD [i]. These precepts enjoined, 1. To abstain from idolatry. 2. From blasphemy. 3. From murder. 4. From adultery. 5. From theft. 6. To institute judges to maintain those laws; and, 7. To abstain from eating the flesh of any animal, cut off while the animal was living; which last precept was supposed to be intended by the words, the flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, [f] Gen. viii. 20. [g] Chap. ix. 1.—7. [h] Chap. 1. § 7.

[i] Vid. SELDEN de jure nat. & gent. lib. I. cap. ult. CALMET, dict. art. Noachides.

(O) The Mohammedans will have it, that Noah quitted the ark the tenth day of Mobarram, which is the first month of their year; and that he instituted the fast, observed by them on that day, which they call Ashûrah, in commemoration of his deliverance (44).

(P) Some Rabbins pretend Shem offered the sacrifice, Noah being rendered unqualified for that office, by having the misfortune to be bit by a lion (45).

(44) D'Herb. Bibl. orient. p. 676. (45) Shalshel, Hakkab. p. 7.

shall

ſhall you not eat [k]. This barbarity ſome pagans are ſaid to have practiſed [l]. From the time of Moſes, the Jews would not ſuffer a ſtranger to live among them, unleſs he obſerved the precepts of the Noachidæ, and never gave quarter in battle to any who were ignorant of them. Year of the Flood, 1. Year before Chriſt, 2997.

MAIMONIDES [m] ſays, the ſix firſt precepts were given to Adam, and the ſeventh to Noah: to theſe ſome Rabbins add others, as the prohibition to draw out the blood of any living creature to drink [n]; to maim animals [o]; to uſe magic and ſorcery [p]; to couple animals, and graft trees with different kinds [q]. But what calls the antiquity of theſe precepts in queſtion is, that there is no mention made of them, neither in ſcripture, nor in Onkelos, nor in Joſephus, nor in Philo; and that neither Jerom, nor Origen, nor any of the antient fathers, appears to have known any thing of them.

BISHOP Cumberland, who likewiſe juſtly ſuſpects the veracity of the Rabbins, thinks the patriarchal laws are to be ſearched for in the ſcripture; and accordingly, in a particular treatiſe on that ſubject [r], he has ſhewn from thence, that the patriarchs, long before the law was delivered to Moſes, carefully obſerved the principal precepts, as well towards GOD, as towards man, ſo as to fulfil the decalogue; moved thereto either by the ſame promiſes, or fear of the ſame judgments and puniſhments, which were afterwards pronounced by the Moſaical law [s].

GOD farther made a covenant with Noah [t], never to drown the world again, promiſing, as a token thereof, for the future, to ſet his bow in the clouds when it rained. This ſeems to have been done to take away Noah's apprehenſions, who, according to Joſephus, ſacrificed to appeaſe GOD's wrath, fearing an anniverſary deluge; for which ſuppoſition that hiſtorian has been cenſured ſomewhat too ſeverely [u]. God aſſures Noah, the world ſhould not periſh by a ſecond deluge.

NOAH, being come down from the mountain, applied himſelf to huſbandry, and planted a vineyard [x]; but the eaſtern authors [y] make this the work of his ſons. However, Noah, having drank of the wine to exceſs, lay careleſly uncovered in his tent, which his ſon Ham perceiving, called in his brothers, Shem and Japhet, to behold the poſture their father was in; but they, out of a ſenſe of duty and modeſty, Noah becomes an huſbandman.

[k] Gen. ix. 4. [l] ARNOB. cont. Gent. lib. 5. See before, p. 178. in the notes. [m] YAD HAZZAKAH, Sepher melakin. c. 9. [n] Rab. CHEVINA. [o] R. CHIDEA. [p] R. SIMEON. [q] R. ELIEZER. [r] De legibus patriarcharum, printed in his Origines gentium antiquiſſ. [s] Ibid. chap. 5. [t] Gen. ix. 11, 17. [u] JOSEPH. ant. l. 1. c. 3. HEIDEG. Hiſt. patriarc. Exercit. 19. 3. [x] Gen. ix. 20. [y] EUTYCH. p. 43.

took

Year of the Flood, 1. Year before Christ, 2997.

took a garment, and going backwards, covered Noah[1] with it; for which, when he came to know of what had passed, he blessed them, and cursed Ham in his posterity, who were to be servants to their brethren [z].

Where first he settled.

THE Armenians have a tradition, that Noah, after quitting the ark, went and settled at Erivan, about twelve leagues from Ararat, and that it was there he planted the vineyard, in a place where they still make excellent wine [a]. According to Tavernier, Nakshiwan, which is ten leagues distant from Ararat, was the place where Noah went to dwell; and he adds, that it is reported to be the oldest city in the world. Another tradition of the country will have the village of Cemain above-mentioned, to be the place where Noah and his sons fixed their first habitation [b]. But this is to be understood of the places where these towns were afterwards built, for it is not likely, they began to build towns so early, much less that the deluge left them standing, if there had been any there before; and the scripture says, Noah was in his tent when Ham surprized him in wine.

Noah not Fo hi.

HOWEVER this tradition, so far as it relates to Noah's settling in the country near the mountain where the ark rested, seems more probable than a notion lately advanced by some men of learning [c], that Noah left his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, in some little time, and with his younger issue travelled to China, where he lived before the deluge, and that he was the first king of that country, whom the Chinese call Fo hi (Q); it seeming more agreeable to reason, as well as scripture, [z] Gen. ix. 21.---27. [a] CALMET Dict. suppl. p. 63. [b] See before, chap. I. § 8. [c] Dr. ALLIX, in his Reflections upon the books of the holy scriptures, p. 112. Mr. WHISTON in his Chronol. of the old Test. &c. in his new theory of the earth, and his essay for restoring the true text, &c. Mr. SHUCKFORD in his Connection, and Mr. BEDFORD in his Scripture chronology.

(Q) This opinion (much more reasonable than that of Hornius, who will have Fo hi to be Adam (46), though the Chinese (47) expressly make a different person the first man, whom they call Puon ku) depends on the following observations. 1. The Chinese histories say, Fo hi had no father (48); which agrees well enough with Noah, because the memory of his father might be lost in the deluge, and so give occasion to this fable, that he had no father at all. 2. The same histories affirm, that Fo hi's mother conceived him as she was encom-ſcripture, to conclude, that Noah continued with his poſterity till encompaſſed with a rainbow (49); which ſeems an imperfect tradition concerning the firſt appearance of the rainbow to Noah after the flood. 3. The character and appellation of Fo hi, among the Chineſe, agrees with what the ſcriptures affirm of Noah.--- Fo hi, ſays Le Compte, the firſt emperor of China, carefully bred up ſeven ſorts of creatures, which he uſed to ſacrifice to the ſupreme ſpirit of heaven and earth. For this reaſon ſome called him Paohi, that is, oblation (50). Noah, ſays Moſes, took into the ark of every clean beaſt by ſevens, of fowls alſo of the air by ſevens, the male and his female, to keep ſeed alive upon the face of all the earth (51). And after the flood Noah builded an altar unto the LORD, and took of every clean beaſt, and every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar (52). 4. The Chineſe hiſtories affirm, that Fo hi ſettled in the province of Shenſi, which is the moſt northweſt province of China (53), and very near to mount Caucaſus, upon which (according to an opinion we have taken notice of) the ark reſted, and from which Noah muſt deſcend to go thence into China. In favour of this opinion, it is alſo further obſerved, 5. That the Moſaic hiſtory, as it is perfectly ſilent in relation to the peopling of China at the diſperſion, confining itſelf within the bounds of the then known world; ſo it ſays little or nothing of Noah after the flood; which ſeems to be an intimation, that Noah had no ſhare in the ſubſequent actions related in the ſacred hiſtory; and ſo by a fair conſequence might be in China, a region out of the compaſs of the known world. 6. That this is confirmed by the Chaldean tradition of the ſudden diſappearing of Xiſuthrus, or Noah, his wife, and daughter, and the Pilot, on their coming out of the ark. 7. That the Chineſe language and writing, are ſo entirely different from thoſe among us, introduced by the confuſion of Babel, that they cannot well be derived from thence. 8. That the diſperſion beginning from Babylon, ſo remote a country as China, could not be ſo ſoon reached and peopled, as the prodigious number of its inhabitants at preſent ſhew it to have been; and therefore they could not be of ſo late an original. 9. That the learned ſciences ſeem to have been antiently much better known in China, than in theſe parts of the world; their government and conſtitution much firmer and more laſting than ours; their moſt antient hiſtories more authentic and certain than ours (excepting thoſe of more than human original): all which things would make one ready to imagine, that as it is probable Noah might be much more wiſe and learned than any of his ſons; ſo all thoſe ſettlements, laws, and traditions, which are derived from him, are remarkable

(46) Arca Noe, p. 14. (47) Vid. Martinii Hist. Sinicam, lib. 1. p. 13. (48) Ibid. p. 21.

Year of the Flood, 1. Year before Chriſt, 2997.

(49) Ibid. (50) Le Compte Memoirs of China, p. 313. Couplet Confucius proœm. p. 38. 76. (51) Geneſ. vii. 2, 3, 9. (52) Chap. viii. 20. (53) Martinius ubi ſupra. Couplet. Chronol. in Fo hi.

effects

till his death, and that, after quitting the ark, they dwelt ſomewhere near the mountain where it reſted, which was in Armenia; and that they did not remove, till ſuch time as they are mentioned in ſcripture to have begun their journey towards Shinaar [c].

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

NOAH died in the nine hundred and fiftieth year of his age, and, according to the tradition of the orientals, was buried in Meſopotamia, where they ſhew his ſepulchre, in a caſtle near a monaſtery called Dair Abunah, that is, the monaſtery of our Father [d]. According to a common opinion, before his death, he divided the world among his three ſons, effects and teſtimonies of the ſame (54). 10. And principally, that the reign of Fo hi, according to the moſt rational and exact account hitherto given of the Chineſe chronology, coincides with the time of Noah (55); and that the length of the reigns and lives of Fo hi, and his firſt ſucceſſors, greatly correſponds with the duration of the lives of men in the ſame ages recorded in ſcripture (56).

Noah dies.

[c] Gen. xi. 2. [d] D'HERBEL. p. 677.

But as this opinion is conjectural only, ſo ſeveral objections might be made to it. As, 1. That it is improbable, if Noah was Fo hi, that the Chineſe annals ſhould make no mention of ſo extraordinary an event as the deluge, which they are ſo far from having recorded, that Couplet (57) expreſly makes it an error in thoſe who imagine they have. 2. The uncertainty of the Chineſe writers themſelves as to the hiſtory of Fo hi and his next ſucceſſors, ſome doubting, whether there was ever ſuch a man as Fo hi; and others rejecting both him and his ſucceſſor Shin nungh, and beginning with Hoangh ti, the third king; wherefore Couplet leaves them out of the ſucceſſion of Chineſe monarchs, and that not without reaſon, ſince Fo hi is ſaid to have had the body of a ſerpent, and Shin nungh the head of an ox (58). 3. Moſes's account of the diſperſion ſeems moſt evidently to relate to all mankind without exception, who, he ſuppoſes, were collected together in the plain of Shinaar; as will hereafter be more particularly evinced. And if this be admitted, Noah having no other iſſue than his three ſons named by Moſes, conſequently could not reign in China.

This matter, however, we may be probably able to decide, when we come to treat profeſſedly of the Chineſe affairs; wherein we expect ſome aſſiſtance from the new hiſtory of China, lately publiſhed in Italy, written by a Mandarin, who, as we are told, has made it appear, that there are no genuine records to be found in that empire, earlier than two or three centuries before CHRIST.

(54) Vid. Whiſton's Theory, Book II. p. 137, &c. (55) Vid. his ſhort view of the Chronol. &c. p. 61. (56) Ibid. p. 64, 65. (57) Præf. ad Tab. Chronol. p. 3, 8. (58) Vid. Ibid. p. 3. 10, 11.

giving

Noah
Japhet
Shem
Ham
Gomer
Magog
Madai
Javan
Tubal
Meshech
Tiras
Elam
Ashur
Arphaxad
Lud
Aram
Cush Mizraim
Phut
Canaan
Ashkenaz
Riphath
Togarmah
Elisha Tarshish
Kittim
Dodanim
Salah
Uz
Hul
Gether
Mash
Sheba
Dedan
Ludim
Anamim
Lehabim
Naphtuhim
Pathrusim
Casluhim
Caphtorim
Philistim
Sidon
Heth
Jebusite
Amorite
Girgashite
Hivite
Arkite
Sinite
Arvadite
Zemarite
Hamathite
Eber
Peleg
Joktan
Reu
Serug
Nahor
Terah
Elmodad
Sheleph
Hazarmaveth
Jerah
Hadoram
Uzal
Diklah
Obal
Abimael
Sheba
Ophir
Havilah
Jobab
Haran
Nahor
Abram
Sarai

giving to Shem Asia, to Ham Africa, and to Japhet Europe: but this has not the leaſt foundation in ſcripture. Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

ALL mankind, at leaſt that we have any account of in ſcripture, being the iſſue of theſe three ſons of Noah, who were ſaved with him in the ark (R); before we proceed any farther, it will be proper to give a genealogical table of their deſcendants, in the ſame manner as we have already given one of the antediluvian patriarchs. (See the plate).

The genealogy of the deſcendants of Noah.

THE chief deſign of Moſes being to record what particularly concerned the Iſraelites, he has given us the genealogy of the line of Shem only entire. As to the deſcendants of the other two ſons of Noah, his deſign ſeems to have been to bring them down as low as the diſperſion, in order to leave to poſterity the names of the firſt founders of nations, and there to diſmiſs them; for it is obſervable, that though ſeveral particulars are mentioned in the courſe of the Moſaical hiſtory relating to the Canaanites, as the people with whom the Iſraelites were more particularly to be concerned, yet he hath deduced the genealogy of that branch of Ham no farther; on the contrary it is ſhorter than thoſe of Mizraïm and Cuſh by one generation.

NOR indeed is there much to be collected from ſcripture relating to the deſcendants of Shem, more than their names and the ages of the patriarchs in the line of Peleg, till we come to Terah the father of Abraham, with whom this period ends. But whatever there may be wanting in the ſacred hiſtory, the Jews have taken care, according to their uſual cuſtom, plentifully to ſupply with the figments and conceits of their Rabbins, a ſet of men, who have ſurpaſſed all others in the art of trifling, and inventing abſurdities. On the other hand, the chriſtian chronologers and hiſtorians of all ages who have endeavoured to connect the prophane hiſtory with the ſacred, within this period, would furniſh us with materials enough to fill up the vacancies, could we think it worth while to collect their ſeveral opinions and conjectures; few of them agreeing in any one point, which yet every one is confident he has settled. We shall therefore take notice of but a very few of them; such contradictory sentiments serving only to shew the uncertainty of the whole, and consequently to confound, rather than to instruct, the reader.

(R) Beſides theſe three ſons, ſome of the Jewiſh writers give Noah a fourth, named Yoniko, who, as they pretend, taught aſtronomy, and inſtructed Nimrod in the art of war (59). The Mahommedan traditions, generally ſpeaking, allow Noah but three ſons, yet an Arab writer mentions another, named Majeſtún (60), who was probably born after the flood.

(59) Juchaſin. p. 135. (60) Abdalrahman Ebn Abdallah apud D'Herbel. Biblioth. Orient. Art. Noah.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

WE shall not in this place touch upon the migrations, or the planting of nations by the posterity of Noah, which we have reserved for the subject of a distinct section, that we might not mix the history of that remarkable transaction with other matters. We have also thought proper to change the order of the table, and give an account of the line of Ham before that of Shem, which will more naturally close this section.

Of Japhet and his posterity.

THOUGH Japhet is generally placed last in scripture[e], yet he is expressly said to be the eldest (S)[f]; and that he was so is farther evident, for that Noah was five hundred years old when he begat his three sons[g], according to which manner of expression in scripture one of them was born in his five hundredth year: but it could not be Shem, for he being in the one hundredth year of his age at the birth of Arphaxad, two years after the flood[h], when Noah was six hundred and three years old, it follows, that he himself was born in the five hundred and third year of Noah: nor could it be Ham, for he is expressly said to have been the younger[i]; so that Japhet was the eldest of the three sons.

JAPHET being affected, as well as Shem, with filial concern at Ham's exposing their father's nakedness, assisted to cover him, and had a blessing given him by Noah on that occasion. GOD, says that patriarch, shall enlarge Japhet (T), and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant[k]. The first part of this prophecy has been verified in the great possessions which fell to the descendants of Japhet; as all Europe, and all the northern part of Asia, the lesser Asia, Media, Armenia, the countries between the [e] Gen. v. 32. vi. 10. vii. 13. ix. 18. x. 1. [f] Ibid. x. 21. [g] Ibid v. 32. [h] Ibid. xi. 10. [i] Ibid. ix. 24. [k] Ibid. ix. 27.

(S) This is the sense of the passage according to the English version, and the Septuagint; but the Vulgat translates it, Shem the elder brother of Japhet The former interpretation must be the true one, for the reason immediately given; though the original, and the oriental versions are capable of either sense.

(T) Noah here alludes to the name of Japhet, the root of which signifies to enlarge; though others translate the passage, GOD shall persuade Japhet, that is, bring him over in time to the true worship, figured by the tents of Shem.

Euxine

Euxine and Caſpian ſeas, as well as thoſe lying to the north of them, Grand Tartary, with India, and China. Add to theſe the European colonies in America of late ages; for as to the original inhabitants of that continent, it is uncertain from which of the three branches they are deſcended. The next part of the propheſy, that he ſhould dwell in the tents of Shem, ſeems to refer to the overthrow of the Aſſyrian empire by the Medes in conjunction with the Babylonians, as well as to the conqueſts of the Greeks and Romans in Aſia; alluded to afterwards by Balaam in his propheſy [1], that ſhips ſhould come from the coaſts of Chittim, and ſhould afflict Aſhur, and ſhould afflict Eber: that is, they ſhould afflict the Aſſyrians, and thoſe who dwelt beyond the river Euphrates (U). And at the ſame time that they dwelt in the tents of Shem, they made the poſterity of Ham their ſervants by ſubduing the Babylonians, the Canaanites, the Egyptians, and other nations deſcended from that branch, wherein was the completion of the laſt part of Noah's propheſy.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

[1] Numb. xxiv. 24.

(U) The common opinion is, that by Eber in this place is to be underſtood the Hebrews, or Jews; but a learned author has offered reaſons which ſeem to prove the contrary. He obſerves, that to take it in that ſenſe is repugnant to the deſign of the paſſage, and makes Balaam bleſs, and curſe the children of Iſrael, in the ſame breath, by propheſying of their deſtruction (61); and therefore he will have it, that Eber has not reſpect to perſons, but to place, and ſignifies beyond the river (62); in which ſenſe that word is often uſed in ſcripture (63). Upon this occaſion the ſame author propoſes to amend our tranſlation of the above text, (64) by reading it thus; and they ſhall go forth from the coaſt of Chittim, and ſhall afflict Aſhur, and ſhall afflict the other ſide of the river (65), that is, the countries beyond Euphrates. There ſeems to be no need of ſuppoſing the laſt and to be taken conjunctively, or the words following it to be a repetition, or explanatory of the firſt, as that writer thinks; for Aſſur, ſtrictly ſpeaking, lay beyond the Tigris; neither in Balaam's time had the Aſſyrian empire extended itſelf weſtward ſo far as the Euphrates: and when that propheſy was to be fulfilled, Aſſur was reduced to its primitive bounds, and in ſubjection to Elam or the Perſians; as were alſo the Babylonians, and the inhabitants of Aram, or Meſopotamia: who we think are to be underſtood by Eber, or the other ſide of the river, that is, the Euphrates.

(61) Vid. Hyde de rel. vet. Perſ. p. 56. (62) Vid. eund ibid. p. 57. (63) Idem, ibid. p. 50, &c. (64) Numb. xxiv. 24. (65) Hyde, ibid. p. 57.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

THIS propheſy ſeems alſo to have regard to the ſtate of the true religion, confining it to the race of Shem, for a certain period of time, ending perhaps at the coming of the MESSIAH [m]; for ſince CHRIST, the knowledge of the true GOD hath ſpread conſiderably more among the deſcendants of Japhet, than it did before amongſt thoſe of Shem, having till then been confined almoſt wholly to the nation of the Jews, however the Mohammedans rank Japhet himſelf among the prophets [n].

THE ſeptuagint verſion, followed by Euſebius and others [o], mentions an eighth ſon of Japhet named Eliſa, who is neither in the Hebrew, nor the Chaldee (X).

No particulars being mentioned in ſcripture with reference to the deſcendants of Japhet, farther than what relates to their founding of Nations, we muſt refer the reader, for what may be ſaid of them under that head, to our account of the migrations.

Of Ham and his poſterity.

THAT Ham was the youngeſt ſon of Noah (Y), though generally placed the ſecond of the three, is evident by his being

[m] See below. [n] Vid. D'HERBELOT Bibl. Orient. Art. Jafeth. [o] EUSEB. Chronic. l. 1. p. 8. CHRONIC. ALEXANDR. AUGUSTINUS.

(X) The Perſian hiſtorians give Japhet eleven ſons, viz. 1. Jin, Chin, or Sin. 2. Seklab. 3. Manſhuj. 4. Gomari. 5 Turk, (from whom this patriarch is ſurnamed Abu'l Turk, or the father of Turk). 6. Khalaj. 7. Khozar. 8. Rûs. 9 Suſſan. 10. Ghaz. And 11. Taraj. (66). The Tartarian authors name but eight ſons of Japhet, in this order; 1. Turk. 2. Khars [Khozar]. 3. Saklap. 4. Rûs. 5. Maminakh. 6. Zwin [Jin]. 7. Kamari. 8. Tarikh (67). The former authors aſſert, that Japhet married his ſons to their own ſiſters before they departed to people their countries, to the end they might multiply the eaſier; and indeed it happened, that the eaſtern countries, and the greater part of the north were firſt peopled (68).

(Y) The Hebrew word חם Ham ſignifies hot, or heat, or ſunburnt. Though he is expreſly ſaid to be the younger, yet numbers of commentators, relying more upon the order wherein he is named, maintain, that he was the ſecond ſon of Noah; and to elude the force of the text, ſeveral of them pretend, that it is not Ham himſelf, but Canaan, his ſon, who is here ſpoken of: others will have it, that Ham was called the younger, or the youngeſt, for no other

(66) Mîr Khond & Khond Amîr. See D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. Art. Jafeth. (67) See Abu'lghazi Khans Genealogical Hiſt. of the Tartars, vol. I. p. 6. (68) D'Herbelot, ubi ſupra.

ing expreſly called the youngeſt: he may have been born within a few years after Shem, but as neither his age, nor the time of his birth are mentioned, we can determine nothing concerning that point. However, one would be apt to imagine, from Ham's indiſcretion as well as wickedneſs in diſcovering his father's nakedneſs, that when he committed that crime he was but a very young man, though he had children; he might probably be about fifty, or threeſcore, an age ſcarce equivalent in thoſe days to eighteen now.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

WHEN Noah was acquainted with the irreverent action of Ham (Z), he curſed him in a branch of his poſterity; Curſed, ſays he, be Canaan, a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be unto his brethren [P]. This curſe, if it be a curſe (A), being pronounced not againſt Ham the immediate tranſgreſſor, but againſt other reaſon, but becauſe his conduct was leſs prudent than that of his brothers (69). But ſuch interpretations, if once admitted, will ſerve only to render the moſt clear expreſſions in ſcripture obſcure.

[P] Gen. ix. 25.

(Z) If we enquire, by what means Noah came to know that it was Ham who had diſcovered his nakedneſs, ſome Rabbins anſwer, that he inferred ſo much from Ham's paſt ſhameleſs behaviour, in prophaning the ark by lying with his wife (70); others ſay, that Ham, by looking on his father's ſhame, found extraordinary alterations in himſelf; his eyes became red, his hair and beard burnt, and his lips diſtorted; and he knew ſo little what he did, that he ſtripped himſelf ſtark naked, and walked about in that condition. Noah, ſeeing all this from thence concluded, that it was Ham who had diſhonoured him Some ſay, that he could not have known it otherwiſe than by revelation St. Chryſoſtom's opinion is very rational; he believes, that Noah ſeeing himſelf covered with a garment which did not belong to him, asked the occaſion of it, and learned from Shem and Japhet all that had paſſed (71).

(A) Mr. Bayle does not take this paſſage properly to contain a curſe. He ſays, it is pretty ſtrange, that the ſcripture takes no notice of any thing being done by Noah to Ham: he obſerves, that there is not one word of cenſure paſſed upon Ham; that the patriarch was content to curſe Canaan the ſon of Ham; and that this curſe was nothing elſe but a prophecy of the victories, which the deſcendants of Shem ſhould obtain over the deſcendants of Canaan under Joſhua, that is to ſay, ſeven or eight ages after the crime of Ham had been committed (72).

(69) Vid. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patriarch. Exercit. 20. num. 4. (70) Vid. Heidegg. Hiſt Patriarch. tom. I. p. 409. (71) Vid. eund. ibid. (72) Bayle Dict. Hiſt. Art. Cham.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

his son, who does not appear from the words of Moses to have been any way concerned in the crime, though some imagine he had a principal share in it (B), hath occasioned several conjectures: some [q] have believed, that Noah cursed Canaan, because he could not well have cursed Ham himself, whom GOD had not long before blessed [r]; others, more reasonably, think Moses's chief intent in recording this prediction, was to raise the spirits of the Israelites, then entering on a terrible war with the children of Canaan, by the assurance that, in consequence of the curse, that people were destined by GOD to be subdued by them [s]; for the opinion of those who imagine all Ham's race were here accursed, seems repugnant to the plain words of scripture, which confines the malediction to Canaan and his posterity, and also contrary to fact (C).

AMONG

[q] CHRYSOST. serm. 29. in Genes. [r] Genes. ix. 1. [s] AUGUSTIN. quæst. 17. in Genes. THEODORET in Genes. 58. HEIDEGG. Hist. Patr. tom. I. p. 411. BAYLE cited in the note (A) before.

(B) The Jews pretend that Canaan was the person who first discovered the nakedness of Noah, with which he acquainted his father Ham; who made sport of the accident, and went and told it to his brothers Shem and Japhet; and that Noah awaking out of his sleep cursed Canaan, because he was the first occasion of the scandal (73).

(C) A learned author hath affirmed, that there hath never yet been a son of Ham who hath shaken a sceptre over the head of Japhet; Shem hath subdued Japhet, and Japhet hath subdued Shem, but Ham never subdued either (74). However, this must be a mistake, if there be any truth in what the Egyptian histories relate of the actions of Sesostris, and some others of their kings, who conquered the greatest part of Asia, and Europe; and consequently Ham may be said to have subdued both. Beside, we find the Israelites were long the slaves of Mizraïm, or the Egyptians; and we see no reason why the shameful submission, which Reboboam, the son and successor of Solomon, made to Shishak, the Egyptian Pharaoh (75), who after taking all the strong cities of Judah, seems to have had Jerusalem delivered up to him without opposition, to be spoiled with the temple, may not be deemed a servitude; it being expresly said, the Jews should be his servants (76). Ham also appears to have encroached upon Shem very early, for he seems to have driven the Shemites out of their first seats in Shinaar; and every body knows the Babylonians, who were Hamites, had a considerable share in the destruction

(73) Bereshit Rabba § 37. Theodoret. quæst. 57. in Genes. (74) See MEDE's works, p. 358. (75) 1 Kings xiv. 25. 2 Chron. xii. 2, 9. (76) 2 Chron. xii. 5, 8.

AMONG those who are for extending the Curſe to Ham and his other race, ſome have ſuppoſed another effect of it, not mentioned by Moſes; that Ham became a black-moor, and communicated that colour to his deſcendants (D); but this opinion is a mere chimæra, as hath been formerly obſerved [t]. Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

IN conſequence of this undutiful act of his telling his brothers that he had ſeen his father's nakedneſs, Ham has been looked upon as the firſt introducer of wickedneſs after the flood; and authors have imputed to him many enormities, ſome of them ridiculous enough, which they have grounded ſolely upon this ſingle paſſage. They have believed, ſeeing Ham could be guilty of ſo much indiſcretion towards his father, that he was a reprobate, who had committed all ſorts of abominations. They take it for granted, that none but he and his poſterity were concerned in the building of Babel, which they conſider as a very wicked attempt [u]. They make him the firſt propagator of idolatry after the flood (E), and the inventor of magic, and relate many paſſages to that effect (F). They pretend deſtruction of the Aſſyrian empire. But a ſtronger inſtance than any of the preceding is the Babyloniſh captivity, in which the Jews themſelves were the ſufferers. Nay, the very branch of Canaan ſeems to have had great ſucceſs againſt Japhet, not only by the exploits of the Carthaginians (originally Canaanites) in Italy, but by their conqueſt of Spain.

[t] Introduct. p. 99. [u] See after.

(D) This opinion has been entertained by ſeveral chriſtians, as well as Mohammedans, though ſome of the latter account otherwiſe for mens different complexions (77). The Arab writers add, that Noah, relenting at the ſudden change in his ſon, prayed to GOD, that his poſterity might be treated gently in their ſervitude; in conſequence whereof the black ſlaves are not only in great requeſt, but generally have great credit and power with their maſters (78).

Some of the ſame authors pretend, that Noah's curſe was inflicted on Ham for his diſobedience, becauſe he would not come to prayers one morning when his father called him (79).

(E) Several inſtances of this the reader will find hereafter.

(F) Ham is held to have been the inventor of magic, ſo far only as that it was he who preſerved and taught it to the deſcendants of Noah; for it is allowed, it was not Ham who firſt invented this art, but the angels, who, becoming enamoured of the women of the old world, taught it the antediluvians (80). They ſay, that Ham, not daring to carry with him into the ark the books which treated pretend that he set a very unedifying example of incontinence, by getting his wife with child in the very ark (G). Nay, it has been imagined, that the crime which he committed against his father was infinitely more enormous than it is represented in scripture: some concluding, that Ham castrated Noah (H); others, that he rendered him impotent by virtue of this subject, engraved the principal rules of the art upon plates of metal and hard stone, able to resist the waters of the deluge; which treasure he carefully hid, and after quitting the ark went and took them from the place where he had deposited them (81). It is pretended, that Mizraïm learned of his father Ham all those abominable secrets; and that the pretenders to that science consider Ham as their first founder, and to have been the same with Zoroaster, and honour him as a god. The first author of this opinion seems to have been the counterfeit Clemens (82).

(77) Vid. Introduct. p. 99. (78) D'herb. Bibl. Orient. p. 245, & 677. (79) Ibid. p. 677. (80) See before. p. 156. in the notes.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

(G) Though St. Ambrose and others conceive from the words of Moses, that the matrimonial duty was superseded and suspended during the time Noah and his family lived in the ark (83); nevertheless it is an opinion which has spread pretty much, that Ham did not observe continency on that occasion, but that his wife brought forth Canaan in the very ark (84).

(H) Some Jewish Doctors have asserted this, and pretend, that what prompted Ham to so violent an act, was to prevent Noah's having any more sons; as if he feared his share in the division of the world would be too small (85) Some grave authors have undertaken to refute this fancy very seriously, by these words of scripture: Noah awoke from his wine and knew what his younger son had done unto him. If he had performed, say they, upon his father so painful an operation as that of castrating must have been, Noah would not have slept till he was sober, but the anguish would quickly have awakened him, and he would have surprised the criminal in the very fact; nor would he have had any occasion to have asked who he was (86). From such conceits as these some have drawn arguments to prove that all the pagan gods were taken from the Jewish traditions. Thus they pretend that Noah is the Saturn, and the Uranus of the pagans; and that the stories which are told of Jupiter's castrating his father Saturn, and Cronus castrating his father Uranus, are borrowed from this notion of Ham (87).

(81) Cassian. Collat. 8. c. 21. Pseudo-Beros. lib. 3. p. 80. apud Bayle Dict. Hist. Art. Cham. (82) Lib. 4. recognition. Apud Bochart. Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 1. (83) Ambros. de Noa & Arca, c. 21. apud Salian. tom. 1. p. 290. (84) Vid. Heid. vol. 1. p. 409. (85) Referente R. Levi in gen. cap. 9. apud Salian. tom. 1. p. 297. (86) Salianus, ibid. (87) Vid. Bayle Dict. Hist. Art. Cham. Rem. D.

Upon

of ſome magic charms (I); others again, that he committed inceſt with his father's wife (K); whilſt a fourth party accuſe him

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

Upon this occaſion we are tempted to introduce a paſſage out of the Count de Gabalis. He ſuppoſes, that Noah, after the deluge gave up his wife Veſta to the ſalamander Oromaſis, prince of the fiery ſubſtances, and perſuaded his three children to reſign alſo their three wives to the princes of the three other elements (88). Ham, adds that author, rebelled againſt the counſel of Noah, and could not reſiſt the charms of his wife; but his want of complaiſance marked all his black poſterity: the frightful complexion of the inhabitants of the torrid zone, is the puniſhment of the profane ardour of their father.—You believe, for inſtance, continues he, that the injury which Ham did his father, was the ſame as is literally expreſſed; but it was indeed a very different thing. Noah being come out of the ark, and ſeeing his wife Veſta's beauty rather improved by the familiarity which ſhe had with her gallant Oromaſis, his love for her returned upon him. Ham, fearing leſt his father might yet people the world with children blacker than his Æthiopians, took his opportunity one day, when the good old man had got his doſe of wine, and caſtrated him without mercy 89). We leave the reader to judge which notion is moſt agreeable to ſcripture, or becoming the gravity of a commentator, that of the Jews, or this of the Count de Gabalis.

(I) This imagination is taken from the ſpurious Beroſus: he ſays, that Noah, unable to bear the vicious courſes of Ham, who particularly addicted himſelf to magic, became odious to this ſon; and the rather becauſe he ſhewed more tenderneſs for his other ſons who were younger; and Ham finding an opportunity of revenge, did not let it ſlip: he graſped the genitals of his father, and muttered ſome words which rendered him impotent for ever after (90).

(K) This is the ſentiment of Mr. Von der Hart, profeſſor of the oriental languages in the univerſity of Helmſtad. He believes, that the injury which that patriarch received from Ham, conſiſted in the infamous temerity which this brutiſh ſon had to lie either with his own mother, or at leaſt with his ſtep-mother. He proves this explanation by divers places of ſcripture, where the phraſe to uncover the ſhame of a woman, ſignifies to lie with her. In the ſame places of ſcripture it is ſaid, that the nakedneſs, or ſhame of a woman, is the nakedneſs, or ſhame of her husband; and by conſequence, according to this way of expreſſion, to have ſeen the nakedneſs of Noah, is a modeſt phraſe, importing to have had to do with Noah's wife. This author ſuppoſes, 1. That Ham watched his time for compaſſing his deſign, when Noah was aſleep after his debauch. 2. That ſomebody having diſcovered the affair, went and gave the other two ſons of Noah notice of it.

(88) Entretiens ſur les ſciences ſecretes, p. 204. (89) Ibid. p. 206. (90) Pſeudo-Beroſus, lib. 3. p. 80.

3. That

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ 2648.

him of all sorts of uncleanness (A). This character is very conformable with what we meet with in the antients concerning Cronus, with whom, among many others (B) Ham is supposed to have been the same.

IF we may judge by the number of persons in the three generations of Ham's line mentioned by Moses [x], which exceeds the number of persons descended from both his brothers in the same degree, he must have had the most numerous issue of the three sons of Noah, and a greater part of the [x] Genes. x. 6.

3. That they, filled with indignation at the horrid affront which had been put upon the patriarch, repaired to the place as fast as they could, and having surprised their brother in the act, threw their garments over him and his accomplice. 4. That they gave an account to their father of all that they had seen. 5. That Noah, much enraged, ordered by his will, that Canaan, who was to be the issue of that incestuous commerce,, should be wholly deprived of the inheritance (91). These hypotheses, says Mr. Bayle (92), are learned and ingenious; but if once it be suffered to suppose, that the narrations of Moses are so disguised, it may be feared, that the same liberty will be taken with the history of the temptation, and of the fall of Adam, as some have dared to do.

(A) The reason of Noah's discarding Ham seems not to have been so much on account of the personal injuries he had received from him, as his other immoralities. That unhappy man, it is pretended, not only taught, that men should live as they did before the flood, and commit all sorts of incests, and something worse; but practised those abominable lessons himself. We choose to express them in the words of the author. At vero cum publice corrumperet mortale genus, asserens, & re ipsa exequens, congrediendum esse ut ante inundationem, cum matribus, sororibus, filiabus, masculis, brutis, & quovis alio genere, ab hoc ejectus a Jano piissimo & castimonia atque pudicitia refertissimo (93).

(B) The history of Cronus from Sanchoniatho; whose account of him is the most full, will be given in the next section. Marsham thinks Ham is to be found in profane history under the names of Hammon, Thamus, Thammuz, Adonis, Osiris, Baal, Belus, Jupiter, and Saturn the second (94). The same author says, the Hebrew chronology requires, that Ham should be the same with Menes, the first king of Egypt, whom almost all other authors make to be Mizraïm, his second son (95).

(91) See the book intitled, Ephemeridum Philologicarum tomus, in the Leipsic Journal for October 1693, p. 466. (92) Dict. Hist. Art. Cham. Rem. F. (93) Pseudo-Berosus, lib. 3. p. 80. (94) Canon. Chron. p. 23, 30, 31, 32, 33. (95) Ibid. p. 23.

earth

earth to his ſhare. But though much mention is made of the latter poſterity of Ham in the ſucceeding part of the Jewiſh hiſtory, Moſes has recorded nothing relating to his firſt deſcendants, beſides their names and ſome general circumſtances, excepting Canaan and Nimrod. Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

CANAAN (C) was the fourth ſon of Ham, if we may be allowed to judge by the order in which we find his name placed in ſcripture. Neither the length of his life, nor the time of his birth, are mentioned by Moſes: however, ſome will have it that he was born in the ark, and that, becauſe he was the fruit of an unſeaſonable incontinence, therefore he was a wicked man. It has been already obſerved, that the curſe given by Noah to Canaan was peculiar to this ſon of Ham, and does not ſeem to have extended to the reſt of his brethren. And indeed the prophecy of Noah, that Canaan ſhould be a ſervant of ſervants to his brethren, ſeems to have been wholly compleated in him. It was compleated with regard to Shem, not only in that a conſiderable part of the ſeven nations of the Canaanites were made ſlaves to the Iſraelites, when they took poſſeſſion of their land, as part of the remainder of them were afterwards enſlaved by Solomon [y]; but alſo by the ſubſequent expeditions of the Aſſyrians and Perſians, who were both deſcended from Shem, and under whom the Canaanites ſuffered ſubjection, as well as the Iſraelites; not to mention the conqueſt of part of Canaan by the Elamites, or Perſians, under Chedorlaomer [z], prior to them all. With regard to Japhet we find a completion of the prophecy, in the ſucceſſive conqueſts of the Greeks and Romans in Paleſtine and Phœnicia, where the Canaanites were ſettled, but eſpecially in the total ſubverſion of the Carthaginian power by the Romans; beſides ſome invaſions of the northern nations, as the poſterity of Thogarma, and Magog, wherein many of them probably were carried away captive. Of Canaan.

IT is believed that Canaan lived and died (D) in the country

[y] 2 Chron. viii. 7, 8, 9. [z] Geneſ. xiv. 4, 7, 8, &c.

(C) The Hebrew word is כנען, and not pronounced as we commonly do Canaan, making Ca the firſt ſyllable, but Chenaan, or rather Chnaan, the Shevah joining the Ch and N into one ſyllable, and ſo the Jews pronounce it; which reading brings the word nearer the Chna of Sanchoniatho, and Stephanus (96): it ſignifies a merchant or trader, as the Canaanites, or Phœnicians were.

(D) The Mohammedans are not uniform in their opinions concerning Canaan. Some agreeing with the account given of him in

(96) De Urbib. in voce Χνὰ.

ſcripture,

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

try called after his name; where formerly they shewed his tomb, which was twenty five foot long, in a cave of the mountain of the Leopards, not far from Tripolis [illegible].

CANAAN seems to have been known to the antient heathens. Sanchoniatho expressly says, Chna was the first Phœnician, or the first who was called a Phœnician [b]. The scripture mentions nothing particular with respect to any of his sons; but the transactions of the Israelites, with their descendants, make up a great part of the Jewish history, and will be treated of in their proper place.

Of Nimrod.

NIMROD was the sixth son of Cush (E), and in all appearance much younger than any of his brothers; for Moses mentions the sons of Raamah, his fourth brother, before he speaks of him. What the sacred historian says of him is short, and yet he says more of him than of any other of the posterity of Noah, till he comes to Abraham. He tells us, that Nimrod began to be a mighty one in the earth; that he was a mighty hunter before the LORD, even to a proverb; and that the beginning of his kingdom was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh in the land of Shinaar [c].

FROM this account a great idea hath been conceived of his strength and valour. Some represent him as a giant [d] (F); all consider him as a great warriour. It is generally thought that by the words a mighty hunter, is to be understood that he was a great tyrant; but some of the Rabbins [e] interpret those words favourably, saying, that Nimrod was qualified by a peculiar dexterity and strength for the chase, and that he offered to GOD the game which he took; and several of the moderns are of the opinion, that this passage is not to be un-scripture, and others affirming, that he was born before the flood, and went not into the ark, but was drowned in the deluge as hath been already observed (97).

[a] See CALMET, Dict. de la Bibl. Art. Canaan. [b] Apud EUSEB. præp. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 10. p. 39. [c] Gen. x. 8, 9, 10. [d] EUTYCH. Annal. p. 63. ABU'LFARAG. p. 12. [e] ABEN EZRA, KIMHI. See also GROT.

(E) Some Mohammedan authors confound the genealogies of the sons of Noah at a strange rate. One of them says, that Nimrod was the son of Canaan, and brother of Cush, whom the Persians surname Fil'dendan, that is, the elephants tooth (98).

(F) The Hebrew word גבר Gibbor. which our version renders a mighty one, is by the Septuagint translated a giant (99).

(97) See chap 1. sect 1. (98) The author of Lobb al Tawarikh, apud D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. Art. Nemrod. p. 668. (99) Gen. x. 8.

derstand

derſtood of his tyrannical oppreſſions, or of hunting of men, but of beaſts [f] (G). It muſt be owned, that the phraſe, before the LORD, may be taken in a favourable ſenſe, and as a commendation of a perſon's good qualities; but, in this place, the generality of expoſitors underſtand it otherwiſe (H). Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

HUNTING muſt have been one of the moſt uſeful employments in the times juſt after the diſperſion, when all countries were over-run with wild beaſts, of which it was neceſſary they ſhould be cleared, in order to make them habitable; and therefore nothing ſeemed more proper to procure a man eſteem and honour in thoſe ages, than his being an expert hunter, as Nimrod probably was. By that exercile we are told the antient Perſians fitted their kings for war and government [g]; and hunting is ſtill, in many countries, conſidered as one part of a royal education.

THERE is nothing in the ſhort hiſtory of Nimrod which carries the leaſt air of reproach, except his name, which ſignifies a rebel (I); and that is the circumſtance which ſeems to [f] BOCHART. Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 12. PERIZON. Orig. Bab. cap. 12. p. 230. [g] Vid. XENOPH. Cyropæd. lib. 1.

(G) A writer of great authority in the Eaſt has a ſingular notion, that Nimrod by hunting provided food for the builders of Babel (100).

(H) The phraſe, before the LORD, ſeems to be in itſelf perfectly indifferent, and made uſe of only by way of exaggeration; however, it being often introduced in ſcripture where wicked actions are mentioned, therefore inſtead of before the LORD, St. Auſtin will have it to be rendered againſt the LORD (1) in which he is followed by ſeveral (2). The Jeruſalem Targum, and that of Ben Uzziel, both take this character of Nimrod in an ill ſenſe.

(I) This name is generally derived from מָרַד marad to rebel; but if a compoſition may be allowed of, a more favourable etymology, and more agreeable to Nimrod's occupation, might be offered from נָמֵר Namer a leopard, which may by a metonymy denote wild beaſts in general, and רָדַד radad to fell or beat down, or רָדָה radah to ſubdue or take. The Arabs make Nemrud, the plural of which is Nemâredah, the ſame with מֹרֵד mârad, a rebel. However, a certain Perſian author, who makes Nimrod the ſame with Cay Caus, a king of the ſecond dynaſty of Perſia, gives the name a Perſian derivation, as if it was Nemûrd, that is, immortal; which appellation, he ſays, was given to him on account of his long reign

(100) Abu'lfarag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 12. (1) De civit Dei, lib. 16. cap 4. (2) Joh. Sariſbur. Policrat l. 1. p. 13, & l 8. p. 559. Nic. Abram, Pharus V. T. lib. 5. cap. 5. § 16.

of

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

to have occasioned the injurious opinions, which have been entertained of him in all ages. Commentators being prepossessed in general, that the curse of Noah fell upon the posterity of Ham; and finding this prince stigmatized by his name, have interpreted every passage relating to him to his disadvantage. They represent him as a rebel against GOD, in persuading the descendants of Noah to disobey the divine command to disperse, and in setting them to build the tower of Babel, with an impious design of scaling heaven (K). They brand him as an ambitious usurper, and an insolent oppressor; and make him the author of the adoration of of above 150 years (3). If the first of the three significations be the right, the name must have been given him by his enemies, not by his subjects (4). The Greeks write the name Nembrod and Nebrodes.

(K) An Arab author says, that Nimrod built this tower, that he might ascend to heaven to see Abraham's GOD, who had delivered him from the fiery furnace into which that tyrant had cast him. They worked at this building three years, and when Nimrod had gotton on the top of it, he wondered to see the heaven as far from him as it was before; but his astonishment encreased, when this tower and another, which had been built for the same purpose, were successively overthrown. Still persisting in his design, he would be carried to heaven in a chest, born by four monstrous birds; but after wandering for some time through the air, he fell down on a mountain with such a force that made it shake, to which, as this writer imagines, alludes that passage in the Korân; though the stratagems of the impious make the mountains tremble (5).

Nimrod, by this disappointment, finding he could not make war with GOD in person, instead of acknowledging his power, proceeded to persecute those who adored any besides himself; but GOD, by dividing Nimrod's subjects, and confounding their language, deprived him of the greater part of his people, and plagued those who continued to adhere to him by a cloud of gnats, which destroyed almost all of them.

Another author adds, that one of those gnats having entered into the nostril, or ear of Nimrod, penetrated to one of the membranes of his brain, where, growing bigger every day, it gave him such intolerable pain, that he was obliged to cause his head to be beaten with a mallet, in order to procure some ease; and that he suffered this torture for the space of four hundred years, GOD being willing to punish by one of the smallest of his creatures, him, who insolently boasted himself to be the lord of all (6).

(3) The author of Mesutih al Olûm, apud D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. Art. Nemrod. (4) Vid. Hyde de rel. vet. Persar. p. 35. (5) Cap. 14. v. 46. (6) Vid. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. Art. Nemrod.

fire

fire (L), of idolatrous worſhip given to men, and the firſt perſecutor on the ſcore of religion (M). On the other hand, ſome account him a virtuous prince, and ſo far from adviſing the building of Babel, that they ſay, he left the country and went into Aſſyria, becauſe he would not give his conſent to it (N). Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

NIMROD is generally thought to have been the firſt king after the flood (O); though ſome authors ſuppoſing a plantation, or diſperſion prior to that of Babel, have made kings in ſeveral countries before him. Mizraïm is ſuppoſed by many who contend for the antiquity of the Egyptian monarchy, to have began his reign a good while earlier than Nimrod [i]; and others, from the uniformity of the languages ſpoken in Aſſyria, Babylonia, Syria, and Canaan, affirm thoſe countries to have been peopled before the confuſion of tongues [k].

THE four cities (P) Moſes gives to Nimrod, made a large kingdom in thoſe early times, when few kings had more than

[i] Vid. MARSH. Chron. Can. p. 18, 23. [k] HORNIUS ad Sulpit. Sever. p. 21.

(L) The orientals make Nimrod the author of the ſect of the Magi, or worſhippers of fire; they tell us, that accidentally ſeeing fire riſe out of the earth at a great diſtance from him in the eaſt, he worſhipped it, and appointed one Andeſhan to attend the fire there, and throw frankincenſe into it (7).

(M) The perſon perſecuted by Nimrod, according to ſeveral Jewiſh, Chriſtian and Mohammedan authors, was Abraham, who by the Hebrew chronology might have been his contemporary.

(N) Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes the paſſage (8) thus; Nimrod going out of that land reigned in Aſſyria, becauſe he would not come into the meaſures of thoſe who were concerned in the diviſion, therefore GOD gave him another country, where he built four other cities, viz. Nineveh, Platiathkartha, Parioth, and Telaſar.

(O) The Eaſtern writers make him not only the firſt king of Babel, but of all the world; and ſay, he was the firſt who wore a crown, the model of which he took from the figure of one he had ſeen in the ſky; for being pleaſed with the appearance, he ſent immediately for an artiſt, and had a crown of gold caſt in the ſame form, which he put upon his head; from whence his ſubjects took occaſion to ſay, that it came down to him from heaven (9).

(P) We might be able to make ſome judgment concerning the extent of the firſt Babyloniſh kingdom, could we fix the ſituations

(7) Vid. Eutych. Annales, p. 63, 64. Ebn Amîd, p. 29.
(8) Gen. x. 11. (9) Ebn Amîd, p. 29. Eutych. Annal. p. 63.

of

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

than one: only it must be observed, that possessions might at first have been large, and afterwards divided into several parcels; and Nimrod being the leader of a nation, we may suppose his subjects settled within those limits. Whether he became possessed of those cities by conquest, or otherwise, does not appear: it is most probable, he did not build Babel, all the posterity of Noah seeming to have been equally concerned in that affair; nor does it appear, that he built the other three, though the founding of them and many more, with of these four cities: but this is very difficult; all of them having been long since destroyed, and authors differing so much in opinions about them. There are even two traditions with regard to the ruins of Babel, some placing them at Felugia, a village on the Euphrates, about thirty six miles to the south-west of Baghdâd, on the Tigris; others, about the same distance from Felugia southward, on the first of those rivers: how much more uncertain then must be the situation of the rest, which were towns not so famous, and whose ruins, if any remain, are seldom inquired after.

According to the Eastern authors, Erech, or Arach, is Hadas or Edessa (10), called by the Syrians Urhoi, by the Arabs Roha, and by the inhabitants Orfa; Accad, or Akhar as some write it, is Nisibin; and Calneh, Calanne, or Calya, is Ctesiphon, or Medaïn (11); and if they are not mistaken, the distances of these cities from each other will give Nimrod's kingdom a great extent, as do some traditions concerning him (12): but the Asiatics, in many things relating to their own antiquities, are not to be relied on more than the Europeans. We are of opinion, the Babylonian kingdom, under Nimrod, was much more limited, and rather agree with those who believe Erech to have been a city of Chaldea, which from thence took its present Arabic name of Erâk (13). This seems to be the Arecca of Ptolemy, and Arecha of Marcellinus, who places it in Susiana (14). Neither can Erec be Urhoi, or Edessa, in the opinion of those who hold Ur of the Chaldees and Urhoi to be the same; for Erec and Ur are distinguished in scripture as two different cities. Calne we admit to be Ctesiphon, or Medain, nearer either of the aforesaid ruins of Babel than is Baghdâd; and as for Accad, we may suppose it to have been some city in the neighbourhood of the other three, long since ruined, and the memory of it lost: and thus will this early monarchy be reduced to such dimensions, as, in all probability, the first could not exceed.

(10) Vid. Targum Jonathanis & Hierosol. (11) Ephrem Syrus Comment. in Genes. ubi de Nimrod. apud Assemani Bibl. Orient. tom. 1. p 26. Abu'lfarag. p. 18. (12) See Thevenot's Trav. Part II. Book 1. chap. 9 & 13 (13) Hyde in notis ad Peritsol. Itinera Mundi, p. 65. D'Herbelot Biblioth. Orient. Art. Erac. (14) Lib. 23.

other

other works, are attributed to him (Q). It may ſeem alſo a little ſtrange, that Nimrod ſhould be preferred to the regal dignity, and enjoy the moſt cultivated part of the earth then known, rather than any other of the elder chiefs, or heads of nations, even of the branch of Ham. Perhaps it was conferred on him for his dexterity in hunting; or, it may be, he did not aſſume the title of king till after his father Cuſh's death, who might have been ſettled there before him (R), and left him the ſovereignty; but we incline to think, that he ſeized Shinaar from the deſcendants of Shem, driving out Aſhur, who from thence went and founded Nineveh, and other cities in Aſſyria.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

THE ſcripture does not inform us when Nimrod began his reign (S). Some [1] date it before the diſperſion; but ſuch a conjecture does not ſeem to ſuit with the Moſaical hiſtory: for before the diſperſion we read of no city but Babel, nor could there well be more while all mankind were yet in a

[1] Vid. NIC. ABRAM, Pharus V. T. lib. 5. § 7.

(Q) Abu'lfarag ſays Nimrod built three of theſe cities, mentioned by Moſes, viz. Erech, Accad, and Calya (14), or Calne. Others aſcribe to him the building of Babel, Nineveh, Reſen, and ſeveral other cities, among which was Adherbijân (15), in the Perſian province of the ſame name. An Arab author mentions a city called Takharât, or Takharân Sâr, where Nimrod coined money (16). Others write, that he dug ſeveral rivers in Erâk, derived from Euphrates, of which that of Cutha, in the way [from Babel] to Cufah was one (17).

(R) A Perſian author of great authority affirms, that Cuſh, or Cûtha was king of the territory of Babel, and reſided in Erak; and attributes to him the making of the river Cutha (18). Dr. Hyde places the original ſeat of Cuſh in the ſame country, which he calls the moſt antient Cûſh (19); and ſays, that his poſterity removing into Arabia, it thence took the name of Cûſh alſo (20) body together; but when Nimrod assumed the regal title, there seem to have been other cities built, which shews it was a good while after the dispersion. We have placed the beginning of his reign thirty years from that event, that is in the year of the flood 431, and in all likelihood it should be placed rather later than earlier.

(S) The Arabs ſay, that Nimrod reigned in al Sowâd, that is, the black country; for ſo they call Irak Arabi, from the black tents of the Scenite Arabs ſcattered over the province (21). They ſuppoſe, his father Cuſh reſided at Erac, in the province of Babel (22); though Babel is generally thought, by chriſtian authors, to have been the regal ſeat of Nimrod.

(14) Abu'lfarag. Hiſt. Dyn. p. 18. (15) Eutych. Annal. p. 64. (16) Safioddin. apud Hyde de rel. vet. Perſ. p. 74. (17) AHMED EBN YUSEF, apud Hyde, ibid. p. 71, 73. (18) Al Tabari in cap. de Morte Saræ apud Hyde de rel. vet. Perſ. p. 40. (19) Hyde ibid. p. 38. (20) Id. ibid. p. 37. (21) Abu Mohammed Muſtafa apud Hyde de rel. vet. Perſ. p. 42, 43. (22) Vid. Hyde ibid. p. 40.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

Year before Christ, 2567.

AUTHORS have taken a great deal of pains to find Nimrod in prophane history; some have imagined him to be the same with Belus [m], the founder of the Babylonish empire; others, with Ninus [n], the founder of the Assyrian (T); some think him the same with Evechous, the first Chaldean king after the deluge [o]; and a fourth sort perceive a great resemblance between him and Bacchus, both in actions and name [p]. Some of the Mohammedan writers suppose Nimrod to have been Zohak, a Persian king of the first dynasty [q]; others Cay, Câus, the second king of the second race [r]; and some of the Jews say he is the same with Amraphel, the king of Shinaar, in Moses [s]: but there is no certainty in these conjectures, nor have we any knowledge of his immediate successors (U).

THE scripture mentions nothing as to the death of Nimrod; but authors have taken care that such an essential circumstance in his history should not be wanting. Some of the

[m] PETAV. Doct. temp. l. 13. p. 283. [n] HYDE de rel. vet. Pers. p. 43, 44. [o] SYNCELL. p. 90. [p] Vid. CALMET Dict. de la Bible Art. Nemrod. BEDFORD Script. Chronol. p. 265, 266. [q] TARIKH MONTAKHAB apud D'Herbelot Art. Nimrod & Nouh. [r] See before, p. 269, in the notes. [s] BEN UZZIEL. YARHI. R. DAV. GANZ in Zemach David.

(T) Many have confounded the Babylonian and the Assyrian empire together, by mistaking the sense of the text (23), as if both of them had been founded by Nimrod; but this point will be discussed hereafter, when we come to speak of the foundation of the Assyrian empire.

(U) Some christian and Mohammedan historians call the most antient kings of the Babylonians, who succeeded Nimrod, Nimâredah, that is, Nimrods (24). Some of the latter say, he reigned in al Sowâd 400 years; and that he was succeeded by a prince of the same family, called Nabat Ebn Köûd, who ruled 100 years (25): and some of the former tell us, that Bokhtansar [or rather Bakht Nasar, which is the name the orientals give to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon] was of his race (26).

(23) Gen x. 11. (24) Vid. D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. Art. Nemrod. (25) Abu Mohammed Mustafa apud Hyde de rel. vet. Pers. p. 42, 43. (26) Abu'lfarag. Hist. Dyn. p. 72.

Rabbins

Rabbins pretend, he was ſlain by Eſau (W), whom they make his contemporary. There is a tradition, that he was killed by the fall of the tower of Babel, which was overthrown by tempeſtuous winds while Nimrod was in it [t]. Others ſay, that as he led an army againſt Abraham, GOD ſent a ſquadron of gnats, which deſtroyed moſt of them; and particularly Nimrod, whoſe brain was pierced by one of thoſe inſects [u]. Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt 2648.

Of Shem and his poſterity to Abraham.

WE now come to the hiſtory of Shem and his poſterity, which for convenience we have placed laſt, though he was the ſecond ſon of Noah by birth, and by prerogative the eldeſt, the right of primogeniture ſeeming to have been lodged in him.

THE poſterity of Shem are twice recited by Moſes. In the firſt place [v] he only mentions the names of ſuch of his deſcendants as were concerned in the firſt diſperſions. In the other [w], he deduces the genealogy in the line of Arphaxad down to Abraham. But the ſacred writer having been more brief in the hiſtory of theſe patriarchs, than in that of the branch of Ham, relating nothing farther of any of them than their ages, and the year of their lives wherein they begot their ſons (from whence we are enabled to collect the chronology of this period, and no more), for the reſt we muſt have recourſe to the traditions, and conjectures of the Jewiſh and chriſtian writers, where we ſhall not want for matter.

SHEM was born ninety eight years before the flood; for two years after it, at the birth of Arphaxad, he was one hundred years old [x]. We ſhall have given the reader all that is to be found in ſcripture concerning this patriarch after the deluge, when we have acquainted him, that he aſſiſted his brother Japhet in covering the nakedneſs of their father [y], and ſhared in his bleſſing for ſo doing: Bleſſed be the GOD of Shem, ſaid Noah, and Canaan ſhall be his ſervant [z].

[t] ABU'LFARAG. Hiſt. Dyn. p. 12. [u] HYDE de rel. vet. Perſ. p. 74. See before, p. 270. in the notes. [v] Gen. x. 21. [w] Gen. xi. 10. [x] Ibid. [y] Gen. ix. 23. [z] Gen. ix. 26.

(W) They tell the following ſtory, as the occaſion of this accident: that the coat which GOD made Adam, was with his body in the ark; and that when Noah and his ſons quitted that veſſel, Ham took it, by which means it afterwards fell to Nimrod, who putting it on, all kinds of beaſts and birds came and fell down before him, as thinking him to excel in ſtrength, and made him king over them, according to the text, where he is ſaid to be a mighty hunter before the LORD. Eſau ſeeing the coat upon Nimrod, conceived ſo ſtrong a deſire for it, that he ſlew him, and ſtripped him of it (27).

(27) Eliezer Pirke, cap. 24.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

IT hath already been observed in what manner this prophesy was accomplished: but there is one thing peculiar in these words of Noah, which ought to be taken notice of; and that is, that he blesseth the GOD of Shem, and says nothing of that kind with regard to Japhet; by which circumstance is plainly intimated, that the knowledge and worship of the true GOD was to be found in the branch of Shem; and that though Japhet himself did at that time believe in the true GOD, yet his posterity should quickly fall away from the faith, and worship such gods as did not deserve to be blessed; and therefore Noah, who foresaw what would happen, suppressed that short doxology, in giving his blessing to Japhet: however this prophesy seems to have no farther prospect than till the coming of the Messiah in the line of Shem, which was the prime prerogative of that patriarch; for since that time most of Japhet's posterity have received the knowledge of the true GOD.

THE Jews suppose the tradition of theological truths to have passed from Noah to Shem, who communicated them to his children, by which means the true religion was preserved in the world. The Rabbins pretend, that Shem was entrusted with the will of Noah, whereby he divided the earth among his three sons; that he went to school to Methuselah for threescore and eighteen years, and kept one himself, after the deluge, upon mount Tabor, where he taught morality; that he instructed Abraham in the ceremonies relating to sacrifices, which that patriarch afterwards observed. They say farther, that GOD gave him the spirit of prophesy a hundred years after the flood, and that he discharged the function of a prophet for the space of four hundred years, without reaping much fruit of his labour, mankind being become greatly corrupted. They attribue also to him the invention of astronomy, together with the manner of computing by months and years [a], and of intercalating the former, having learned these secrets from Noah [b]. Those who confound Shem with Melchizedec (X), ascribe to him the 109th Psalm, and a treatise

[a] SCIP. SGAMBAT. Archiv. Vet. Test. lib. 1. p. 165. apud CALMET. Dict. de la Bible Art. Sem. [b] ELIEZER Pirke, c. 8.

(X) The Jews, followed by many christian authors antient and modern, are of this opinion, which has nothing to countenance it in scripture: nor is it likely so eminent a patriarch would divest himself, as it were, of the sovereignty which he held over his own branch, to settle in Canaan, and become a petty prince within the dominions a treatiſe of phyſic [c] (Y). Some make him to have been the firſt king in the world, and to have founded three cities, one in each of the three parts of the earth known to the antients (Z). Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

THE Eaſtern writers ſay, that Shem, in purſuance of the directions of Adam and Noah [d], together with Melchizedec, the ſon of Phaleg, took Adam's body out of the ark, and being conducted by an angel, carried it to mount Calvary, where they buried it: after which Shem conſtituting Melchizedec the prieſt of GOD, left him behind to attend at the ſepulchre; and pretended on his return that he died by the way, and was buried [e]. Some ſay, Shem interred there no more than the ſkull of Adam, which had been given him by Noah [f].

THOSE who ſeek to reconcile the heathen mythology with the Moſaic hiſtory, are greatly at a loſs to find among the gods, or heroes, one who in name or character hath any redominions of another, who was to be his ſervant (28), namely Ham. The learned, who were of this opinion, have been led into it by adhering too ſtrictly to the Hebrew computation (29), and perhaps looking on the tradition of the Jews as ſome authority (30). Yet it is ſince the time of Joſephus, who ſpeaks of Melchizedec only as a Canaaniti/h king (31), that they have made him the ſame with Shem; which ſeems to have been a notion altogether unknown to St. Paul (32). The oriental chriſtians make Melchizedec the ſon of Phaleg (33); for the Septuagint chronology, which is generally received among them, will not allow him to be the ſame with Shem. A learned Syrian author, who holds a middle opinion between them and the Jews, will have Melchizedec to be the ſon of this laſt mentioned patriarch (34).

[c] SCIP. SGAMBAT. Archiv. V. T. lib. 1. 165. [d] See before, p. 161, in the notes. [e] EBN AMÎD, p. 13. EUTYCH. Annal. p. 50. [f] See before, p. 161, in the notes.

(Y) The Hebrew manuſcript of this book, we are told, is to be found in the Elector of Bavaria's library (35).

(Z) Theſe three cities are Sebta [or Ceuta] a maritime town in Africa [on the coaſt of Barbary], Salernum in Italy, and Salem in Judea (36). Others ſay, he only laid the foundations of this laſt, ſuppoſing it to be Jeruſalem (37).

(28) Gen. ix. 26. (29) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 47. (30) Id. ibid. p. 174. (31) Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 11. (32) Heb. vii. 2. (33) Ebn Amid p. 13. Eutych. Annal. p. 50. (34) Abu'lfarag, Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 10. (35) Calmet Dict. de la Bible Art. Sem. (36) Vid. Scip. Sgambat. Arch. Vet. Teſt. l. 1. p. 105. (37) Shalſh. Hakk. p. 93. a.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

ſemblance to Shem; and therefore are reduced to that ridiculous ſhift of making him the god of hell (A).

SHEM having lived 502 years after the flood, died at the age of 600. He left five ſons, Elam, Aſhur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram [g]. The more moderate Perſian hiſtorians ſay, their firſt king Cayumarras was a ſon of Shem [h], meaning probably Elam, whom Moſes makes the founder of that nation.

THE ſcripture has recorded no one action of any of thoſe ſons of Shem, except Aſhur; and the paſſage relating to him is a very material one, as it fixes the true time of the foundation of the Aſſyrian kingdom. This remarkable fact is related by Moſes in theſe words; out of that land [namely Shinaar] went forth Aſhur, and builded Nineveh and the city Rehoboth, and Calah [i], and Reſen between Nineveh and Calah; the ſame is a great city [k]. We are ſenſible this text is by many applied otherwiſe, and rendered according to the marginal reading of our tranſlation, He went out into Aſſyria; as if Nimrod was the perſon ſpoken of; but we ſhall ſhew hereafter, that ſuch a ſenſe puts a manifeſt force upon the words. As to the epoch of this Aſſyrian kingdom, we ſuppoſe, it might have been founded about the ſame time with that of Babel, that is, 30 years after the diſperſion, in the year of the flood 431.

Year before Chriſt, 2567.

As to the ſituation of the cities built by Aſhur, in order to determine the extent of this firſt Aſſyrian kingdom, we find ourſelves more at a loſs than we were with regard to thoſe which compoſed the kingdom of Babel. However, we

[g] Gen. x. 22. [h] Vid. D'HERBELOT Bibl. Orient. Art. Sam.
[i] Gen. x. 11. [k] Ib. ver. 12.

(A) As thoſe authors, who fancy a reſemblance between Saturn and Noah, have on account of the ſuppoſed ſimilitude of names, made Ham Jupiter, and Japhet Neptune, Shem muſt of conſequence be Pluto (38); but ſuch an hypotheſis, we think, is not for the honour of that patriarch, any more than another, which ſuppoſes him to be Typhon; we ſhould have been glad therefore to have known what reaſons Calmet had to believe, that prophane hiſtorians intend Shem by Typhon, whom he owns to have been a famous giant, or maleficent deity (39); and indeed was had in great deteſtation by the Egyptians, as a monſter of wickedneſs, having embroiled the nation in a rebellious war, and murdered his brother Oſiris.

(38) Vid. Bochart. Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 1. (39) See his Dict. de la Bible Art. Sem.

may

may venture to draw this inference, that as the number of cities, of which each monarchy conſiſted, was equal, ſo it is probable their dimenſions were much the ſame; and that the other three cities lay at no great diſtance from Nineveh, whoſe ſituation has been in ſome meaſure preſerved by tradition (B).

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

ARPHAXAD, or as the Maſoretes read the name Arpachſhad, the third ſon of Shem, had one advantage above the reſt of his brethren, namely, of having the patriarchal line continued through him. Many derive the name, as well as the nation

(B) Nineveh is ſuppoſed to have ſtood on the eaſt ſide of the Dijlat or Tigris, oppoſite to Moſul; at leaſt, the tradition of the country will have it ſo: but there are no ruins to be ſeen there, as there are at old Babel (40). Though a certain traveller pretends to have diſcovered and thoroughly viewed ſome remains, by which he judged the city to have been built in form of a long ſquare, in length 150 furlongs, and in breadth 90; which at eight furlongs to an Italian mile, make threeſcore miles in compaſs (41).

The city Reboboth, is by many ſuppoſed to be Reheboth on the Euphrates, the ſame probably with that called Rahabat Malek, not many miles below the place where the Khabûr falls into the Euphrates (42); and Reſen to be the Reſania of the antients in Meſopotamia, ſtill in being, and called Ras alain, that is, the head of the fountain, on account of the many ſprings riſing thereabouts; and among the reſt that of the Khabûr: It is alſo called Ain Wardah. But others endeavour to find Reboboth and Reſen nearer Nineveh, and alſo object, that they cannot be Rahabat and Ras alain, becauſe theſe laſt are not in Aſſyria, which lies to the eaſt of Tigris. They ſuppoſe, that Reboboth is the ſame with the Birtha of Ptolemy, or Virtha of Ammianus Marcellinus (43), ſituate at the mouth of the river Lycus, from which the preſent ruins of Nineveh are not many miles diſtant to the north; and the reaſon they give is, becauſe Birtha ſignifies in the Chaldee the ſame which Reboboth does in the Hebrew, that is, ſtreets. And as a confirmation that theſe names are the ſame, Ptolemy alſo places a Birtha on the Euphrates, about the place where we have ſuppoſed the other Reboboth to have ſtood; nor does his placing it above the confluence of the Chabûr and Euphrates, inſtead of below it, lay any good objection in the way, ſince Ptolemy is full of ſuch faults. It may rather be objected, that Moſes ſeems to have given all the cities he mentions the names they went by in the country where they ſtood, as near as the Hebrew orthography would allow; but in ſuch doubtful caſes, we muſt al-

(40) See Thevenot's Travels, part 2. chap. 11. p. 52. Rauwolf's Travels, part 2. chap. 9. p. 188. (41) See the Preacher's Travels, p. 89. (42) Geog. Nub. Clim. 4. part 6. p. 199. (43) Lib. 20.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648

nation of the Chaſdim, or Chaldeans from Arphaxad (C), which ways make allowances; ſo that Birtha, or Virtha may ſtand for Rehoboth, ſince we cannot find a more likely place.

Calah, the next city, is ſuppoſed to be the Calach, ſituate about the ſprings of the river Lycus (44), mentioned by Strabo as the capital of a province called Calachene, which ſeems to be the ſame with Ptolemy's Calacine, above Adiabene towards mount Niphates. Bochart thinks, it is the ſame with Halah, whither the Iſraelites were carried captives (45); the Heth being ſometimes changed into the Kaf, of which that author produces ſome inſtances (46).

Could we be ſure of being right as to the ſituation of Calah, that of Reſen would be found of courſe; for Moſes ſays it lay between it and Nineveh, which is enough for our purpoſe, without ſuppoſing it to be the Lariſſa of Xenophon, according to whoſe deſcription it was a great city (47), as Reſen is likewiſe ſaid to have been. The difference of the names may be eaſily accounted for, from the uſage of the Greeks; who either could not, or would not write exotic names properly. But we muſt own Lariſſa ſeems to lie too much out of the way to be Reſen, for it ſtood on the Tigris to the ſouth of Nineveh; whereas it ſhould rather have been ſituate to the northward of that city, and at a diſtance from the river, to lie in the way between Nineveh and Calah. We may, however, ſuppoſe Reſen to have been ſome city in the neighbourhood of thoſe other two, long ſince deſtroyed.

(C) Some Rabbins are of this opinion (48). And if the authority of Joſephus be of any weight, he affirms the ſame: Arphaxad, ſays he, gave name to the Arphaxadæans, at preſent called Chaldeans, whoſe prince he was (49). He certainly does not mean, as Dr. Wells obſerves (50), that the name Chaldeans is derived directly from the name Arphaxad; but perhaps he meant, that the true name Chaſdim is derived thence, that is to ſay from כשׂד, the three laſt letters of Arpachſhad (51); and from Chaſdim the Greeks have made Chaldæi inſtead of Chaſdæi, by changing the ſ into l. And this opinion is more probable, becauſe the Chaldeans were not only called Khiſdam (52) before Cheſed was born (53) but appear to have been a nation when Abraham came out of Ur of the Khaſdim (54); at which time Cheſed was neither old, or conſiderable enough to have built towns and founded a nation. And this argument is ſo cogent, that Bochart and others, at the ſame time that they treat this etymology as a chimæra, are obliged to fly to the common ſubterfuge on this occaſion, and ſay, that the city of Ur is called Ur of the

(44) Geog. lib. 11. (45) 2 Kings xvii. 6, and xviii. 11. (46) Vid. Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 22. (47) Anabas, lib. 3. (48) Gedal. in Shalſhel Hakkab, p. 93. (49) Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 7. (50) Geog. of the Old Teſt. Vol. I. p. 187. (51) Vid. Lightfoot Oper. vol. I. p. 13. (52) Gen. xv. 7. (53) Gen. xxii. 22. (54) Gen. xi. 31 which opinion ſeems more reaſonable than that which makes Cheſed, the ſon of Nahor, Abraham's brother, to be the founder of them; though poſſibly the Chaſdim had another original; for nothing is mentioned in ſcripture concerning it. Some Mohammedan authors make Arphaxad both a prophet and an apoſtle, and lodge the chief ſovereignty over the nations of the world in his deſcendants (D). Arphaxad was born in the hundredth year of his father, two years after the flood[l]; and having begat the ſucceeding patriarch in the 135th year of his age[m], died after he had lived in all 438 years[n]; which is the ſum of what the ſcripture relates concerning him, though writers have added ſeveral conjectures of their own (E).

Chaldee

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

Year before Chriſt, 2996.

WHO

[l] Gen. xi. 10. [m] Ibid. v. 12. [n] Ibid. v. 13.

Chaldees by a prolepſis (55), which will hardly ſerve in this caſe for the reaſons already alledged. After all, nothing can be determined as to this point, nor will it be repugnant to ſcripture to deny the derivation of the name of Khaſdim either from Arphaxad or Cheſed.

Some compound Arphaxad's name of רפא כשד, Rafa Khaſhed, that is, the healer or prelate of Chaldea; ſuppoſing it to have been given to Cainan as a name of dignity (56.)

(D) According to a curious though fabulous Mohammedan tradition, aſcribed to Ebn Abbâs, Shem being called by Noah, at day-break, to aſſiſt at morning-prayer, aroſe and awakened his children; of whom only Arphaxad got up and attended his father to Noah; who gave them his benediction and prayed for them: whereupon GOD revealed to him, that the gift of propheſy, together with the apoſtleſhip, ſhould be granted to the children of Shem, and in an eſpecial manner to the family of Arphaxad his eldeſt ſon; which gift ſhould neither be taken from him, nor transferred to any other; and that the ſame family ſhould alſo enjoy the prerogative of ſovereignty and empire over the other nations which ſhould be divided ſucceſſively between the Perſians, the Greeks, the Romans, and the Arabs, to the end of the world (57).

(E) A certain author makes him one of the Rephaim, (in conſequence of the etymology he has given of his name) ſuppoſing them to have been believers, and ſent by Noah to recal mankind to the worſhip of GOD; wherefore they were named Rephaim, that is, healers, and reſtorers, to wit, of ſouls. He farther advances, upon no better grounds, that Cainan, or Arphaxad (whom he makes to be the ſame) was the founder of the empire of China; that the ſect of the Bonzes was introduced into Japan by him, or his diſ-

(55) Vid. Phaleg. lib. 2 c. 4. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. tom. I. p. 458. § 43. (56) Vid. Bolduc de Eccleſia ant legem, lib. 2. cap. 2. (57) See D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. Art. Noub, p. 677.

ciples;

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

WHO this ſon ſo begotten by Arphaxad was, has occaſioned no ſmall diſpute among the learned: according to the Hebrew and the Samaritan, Salah was his ſon; but in the Septuagint verſion we find Cainan put in between the two, as the ſon of the firſt, and father of the latter. This variation not only adds another link to the chain of ſucceſſion, but alters the chronology of this period, making that of the Septuagint to exceed the Samaritan by one hundred and thirty years, the age fixed for Cainan to have begotten his ſon. Thoſe who adhere to the Septuagint, draw their chief argument from St. Luke's [o] mentioning Cainan in his genealogy of CHRIST, which has been already anſwered [p] (F). However, the Septuagint ciples; and that the Brachmans took their riſe in Chaldea ſoon after the arrival of that patriarch in the country of Etham, (where he was ſent with a colony by Noah), about the year of the deluge 68, the chief of which colony was called Yarcha, which in the Hebrew is Rapha, that is, a curator or healer (58).

[o] Luke iii. 36. [p] Pag. 249.

(F) To the arguments already produced by us on this head (59) may be added; 1. That Cainan was unknown to Onkelos the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Philo and Joſephus, and to the Syriac, Perſian, and Arab tranſlators, as well as to the author of the Vulgat. Beroſus alſo placing Abraham in the tenth generation after the flood (60), leaves no room for Cainan. Theophilus Antiochenus, (61) and Doſitheus (who was contempory with the apoſtles themſelves) do alſo omit him, as do the more correct Greek writers (62). 2. He is wanting in the Roman and Paris editions of the Septuagint, in a place (63) from whence omiſſions of this kind are uſually ſupplied; which would ſcarce have happened in caſe there had been ſuch a perſon. Nor is he to be found in that edition of the Septuagint itſelf, which having been placed in the Alexandrian library of Cleopatra, and received in Egypt, Paleſtine, and Syria, was inſerted by Origen in his Hexapla; and which, according to Jerom, was formerly reckoned the only faultleſs and uncorrupted copy, the other copy, called the Vulgar, having been corrupted at the pleaſure of antient writers (64). It is true Origen mixed Theodotion's verſion with the other, but took care to mark with an aſteriſk what it had leſs, and with an obeliſk what it had more than the Alexandrian MS. which method we ſee obſerved by Procopius Gazæus (65). 3. The various readings

(58) Bolduc de Eccleſ. ant. legem, lib. 2. cap. 2. See before, p. 170, in the notes. (59) Pag 249. (60) Apud Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 8. (61) Lib. 3. ad Autolyc. (62) Vid. Maſſæum lib. 2 Perer. in Geneſ. cap. x. (63) Vid. Maſſæum lib. 2. Perer. in Geneſ. cap. x. (64) Hieronym. Epiſt. 135. (65) Vid. Procop. in Geneſ. xi.

tuagint verſion having been received over a great part of the chriſtian world, Cainan paſſeth for one of the patriarchs, as well as a founder of nations (G), in many countries; and there are more traditions concerning him (H) than of Salah, the true ſon and ſucceſſor of Arphaxad.

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chriſt, 2648.

SALAH is the only patriarch concerning whom the chriſtian writers have obſerved an equal ſilence with Moſes. He hath been thought by ſome to be the ſame with the prophet Saleh, ſent to preach the true religion to the tribe of Thamûd in Arabia Petræa [q]; but this perſon appears to have been much later than the patriarch (I).

IT

[q] Hyde de rel. vet. Perſar. p. 58. D'HERBELOT, Bibl. Orient. Art. Salah.

ings in the ſeveral Greek copies, as well with regard to the years of Arphaxad after the birth of Cainan, as to thoſe of Cainan after the birth of Salah, are no ſmall evidence of corruption in this point (66).

Some of the moderns, to reconcile St. Luke with the Hebrew, make Cainan and Salah (67), others Arphaxad and Cainan, to be the ſame perſon (68).

(G) The Alexandrian chronicle (69) derives the Sarmatians from Cainan; Euſtathius Antiochenus (70) the Sagodians; George Syncellus (71), the Gaſpheni; Epiphanius the Cajani (72); Salianus (73) thinks the river Caina in India takes its name from him.

(H) Beſides the particulars already mentioned, it is ſaid, Cainan was the firſt after the flood who invented aſtronomy, and that his ſons made a god of him, and worſhipped his image after his death. The founding of the city of Haran in Meſopotamia is alſo attributed to him, which, it is pretended, he ſo called from a ſon he had of that name (74).

(I) An Arab writer makes the prophet Saleh to be the ſon of Aſaf, the ſon of Caſſekh, the ſon of Hawer, the ſon of Khaber the ſon of Thamûd, [the ſon of Gather] the ſon of Aram, the ſon of Sem (75); ſo that he was five generations later than the patriarch Salah, who was the third in deſcent from Noah. Beſides, the deſtruction of the tribe of Thamûd was ſubſequent to that of the tribe of Ad, to whom the prophet Hûd, or Eber, was ſent, as we learn, (66) Vid. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. tom. 2. ſect. 10. p. 8. (67) HERMAN. CONTRACT. JOH. LUCIDUS LUD. DE DIEU. FR. GOMARUS, &c. (68) Bolduc ubi ſup. (69) Pag. 70. Ed. Raderi. (70) Apud Heidegg. tom. 2. Exerc. 1. § 12. (71) Chronog. p 46. (72) Apud. Heidegg. ubi ſupra. (73) Apud eundem, p ibid. (74) Abu'lfarag. Hiſt Dynaſt p. 11. (75) Tarikh Montakhab. apud D'Herbelot. Art. Salah. p. 740.

from

Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Christ, 2648.

IT is the general opinion, that the Hebrews derive their name from the patriarch Eber (K), the son of Salah; and many of the Jews (as well as Christians) attribute to him the honour of being the founder of their name and nation [r] (L). But there is much more appearance, that the name from one of the commentators (76) on the Korân; and consequently Saleh, the prophet of the Thamûdites, must be posterior to Eber.

[r] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 7. SHALSH. HAKK. p. 803. EUTYCH. Ann. p. 47.

(K) The Hebrew word עבר Eber signifies beyond, or simply, a passage; for what reason he was so called is uncertain: but if the Hebrews were so called from him, as most imagine, why might it not have been given him prophetically by Salah, to denote the future passage of his posterity over the Euphrates into the land of Canaan, in the same manner as many suppose Eber gave his son the name of Peleg, foreseeing the division of the earth, which was to happen towards the middle, or end of his life; This patriarch's name is in some versions confounded with that of חבר Heber, which both occur in one chapter (77).

(L) The maintainers of this opinion bring many arguments to support it, of which two only seem to be of any weight: 1. That a patriarch of that name being found among the ancestors of the Jews, it is reasonable to believe they derived their name from him. 2. That Shem is expressly said to be the father of all the children of Eber (78).

To the first of these it is answered, that, as Moses intimates nothing that way, the bare affinity of the name is not sufficient to determine the point in favour of that opinion. And as for what they alledge, either of the superior piety and merit of Eber above the other patriarchs, or of the Hebrew language being peculiarly spoken, or preserved, by him and his posterity, it is not only begging the question, there being no foundation in scripture for those suppositions, but may be presumed to be false as to the first (since he cannot be supposed to have been more pious than Shem), as it appears to be with regard to the last (79), the Hebrew having been spoken by nations which were not of his posterity.

To the second argument it is replied, that the word Eber in the before-mentioned text, has not respect to a person, but to place, and consequently that the words do not signify the children of the patriarch Eber, but the people who dwelt on one side, or the other of the river, meaning thereby either the Euphrates, or Tigris, or both,

(76) Hossein Waedh, apud. D'Herbelot, ibid. p. 741. (77) 1 Chron. viii. 12, 17, 22. (78) Genes. x. 21. (79) See the next note.

name of Hebrews was given to Abraham and his defcendants, on account of his paffing over the rivers in his way from Irâk, or Chaldea, into Syria[r]: fo that a Hebrew fhould fignify nothing elfe in the original fenfe of the word, than a man from beyond the Euphrates. Year of the Flood, 350. Year before Chrift 2648.

IN conſequence of the ſame opinion, it has been commonly believed by the antients, as well as moderns, that the Hebrew language alſo took its name from Eber, and that at the confuſion of tongues it remained ſolely in the family of that patriarch and his deſcendants[t] (M): but as the firſt part of this both, which parts were the ſeat of Shem's poſterity; to enforce which acceptation, it may be farther obſerved, that if Eber be taken here as a proper name, then under the deſignation of his children muſt be comprehended not only the Hebrews properly ſo called, deſcending from him by Peleg, and the Arabs, who were Joktan's poſterity, and ſettled on this ſide of the river, but alſo thoſe who remained on the other ſide of the river, either in Meſopotamia, Chaldea, or Elemaïs: but it could never be Moſes's meaning to make Shem the father of Eber's children in this ſenſe, which ſeems to have nothing in view; being too extended to illuſtrate any thing relating particularly to the Hebrews, or Jews; and too limited to reflect any honour on Shem, who was the father of many nations, and of ſome more conſiderable than thoſe deſcended from Eber. Nothing therefore ſeems to favour this opinion, unleſs it may be ſaid, that Moſes in this place had a mind to pay a compliment to all the poſterity of Eber in general, on account of the relation they bore to the Jews, as being collateral branches of the ſame anceſtor. But this point we ſhall more critically examine when we come to the hiſtory of Abraham.

[r] Vid. ABU'LFARAG. p. 11. HYDE de rel. vet. Perſar. p. 47, &c. [t] Vid. EBN. AMÎD. p. 14. SHALSH. HAKK. p 803.

(M) The confuſion of tongues having been conſidered as a puniſhment of the temerity of thoſe who undertook to build Babel, many authors, poſſeſſed with high ſentiments of Eber, have preſumed, that the poſterity of that patriarch, who was deſtined by GOD to be the ſtock of the holy people, and the depoſitory of the true religion, had no ſhare in that enterprize, nor conſequently in the puniſhment which attended it. But if Eber's children were not concerned in it, it muſt have been becauſe none of them were grown up to an age capable of aſſiſting in that work, the diſperſion having happened at the birth of Peleg, who is by many ſuppoſed to have been Eber's eldeſt ſon: for it ſeems to be inconteſtable, that all the deſcendants of Shem, Ham, and Japhet, were concerned in that building (80) However, it is plain, Eber's poſterity ſhared this assertion hath no better ground than the former opinion, so the latter is false in fact, the Hebrew language having been common to people who had no affinity with the family of Eber; as the Phœnicians, or Canaanites, who in the time of Abraham spoke Hebrew, or a language differing very little from it.

(80) See ſect. 4.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

THE building of Babel is properly referred to the time of Eber, just before the birth of his son Peleg, in the 134th year of his age, and of the flood four hundred and one. Some of the Rabbins and christian fathers, who refer that event to a subsequent part of Peleg's life, say Eber gave him that name prophetically, to denote a division of the earth which was to happen some time after, and accordingly reckon Eber a prophet chiefly upon that account [u].

TILL this time all mankind lived in a body together, and spoke one language; but GOD being offended at the building of that city and tower, confounded their speech, and dispersed them abroad, in order to people and plant the earth. But what particular language the first was, in what manner it was confounded, together with an account of the whole transaction relating to the building of Babel, and the dispersion of mankind, must hereafter be the subject of different sections.

THE original of idolatry by image-worship is by many attributed to the age of Eber (N), though most of the fathers place it no higher than that of Serug; which seems to be the more probable opinion, considering, that for the first hundred and thirty four years of Eber's life all mankind dwelt in a body together, during which time it is not reasonable to suppose idolatry broke in upon them: then some time must be allowed after the dispersion for the several nations, which in the punishment, for their language was divided. Witness the difference between the Arabic (the language of Joktan's posterity) and the Hebrew; not to mention the Chaldee.

[u] ZEMACH DAV. part 1. p. 6. SEDER OLAM. cap. 1. p. 2. YARHI ad Genes. x. 25. HIERON. in quæst. Hebr. in Genes. CHRYSOST. Hom. 30 in Genes.

(N) Dr. Hyde thinks idolatry may by numerous arguments be proved to have begun as high as the times of Eber and Salah, who preached to their countrymen, the idolatrous Arab tribes of Ad and Thamûd (81): But we have already observed that the apostle of the Thamûdites was much later than the patriarch Salah; and the mission of Eber is not an authority to build upon.

(81) Hyde de rel. vet. Pers. p. 58.

were

were but ſmall at the beginnning, to encreaſe and ſettle themſelves: ſo that if idolatry was introduced in Eber's time, it muſt have been towards the end of his life, and could not well have prevailed ſo univerſally, and with that obſtinacy which is imagined by authors. However, the Arabs have a tradition that Hud (O), who is generally ſuppoſed to have been the ſame perſon with Eber, was ſent to preach to one of their antient tribes, named Ad, who had corrupted themſelves with the worſhip of idols, and were afterwards almoſt totally deſtroyed for not hearkening to him [w]. They alſo ſay, he ended his days in the province of Hadramaut, where they ſtill pretend to ſhew his ſepulchre, near Merbât, and within two miles of Hâſec, a port on the Indian ſea: there is a ſmall town built about it, which is now called Kabr Hûd, or the Sepulchre of Hud [x].

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

EBER is ſuppoſed by many to have built Hebron in Canaan, and Tanis in Egypt; but thoſe are groundleſs imaginations [y]. Some refer the golden age to the time of him and his ſon Peleg [z]: and indeed, if we can ſuppoſe there ever was ſuch a pacific and innocent ſtate on this ſide the flood, it is moſt likely to have been in the days of Noah and his three ſons [z], that is, during the time their poſterity continued in their firſt habitation, before their removal to Shinaar, and a while after the diſperſion, which probably gave it a ſhort interruption.

EBER had two ſons, Peleg, and Joktan; Peleg was born juſt after the diſperſion happened, on which occaſion that [w] Vid. POCOCK. Specim. hiſt. Arab. p. 36. D'HERBELOT, Bibl. Orient. Art. Houd. [x] Vid. D'HERBELOT, ibid. Art. Cabar Houd. [y] Vid. HEIDEGG. Hiſt. Patr. tom. 2. p. 11, 13. [z] Vid. GORDON, Chron. lib. 2. cap. 2. [a] Vid. BOCHART. Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 1.

(O) It ſeems as if the Arabs had ſome notion of the Hebrews being ſo called from Eber; and therefore from the other name of that nation, viz. Jews, which they pronounce Hûd, and Yehud, they have given this prophet the name of Hûd alſo.

Schickard, on the credit of two authors, one an Arab, who places Hûd between Salah and Eber; and the other a Turk, who ſets him between Arphaxad and Eber; conjectures Hûd is Cainan (82). But this is againſt the current of Mohammedan writers, who make him the ſon of Salah (83), and the ſame with Eber (84).

(82) Schickard Tarik regum Perſiæ. apud D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. Art. Houd. p. 14. Eutych. Annal. p. 46. (83) Tarîkh Montakhab (84) Vid. Ebn Amid, name

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ 2597.

name (P) was given him. Venerable Bede affirms, that temples were firſt built in his days, and that ſeveral of the chiefs of nations were worſhipped for gods. On the death of this patriarch we are told, that contention aroſe between his ſons and thoſe of his brother Joktan, whereupon men began to build caſtles for their defence [b].

THE ſcripture mentions only one ſon of Peleg's, beſides which the orientals have given him another mentioned in ſcripture, though not as Peleg's ſon, namely, Melchizedec. They ſay, he begat him two hundred and nine years after the birth of his brother [d], which is a more rational opinion, though perhaps no better grounded, than that of the Jews, who make him to be the ſame with Shem. Of this perſon we have already related ſome particulars, and may have occaſion to ſay more hereafter.

JOKTAN is generally ſuppoſed to have been Peleg's elder brother, upon a preſumption, that he and his thirteen ſons were leaders of colonies at the diſperſion of Babel. They are indeed mentioned at the ſame time with the other heads of nations, and are doubtleſs to be included amongſt thoſe by whom, it is ſaid, the nations were divided in the earth after the flood [f]: but we do not think it follows from thence, that they muſt have been leaders in that firſt diſperſion, in caſe their ages would allow it. Beſides, by that means we ſhould not only poſtpone the time of that tranſaction, which ſeems to be neceſſarily connected with the birth of Peleg (Q) but introduce

[b] ABU'LFARAG. p. 12. [c] EBN AMÎD, p. 28. EUTYCH. Annal. p. 48. [d] EBN. AMÎD. ibid. [e] EBN. AMÎD. p. 28. EUTYCH. Annal. p. 48. [f] Geneſ. x. 32.

(P) The name פלג Peleg, or Phaleg, ſignifies diviſion. The diviſion of the earth and diſperſion of mankind, was doubtleſs the ſame tranſaction, though ſeveral authors, eſpecially thoſe who follow the Hebrew chronology, make two of them, as we ſhall obſerve hereafter.

(Q) Thoſe, who follow the Hebrew computation, are at a great loſs for an expedient to make Joktan and his thirteen ſons leaders of colonies, at the diſperſion, ſuppoſing it to have happened at the birth of Peleg. For Eber having been but thirty four years old when he begat the latter, there cannot reaſonably be allowed above half that ſpace for Joktan's age at that time, granting him to be the elder: ſo that we cannot well conceive him to have been the father of more than one ſon before the diſperſion. Upon which account many poſtpone that tranſaction to a ſucceeding part of Peleg's life, ſuppoſing Eber impoſed that name prophetically (85).

(85) See before, p. 286.

But

introduce five generations in the line of Shem as concerned in it, which are two more than we find of the deſcendants of Ham and Japhet, and therefore we have reſerved them for a ſecond remove, or plantation. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt 2597.

THE ſcripture gives to Joktan thirteen ſons; whereas the Arabs, who derive their original from Jcktan, or, as they more uſually call him, Kahtân, aſſign him one and thirty by the ſame mother, of whom all but two leaving Arabia (R), went and ſettled in India[g]. Yârab, the elder of the two who ſtaid, ſucceeded his father in the kingdom of Yaman, or Arabia Felix, and gave his name to that country, as well as to the Arabic language, which he firſt ſpoke[h]. Jorham, the younger, founded the kingdom of Hejâz[i], which contained part of Arabia Petræa, and other territories.

WE find little ſaid concerning the three ſucceeding patriarchs, Rëü (S), Serug, and Nahor: however, ſome authors refer the founding of certain kingdoms and cities (T), the [g] AHMED EBN YUSEF, apud POCOCK. Spec. Hiſt. Arab. p. 40.

[h] POCOCK. ibid. p. 40, 55, 151. [i] Idem. ibid. p. 40, 78.

But the great Uſſher thinks himſelf obliged to refer it to his birth, though he knows not how to get over the difficulty juſt now mentioned (41); which may be ſolved well enough by the Samaritan chronology, according to which, time ſufficient may be allowed for Joktan and his ſons to propagate.

(R) D' Herbelot mentions four other ſons of Kahtân, namely, Hadramaut (the ſame with Hazarmaveth) Seba, Ofir, and Khawilah, or Havilah (42).

(S) According to the different pronunciation of the ע, this patriarch's name is variouſly written, Rëû, and Ragau; and by prefixing an א, ſometimes Eru, and Argu.

(T) The building of Babel is by ſome placed in the ſeventieth year of Rëû (43), and the beginning of Nimrod's reign in his hundred and thirtieth (44). About the ſame time others fix the founding of the kingdom of Egypt, and the city of Memphis, by Mizraïm (45); of the city of Saba, in Arabia Felix, by a certain queen (46); of the kingdom of Bohemia, and it's metropolis Prague (47); and of the kingdom of the Amazons (48): but theſe laſt are idle imaginations of the Jews. With more probability, though perhaps equal foundation, others attribute the building of (41) Chronolog. Sacra part 1. cap. 5. p. 26. (42) D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. Art. Saba & Hegiaz. (43) Abu'lfarag p. 12.

(44) Ebn Amîd, p. 29. (45) Idem, ibid. Midraſh, ſect. אכוה.
(64) Ebn Amîd, ubi ſup. (47) R. David Ganz, in Zem. Dav.
p. 4. Juchaſin, p. 135. (48) Shalſhel hakkab. p. 94, 95.

Year of the Flood, 401.

Year before Christ, 2597.

the invention of several arts (U), the spreading of idolatry (W), and Rages in Media to Reû himself (49) as that of Sarûj, the capital of Diyar Modar (50), might be to his son Serug, who is supposed to have dwelt in the place where that city now stands (51). In Nabor's time we are told, that Armûnes, a king of Canaan, built Sodom and Gomorrah, and Zoar, to the two first of which he gave the names of his two sons, and to the last that of their mother (52).

(U) It is pretended, that the first mint for coining, and the first foundary for gold and silver ornaments were erected in the days of Rëû (53). Others attribute this invention to Terah (54), as that of coining gold and silver is ascribed to Serug (55). Weights and measures are said to have been invented by Samirus, king of the Chaldeans, in the days of the same patriarch (56), though the use of them seems not to have been instituted till Nabor's time (57). The art of weaving silks, and of dying, is also attributed to the said king (58).

(W) Though the generality of authors, and particularly of the fathers, agree to place the origin of idolatry in the time of Serug (59), whom some suppose to be the introducer of it, erroneously making him (if he be not a different person from the patriarch) of the race of Japhet (60); yet others make it more early (61), and it is said, that in Rëû's days mankind was fallen into various kinds of false worship; some adoring the heaven, others the celestial bodies, others animals and plants, others the images of their deceased friends (62). About the same time also the custom of men's sacrificing their children to devils, is pretended to have been introduced on the following occasion: A certain rich man dying, his son made a golden statue in representation of him, and placed it on his tomb, setting a servant to watch it. Some time after the son was robbed of all he had, and coming to make his complaints at his father's sepulchre, the devil spoke out of the image, and promised to restore him all he had lost, if he would offer his youngest son as a sacrifice to him, and bath himself in his warm blood; which he did, and thereupon the devil coming out of the image entered into the young man, and taught him magic. But at length, and ſome other particulars of leſs moment (X) to their times.

(49) Hyde de rel. vet Pers. p. 55: (50) Geogr. Nubiens. p. 203. (51) Hyde ubi sup. p 57. (52) Abu'lfarag. p. 13. (53) Ebn Amîd, p. 30. (54) Shalsh. hakkab. p. 94. a. (55) Abu'lfarag. p. 12 (56) Idem, ibid. (57) Ebn Amîd, p. 30. Eutych. Annales, p. 63. (58) Abu'lfarag. ubi sup. (59) Joh. Damasc. Epiphan. Panar. l. 1. Chronic. Alex. p. 113. Abu'lfarag. p. 12. Eutych. Annal. p. 56. Vid. etiam Hyde de rel. vet. Pers. p. 57. Heidegg. Hist. Patr. tom. II. Exerc. 1. § 32. Gurtler. Hist. Univ. p. 93. (60) Euseb. Chron. Græc. p. 13. Cedren. Compend. Hist. p. 36. Suidas in voce Σερούχ. Malela *Chron. p.*94, &c. (61) See Page 286. (62) Ebn Amîd, p. 29. Eutych. p. 59.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

TERAH, the ſon of Nahor, was the father of Abraham, the founder of the Hebrew, or Jewiſh nation. The ſcripture informs us, that Terah, after the ſeventieth year of his age, begat three ſons, Abram, Nahor, and Haran [k]. But of theſe ſons, Haran only, who was the eldeſt, at leaſt much older than Abram, was born in that year; and the other two probably much later [l], and, as is ſuppoſed, by a different mother [m]. Haran died in his native country, in Ur of the Chaldees (Y), before his father, leaving a ſon named Lot, and length, this practice of human ſacrifices growing frequent, GOD ſent a violent earthquake, the firſt of the kind, with a whirlwind, which broke all their idols in pieces, and overthrew their temples (63). The riſe of the Sabian religion is by ſome referred to the age of Nahor (64).

[k] Geneſ. xi. 26. [l] See before p. 247. [m] Vid. HEIDEG. Hiſt. patr. tom. II. Exerc. 3. § 3.

(X) The oriental authors mention a king called Karûn, who reigned in the days of Rëû, but ſay not where. They pretend he was a famous chymiſt, and built a city called Ukîſh (65), or Ukinîn (66), with bricks of gold. But this ſeems to be the ſame perſon whom the Mohammedans make coeval with Moſes, and the Corah of the ſcriptures. We are alſo told, that, in the time of Serug, a king of Egypt, called Aſifanus, built a ſhip, and invaded the inhabitants of the ſea-coaſt; and that he was ſucceeded by Pharaoh, the ſon of Sanes, from whom the Pharaohs were denominated (67): that the giants began to encreaſe in Nahor's time, of whom one was Ad a famous king of the Arabs (68), and another Hellen, who aſſiſted at the building of the tower of Babel, and was worſhipped by the Greeks (69); and that the troubles of Job happened in the twenty fifth year of the laſt mentioned patriarch (70).

(Y) Several writers taking Ur, which ſignifies fire, for an appellative, pretend, that Haran was burnt; ſome ſaying, that that accident happened as he endeavoured to take the images of Terah out of the fire, into which Abraham had thrown them (71). Others, as he attempted to quench the flames of an idol temple which Abraham had ſet on fire (72). A third party ſay, that Abraham being thrown by Nimrod into a burning furnace, Haran was intent upon and two daughters, one named Milcah, and the other Iscah [n]. Nahor married Milcah his niece, and Abram Sarai his half-sister [o].

(63) Eutych. p. 63. Ebn Amîd. p. 30. (64) Eutych. p. 63. (65) Ebn Amîd, p. 30. (66) Eutych. Annales. p. 60. (67) Abu'l-farag. p. 12. (68) Ebn Amîd, ubi ſup. Eutych. Annales p. 63. (69) Suidas in voce Σιρούχ. (70) Arudh. Cananæus apud Abu'l-farag. p. 13. (71) Cedrenus apud Bayle Dict. Hiſt. Art. Abraham. Rem. B. (72) Abul'farag. Hiſt. Dyn. p. 13.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

TERAH, who is generally supposed to be the same whom the Asiatics call Azer (Z), is on all hands allowed to have been [n] Genes. xi. 27, 28, 29. [o] Ibid. ver. 29, and xx. 12.

the event, resolving to follow the religion which prevailed; and seeing his brother come out unhurt by the flames, upon Nimrod's demanding who he believed in, Haran replied, in the GOD of Abraham; whereupon he was cast into the furnace, and died in the presence of his father, as the Rabbins express (73) what our translation renders before his father. It is said, the fire had power over him, because his faith was not so strong as Abraham's, nor was he destined to so great things (74). Epiphanius says, that Terah's surviving Haran was a punishment for his daring to make images of clay; and that before him no father had seen his children die a natural death (75). Josephus affirms, that Haran's sepulchre was to be seen at Ur in his time (76).

(Z) Some of the Mohammedan authors write, that Azer was the father of Abraham, and son of Terah (77); and D'Herbelot says, that the Arabs always distinguish them in their genealogies as two different persons; but that because Abraham was the son of Terah according to Moses, it is therefore supposed [by European writers], that he is the same with the Azer of the Arabs (78). How true this observation may be in relation to some authors, we cannot say, but we are sure, it cannot be true of all; for several Arab and Turkish writers expressly make Azer and Terah the same person (79). Azer, in antient times, was the name of the planet Mars, and the month of March was so called by the most antient Persians; for the word originally signifying fire (as it still does) it was therefore given by them and the Chaldeans to that planet (80), which partaking, as was supposed, of a fiery nature, was acknowledged by the Chaldeans and Assyrians as a god, or planetary deity, whom they antiently worshipped under the form of a pillar: whence Azer became a name among the nobility, who esteemed it honourable to be denominated from their gods (81), and is found in the composition

(73) Ben. Uzziel ad Gen. xi. 28. Maimon. Yad Hazzak. & de idolat. cap. 1. Shalshel. hakkab. p. 8. (74) Judæi apud Lyranum & Tostatum citante Saliano Annal. tom. I. p. 402. (75) Epiphanius de Hæres. lib. 1. p. 8. (76) Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 6. (77) Tarikh Montakhab apud D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. Art. Abraham. p. 12. (78) D'Herbelot ibid. (79) Ben Shohnah, Mirat Kainat, &c. MSS. See also Pharhang Gehanghiri apud Hyde de rel. vet. Pers p. 68. (80) Hyde ibid. p. 63. (81) Idem, ibid. p. 64.

been an idolater; nor can this be denied, ſince he is expreſly ſaid in ſcripture to have ſerved other gods[p]. The Eaſtern authors unanimouſly agree, that he was a ſtatuary, or carver of idols; and he is repreſented as the firſt who made images of clay, pictures only having been in uſe before[q], and taught, that they were to be adored as gods[r]: however, we are told his employment was a very honourable one, and that he was a great man (A); that at length he was converted by the earneſt perſuaſions of Abraham (B), and prevailed upon to leave compoſition of ſeveral Babyloniſh names. For theſe reaſons, a learned author ſuppoſes Azer to be the heathen name of Terah, and that the other was given him on his converſion (82).

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

[p] Joſh. xxiv. 2, 14. [q] EPIPHAN. Adverſ. Hæreſ. lib. 1. p. 7, 8: [r] SUIDAS in Lexico, voce Σερούχ.

(A) The Eaſtern authors ſay, Azer was a great lord, and in high favour with Nimrod, whoſe ſon-in law he was (83), becauſe he made his idols for him, in which art he excelled all others. This employment was very honourable among the Chaldeans, the perſon who followed it being conſidered as the maker of gods: for it required profound ſkill in aſtrology to chooſe the proper materials, and fix the proper time for that work, every kind of wood, as well as ſtones, and metals, being by the Chaldeans dedicated to its peculiar planet, of whoſe influence it was thereby believed to participate more than any other; and an idol thus formed under a happy poſition of the heavens, and of the matter appropriated to ſuch a planet, was conceived to be rightly prepared and made according to art (84). Some of the Rabbins ſay Terah was a prieſt, and the chief of them (85).

(B) Mohammedan authors relate, that Abraham often adviſed his father to forſake the worſhip of images, aſking how he could worſhip that which neither heard, nor ſaw, nor did him any good (86): that this offending Terah, he was often ready to fall from words to blows; but that at length Abraham got the better of his father's obſtinacy, refuſing to pray for him until he promiſed to become a convert (87); for while he was an enemy to GOD, he was an enemy alſo to Abraham (88). The Jews ſay he repented (89); and it is thought to have been owing to the merit thereof, as well as of his ſon Abraham, that the chain of the oral law deſcended from leave Ur. Josephus says, he quitted Chaldea, being not able to endure the country after the loss of his son Haran [r]. Some would have it that he did not become an idolater till he was settled at Haran [t], which is absurd [u]; and others say, he never was converted [x], any more than his son Nahor, who afterwards left Ur to join his father at Haran [y], which seems from him to be called the city of Nahor [z]: but there is more probability, that both Nahor and Haran were converted, seeing Lot was bred in the true religion, and Abraham chose Isaac a wife out of the family of Nahor, not caring to marry him to the idolatrous daughters of Canaan [a]: wherefore a learned author supposes Nahor and Haran to have been the names given to those two brothers at the time of their conversion [b].

(82) Idem, ibid. p. 62. (83) D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. Art. Abraham (84) D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. Art Abraham. p, 63. (85) Shalſhel. hakkab. p. 64. (86) Shahriſtani ex Alkorano, c 19. ver. 39. apud Hyde de rel. vet. Perſar. p. 68. (87) Al Korân c. 9. ver. 116. (88) Hyde, ubi ſup. (89) Shalſhel hakkab. p. 94.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

HOWEVER, Terah, towards the latter part of his life, designing to remove from Chaldea into the land of Canaan, took his son Abram, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, and his grandson Lot, and leaving Ur came to Haran, a city in the north-west parts of Mesopotamia, where having dwelt for some time he died, being two hundred and five years old.

THUS have we collected in the best method we could, what we have found worth notice, from writers of various times, religions, and countries, relating to the postdiluvian patriarchs. In the next section we shall proceed to give part of the fragments of a heathen author, whose history is supposed to relate to the earliest times of this period.

SECT. III.

The history of Sanchoniatho, after the flood.

Sanchoniatho's history continued.

HAVING in a preceding section brought down the Phœnician history of Sanchoniatho to the tenth genera-

[r] Antiq. lib. 1. cap. Genes. cap. 11. 32. [t] TOSTAT. apud PERERIUM in C. [u] Vid. BAYLE Dict. Art. Abraham, Rem. [x] CHRYSOST. Hom. 31, & 37. [y] St. AUGUST. de Civit. Dei, lib. 16. cap. 13. [z] Compare Gen. xxiv. 10. with Gen. xxvii. 43, and xxviii. 10. [a] Gen. xxiv. 3. [b] HYDE de Rel. vet. Pers. p. 62.

Adam to him, and thence to his son Abraham (90). There is some ground to think Terah was converted by Abraham's perswasions, because he travelled with him from Ur to Haran, in order to go into Canaan 91 [1].

(90) Zoar apud Hottinger, in Smegm. Orient. lib. 1. p. 280.
(91) Hyde ubi sup. p. 59.

tion,

tion, which probably periſhed in the flood, though he takes no notice of that great event; we ſhall here reſume the thread of his narration: premiſing only, that, according to the plauſible hypotheſis which we have formerly mentioned (C), that

(C) Biſhop Cumberland, ſuſpecting the Phœnician records to have been corrupted in this place, has propoſed an amendment of them (92): He ſuppoſes a diſlocation in the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth generations, either through neglect in tranſcribers, or rather purpoſely made by the Cabiri, who wrote thoſe records, to conceal the great judgment of the flood, which ſwept away the race of Cain (93), and of which for that reaſon they have ſuppreſſed all mention (94). To ſupport this opinion, he alledges, 1. That Sydyc and Miſor could not be the children of Amynus and Magus, becauſe the tenth generation in the line of Genus, or Cain, wherein thoſe two laſt perſons are placed, muſt have been drowned in the flood, together with ſuch children as might then be born of them (95), anſwering to Shem, Ham, and Japhet. 2. That Sydyc being Melchizedec, whom he takes to be Shem, and Cronus Ham, it was neceſſary to join them both together under the line of Uranus, which Sanchoniatho owns to be diſtinct from that of Genus (96) 3. That Miſor being manifeſtly Mizraïm, the ſon of Ham, or Cronus, there is a neceſſity of placing him one generation lower than he is placed in Sanchoniatho, viz. in the twelfth (97); and that without this change, the beginning of the Egyptian kingdom would be placed too near the flood (98). 4. That Japhet being ſtill wanting to make up the three ſons of Noah, and Nereus being the only perſon in Sanchoniatho's genealogies which anſwers the ſcripture account of him, he has joined him to Sydyc and Cronus in the line of Uranus (99). But the alterations will better appear, by giving the reader a table of Sanchoniatho's genealogies, from the place where the biſhop's corrections begin; referring him for our remarks on the ſcheme itſelf to the ſucceeding notes.

The two Lines as they ſtand in SANCHONIATHO.

SETH's Line	CAIN's Line.
9. Elium, or Hypſiſtus,	Agrus, Agrouerus,
10. Uranus,	Amynus, Magus,
11. Cronus,	Miſor, Sydyc,
12.	Thoth. Cabiri, or Dioſcuri,
13.	The ſons of the Dioſcuri.

(92) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 43. (93) Ibid. p. 49. (94) Ibid. p. 47, 177. (95) Ibid. p. 41, 677. (96) Ibid. p. 47. (97) Ibid. p. 48. (98) Ibid. p. 49. (99) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 257, 258, 259.

taht writer proceeds to continue the idolatrous line of Cain, by perſons taken out of the line of Noah, and annexing them as ſons to Amynus and Magus, the laſt of that race.

Generation XI. FROM theſe men, ſays he, were begot Miſor (D), and Sydyc (E), i. e. Well-freed, and Juſt: theſe found out the uſe of ſalt. FROM SETH's Line in SANCHONIATHO, corrected.

9.	Eliun, or Hypſiſtus,
10.	Uranus,
11.	Sydyc, or Shem,	Cronus, or Ham,	Nereus, or Japhet,
12.	Cabiri, or Dioſcuri,	Miſor,	Pontus,
13.	The ſons of the Dioſcuri.	Thoyth,	Poſidon, or Neptune.

(D) This perſon Dr Cumberland takes to be the Mizraïm of the ſcripture, and the Menes of the Egyptians, for theſe reaſons; 1. He ſuppoſes Miſor to be the ſingular of Mizraïm, the firſt king of Egypt according to the Hebrews, as Menes is according to the Egyptians (1). 2 That Eratoſthenes in Syncellus and Scaliger's Euſebius (2), affirms Menes to be Meſtraïm, as the Greeks write the name of Mizraïm (3). 3. That Thoth was the ſon of Menes as well as of Miſor, and the ſecond king of Egypt (4). 4. That Miſor and Menes lived at the ſame time, and 5. Died the ſame violent death (5). We ſhall conſider this opinion, which we take to be abſolutely untenable, in another place; and ſhall only obſerve at preſent that we cannot find Eratoſthenes has affirmed any ſuch thing, as that Menes is Meſtraïm; which is the mere imagination of thoſe authors who have tranſcribed him.

As to the tranſlation which Philo gives of the name Miſor, Ἐυλυτὸς, or well freed, Bochart, derives it from the Syriac ܡܥܙܪ Meſro; but biſhop Cumberland rather thinks the notion of freedom to be conſequent to his name, which he ſuppoſes to ſignify a prince, from the root עזר aſar, to rule, or reſtrain, by addition of the ſervile Mim (6); [though to effect this the firſt radical muſt be thrown out] freedom from any coercive power being the conſequent of his dominion and ſuperiority (7).

(E) Sydyc the biſhop ſuppoſes to be Melchizedec, and Melchizedec Shem (8). All the arguments he brings in favour of the firſt ſuppoſition is, that Grotius (9) affirms Melchizedec to be Sydyc (10), probably

(1) Ibid. p. 45, 55, (2) Chron. Græc. p. 17. (3) Cumberl. ubi ſup. p. 54, 185. (4) Ibid p. 44, 55. (5) Ibid. p. 55. (6) Ibid p 98. (7) Ibid. p. 179. (8) Ibid. p. 47, 173. (9) In not. ad Heb. vii. 1. (10) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 174.

FROM Misor came Taautus (F), who found out the writing of the first letters; whom the Egyptians called Thoör, the Alexandrians Thoyth, and the Greeks Hermes: but from Sydyc came the Dioscuri, or Cabiri (G) called also Corybantes, and Samothraces. These first invented the building a complete ship. Generation XII.

OF these, others came who found out herbs, the cure of bitings, and charms. Generation XIII.

URANUS, whose parents lived in these mens age, as hath been already mentioned, succeeding his father Elium in the kingdom, had by Ge, his sister, four sons; 1. Ilus, or Cro- probably on account of the similitude of the names, Sydyc, or Sedec signifying just, and Melchisedec the just king. Nor does he bring any proof that Melchizedec is Shem: he only says, that he thinks the objections against that opinion are sufficiently answered (11) by other authors. So that he produces no reason to support these two opinions, on which his system is chiefly grounded. If it be objected, that Misor and Sydyc were the sons of Amynus and Magus, he answers, that Sydyc was not the son of those persons, but brother to Ham, or Cronus, and son to Noah (12); and that the Cabiri, who had corrupted the records by suppressing all mention of the flood (13), have taken the righteous king Sedec, or Melchisedec (14), with Misor, and their children the Cabiri, and Thoth, and placed them in Cain's line, being willing to transfer all the honour gained by them to the family in which their false religion began; for which Sydyc's [or Melchizedec's] living in Canaan, might furnish a pretence (15).

(F) Taaut, or Thoth is thought to be Athothes, the son of Menes, and the second king of Egypt, according to Eratosthenes, upon a presumption that Misor and Menes are the same; and because he was also a king of Egypt, and son of a king [though it does not appear from Sanchoniatho, that Misor was a king] as Athothes was (16). It is observed also, that as Sanchoniatho's line ends with Misor and Thoth, so Eratosthenes's line of Theban kings begins with Menes and Athothes (17), as does the first dynasty of the Thinites in Manetho. And the difference between the names Thoth and Athoth is no objection, the bishop producing several instances of proper names in the Eastern languages, where the initial A was frequently left out (18).

(G) Of the Dioscuri, or Cabiri, the sons of Sydyc, we shall speak hereafter, when we come to the Grecian mythology. According to Dr. Cumberland's scheme, they were a little branch of Sydyc, or Shem's race, that lived with Ham, or near him (19).

(11) Ibid. p. 175. (12) Ibid. p. 47. (13) Ibid p 47, 177. (14) Ibid p. 47. (15) Ibid. p. 178. (16) Ibid p 44, 54, 186. (17) Ibid. p. 46. (18) Ibid p. 127. Vid. Bochart Canaan p. 826. (19) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 261.

Ilus;

nus; 2. Betylus; 3. Dagon, or Siton; and 4. Atlas (H); besides

(H) We shall consider these four sons of Uranus in their order. 1. Cronus is in all probability the same with the Ham of Moses; the last seems to have been his proper name, and the other, which may be derived from קרן Keren, a horn, or power, and importing regal dignity, might have been his Phœnician title, as Belus, or בעל Baal, signifying a lord, was his Chaldean title (20); for the Babylonians are said to have called the first Baal Cronus (21); Moloch and Milcom, names of the same signification, are also frequently used to design the same man (22): and Baal-Berith (23) probably signifies this Cronus worshipped antiently at Berytus (24). That Cronus is the Ham of Moses appears from the authority of Eupolemus, whose words are these: πρῶτον γενέσθαι Βῆλον, ὃν εἶναι Κρόνον· ἐκ τούτου δὲ γενέσθαι Βῆλον καὶ Χαναάν, τοῦτον δὲ τον Χαναὰν γεννῆσαι τον πατέρα τῶν Φοινίκων· τούτου δὲ Χοῦμ υἱὸν γενέσθαι, ὃν ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων λέγεσθαι Ἄσβολον, πατέρα δὲ Αἰθιόπων, ἀδελφὸν δὲ του Μεσραεὶμ πατέρα [πατρὸς] Αἰγυπτίων (25); which bishop Cumberland renders thus: There was at first Belus, who is Cronus; but of him came another 1. Belus, and 2. Canaan, who was, or begot the father of the Phœnicians; his son too was 3. Chûm, whom the Greeks call Asbolos, the father of the Ethiopians, the brother of, 4. Mestraim, the father of the Egyptians. It is eaty, says that author, to adjust this translation to the four sons of Ham (26); for two of their names are plainly the same, Canaan and Mizraïm; the third, Chûm, is but slightly altered from Cush, the ש being changed into μ only to express the accusative case, as Bochart has well noted; [though, by the way, this is an odd manner of accounting for that variation, the Greeks having no accusative in m, nor indeed any word ending in m]: wherefore it only remains, that Belus, the successor of Ham, in his dominions in Africa, be allowed to be the same with Phut in Moses; and it is reasonable to admit, that he who succeeded his father in that large empire, should bear his title among the Babylonians, as he is here called by the Chaldean title of honour Belus, whereas Moses calls him properly by the name given him at his birth (27). We find several footsteps of Chronus in that passage of the Mosaical history, where Chedorlaomer and his confederates are recorded to have smitten the Rephaims in Ashteroth Carnaim, and the Zuzims in Ham. Ashteroth will easily be admitted to be Astarte, and Carnaim being derived from Keren, the root of the name of Cronus, (20) Vid Ibid. p. 111, &c. (21) Eupolemus in Alex. Polyhist. apud Euseb. de Præp. Evangelic. lib. 9. cap. 17. (22) Vid. Theophil. Antiochen. ad Autolyc. lib. 3. Damascium in vita Isidori, & Suidam in voce Κρόνος (23) Judg. viii. 33. (24) Cumberland, on Sanchon. p. 152. (25) Apud Euseb. de præp. Evangel. lib. 9. cap. 17. p. 419. (26) Genes. x. 6. (27) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 115.

may

beſides much iſſue by other wives: wherefore Ge, being grieved at it, and jealous, reproached Uranus, ſo that they parted from each other. But Uranus, though he parted from her, yet by force invading her, and lying with her when he liſted, went away again; and he alſo attempted to kill the children he had by her. Ge alſo defended, or avenged herſelf, gathering auxiliary powers unto her.

may relate to him. And as Ræphas is acknowledged by the learned to have been a title of Cronus, both from the Coptic name of his Star, and from the Septuagint, who tranſlate Chium Cronus's known name) by Ræphas, written in ſome copies Remphas, which is the cleareſt account of that paſſage in Amos (28), ſo from him ſome of his poſterity, who were moſt like him and other antediluvians, of long life, great ſtrength, and ſtature, were called Rephaim; eſpecially thoſe who dwelt in his city Aſhteroth Carnaim, and ſeem to have been his children, and their cities to have taken their father's name (29). As to Ilus, or Il, it ſeems to be no other than אל El, which ſignifies ſtrong, and is therefore in Hebrew one of the names of GOD.

2. Betylus biſhop Cumberland does not find mentioned by any other writer; his name ſeems to be of eaſtern original, from the root בטל Betel, which though it often ſignifies diſhonourable idleneſs, yet ſometimes denotes that quiet ſpirit which ſerves religious duties and ſtudy. And in Arabic it ſignifies a hero, who, by ſucceſsful wars procures to himſelf and ſubjects reſt and peace (30).

3. Dagon is called agreeably to Philo's ſkill in the eaſtern languages, Siton, becauſe he was the inventor of ſowing bread-corn; and Jupiter Arotrius, from his contriving of ploughs. He was worſhipped by the Philiſtines in Canaan; and his name, which the biſhop ſuppoſes was given him at his canonization, ſuggeſts to us the reaſon of the divine honours they gave him (31) [being derived from דגן Dagan, bread-corn].

4. Atlas is alſo reckoned one of the moſt celebrated ſons of Uranus in the Atlantian theology; the Atlantij in Africa are derived from him. The biſhop ſuppoſes the reaſon of his being cruelly buried alive by his brother (as Sanchoniatho tells us preſently) was, to ſecure to him and Thoth the dominion over the weſtern parts of Africa, where the Atlantij were ſeated; though that deſign was not effected but by Hercules, or Arcles, called Aſſis (the paſtor king of Egypt) in the reign of Antæus the ſon of Atlas (32). The biſhop chooſes rather to conſider Atlas as the brother, than the ſon of Japetus, as the Greeks repreſent him, becauſe Sanchoniatho reports him to be the brother of Cronus, whom the Greeks alſo agree to be brother to Japetus.

(28) Chap. v. 26. Vid. etiam Pocock. Specim. Hiſt. Arab. p. ult.
(29) Cumberl. ubi ſup. p. 120, 121. (30) Idem, ibid. p. 326.
(31) Idem, ibid. & p. 327. (32) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 327, 328.

BUT

BUT when Cronus came to man's age, using Hermes Trismegistus as his counsellor and assistant (for he was his secretary), he opposed his father Uranus, avenging his mother: but Cronus had children, Persephone [Proserpina] and Athena [Minerva]: the former died a virgin, but by the counsel of Athena and of Hermes, Cronus made of iron a scimeter and a spear. Then Hermes speaking to the assistants of Cronus with enchanting words, wrought in them a keen desire to fight against Uranus, in behalf of Ge. And thus Cronus warring against Uranus, drove him out of his kingdom, and succeeded in the imperial power, or office.

IN the fight was taken a well beloved concubine of Uranus, big with child. Cronus gave her in marriage to Dagon, and she brought forth, at his house, what she had in her womb by Uranus, and called him Demaröon.

AFTER these things Cronus builds a wall round about his house, and founds Byblus, the first city (I) in Phœnicia. Afterwards Cronus suspecting his own brother Atlas, with the advice of Hermes, throwing him into a deep hole of the earth, there buried him.

AT that time the descendants of the Dioscuri, having built some tumultuary, and other stronger ships, went to sea, and being cast on shore near mount Cassius, there consecrated a temple (K).

THE auxiliaries of Ilus, or Cronus, were called Eloim (L), which

(I) It is urged as an objection to the veracity of this fragment, that Byblus is here said to be the first city in Phœnicia, after mention has been made of Tyre in the fifth generation (33); but no more can be made of what is said there, than that it was a place inhabited, perhaps by people living in tents, or scattered huts; for building with sun-dried bricks was not found out till three generations after. Besides, if it had been called a city, the expression would have admitted of an explanation by prolepsis. Byblus seems to have been the imperial seat of Cronus; as it was of Mizraïm for some time, according to the bishop (34).

(K) Dr. Cumberland observes, that this is the first navigation we have any account of in history after the flood (35); and perhaps this is the first temple founded also; for before they used itinerant temples, carried about on carts (36). Mount Cassius lay on the coast forty miles from Pelusium in Egypt eastward, in the road to Palestine (37).

(L) Eloim is אלהים the plural of אלה Eloah, and signifies the gods, as they are called just after. The bishop renders the word in which is as much as to ſay Cronij, for ſo were they named who were under Cronus. But Cronus having a ſon called Sadid (M), diſpatched him with his own ſword, having a ſuſpicion of him, and deprived his ſon of life with his own hand. So alſo he cut off the head of his own daughter, ſo that all the gods were amazed at the mind of Cronus.

(33) See before, p. 177. (34) Cumberl. Orig. Gent. Antiquiss. p. 174. (35) Ibid p. 368. (36) See before, p. 179. (37) Vid. Itinar. Antonini.

this

IN proceſs of time, Uranus, being in flight, or baniſhment, ſends his virgin daughter Aſtarte, with two other of her ſiſters, Rhea and Dione, to cut off Cronus by deceit, whom Cronus taking, made thoſe ſiſters his wives. Uranus, underſtanding this, ſent Eimarmene and Hora [Fate and Beauty] with other auxiliaries, to war againſt him: but Cronus having gained the affections of theſe alſo, kept them with him. Moreover, the god Uranus deviſed Bætylia, contriving ſtones that moved, as having life (N).

CRONUS

this place Ilus's men, or thoſe that were for Cronus (38); in which ſenſe it may be underſtood, conſidering the perſons who aſſumed it were the auxiliaries of Il, and took their name from him on that account.

(M) شديد Shadid in Arabic ſignifies a ſtrong man, and ſeems to be of kin to Shaddai.

(N) Bochart conceives that by the tranſpoſitionof a letter by the tranſcriber of Sanchoniatho, writing אבנים נפשים for נשפים, anointed ſtones, have been transformed into animated ſtones. Jacob ſeems to have ſet up the example of anointing ſtones, when he poured oil upon the top of the pillar which had been his pillow, calling the place Beth-el (39). The Jews ſay, the Phœnicians worſhipped that pillar of Jacob, withal conſecrating, and anointing ſtones in imitation of it, which they called Bætylia, and Bætyli, in memory of the ſtone erected at Beth-el. Heſychius ſays, the ſtone was ſo called which Rhea gave Saturn to devour inſtead of Jupiter. Priſcian ſays, the ſame ſtone is called Abadir, or Abaddir, and that it is the Bætylus of the god Abaddir. But that name, taken for the ſtone, ſeems to be corrupted from the Phœnician אבן דיר Aban dir, ſignifying a ſpherical ſtone which was the figure of the Bætylus. Damaſcius, a ſuperſtitious heathen writer in Juſtinian's time, ſays he ſaw ſeveral of theſe Bætylia, or Bætyli, of which many wonders were reported, in mount Libanus, near Heliopolis of Syria (40): nay, and pretends, he ſaw one of theſe ſtones moved in the air (41), and deſcribes it to be round, about a ſpan in diameter, and whitiſh, though it often appeared of different colours, (42); which ſhews there was a popular notion in thoſe days

(38) Cumberl. on Sanchon p. 31. (39) Geneſ. xxviii. 18, 19. and xxxi. 13. (40) Apud Photium. Bibl. p. 1047. (41) Vid. Photium. ibid. p. 1062. (42) Ibid. p. 1062.

of

CRONUS begat on Aſtarte ſeven daughters, called Titanides, or Artemides; and he begat on Rhea ſeven ſons, the youngeſt of which, as ſoon as he was born, was conſecrated a god (O). Alſo by Dione he had daughters, and by Aſtarte two ſons, Pothos and Eros [Deſire and Love].

DAGON, after he had found out bread-corn and the plough, was called Zeus Arotrius.

To Sydyc, or the juſt, one of the Titanides bare Aſclepius (P). Cronus had alſo in Peræa (Q) three ſons: 1. Cronus, of of the Bætylia being moving ſtones. They were generally conſecrated to ſome god or other, as Saturn, Jupiter, the Sun, &c. (43).

(O) Dr. Cumberland ſuppoſes this ſon of Rhea was Muth, becauſe afterwards mention is made of a conſecrated ſon of Rhea, called Muth; but the laſt ſeems to be a different ſon from him ſpoken of in this place; for Muth was not conſecrated till his death, the other as ſoon as he was born.

(P) He was ſurnamed Eſmunus from שמיני Shemini, which ſignifies the eighth. His mother was one of the daughters of Cronus. This is hard to believe, yet it is not impoſſible that Sydyc, in his latter time dwelling in Canaan, might, to ſecure his quiet life, (for we read of no warlike action of Shem) marry a daughter of Ham's, and by her have this ſon Aſclepius; whom alone of all the ſons of Sydyc, Sanchoniatho, chiefly regarding his own country, hath taken notice of, probably becauſe he only might have ſettled in Phœnicia, among the iſſue of Ham (44); and that he did ſettle among them appears from Apuleius's ſaying that Apollo (whom Sanchoniatho makes Cronus's ſon) gave to Æſculapius, as he calls him, the herb Solanum (45), or night-ſhade, called from his Phœnician name, Aſtir Eſmuni in Punic (46). Aſclepius is alſo called Memphites by Clemens Alexandrinus, and paſſed for a god in Egypt (47). And Pauſanias (48) mentions a temple to Æſculapius, Apollo, and Hygeia, Egyptians. This is the eldeſt account the biſhop meets with of ſkill in phyſic or medicines (49).

(Q) Peræa being the Greek name of the country of Baſhan, beyond Jordan, the biſhop ſuppoſes theſe three ſons of Cronus to have been born at Aſhteroth Carnaim (50), a noted city thereof, from the relation already mentioned, which that place hath to Cronus. The names of theſe ſons are well known to belong to heathen deities by antient writers; but it does not appear from ſuch writers, that they were the ſons of Cronus; only Eupolemus ſays ſomething to the pur-

(43) Idem, ibid. Vid. etiam Bochart. Chanaan. lib. 2. cap. 2. (44) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 200. (45) Apuleius de virtutib. Herbar. (46) In Auctuar. ad Dioſcorid. (47) Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. 1. (48) In Corinthiac. (49) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 201. (50) Gen. xiv. 5.

poſe

of the ſame name with his father. 2. Zeus Belus. 3. Apollo (R).

CONTEMPORARY with theſe were Pontus and Typhon, and Nereus, the father of Pontus (S). From Pontus came poſe in the fragment above-mentioned; though neither Moſes, nor Eupolemus, who writes the Babylonian traditions about them, do uſe, or own the names given them by the Canaanites; and indeed the ſame man was deified in one place, who was not honoured ſo in another; and often the ſame perſon was worſhipped in ſeveral places under ſeveral names (51).

(R) The firſt of theſe ſons, Cronus the ſecond, the biſhop conjectures to be Mizraïm, from a paſſage of Nonnus, where Apis, the living image of Oſiris, whom he ſuppoſes alſo to be Mizraïm, is ſaid to be likewiſe called Chronus; Belus, Hammon, and Zeus, all acknowledged to have been names belonging to Ham his father, and therefore he muſt be the ſecond in them all (52). By Belus, the biſhop ſuppoſes Cuſh, the ſon of Ham, to be intended by our author (53); and that the third, whom he calls Apollo, was the Phut of Moſes, known among the Greeks ſometimes by the name of Pythius, which in radical letters agrees with Phut; and ſometimes by that of Apollo Carneus, which he takes to ſignify the elder Apollo, the ſon of Cronus, from קרן Keren; from which root alſo his town was called Carnaim (54), or, as it is elſewhere (55) written, Carnion (56).

(S) Biſhop Cumberland has made another alteration here in Sanchoniatho's ſucceſſions, placing Nereus and his deſcendants, whoſe line is uncertain, in the line of Uranus, and ſuppoſes Nereus to be Japhet: 1. Becauſe being contemporary with Ham and his iſſue, and having found Shem under the name of Sydyc, it remains, that he takes Japhet and his iſſue to be here pointed at (57). 2. Becauſe every one knows Nereus, Pontus, and Poſidon, or Neptune, relate to the ſea, its iſles, and ſhores, which in ſcripture fall to Japhet's ſhare (58). 3. Becauſe this author never mentions Japhet and his line if it be not here (59); and it would be ſtrange, if an hiſtorian, writing of that age wherein mankind was repaired, ſhould omit him who peopled a third part of the world (60). 4. Becauſe though Nereus and his iſſue are not ſaid to be deſcended from Uranus, or Noah, yet we know by ſcripture, that they muſt come from him; and there is no other line known, in which they might come from Noah, but Japhet's. 5. Becauſe Sanchoniatho, being a Canaanite, has taken no care to clear other pedigrees, but only that of Ham and Cain (61).

(51) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 335. (52) Ibid. p. 336. (53) Ibid. p. 337. (54) Gen. xiv. 5. (55) 2. Macc. xii. 21. (56) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 116. 337. (57) Ibid. p. 257. (58) Ibid. p. 259. (59) Ibid. p. 257. (60) Ibid. p. 258. (61) Ibid. p. 259.

Sidon

Sidon, who, by the exceeding sweetness of her voice, or singing, found out first the hymns of odes, or praises; and Posidon [or Neptune]. But to Demaröon was born Melicarthus, who is also called Hercules (T).

THEN again Uranus makes war against Pontus, and being separated from him, joins with Demaröon. Demaröon invades Pontus, but Pontus puts him to flight, and Demaröon vows a sacrifice for his escape.

BUT in the thirty second year of his power and reign, Ilus, who is Cronus, having laid an ambuscade for his father Uranus in a certain midland place, and having gotten him into his hands, cuts off his privities (U) near fountains and rivers. There Uranus was consecrated, and his spirit, or breath was separated, and the blood of his secrets dropped into the fountains and waters of the rivers; and the place is shewed unto this day.

THEN our historian, after some things interposed, goes on, saying: But Astarte, called the Greatest, and Demaröon, surnamed Zeus, and Adodus, the king of the gods, reigned over the country by Cronus's consent, or authority (W): and

(T) This is the old Phœnician Melcartus, or Hercules (62), whose temple at Gadira, or Gades had no images in it, and continued to the time of Silius Italicus (63). Bochart supposes this way of worship, practised in this temple, was taken from the Jews; not considering, that Hercules Phœnicius was long before the Jewish law, and that the patriarchal religion used no images (64).

(U) It may be presumed, that this circumstance gave occasion to that notion of some, already mentioned (65), that Ham castrated Noah.

(W) It is conceived that Adodus, or Adad, which signifies among the Assyrians, the one, by way of eminence (66,) was a title belonging either to Cush the son of Ham, or to Nimrod, who as his kingdom extended even to Assyria, might well have many subordinate kings under him, who are called gods, as Cronus's confederate princes were called Eloim. Agreeably hereto, we find that Hadad was antiently a kingly name in Edom (67) and Syria (68), sometimes written Hadâr (69). Adar, or Adir is the magnificent or mighty potentate, and therefore may also be a title. Adodus reign-

(62) Ibid. p. 265. (63) Sil. Ital lib. 3. (64) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 265. (65) See before p. 264. (66) Macrob. Saturnal lib. 1. cap. 31. Bochart. Chanaan. lib. 2 cap. 8. (67) Gen. xxxvi. 35. 1 Chron. i. 30. (68) 2 Sam. viii. 5. 6. Vid. etiam Nicol. Damascen. apud Joseph. Antiq lib. 7. cap 5. (69) Gen. xxxvi. 39. 1 Chron. xviii. 5, 7. See also Cumberl. Orig. Gent. Antiquiss. p. 171.

ing

and Aſtarte put on her head, as the mark of her ſovereignty, a bull's head. But, travelling about the world, ſhe found a ſtar falling from the air, or ſky, which ſhe taking up, conſecrated in the holy iſland Tyre. And the Phœnicians ſay, that Aſtarte is ſhe, who is among the Greeks called Aphrodite [or Venus].

CRONUS alſo, going about the world, gave to his own daughter Athena the kingdom of Attica : but when there was a plague and mortality, Cronus made his only ſon a whole burnt-offering to his father Uranus [c]. This fact our author relates more particularly in another place, ſaying, that it was eſtabliſhed as a cuſtom among the antients, that in all extraordinary calamities of the public, the rulers of a city or nation ſhould give up their moſt favourite child to be ſlain, as an expiation to appeaſe the avenging dæmons ; and the victims, in theſe caſes, were butchered with much myſterious ceremony. Cronus therefore, called by the Phœnicians Iſrael, who reigned there, and was after his death conſecrated into the planet Cronus [or Saturn], having an only ſon by a certain nymph of the country named Anobret, and whom therefore he called Jeud, which in the Phœnician tongue, at this day, ſignifies only begotten ; and the country being involved in a dangerous war, he adorned this only ſon with royal attire, and ſacrificed him on an altar, which he had prepared for that purpoſe [d] (X). Cronus was alſo circumciſed in his privities, ing over many gods or kings, can only be underſtood of the large dominion allowed him by Ham (70) ; and we may ſee what ſort of gods they were, when the king of them ſeems to have been but a delegate of Cronus, and could not reign without his conſent.

[c] SANCHONIATHO apud EUSEB. de Præp. Ev. lib. 1. cap. 10. p. 36,&c. [d] Idem, apud eundem, l. 1. c. 10. p. 40. & l. 4. c. 16. p. 156.

This Adodus may poſſibly be the Adad Joſephus mentions, whom, together with Azaël, the Syrians worſhipped as gods, boaſting much of their antiquity ; whereas that author obſerves, they were no other than Hadad and Hazael, kings of Syria (71), who reigned at Damaſcus, in the time of Joram king of Iſrael (72); the firſt of whom had thirty two kings ſerving under him in his army (73), from whence he might have acquired the title of king of the gods, kings antiently having been called gods.

(X) This is thought by ſome men of learning not to be a true account of any ſacrifice really performed, but only a miſrepreſentation of Abraham's intended ſacrifice of his ſon Iſaac, with ſome

(70) Ibid. p. 173, 236, 256, (71) 2 Kings viii, 7. &c.
(72) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 9 cap. 4. (73) 1 Kings xx. 1. 24.

privities, and forced his auxiliaries to do the ſame. And not long after he conſecrated, after his death, another ſon, which he had by Rhea, called Muth; ſo the Phœnicians call death, or Pluto.

AFTER theſe things Cronus gives the city Byblus to the goddeſs Baaltis, which is Dione; and Berytus he gave to Poſidon, and to the Cabiri, and to huſbandmen, and to fiſhermen,

additions and miſtakes, which the heathen writers frequently made in all their relations (74). The reaſons alledged for this opinion are; 1 Cronus ſacrificed his only ſon; ſo was Abraham reported to have done. 2. That ſon was called Jeoud; and יְחִיד Yehid, or only ſon, is the epithet given to Iſaac by Moſes (75). 3. The mother of this only ſon is the ſame with Sarah; Anobret, or חֲנֹ־עִבְרַת Anu-oberet, ſignifying conceiving by grace, as Sarah did 4 Cronus and his followers were circumciſed; ſo was Abraham and his houſehold. 5 Cronus was called Iſrael, which name the Canaanites gave to Abraham, from the nation of which he was the father

To theſe reaſons it is anſwered: 1. That the ſacrificers in Moſes and Sanchoniatho are two different perſons; Cronus being plainly Ham, and here called Iſrael by a miſtake of tranſcribers, who took Il, the ſurname of Cronus, to be an abbreviation for Iſrael (76), as the letters ιλ frequently are. 2. The occaſion of the offerings, and of the circumciſions of Cronus and Abraham were alſo different; Cronus ſacrificed his ſon to remove a war and plague on the country, according to a ſettled cuſtom, and circumciſed himſelf for the ſame purpoſe, to appeaſe an angry deity; but what Abraham did was by a ſpecial command from GOD, as an inſtance of his faith and obedience. 3. The perſons to be ſacrificed were different; Cronus's ſon was his only ſon by Anobret a Cananitiſh concubine; but Abraham's ſon was the only child of his wife Sarah, who was of Chaldea; and the name of Anobret, even according to the above-mentioned derivation, rather ſignifies a paſſing fair one, 4. The deities to whom the two ſacrifices were offered were not the ſame; Abraham certainly offered to none but the true GOD, Cronus to his father and the avenging dæmons (77).

Bochart (78), beſides this notion, that Cronus (whom he elſewhere makes to be Noah) was Abraham, imagines alſo, that the Canaanites, miſunderſtanding that paſſage of Moſes, where Abraham is called a great prince, or as the Hebrew is, נְשִׂיא אֱלֹהִים a prince of God, made a deity of him, dedicating the ſeventh day of (74) Vid Bochart Canaan, l. 2. c. 2. Shuckford's Connect. vol. II. p. 30, &c. and Dodwell's Diſc. on Sanchon. p. 49. (75) Gen xxii. 2. (76) Vid Grot. de veritat. rel. Chriſt. l. 1. § 16. not. 50. (77) Vid Cumb. on Sanchon. p. 134, &c. (78) Ubi ſup.

the men, who confecrated the remains (Y) of Pontus in, or unto, Berytus.

BUT before theſe things, the god Taautus, having formerly imitated or repreſented Uranus, made images of the countenances of the gods Cronus and Dagon, and formed the ſacred characters of the other elements. He contrived alſo for Cronus the enſign of his royal power, four eyes, partly before, and partly behind, two of them winking as in ſleep; and upon his ſhoulders four wings, two as flying, and two as let down to reſt. The emblem was, That Cronus when he ſlept yet was watching, and waking yet ſlept: and ſo for his wings, That even reſting he flew about, and flying yet reſted. But the other gods had two wings each of them on their ſhoulders, to intimate, that they flew about with, or under, Cronus. He alſo had two wings on his head, one for the moſt governing part the mind, one for the ſenſe.

BUT Cronus coming into the ſouth country, gave all Egypt to the god Taautus, that it ſhould be his kingdom. Theſe things, ſaith he, the Cabiri, the ſeven ſons of Sydyc, and their eighth brother Aſclepius, firſt of all ſet down in memoirs, as the god Taautus commanded them.

ALL theſe things the ſon of Thabion, who was the firſt hierophant [or director of ſacred rites] that ever was among the Phœnicians, allegorized; and mixing the facts with phyſical and mundane phænomena, he delivered them down to thoſe that celebrated Orgia, and to thoſe prophets who preſided over the myſteries: who always contrived to improve their fables; and ſo delivered them down to their ſucceſſors, the week, and ſacrificing their children to him; which is a mere fancy, and without the leaſt ground. A late writer (79) has endeavoured to prove Cronus, at leaſt the ſecond of that name (which laſt he ſuppoſes to be the perſon that ſacrificed his only ſon, though Sanchoniatho expreſly ſays, it was the ſon of Uranus), was not more antient than Abraham, from the order of Sanchoniatho's genealogies, placing Eliun's birth in the time of the Dioſcuri, who were a generation younger than Miſor, or Mizraïm; but, even in this caſe, the elder Cronus could not be later than Reû, who was four generations older than Abraham, and therefore much earlier than that patriarch; notwithſtanding that, according to the Hebrew chronology, they might poſſibly have lived at the ſame time; for the ſame chronology is abſurd enough to make Ham himſelf contemporary with Abraham.

(Y) This is ſuppoſed to be the oldeſt conſecration of relicks to be met with in hiſtory (80) and to thoſe that were afterwards introduced among them. One of whom was Iſiris (Z), the inventor of three letters, the brother of Chna, the firſt Phœnician; as he was afterwards called[e].

(79) Shuckford ubi ſup. (80) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 262.

Biſhop Cumberland's amendments of Sanchoniatho conſidered.

THUS we have preſented the reader with the ſmall remains which are left of the Phœnician antiquities, collected by Sanchoniatho; wherein a free and open confeſſion is made of the beginning of idolatry, and their gods ingenuouſly acknowledged to have been once mortal men; a thing the Greeks were aſhamed to do, and therefore turned all the ſtories of the gods into allegories and phyſical diſcourſes[f]. A late learned prelate (A), who has endeavoured to explain this fragment, and reconcile it with ſcripture, has for that purpoſe made ſeveral corrections and alterations therein; ſuppoſing, that the re-

[e] Idem, apud eund. p. 40, 41. [f] STILLINGFLEET Origin. Sacræ, book 1. chap. 2. §. 7.

(Z) Iſiris being here called the brother of Chna, or Canaan, the biſhop concludes him to be Miſor, or Mizraïm, the father of Thoth (81). He obſerves alſo, that Hellanicus, an author older than Herodotus, often heard the Egyptian prieſts pronounce the name Oſiris, Hyſiris (82): and ſays, that Sanchoniatho repreſented Iſiris, or Mizraïm, and Thoth, as Phœnicians, to do honour to his country. And the reaſon why our author calls the ſame perſon in this place Iſiris, whom he before called Miſor, was becauſe in the preceding part of the work he wrote his name as he found it, thinking he ought not to recede from the records; and here he wrote it as it was ſpoken in his time, thinking, he ought to comply with cuſtom (83). To the objection, that Iſiris cannot well be Mizraïm, becauſe it is not likely, that he ſhould make the doctrines of religion allegorical, and his ſon Thoth ſet them down in a different hiſtorical manner; it is anſwered, Thoth might cauſe the Cabiri to write this hiſtorical account or explanation before he went to reign in Egypt, for a help to his memory, or to ſhew the Egyptians the Phœnician form of worſhip was elder than their fabulous repreſentations; and that this was not to aboliſh, but to explain the religion eſtabliſhed by his father. Laſtly, All that allegorical ſcene of Egyptian ſolemnities delivered by Plutarch, cannot be ſo old as Mizraïm's eſtabliſhment, ſince much of it relates to his death, and is owned by Plutarch (84) to have been added by Iſis (85).

(A) Biſhop Cumberland, whoſe notes on this author we have hitherto given, intermixing very little of our own, having reſerved our obſervations for this place.

(81) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 94, 99, &c. (82) Vid. Plutarch. de Iſide & Oſiride, p. 364. (83) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 101, 102. (84) Ubi ſupra. (85) Cumberl. on Sanchon. p. 103, &c.

cords,

cords, from which Sanchoniatho extracted his hiſtory, were corrupted in thoſe inſtances by the Cabiri, the firſt writers of them; who in particular ſuppreſſed all mention of the deluge for the reaſons already given (B). The principal corruptions which the biſhop obſerves and would amend are; 1. That Sanchoniatho and thoſe he tranſcribes have removed ſeveral perſons out of the line of Uranus, and placed them under that of Cain, in order to do honour to it; particularly Miſor and Sydyc, who are placed in the eleventh generation, as ſons of Amynus and Magus, the biſhop takes to be Mizraïm and Shem, both of the line of Uranus; and he accordingly places Sydyc in the ſame generation with Cronus, ſuppoſed to be Ham, and Miſor a generation lower, as the ſon of Cronus. 2. That they have introduced Nereus and his iſſue, as belonging neither to the line of Noah, nor to that of Cain, and as contemporaries with Cronus's children: but the biſhop finding Nereus to anſwer the deſcription of Japhet, better than any of the ſons of Uranus mentioned by Sanchoniatho, he raiſes him two or three generations higher, and makes him the ſon of Uranus; in which two alterations this author's ſcheme principally conſiſts. But however plauſible his hypotheſis may be, on a nearer examination it ſeems liable to ſeveral objections.

FOR as to the reaſon given for the Cabiri's making theſe diſlocations, viz. to do honour to the line of Cain, it may be aſked, why they, who were of Uranus's line (for they could be deſcended from no body elſe, ſuppoſing him to be Noah), ſhould deſire to do honour to that of another, by renouncing their anceſtors? why in doing this did they ſeparate Miſor from his father, and deny Cronus the honour which they did his ſon? or rather were they afraid Cronus would diſgrace the line of Cain, and would not have it thought Miſor and Thoth were deſcended from him, whom yet they acknowledge to be the founder of the Phœnician and

(B) But after all, it ſems not neceſſary to ſuppoſe, the Cabiri purpoſely omitted to mention the flood, in order to ſuppreſs the memory of that judgment on the idolatrous race of Cain; becauſe they might have retorted the reproach on their adverſaries, and pretended their religion to have been that falſe one for which the world was puniſhed; and this might have been the eaſier, conſidering, the tradition concerning that religion muſt have been much more uncertain than that of the deluge, to which a conſiderable part of mankind then living, was able to bear teſtimony. It is more probable, that the writers of thoſe records were entirely ignorant of the deluge; and conſequently that they are not genuine, or of that antiquity which is pretended.

Egyptian nations? how happened it, when they separated Nereus, or Japhet, from Cronus, that they did not make him the same honourable amends as they did his brother Sydyc (C), but drop him by the way, two or three generations lower? was he a reprobate not fit to keep company even with Cronus? to be serious, it is not to be imagined that Thoth, who directed the Cabiri to write these records [g], could think it a greater honour to be descended from a person in another line, who makes no figure in the history, than from Cronus, so renowned in the antient world: nor could he, as the case stood, have any prospect of concealing his true pedigree, if he were so minded, or the Cabiri be supposed to have so little regard to themselves, or their father Sydyc, if he were Shem, and in all probability still living, as to place themselves in the hateful line of Cain. The dislocation of Misor is opposed by a circumstance which seems to require that he should belong to the generation where he is placed in the history; for its being said that Cronus, when he came to man's age, used the council of Hermes, or Thoth, who was his secretary, seems to imply, that Thoth was a man of more years and greater experience than Cronus himself, and consequently could not be his grandson. It is also unlikely, that Sydyc, if he were Shem, should marry a daughter of Cronus, or Ham; which the bishop supposes he did to secure his quiet in Canaan, upon the presumption, that Shem was Melchizedec [h], which notion we have already shewn to be groundless [i], and shall consider farther hereafter.

NOR can we approve of another supposition of the bishop's, viz. that Isiris is the same with Misor, because said to be the brother of Chna, or Canaan; for they are certainly designed to be two persons, differing as well in age as other circumstances. Thoth was king of Egypt when the Cabiri wrote these records at his command; which shews that his father Misor, whom the bishop supposes to have been Menes, the first king of Egypt, who reigned but sixty two years, was dead; as the bishop himself confesses [k]: the son of Thabion, who turned the history into allegory, and mixed it with physical

[g] CUMBERL on Sanchon. p. 104. [h] Ibid. p 200. [i] See before, p. 276. [k] CUMBERL. on Sanchon. p. 95.

(C) The first writers of these memoirs seem to have nothing more in view, by the particulars relating to Sydyc and Nereus, and their descendants, than to account for the original of the Cabiri, and of navigation, and to do honour to Berytus, a Phœnician city, by making it the prime seat of their religion and trade.

ſical matters, came after the Cabiri, and delivered in the new form he had given it to thoſe who preſided over the ſacred myſteries, from whom it paſſed to their ſucceſſors, and to thoſe that were afterwards introduced among them, of whom Iſiris was one. So that Iſiris ſeems not only to have been ſome generations later than the Cabiri and Thoth, who reigned but ſixty two years; but alſo to have been no more than one of the Phœnician prieſts, and not a king of Egypt. Nor is this in the leaſt repugnant to the ſcripture account; it being very probable, that the nation properly called Canaanites, or Phœnicians, did not take their name immediately from Canaan the ſon of Ham, but from ſome later deſcendant of his of the ſame name, ſince we do not find the Canaanites among his children, or deſcendants, in the place ſet apart for giving an account of them [l]; nor do we hear of them, or the Perizzites, another branch deſcended from Canaan, before Abraham's arrival in the land of promiſe [m].

MANY more objections ariſe againſt the biſhop's ſcheme, but we think it enough to have conſidered the fundamentals of it, leaving the reader to make his farther remarks from the hints we have given. Upon the whole, we think the hiſtory of Sanchoniatho will in no wiſe admit of the corrections the biſhop has made; it may be confuted by ſcripture, but it can never be reconciled with it; the plan is quite different from that of Moſes, and ſeems to be grounded upon a very different tradition relating to the firſt ages; if it be not rather a hiſtory framed long after the facts ſpoken of happened, by mixing fable, or invention, with ſome vulgar notions and glimmerings of antient tranſactions, which ſtill remained in the time of the author, or editor, when the genuine and more perfect tradition of things had been loſt.

BUT, before we cloſe this ſection, we muſt not omit mentioning a word concerning the chronology of this hiſtory of Sanchoniatho, in which the biſhop ſeems to vary from himſelf. In one place he ſays, it is bounded within the three firſt centuries after the flood, as ending with the beginning of Thoth's reign in Egypt [n]: in another, that it ends within four or five hundred years after that event [o]. But the repugnancy is more obvious with regard to Cronus, or Ham. The biſhop allows in ſeveral places, and thinks it but reaſonable, that Ham and the other children of Noah ſhould live to near about the ſame age, though he thinks Ham did not live altogether so long as Shem [p]. He says, it appears plain enough from Sanchoniatho, as in fact it does, that Cronus, or Ham, outlived his father Uranus, or Noah [q]: and as Noah's death is determined in scripture to have happened three hundred and fifty years after the flood, he concludes the life of Ham must be above four hundred and fifty years [r]. And elsewhere, from the circumstance of Chedorlaomer's invasion of Canaan [s], concluding Ham to be then dead, he fixes his death in the fifth year before Abraham's entrance into Canaan, A. M. 2078; that is, in the year of the flood 422 [t]. Notwithstanding all which, in another place, speaking of the age of Ham, he supposes him and his descendants to have shortened their days by debauchery, and that he only lived about three hundred years after the flood; and this, says the bishop, may well be granted, because his father lived fifty years longer, as it is certain his brother Shem outlived him two hundred years [u]. Such contradictions and mistakes may the greatest men run into when they have set their minds on an hypothesis; notwithstanding which, to do this learned writer justice, he has, in his remarks on our author, given great light into the history of those antient times, and made many valuable observations.

[l] Geneſ. x. 15. [m] Geneſ. xii. 6. and xiii. 7. [n] CUMBERL. on Sanchon. p. 95. [o] Ibid. p. 119.

SECT. IV.

Of the removal of mankind from about mount Ararat to the plain of Shinaar; and of the building of Babel.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ 2597.

The first migration of the sons of Noah to Shinaar.

AS there fall two or three very remarkable events within this period, namely, the building of Babel by the posterity of Noah, the confusion of languages, and the dispersion of mankind; it is incumbent upon us to give the reader some account of those important facts, the effects of which are felt to this day, and were doubtless of great benefit to mankind.

AFTER the death of Noah, his sons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, thought fit to remove, with their families, from the plains near Ararat, where we suppose they till then continued, and, travelling from the east, found a plain in the land of Shinaar, and dwelt there [w]. The wording of this passage has occasioned some doubt, whether by Ararat could be meant Armenia, since then their journeying would have been from [p] Ibid. p. 103. 119, 120, 123. [q] Ibid. p. 119. [r] Ibid. p. 104. [s] Genes xiv. [t] CUMBERL. on Sanchon, p. 123. [u] Idem, Orig. Gent. Antiquiss p 172. [w] Genes. xi. 2.

the

the north-weſt. Wherefore others, inſtead of from the eaſt, render it eaſtward. But there is no need to ſtrain the text to explain a geographical difficulty. Moſes ſpoke according to the beſt of his knowledge, or perhaps with reference to the wilderneſs where he wrote; from which Shinaar lying eaſtward, he might judge Ararat lay eaſtward too, as lying farther off: or the difficulty may be eaſily ſolved by ſuppoſing with Kircher [x] and others, that as mankind multiplied they ſpread themſelves in the country ſouth eaſtward of Ararat, and made ſmall removes between the time of their deſcending from Ararat, and their coming to the place from whence they are mentioned to have moved towards Shinaar, which might have lain weſtward of that place. But after all, the miſtake ſeems to lie on the ſide of the critics, and not of Moſes; for even the mountain, which at preſent paſſes with us for Ararat, lies above two degrees more eaſt than the the city of Shinaar, or Senjâr, from whence the plain in all probability took the name, and if the ſons of Noah entered Shinaar on the north ſide, they muſt of neceſſity have journeyed from the eaſt, or, which is the ſame thing, have travelled weſtward, in order to arrive there; though at the ſame time they muſt have travelled ſouthward too; for Ararat lies about north-eaſt by north of Senjâr; but all the geographers (De Liſle excepted) having drawn that mountain a good way out of its place to the weſtward, the commentators, and hiſtorians who relied upon them, have been embarraſſed to reconcile the words of ſcripture with what they took for certain fact, viz. that Ararat lay to the weſtward, and not at all to the eaſtward of Senjâr.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

IT is hard to determine what were the limits of the land of Shinaar (D) in the early times. We are informed from ſcripture, that the city and tower of Babel were built in a plain within that province [y], and that Nebuchadnezzar carried the veſſels of the temple into the land of Shinaar into

The extent and ſituation of the land of Shinaar.

[x] Turris Babel. p. 12. [y] Geneſ. xi. 2, &c. x. 10.

(D) The name in Hebrew is שנער Shinaar, or Senaar, in Arabic سنجار Senjâr. Bochart ſays, it is derived from נער naar, which ſignifies to ſcatter, and diſſipate (86); and if ſo, it could not have been impoſed by the Noachidæ on the plain where they firſt fixed, as Joſephus affirms (87), without ſuppoſing them to have foreſeen the diſperſion; to which that etymology, if it be right, plainly alludes.

(16) Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 5. (87) Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 4.

the

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

the house of his GOD [z], which in all probability was the temple of Belus in Babylon. Besides Babel there are three other cities mentioned in scripture to have been situate in Shinaar, viz. Erec, Accad, and Calneh [a]; but as all the four seem to have stood at no great distance from each other [b], we cannot thence judge of the extent of the country. Thus far in general may be presumed, that it took in more to the north of Babel than to the south, and that it lay for the most part, though not entirely, between the Euphrates and Tigris; for Babylon, if it was the same with Babel, stood on the east side of Euphrates (E), which passed along the west side of it, before Nebuchadnezzar built the new city on this side that river, which thenceforth ran through the middle of the whole.

WE meet with footsteps of the name of Shinaar in those parts, both in antient and modern authors; Sennaar of Babylon is mentioned by Hestiæus the Milesian [c], and the city of Singara in Mesopotamia by several [d]. Some speak of a territory of that name in the same quarters [e]; Ptolemy places both the city and mountain of Singara there [f]: all which seem to be the same city, mountain (F), and territory, which still bear [z] Dan. i. 2. [a] Genes. x. 10. [b] See before, p. 272. in the notes [c] Apud JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 5. & EUSEB. de pr. ev. l. 9. c. 15. [d] PLINIUS, Hist. Nat. AMMIAN. MARCELLINUS, EUTROPIUS, ATHANASIUS, in Epist. ad solitar. Vit. agent. [e] SEXT. RUFUS, POMP. LÆTUS. [f] Tab. 4. Asiæ.

(E) Among other circumstances it may be observed that the modern travellers represent the Euphrates a mile and half broad in those parts; whereas Strabo says the breadth of the branch of that river which passed through Babylon was but a furlong (88), or the eighth part of a mile; though the bridge according to Diodorus (89), was five furlongs in length, if he does not mistake: but supposing the river as broad as the bridge was long, it will be but little more than one third of the present breadth of the Euphrates: which yet lower down, at Hella, becomes more narrow.

(F) Haitho the Armenian writes, that in Mesopotamia there are two mountains of great length, abounding with fruit trees, the more easterly of which is called Sinjar, the other Lessor (90); probably the desert, or plain of Senjâr lay between these two ridges of hills. We cannot conceive upon what ground Heidegger charges Haitho with a mistake, as if he made Sinjâr a mountain of

(88) Lib. 16. (89) Lib. 2. (90) Haitho de Tartaris, cap. 12. apud Grinæum, nov. orb. p. 373.

Chaldæa

bear the name of Senjâr in the east [g]. The part of Mesopotamia chosen out by the astronomers in the time of the Khalifah al Mamûn, for measuring the content of a degree of a great circle, was the desert of Senjâr [h]; which the nature of the experiment shews to have been large, as well as a level country: and this we take to have been at least a part of the antient plain of Shinaar. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ 2597.

THE city of Senjâr stands, or stood, in the northern borders (as we conjecture) of its territory, in the desert, at the foot of a certain mountain (perhaps that of the same name), twenty one miles from Balad, and twenty seven from Mûsol, which two last are situate on the Tigris, twenty one miles asunder [i]. It is said to lie to the southward of Nisibin, almost three stages west of the Tigris [k], or more particularly of Mûsol [l]; so that Ptolemy is in the wrong to place Singara on that river. As for the difference between the words Shinaar and Singar it is very small, considering, in the Hebrew the same character stands for the Ain and the Ghain (G). We find Senjâr called also by another name, viz. al Sâmara [m], which seems to be the contraction of Sarra-man-rai, a city on the east of the Tigris, three stages above Baghdâd, and for a time the seat of the Khalîfah [n].

THE sons of Noah, upon their arrival in this plain, began to think of building a city and tower. The learned are divided in their opinions about the sense of the passage which gives an account of this enterprize: And they said go to, let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach unto heaven, and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth (o). Many imagine, that the motive which induced them to undertake this building, was their apprehension of a second deluge, and therefore they resolved to The building of Babel began

[g] GEOGR. NUB. p. 201. THEVENOT, Voyages, part 2. c. 10. [h] Vid. GOL. Not. ad Alfragan p. 72. [i] GEOGR. NUB. p. 201. [k] GOLIUS ubi supra. [l] HYDE de Relig. vet. pers. p. 64. [m] ABU'LFARAG. Hist. Dyn. p. 18. [n] Vid. GOL. ubi supra, p. 130. GEOGR. NUBIENS. p. 203. (o) Gen. xi. 4.

Chaldæa (91): on the contrary, that author seems to have mistaken Haitho, and placed what he found in the chapter concerning Mesopotamia, as belonging to the foregoing chapter which treats of Chaldæa

G) Thus עמרה may be written either Gomorrah, or Amorrah, עזה either Gazah, or Azzah, as we find it in the margin of our Bibles (92).

(91) Heidegg. Hist. Patr. tom. I. p. 419. (92) Genes. x. 19.

raine

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

raise a structure of sufficient height to fly to in case of danger [o]. Others think, there is no room for this suggestion, for in that case they would rather have built it on an eminence than a plain, and the scripture expressly assigns the reason of their setting about it, viz. to make them a name, or leave a memorial of themselves, lest they should be scattered, or, as it is otherwise rendered (perhaps to serve the purpose) before they should be scattered abroad [p]; which implies, they knew they should be dispersed before they began to build, being warned by GOD, according to some, to separate themselves into colonies [q]. But a third sort, to whom the text appears altogether unintelligible, as it now stands in the several translations, will have it, that the word שם shem should not be rendered name, but sign; and so the passage will run, let us make us a sign, lest we be scattered; that is, as Perizonius explains it, the tower was to serve them as a beacon, or mark, by the sight of which, or of a signal made from the top of it, they might avoid straying in the open plains with their flocks (the first men being shepherds), and be brought back to the city which they had built for a place of abode, being unwilling to disperse themselves [r].

Their design frustrated.

BUT whatever the motives of the chiefs were, which seem to be dubiously expressed in the text, the effect of their consultation was, that they set on foot the building of the city and tower of Babel. But this enterprise being displeasing in the eyes of GOD, as tending to frustrate or delay the execution of his design, which was, that mankind should not always continue together in one place, he obliged them to give over their project before they had finished it (H), by confounding their language, so that one could not understand what another said; from whence the city took the name of Babel [s], which signifies confusion: whereupon the dispersion and planting of nations ensued.

[o] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 5. EUTYCH. Annal. p. 50. BASNAGE, Antiq. Judaiques, tom. II. cap. 2. § 27. p. 419. [p] Vid. the vulgat. translat. Gen. xi. 41. [q] USHER's Annals in English, ad ann. mundi, 1757. [r] Vid. PERIZON. Origin. Babylon. cap. 11. p. 193. [s] Gen. xi. 7, 8, 9.

(H) Some pretend, that the tower was thrown down by tempestuous winds, on the builders heads; and that the city of Babylon was built out of the ruins (93).

(93) Abyden. apud Euseb. de præp. Ev. l. 9. c. 14. & Sibylla, apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 4.

THIS

THIS great event happened juſt before the birth of Peleg, in the year of the flood four hundred and one, when the work, according to ſome, had been carried on twenty two years [t], and according to others forty [u]; ſo that the foundation muſt have been laid ten, or at moſt, but twenty eight years after Noah's death. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

MANY conſidering the confuſion of tongues, and the diſperſion of mankind thereupon, as a divine judgment, have deemed the building of Babel an evil attempt (I); and being concerned for the honour of Shem and his race, will not allow them to have been preſent at it, ſuppoſing that undertaking to be ſet on foot wholly by the unbelieving part of mankind [w], in which ſenſe they underſtand the words the children of men [x]. On the contrary, others will have it, that not only Shem, but Noah and Abraham (who, according to one way of computing the Hebrew chronology, were contemporary) aſſiſted in the raiſing of that ſtructure [y], while ſome ſay Nimrod, who is generally looked on as the chief promoter of that work [z], retired into Aſſyria, becauſe he would not give his aſſent to it [a]. The time of their enterprize. Whether ſinful.

THAT the building of Babel was a thing indifferent in itſelf, and no way ſinful, ſeems evident from the ſilence of ſcripture, which does not condemn that attempt as bold or preſumptuous, or intimate any revelation of a previous command to the contrary, which only could make it criminal. And that the family of Shem were concerned in the work as well as the reſt, appears from their ſharing in the puniſhment, [t] TORNIELLUS, SALIANUS, PERERIUS, &c. [u] SYNCEL. Chronogr. p. 80. EUTYCHIUS Annal. p. 53. [w] MORIN. Exercit. de Ling. cap 8 p. 47. SCOTANUS Hiſt. Sacr p. 48, &c. MARSHAM Chron. Canon. ſecul. 17. p. 478. VON DER HART Ephemer. Philol. Diſc. 3. USSER. Chronol. Sacra, part 1. cap. 5. p. 26. GURTLER. Hiſt. Univerſal. cap. 9. p. 93. BOCHART. Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 10. AUGUST. de civit. Dei, lib. 17. cap. 5. [x] Geneſ. xi. 5. [y] ABEN EZRA apud R. Gedal. in Shalſh. hakkab. p. 7. b. [z] JOSEPH. Antiq lib. 1. cap. 5. VON DER HART ubi ſupra. AUGUST. de civit. Dei, lib. 17. cap. 4. CONSTANT. MANASS. Annal. p. 14. [a] See before p. 271.

(I) A learned divine of our nation, being of this opinion, ſuppoſes, that this tower, (whoſe pyramidal form, he ſays, reſembles fire, or the conic ſhape of its flame) was a monument erected to the honour of the ſun, as the moſt probable cauſe of drying up the flood (94). But of this there is not the leaſt footſtep in ſcripture.

(94) Teniſon of idolatry.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

if it be a puniſhment, that is, the confuſion of tongues; though this is denied by ſeveral [b]; for the languages of Elam, or Perſia, and of Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia, were different, as were alſo thoſe even of the deſcendants of Eber, the Arabs, and Jews, whatever others [c] may pretend; and if ſpeaking the Hebrew language be a proof, then the Canaanites were not concerned in the building of Babel, any more than Eber and his deſcendants, for their language was the ſame with the Hebrew.

BUT this ſuppoſed abſence of the Shemites, as alſo another common opinion, current among thoſe who adhere to the Hebrew chronology, that ſeveral nations were planted before the diſperſion, are overthrown by the authority of ſcripture, which ſtrongly intimates, that all mankind then in being, without exception, were aſſembled in the plain of Shinaar (H); and [b] BUXTORF. in Diſſertat. Philologico-theolog. p. 70. CHRYSOSTOM. Homil. 30. in Geneſ. FULLER. Miſcell. Sacr. lib. 4. cap. 4. SCOTANUS, Bibl. Æ'at. ſec. p. 91. HEIDEGGER. Hiſt. Patriarch. tom. I. Exercit. 16 § 16. STEPH. MORIN. ubi ſup. p. 44, & 68. [c] EPIPHAN. apud GLYCAM, Annal. p. 3. CONSTANT. MANASS. Annal. p. 14.

(H) There is not a fact in all the Moſaical hiſtory which ſeems to be more firmly eſtabliſhed than this. As ſoon as Moſes hath brought the three ſons of Noah out of the ark, he takes care to inform us, that of them was the WHOLE EARTH overſpread (93). And, after giving us the names of their deſcendants at the time of the diſperſion, he ſubjoins, and by theſe were the nations divided in the earth after the flood (94). Then, proceeding to give an account of that memorable tranſaction, he tells us, That the whole earth was of one language, and of one ſpeech (95). That as they, namely, the whole earth, journeyed from the Eaſt, THEY found a plain in the land of Shinaar, and dwelt there; and they ſaid, let us make brick, and build a city and a tower; and the LORD came down to ſee the city and the tower which the children of men builded, and ſaid, behold the people is one, and they have all one language (96). Theſe ſeem to be convertible terms, and import, that as all mankind collected there in one body, had but one language, ſo all thoſe who had but one language, were aſſembled in one body; which argument is the more cogent, becauſe it is allowed on all hands, that there was but one language in the world at the time of the building of Babel, which city was ſo called, becauſe the LORD did there con-

(93) Geneſ ix. 19 (94) Gen. x. 32. (95) Gen. xi. 1. (96) Ibid. v. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

found

I

and it is probable, that after the building of Babel, Shem and his defcendants chofe, or accepted of, the adjacent country for their fettlement [d]. So that the moft we can allow, with Buxtorf [e] and others, is, that they diffuaded the reft from that enterprife.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chrift, 2597.

THE reader muft needs have a curiofity to fee fome account of a city and tower which employed all the men in the world for fo many years in building them. The fcripture informs us, that they made ufe of burnt brick inftead of ftone, and flime inftead of mortar [f]. According to an eaftern tradition, they were three years employed in making and burning thofe bricks, each of which was thirteen cubits long, ten broad, and five thick [g]. The flime with which thefe bricks were cemented, was a pitchy fubftance, or bitumen [h], brought from a city in the neighbourhood of Babylon, called Is [i], or Hit (I). The oriental found the language of all the earth, and from thence did fcatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth (97).

A defcription of Babel.

[d] See § 6. [e] Differtat. Philologico-theol. p. 70. [f] Gen. xi. 3. [g] EBN AMID. p. 14. EUTYCH. Annal. p. 53 [h] JOSEPHUS Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 4. [i] HERODOTUS Clio, p. 32.

From the beginning to the end of this narration, the connection is fo well preferved between the antecedent and the relative, that there is no room to fuppofe, that any lefs than all mankind were gathered together in the plain of Shinaar, and affifted in the building of Babel; and Mofes feems to have made thofe unufual repetitions to inculcate the certainty of that fact, and take away all ground for fuppofing any branch of Noah's pofterity were in any other part of the earth at that time. Wherefore the arguments ufed by fome, that the phrafe all the earth, is often taken in a reftrained and improper fenfe elfewhere in fcripture, to fignify only a part of the earth 98, and fometimes no more than the land of promife 99; as alfo that the expreffion the children of men, confines the builders to the unbelieving part of mankind only, becaufe that phrafe is alfo ufed in fuch a fenfe in other places of fcripture (1), are of no force here; the fenfe of the whole (by which that of a part is always to be governed being directly againft fuch a meaning, and this laft expreffion being evidently ufed only to vary the diction: befides, thofe who urge this laft argument, do not feem to confider, that before the difperfion, infidelity could not well have crept in amongft mankind; who, it is but reafonable to conclude, while they kept together, were united in one faith as well as government.

(I) It is much no modern author, that we know of, excepting Bochart (2), out of the many who have occafionally, or profeffedly

(97) Ibid. v. 8, 9. (98 Jerem li. 7, 49. Dan. ii. 39. (99) Judg. vi. 37. 1 Sam. xvii. 46. Ifai. x. 14. (1) 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. 2 Sam. vii. 14. Pfal. xii. 1. (2) Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 11. fpoke

Year of the Flood, 401.
Year before Christ, 2597.

oriental authors say, that the city, built by the sons of Noah, was spoken of Babylon, have taken notice of this nice circumstance in Herodotus. That prince of historians observes, that by the city Is, eight days journey from Babylon, there runs a small river of the same name into Euphrates, whose waters carry along with them many lumps of bitumen, which are conveyed thence to the Walls of Babylon. Diodorus says, the quantity of bitumen in those parts is so great, that it suffices the inhabitants not only for their buildings, but for fewel, being dried and burned like wood (3). Hit is called Æliopolis by Isidore of Charax (4), who mentions the springs of bitumen near it, and places it on the Euphrates, about two hundred and fifteen miles west of Seleucia, on the Tigris, which agrees better with Herodotus than the account of modern authors, who place Hit thirty one parasangs, or about one hundred twenty eight miles west of Baghdâd, (supposed to stand near, if not in the place of Seleucia and twenty one parasangs west of Ambâr, once a famous city on the Euphrates (5), not far north from Felujah, and eight to the north of Kadesiah, a town no less remarkable for the battle, wherein the Arabs gained the victory, which decided the fate of Persia (6).

These springs of bitumen are called Oyûn Hit, the fountains of Hît, and are much celebrated by the Arabs and Persians; the latter call it Cheshmeh kir, the fountain of pitch. This liquid bitumen they call nafta, and the Turks, to distinguish it from pitch, give it the name of kara sakiz, or black mastic. A Persian geographer says, that nafta issues out of the springs of the earth, as ambergrease issues out of those of the sea (7). All the modern travellers, except Rauwolf, who went to Persia and the Indies by the way of the Euphrates, before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, mention this fountain of liquid bitumen as a strange thing. Some of them take notice of the river (8) mentioned by Herodotus, and assure us, that the people of the country have a tradition, that when the tower of Babel was building, they brought the bitumen from hence (9), which is confirmed by the Arab and Persian historians (10).

Hit, Heit, (11), Eit (12), Ait (13), or Idt (14), as it is variously written by travellers, is a great Turkish town (15), situate upon (3) Lib. 2. p. 100. (4) Inter Geog. Vet. Græc. Ed. Hudsoni, v. II. (5) Vid. Golij Not. ad Alfragan. p. 124, 125. Geogr. Nubiens. p. 199. (6) D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. Art. Hit, Ambâr,& Cadessia. (7) Apud eundem, ibid. Art. Hit. (8) Eldred. See Hackluit's Collection of Voyages. vol. I. (9) Vid. le Voyage de Persees ann. 1598 & 1599, par un Gentilhomme de la suitte du Seigneur Sherley, a la p. 110 des Relations veritables & curieuses. (10) Vid. D'Herbelot ubi sup. (11) Newberry. (12) Balbi. Viaggio dell' Indie Orientale, cap. 4. Vid. eundem, apud de Brie, India Orientalis, vol VII. (13) Cartwright & Fitch. (14) Rauwolf. (15) Idem, in his travels, part 2. chap. 6. p. 163.

the

was three hundred and thirteen fathoms in length, and one hundred and fifty one in breadth; that the walls of it were five thousand five hundred and thirty three fathoms high, and thirty three broad; and the tower ten thousand fathom, or twelve miles high [k]: which dimensions bear no manner of proportion to each other. Even Jerom affirms, from the testimony of eye-witnesses who examined the remains of the tower carefully, that it was four miles high [l]; but Ado raises the height to no less than five thousand miles [m]; but these are shameful extravagancies. The only account we can depend upon, as to the dimensions of this tower, supposing it to be the same tower with that which stood in the midst of the temple of Belus, afterwards built round it by Nebuchadnezzar, must be taken from prophane authors. Herodotus tells us, it was a furlong in length, and as much in breadth [n] (K); and Strabo determines

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

[k] EBN AMÎD & EUTYCH, ubi supra. [l] HIERON. lib. 5. Comment. in Esaiam. [m] In Chronica. [n] Lib. 1. p. 33.

the right, or west side of the Euphrates (16); and has a castle, to the south-west of which (17), and three miles from the town, in a valley, are many springs of this black substance (18), each of which makes a noise like a smith's forge, incessantly puffing and blowing out the matter so loud, that it may be heard a mile off; wherefore the Moors [Arabs] call it Bâb al jehennam, that is hell-gate (19). It swallows up all heavy things, and many camels from time to time fall into the pits, and are irrecoverably lost (20). It issues from a certain lake, sending forth a filthy smoke, and continually boiling over with the pitch, which spreads itself over a great field that is always full of it. It is free for every one to take; they used it to caulk or pitch their boats, laying it on two or three inches thick, which keeps out the water (21); with it also they pitch their houses made of palm-tree branches: if it was not that the inundations of the Euphrates carry away the pitch, which covers all the sands from the place where it rises to the river, there would have been mountains of it long since (22). The very ground and stones thereabouts afford bitumen, and the fields abundance of salt-petre (23).

(K) The words of Herodotus are, Ἐν μέσῳ δὲ τοῦ ἱεροῦ πύργος στερεὸς οἰκοδόμηται, σταδίου καὶ τὸ μῆκος καὶ τὸ εὖρος, καὶ ἐπὶ τούτῳ τῷ πύργῳ ἄλλος πύργος ἐπιβέβηκε, καὶ ἕτερος μάλα ἐπὶ τούτῳ, μέχρις οὗ ὀκτὼ πύργων. In the midst of the temple a solid tower is built, of a furlong in length, determines the height to have been a furlong [o], that is the eighth part of a mile, or six hundred and sixty foot, which is itself prodigious; for thereby it appears to have exceeded the greatest of the Egyptian pyramids in height one hundred seventy nine foot, though it fell short of it at the basis by thirty three [p]. It consisted of eight square towers one above another, gradually decreasing in breadth; which, with the winding of the stairs from the top to the bottom on the outside, gave it the resemblance of a pyramid, as Strabo calls it [q]. This antique form, joined to the extraordinary height of the structure, easily induces us to believe it to be the same tower mentioned by Moses; Nebuchadnezzar finishing the design, which the sons of Noah were obliged, by the confusion of tongues, to leave unexecuted.

(16) Eldred, Balbi, &c. ubi sup. (17) Newberry's Travels. See Purchas's Pilgrims, vol. II. p. 1412. (18) Eldred ubi supra. (19) Cartwright's, or the Preacher's Travels, p 105. Eldred ubi sup Fitch's Travels. See Purchas ubi supra, p. 1730. (20) Eldred & Newberry ubi supra. (21) Fitch & Balbi, ubi sup. (22) Balbi, ibid. (23) Voyage de Perse, ubi supra.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

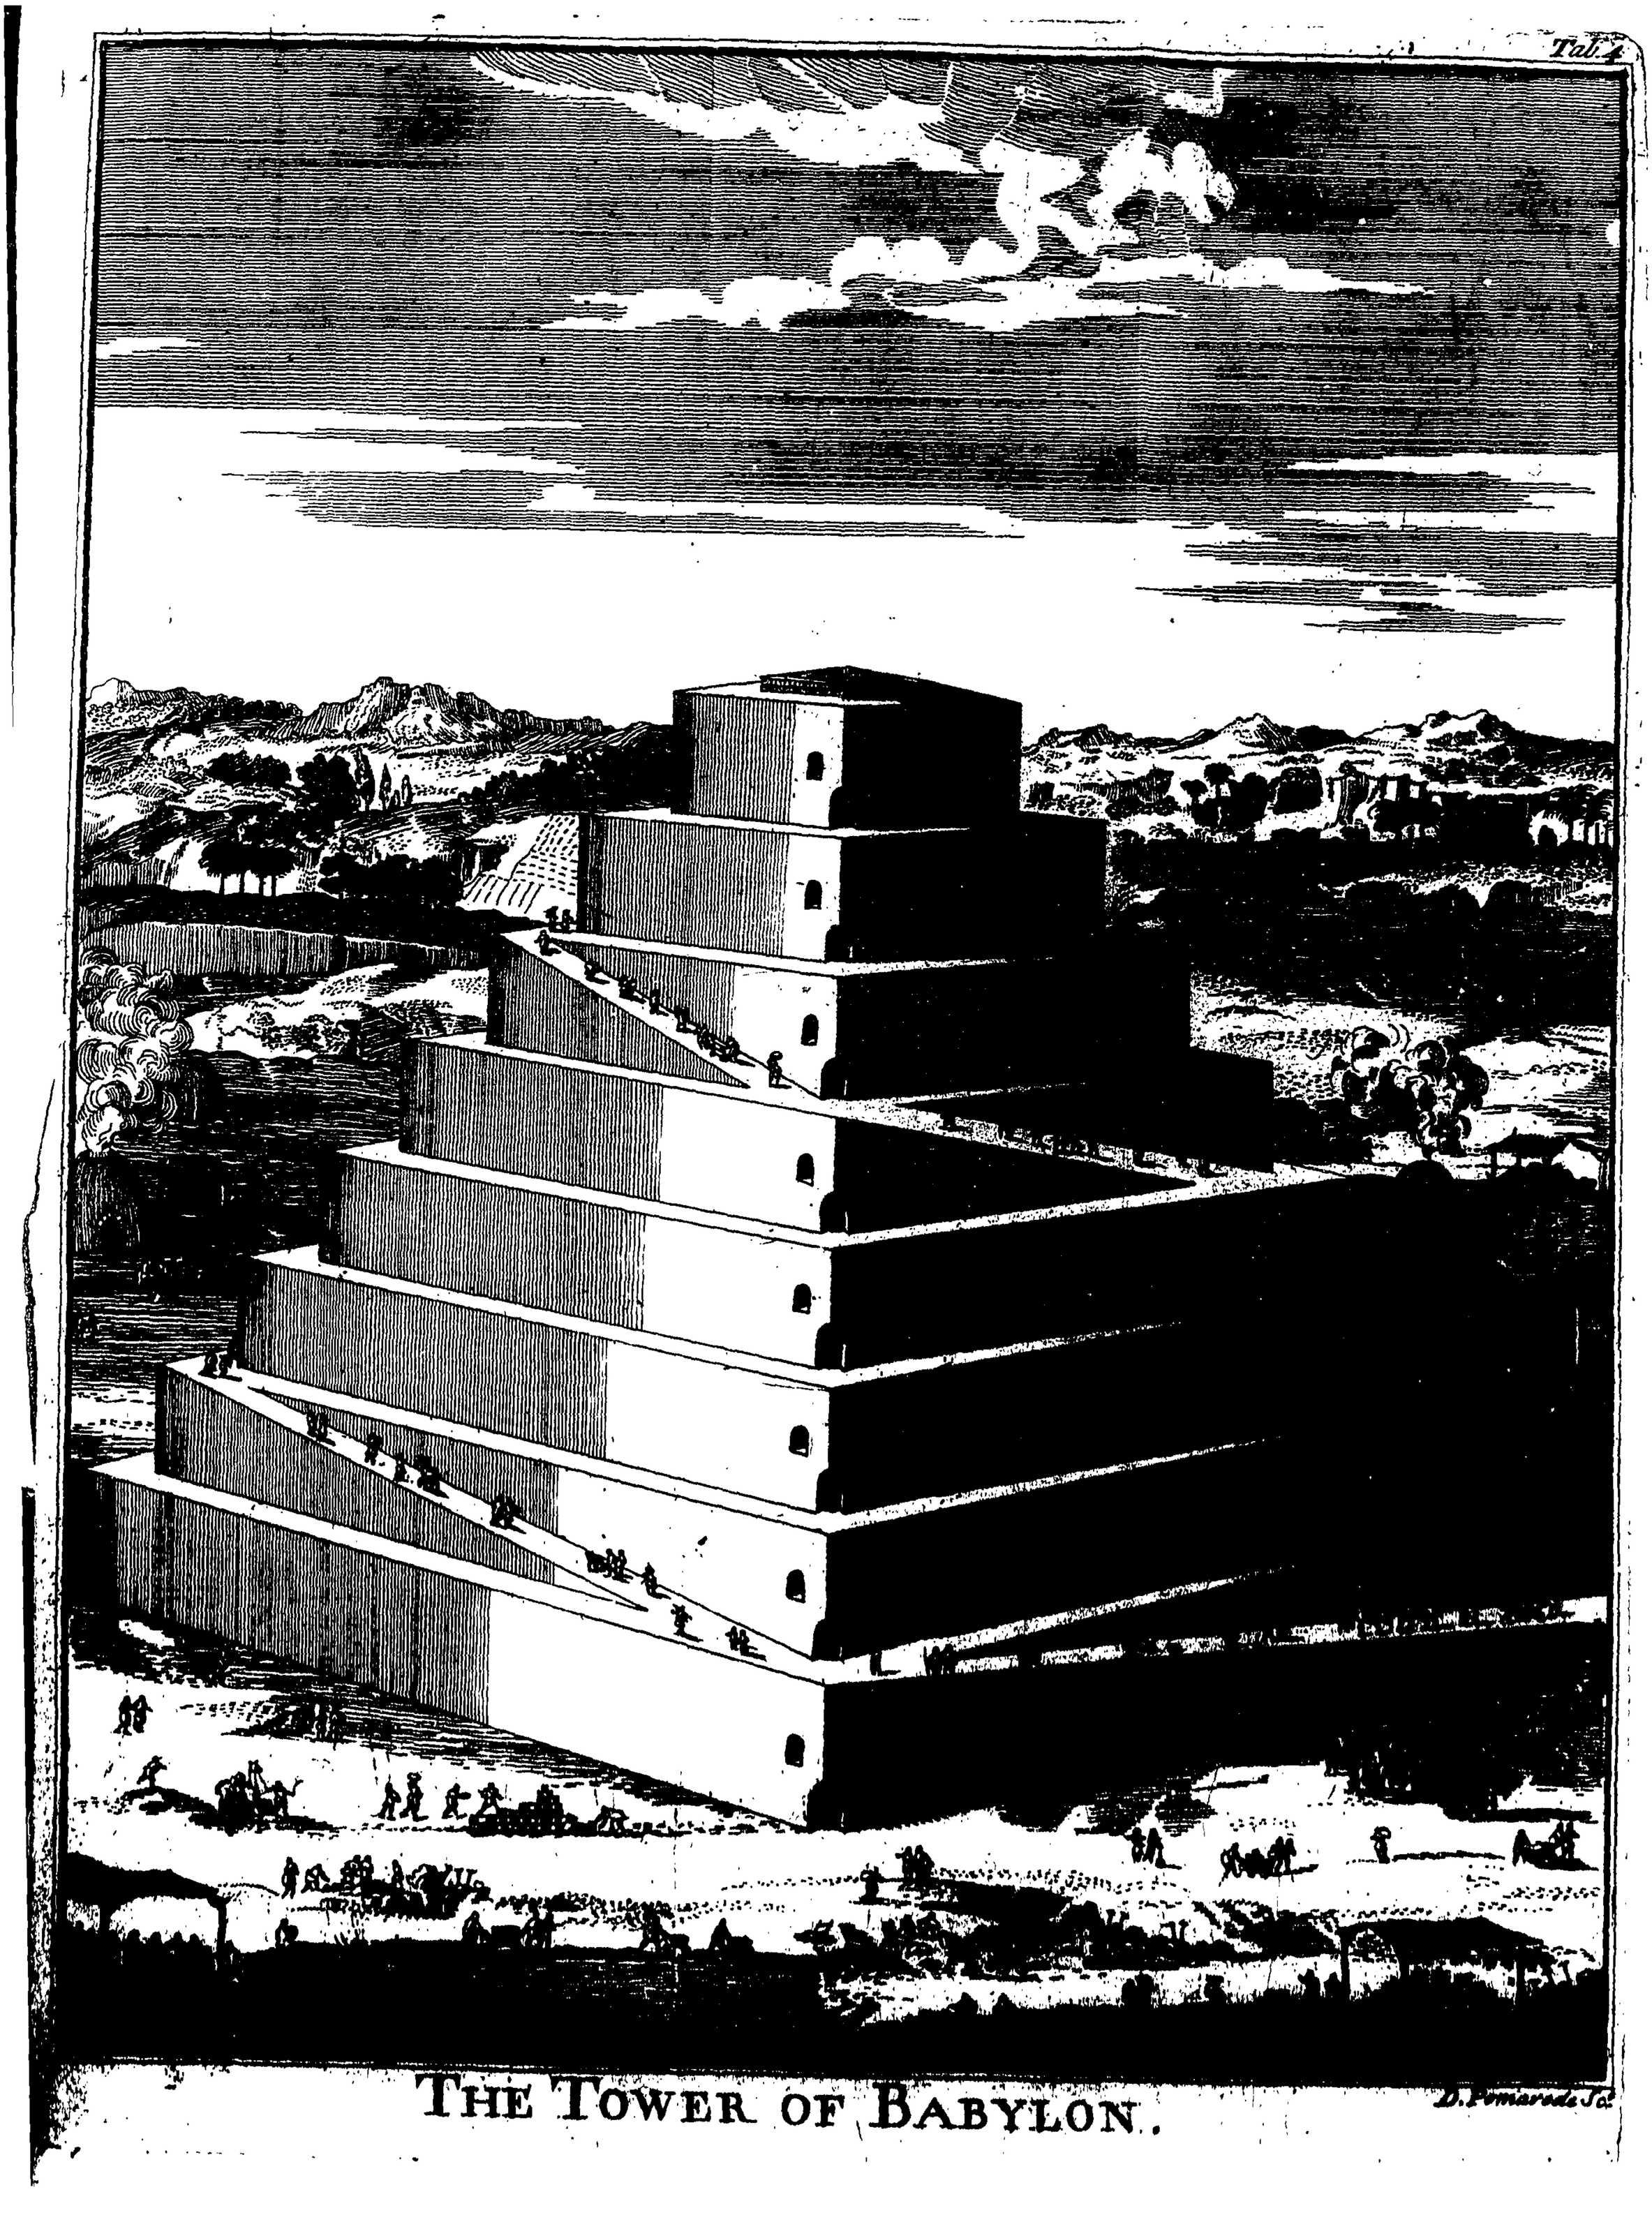
WHAT this most wonderful city was in its flourishing state, and the several changes of fortune which befel it till at length it was totally destroyed, the reader will find remarked in the course of this history. In the mean time, we would willingly gratify his curiosity with some account of the ruins of this celebrated antiquity, which are so defaced, that the people of the country are not certain of their situation; and this has occasioned travellers to differ concerning it. Most of them, led by a tradition of the inhabitants, have judged a place about eight or nine miles to the west, or north-west of Baghdâd, to be the tower of Babel (L). Rauwolf supposes, he found and as much in breadth; and upon this tower another tower is erected, and another again upon that, and so on to the number of eight towers. It is true, the word μῆκος, which we here translate length, may also signify height; but some authors having thence supposed, as the construction seems to require, that the first tower was a furlong high, and concluding the other seven to be of equal height, have made the whole a mile high; to avoid which extravagant consequence, it seems more reasonable to understand Herodotus as we have rendered the passage, unless the furlong be taken for the height of all the eight towers.

[o] Lib. 16. p. 1073.

[p] See GREAVES Descr. of the Pyramids, p. 68, 69.



[q] Lib. 16.

(L) The name of this monument is variously written by travellers, Carcuftate Nemeru (24), Karkûf (25), Agarcuf (26); all who mention it call it the tower of Nimrod; and we are told, that

(24) Balbi Viaggio della Ind. Orient. cap. 5. p. 22. (25) Teixeira Viage de la India hasta Italia, p. 130. (26) Tavernier Voyage de Perse, l. 2. c. 7.

the

THE TOWER OF BABYLON.

found the ruins of Babylon upon the Euphrates, near Felujia (27), and that it is at preſent called the remains of the tower of Babel (28). It is ſituate, according to ſome, ſeven or eight miles from Baghdâd (29), according to others nine miles (30) towards the weſt northweſt (31): it is conſpicuous at a vaſt diſtance (32), ſtanding by itſelf in a wide plain between the Euphrates and Tigris, with nothing great or high about it; which is the reaſon that, contrary to what is generally obſerved in other objects, it appears greater at a diſtance than when one draws near it (33. It is fallen to ruin on all ſides, and hath thereby made, as it were, a little ſhapeleſs mountain (34), which it reſembles more than a tower (35), only it is rather ſquare than round (36).

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

It is built of ſun-burnt bricks, each a foot ſquare and ſix inches thick (37); ſome ſay three quarters of a yard long and a quarter thick (38); others but ten inches ſquare and three thick (39). Authors differ as to the manner in which theſe bricks are ranged, and the materials made uſe of for ſetting and binding them together: they obſerve firſt that there is laid a bed conſiſting of canes, or reeds bruiſed to pieces, mixed with wheat-ſtraw, and ſpread an inch and half thick (40); ſome call them matts made of canes and palm-tree leaves (41); others ſay only ſtraw the thickneſs of three inches (42), which appear as yellow and freſh as if they were but newly laid (43), and are ſtill very durable (44). Upon this bed lie ſeven ranges of bricks; then another bed of reeds and ſix rows of bricks; then a third bed with five rows of bricks, decreaſing in that manner till you come to the top (45). Some ſay the ranges of bricks are interchangeably ſix and ſeven upon a bed (46); and others place a bed betwixt every courſe of bricks (47); but that is probably a miſtake, though between each courſe of bricks there is laid a little Straw (48), or rather they are ſet in bituminous mortar (49), conſiſting of pitch and earth, for which an inch may be allowed; which is at preſent the faſhion of building at Baghdâd, there being lujia (M), about thirty six miles to the south-west of Baghdâd. And not far off a great lake of pitch (50), probably that of Hit before mentioned. There are fifty of these ranges of seven and six bricks, insomuch that the whole height may amount to one hundred and thirty eight feet (51): others say, 'tis reduced to one hundred and eight, or one hundred and twenty feet (52). This heap is in compass a quarter of a mile (53), or at most three hundred paces (54), not a mile, as one writes (55), the rains having washed it away on all sides. It has no entrance (56), being a solid mass, only at the foot of it one sees a maghâra or lion's cave; and towards the middle there is an opening, which passes quite through the building about a foot and a half square, besides a great window towards the top, into which our author threw a grapple, in order to ascend it, but the bricks giving way had like to have killed him with their fall (57).

(27) Idem, ibid. The Preacher's Travels, p. 99, 100. (28) Ibid. (29) Cæſar Frederic. See Hackluit, vol. II. p. 25, & 269. Fitch's Travels: See Purchas's Pilgrims, vol. II. p. 1730. Balbi ubi ſup. cap. 7. p. 26. (30) Teixeira ubi ſup. La Boullaye le Gouze Voyage, chap. 55. p. 312. (31) La Boullaye le Gouze, ibid. (32) Tavernier ubi ſup. (33) Balbi ubi ſupra. (34) Fitch & Balbi ubi ſupra. (35) La Boullaye ubi ſup. p. 314. (36) Tavern. ubi ſup. (37) La Boullaye ubi ſup (38) Cæſar Frederic, & Eldred, apud Hackluit ubi ſup. Cartwright ubi ſup. (39) Tavernier ubi ſup. (40) Idem, ibid. (41) Cartwright. (42) La Boullaye ubi ſup. (43) Idem, ibid. (44) Balbi ubi ſupra: (45) Tavernier ubi ſupra. (46) Boullaye ubi ſup. (47) Cartwright ubi ſupra. (48) Tavernier ubi ſupra. (49) Cartwright ubi ſup.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

Travellers disagree in their sentiments of this tower: one says, it has been so well described by Moses, that the sight of the remains and ruins, would make one admire the veracity with which the writings of that great prophet are penned (58); but another declares, that, according to Moses's description, there is no likelihood that this should be the tower of Babel; and therefore, rejecting the vulgar opinion of the country, he looks upon that of the Arabs to be more probable, who say, it was built by one of their princes for a beacon to assemble his subjects in time of war (59); and this seems to be the truth of the matter.

(M) Rauwolf, a German physician, who in the year 1574 passed down the Euphrates in his way to Baghdâd, being come to a village by him called Elugo, and by others, more properly, Felugia, which was the landing place for that city, writes thus; "The village of "Elugo is situated where formerly Babylon stood; but at present "there is not an house to be seen for the shelter of passengers. "The country is so dry and barren that it cannot be tilled; and so "bare, that I should have doubted very much, whether this potent "city (which once was the most stately and famous in the world, "seated in the pleasant and fruitful country of Shinaar) did stand "there, if I had not known it by its situation and several delicate "antiquities; which still are standing in great desolation; first by "the old bridge over Euphrates, whereof there are some pieces and "arches still remaining a little above where we landed, built of "brick, and of wonderful firmness. It is admirable also how they "could build a bridge here, where the river is so deep, and at

(50) Boullaye ubi sup. (51) Idem, ibid. (52) Tavernier ubi sup. (53) Cartwright ubi sup. (54) Boullaye & Tavernier ubi supra. (55) Balbi ubi sup. (56) Fitch ubi sup. (57) Boullaye ubi sup. (58) Idem, ibid. (59) Tavernier ubi sup.

"least

And della Valle was directed, by another tradition, to look for it about two days journey lower (N), near an antient city called

Year of the Flood, 401.
Year before Chriſt, 2597.

" leaſt half a league broad; yet in all the way from Bir [near " Aleppo] where the river is much narrower, we ſaw no bridge. " Near the bridge are heaps of Babyloniſh pitch to pay veſſels " withal; and juſt before the village is the hill whereon the caſtle " did ſtand, in a plain, whereon may ſtill be ſeen ſome remains of " the fortification, which is quite demoliſhed and uninhabited. " Not far off, behind it, ſtood the tower of Babel, ſtill to be ſeen, " half a League in diameter; but ſo entirely ruined, ſo low, and " ſo full of venomous beaſts, that have made holes through it, " that one dare not approach within half a mile of it, except in " two months of the year, when thoſe animals do not ſtir out (60).

" In the way to Baghdâd the road at firſt was very rough and " full of large and ſtately buildings, arches, and turrets ſtanding " in the ſand, whereof many were decayed and lay in ruins; others " pretty entire, very ſtrong, and adorned with artificial work, well " deſerving a more exact inſpection. The ſteeple of Daniel is en- " tire, built of black ſtone, and ſtill inhabited. It hath ſome re- " ſemblance for height and building to that of the Holy Croſs " church, or St. Maurice in Augsburg: from it may be viewed all " the ruins of the old Babylonian tower, the caſtle hill, together " with the ſtately buildings and the whole ſituation of the old " town very exactly. We reſted, after twelve hours march, near " two aſcents one behind the other, extending themſelves like two " parallel walls with openings in ſome places, which I take to have " been the gates of the old town (61), and the rather, becauſe I " ſaw in ſome places, under the ſand, wherewith the two aſcents " were almoſt covered, the old wall plainly appear—— Our author ſaw ſeveral other antiquities afterwards; but night coming on, in which he groped his way to Baghdâd, he loſt them (62); and, in all probability, among the reſt, the tower of Nimrod, deſcribed in the preceding note, which lies in this road. A late author has given ſome account of theſe ruins, but is much out as to the ſituation of them, as he generally is in his geography (63).

(N) Della Valle, who was at Baghdâd in the year 1616, was above five days travelling between that city and the ruins of Babel, which he went to ſee, taking the way, by the river ſide through Ruſwania, a village in Thevenot's time the landing-place for Baghdâd (64) inſtead of Felugia, which is not far off; though in his return, taking the ſhort cut through the plain, he arrived at Baghdâd in two days, from which city this ruin lies ſouth-weſtward, called Hella, situate upon the same river. Here also must be placed or more to the south. "In the middle of a vast and level plain, "says that excellent traveller, about a quarter of a league from "Euphrates, which in that place runs westward, appears a heap "of ruined buildings like a huge mountain, the materials of which "are so confounded together that one knows not what to make "of it. Its figure is square, and rises in form of a tower or py- "ramid, with four fronts which answer to the four quarters of the "compass; but it seems longer from north to south than from east "to west, and is, as far as I could judge by my pacing it, a large "quarter of a league. Its situation and form corresponds with "that pyramid which Strabo calls the tower of Belus, and is in all "likelihood the tower of Nimrod in Babylon, or Babel, as that place "is still called. In that author's time, it had nothing remaining of "the stairs and other ornaments mentioned by Herodotus, the "greatest part of it having been ruined by Xerxes; and Alexander, "who designed to have restored it to its former lustre, was pre- "vented by death. There appear no marks of ruin, without "the compass of that huge mass, to convince one so great a city as "Babylon had ever stood there; all one discovers within fifty or "sixty paces of it, being only the remains here and there of some "foundations of buildings, and the country round about it so flat "and level, that one can hardly believe it should be chosen for the "situation of so great and noble a city as Babylon, or that there "were ever any remarkable buildings on it: but for my part I am "astonished, there appears so much as there does, considering, it is "at least four thousand years since that city was built, and that "Diodorus Siculus tells us, it was reduced almost to nothing in his "time. The height of this mountain of ruins is not in every part "equal, but exceeds the highest palace in Naples; it is a misshapen "mass, wherein there is no appearance of regularity; in some "places it rises in points, is craggy and inaccessible, in others it is "smoother and is of easier ascent; there are also tracts of torrents "from the top to the bottom caused by the rains, and both with- "inside and upon it one sees parts, some higher and some lower. "It is not to be discovered whether ever there were any steps to "ascend it, or any doors to enter into it; whence one may easily "judge, that the stairs ran winding about on the outside, and "that being the less solid parts, they were soonest demolished, "so that not the least sign of any appears at present.

(60) See his Travels part 2. chap. 7. p. 164. (61) Ibid. p 166. (62) Ibid. p. 167. (63) Mac Gregory, in his Sepulchres of the antients, p. 48. (64) See Thevenot's Travels, part 2. book 1. chap. 9. p. 40.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ 2597.

"Within side one finds some grottos, but so ruined that one "can make nothing of them; and it is a doubt, with regard to "some of them, whether they were built at the same time with "that work, or made since by the peasants for shelter, which "last seems to me the most likely. The Mohammedans believe, "that these caverns were appointed by GOD as places of punish- "ment to Harût and Marût, two angels, who, they sup- "pose, were sent from heaven to judge the crimes of men, but did placed the ruins deſcribed by a late traveller (*) into theſe parts. We have inſerted in the notes abſtracts of the ſeveral accounts; but muſt acquaint the reader, that they do not any of them ſeem to us to be the remains of the original tower, but rather ſome later ſtructures of the Arabs.

"not

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

SECT.

" not execute their commiſſions as they ought It is evident from " theſe ruins, that the tower of Nimrod was built with great and " thick bricks, as I carefully obſerved, cauſing holes to be dug in " ſeveral place for the purpoſe; but they do not appear to have " been burnt, but dried in the ſun, which is extreme hot in thoſe " parts. In laying theſe bricks neither lime nor ſand was employ- " ed, but only earth tempered and petrified; and in thoſe parts " which made the floors, there had been mingled with that earth, " which ſerved inſtead of lime, bruiſed reeds or hard ſtraw, ſuch as " large mats are made of, to ſtrengthen the work. Afterwards " one perceives at certain diſtances in divers places, eſpecially " where the ſtrongeſt buttreſſes were to be, ſeveral other bricks of " the ſame ſize, but more ſolid and burnt in a kiln, and ſet in good " lime or bitumen; nevertheleſs, the greater number conſiſts of " thoſe which are only dried in the ſun. I make no doubt, but this " ruin was the antient Babel and the tower of Nimrod; for beſides " the evidence of its ſituation, it is acknowledged to be ſuch by " the people of the country, being vulgarly called Babil by the " Arabs (65).

This is the account of that curious traveller, whoſe painter, by his directions, had drawn the plan and ſeveral proſpects of the ruins, which we do not find were ever publiſhed in any edition of his works; but Kircher, in his Turris Babel, has given two of them. However, after all, this ſeems to be only ſuch another modern ſtructure, built by the Arabs for a watch-tower, as that already deſcribed.

(*) This gentleman (66) hath by his penetration, made ſomething of this rude maſs, and diſcovered a great reſemblance between it and the tower of Belus, as deſcribed by Herodotus, though it does not anſwer in dimenſions. He diſtinguiſhes between the firſt original deſign upon which it was antiently begun, and the ſecond different deſign upon which it was continued; it being built partly after one deſign, and partly after another. The original deſign our author deſcribes to be a high tower, exactly ſquare, in form of a pyramid; the length of one of whoſe ſides at the baſe being two hundred and forty three Babyloniſh foot, each of which is equal to a London foot and two inches, it muſt be in compaſs two hundred and twenty ſix geometrical paces and four foot, or a little more than the fifth part of an Engliſh mile. The perpendicular height was intended to be likewiſe two hundred and forty three foot, equal to the root of the ſquare, and the ob!ique height two hundred ſeventy one foot and a half. The whole being a maſs, or heap of brick and bitumen-work, incloſing a ſolid hill and rock. The execution of this firſt deſign (ſo far as it was executed) is in this manner: it is divided into nine parts, which are, as it were, ſo many ſquare towers, in form of parallelopipeds, or flat cubes, one raiſed above another pyramidically, each twenty ſeven foot in height, but gradually diminiſhing in breadth as many foot, ſo as to make a gallery, or walk, quite round on the top of the tower below, and by the ſides of the other above, thirteen foot and a half broad. The laſt and higheſt tower was to have been an exact cube twenty ſeven foot ſquare, and as many high.

(65) Vid Viaggi di Pietro della valle, part 2. Lett. 17. (65) Mac Gregory in his Sepulchres of the antients, p. 35, &c.

This ſtructure is built with bricks of earth hardened with fire, each nine Babyloniſh inches ſquare, and three thick, laid in bitumen mixed with ſtraw, or reeds, to the thickneſs ſometimes of three quarters of an inch, and ſometimes of three inches, in the following order: firſt there is a bed of bitumen mixed with reeds three inches thick, then a row of ſo many bricks as make up the ſquare likewiſe three inches thick: next is another bed of bitumen mixed with ſtraw, three quarters of an inch thick, then a row of bricks as before; and ſo alternately a bed of bitumen and ſtraw, and a range of bricks ſeven times more, ſo as to make up in all from the baſe the height of three foot; then a new bed of bitumen mixed with reeds three inches thick being laid, the whole is repeated in the ſame order eight times more, ſo as to compleat twenty-ſeven foot, which is the height of the firſt tower. The next five towers are raiſed in the ſame manner; the ſtructure ſo far, being one hundred and ſixty two foot high, or two thirds of the whole, was built by Nimrod; but it was afterwards continued by Ninus Belus upon a ſecond and different deſign, which was that of a tower, exactly round, in form of a cone, or round pyramid, of the ſame dimenſions with the former, divided likewiſe into nine towers gradually diminiſhing in the abovementioned proportions, of which the laſt and higheſt would be a cylinder, or round tower, twenty ſeven foot in diameter, and as many in height. In purſuance of this ſecond deſign, two round towers were built on the ſixth ſquare tower; the ſecond of which round towers (the diameter of whoſe baſe is fifty four foot) or eight of the whole, has a temple practiſed, or contrived in its ſolidity along with the execution; which temple is likewiſe round, twenty ſeven foot diameter, and the ſame in height; with an entry, or door, made in the [weſt] ſide towards Babylon nine foot ſquare, and thirteen and a half long, and a round opening, or, as it were, a window in the top nine foot diameter; the floor both of the temple and entry being plain, the ſides perpendicular, and the roof arched; the arching being contrived in the uppermoſt third part of the height. This was built by Ninus Belus, who died before it was finiſhed, when the ſtructure was raiſed to the height of two hundred and ſixteen foot, or juſt eight ninth parts of the whole: and though it wanted only one ninth part, which was the laſt and ſmalleſt of all, the compleating of it was never never afterwards thought on more by any of his ſucceſſors. So that it ended with a round flat of fifty four foot diameter, with the aforeſaid window of the temple in the middle, and ſtill continues ſo. And this tower, as well as the temple, has ſerved as a model ever ſince for all nations to imitate, eſpecially the temple, which has conſtantly been followed by thoſe of all religions, who have always built their temples round with an overture at the top, except the Goths, who introduced the figure of Noah's ark in their churches. Though as to the overture, or window, it is a difficult queſtion among the architects, whether it was deſigned, or happened by the tower being left unfiniſhed, and wanting the laſt ninth part, which, according to the original deſign, was to terminate it; and if ſo, would have ſtopped or covered that overture. It is commonly ſaid to have been deſigned ſo, and Moſes ſeems to have been of that mind, when giving an account of what followed upon the confuſion of Babel, he ſays, the further building of the city was given over, but is ſilent as to that of the tower, becauſe perhaps he reckoned it had been compleated. Yet it is certain, from the knowledge of the deſign, that it never was compleated, and that the overture happened by chance, as before obſerved: beſides, there are ſome temples of the ſame times to be ſeen in and about the ruins of Babylon, particularly that of Ninus Aſſur, done by his wife Semiramis, where there is no ſuch thing; which makes it more probable that it was not deſigned: though the greateſt part of the Babylonian temples of thoſe times we ſee, have it, which renders the matter again ſomething doubtful.

Before Ninus Belus began the before-mentioned temple, he made a ſepulchre for his father Nimrod at the bottom of the tower, cut out of the rock, at the bottom of the little hill which is incloſed by the tower. This burying place is a double grot, conſiſting of two ante-grots one within another, and ſix ſepulchres, or ſmall grots, in each, two on each inner ſide (67); the ſepulchres being eight foot long, ſix foot broad, and as many high; and their doors, or entries, cut upon the ſame level, four foot long, three broad, and three foot high. Within the ſepulchres, on the right hand, is a levée, or ſeat, the whole length of the ſepulchre, three foot broad, and one and a half high, left uncut of the rock for laying the dead body on (68). This ſepulchre was made by hollowing a paſſage into the tower after it was built, as appears by the face of the opening, which is irregular, and the bricks and earth broken. This overture was made through the brick-work and earth of the one to ſerve as an avenue, or paſſage, leading to the entry of the other, made through the rock on the ſame ſide towards Babylon (69).

This antiquity is defaced ſomewhat on all the four ſides, eſpecially on the north and weſt, where the corners and edges of the parts are much decayed, and the body of the bricks worn away into a channel, or hollow, between the beds of bitumen, which with the reeds and ſtraw incorporated with them, continue firm and entire;

(67) Ibid, p. 18. (68) Ibid. p. 14, 15. (69) Ibid. p. 28.

neither

SECT. V.

Of the confusion of tongues.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

BEING in this section to give some account of the confusion of tongues, it may be expected, we should first say something about the origin of speech; one of the most distinguishing differences between us and the animal creation; the great bond which holds society together, and the common conduit whereby the improvements of knowledge are conveyed from one man, and one generation to another.

Of the original of speech.

IF the authority of Moses be conclusive, it seems not to be denied, but that speech was the immedate gift of GOD to the first man: not that we suppose GOD really inspired him with any distinct, or primitive language; but that he made him sensible of the power with which he was endued, of forming articulate sounds (O), and the use he might make of them neither time, weather, nor any other accident having been able to make an impression on them. The people of the country have dug caves in it to retire to, and those who conduct passengers from Bahgdâd to see it, break off pieces in one place to add to another, in order to make steps and hand-grips to render the going up and down it safe. So that the face of the antiquity is now very much changed from what it was, the lowermost ninth part [or tower] being entirely hid under ground by the earth and ruins: in short it is so disfigured, that one must be at a great deal of pains to find out the architecture of it; and travellers, for want of being properly qualified, not knowing what to make of it, have given imperfect and confused accounts of it (70). As to the situation of this ruin, which seems to be the same with that already described by della Valle, whom he mentions (71), he is very much out in it, since he places it twenty seven miles to the south-west of Baghdâd, and but twenty nine to the north-west from the castle of Corna, at the confluence of the Euphrates and the Tigris (72), whereas Corna is at least one hundred and eighty miles distant from that city.

(O) We cannot conceive, that inarticulate sounds were ever made use of by any nation to communicate their thoughts; nor that there are any instances thereof to be found, notwithstanding what some travellers have related concerning several remote people. We are told, the Samoyedes, inhabiting the coasts of Siberia, and the icy sea, have nothing human about them, except their outward form; and that the uncertain sound they utter has no more the resemblance

(70) Ibid. p. 42, 43, 44. (71) Ibid. p. 35. (72) Ibid. p. 28.

them as ſigns of his ideas, and then left the arbitrary impoſition of them to Adam himſelf (P), as is intimated by GOD's bringing the beaſts and birds to him to ſee what he would call them: and whatſoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof[r]. So that, excepting the firſt impulſe of the Almighty, informing Adam of his natural power, we are inclined to think, that ſpeech was attained by gradual invention of arbitrary ſounds, to denote firſt the moſt obvious things, and after the leſs obvious, as they came to be taken notice of. That it is poſſible Adam might attain the uſe of ſpeech by this method, we preſume none will deny; and if it be poſſible, we are ſure, it muſt be the moſt reaſonable and probable to all, but thoſe who are for multiplying of miracles needleſly.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

WE cannot therefore approve of the opinion of thoſe who imagine, that GOD himſelf formed the body of a language, and then infuſed it into Adam (Q). Beſides, the much greater ſemblance of ſpeech than the chattering of apes (73): that the natives of Greenland uſe a ſound like beaſts, ſo uncouth, that no Dane, or Dutchman could ever yet imitate it (74); and that the ſpeech of the Hottentots comes nearer the gobling of turkies than a human voice, though perhaps it may be intelligible among themſelves (75). But it may be queſtioned, whether theſe authors were proper judges in the caſe, as not being acquainted with the languages of thoſe nations: and the rather, becauſe upon enquiry, we are credibly informed, that the language of theſe laſt, though commonly thought to be the moſt inarticulate of all others, is not a deſpicable one; and that thoſe of the Dutch ſettlement at the Cape of Good Hope underſtand, and ſpeak it tolerably well.

[r] Geneſ. ii. 19.

(P) Mohammed in his Korân ſuppoſes Adam came by the names of things no otherwiſe than by revelation. That book pretends, that the angels at the creation of man expreſſing ſome contempt of him, GOD taught Adam the names of things, and then demanded of the angels how thoſe things were called; which they confeſſing to be above their knowledge, GOD ordered Adam to name them to them, which he did; and the angels afterwards, at GOD's command, paid their homage to Adam as their ſuperior (76).

(Q) The words which are generally tranſlated, man became a living ſoul (77), the Chaldee paraphraſts render, viz. the breath breathed into him by GOD, became in man a ſpeaking ſoul. Moſt of

(73) Ides, p. 94. (74) Ten Rhyne, p. 844. (75) Nieuhoff, p. 188. (76) Al Korân, c. 2. ver. 30, &c. (77) Geneſ. ii. 7.

the

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

greater part of the primitive tongue, whatever that was, and the names of many things and operations must have been imposed several ages after Adam's creation, as mankind became acquainted with them, and arts and conveniencies of life were invented. The birds and beasts indeed it is natural to suppose Adam might immediately name, the kinds not being many; but we do not think, he went so far as to name every species of them, much less all the reptiles, trees, or plants, though some of the most familiar to him no doubt he did. The fish we presume no body will imagine were brought to him to be named; and if they had by miracle appeared before Adam, no doubt Moses would have mentioned it, the fish of the sea being the first part of the creation, the dominion of which was given by GOD to man [r].

IT has however been thought by great numbers, that the first language was of divine formation; and of this sentiment Plato himself seems to have been, who supposed, that the names of things originally had some natural connection or congruity with the things themselves, and that the first names must have been justly imposed, because they were imposed by the gods (R) [t]. And partly from this notion, in all prothe Jews suppose the first tongue (which they all imagine was their own) was formed and created by God himself, and so communicated to Adam (78). Some of them think this was done by generally acquainting him with the roots and fundamental parts of the tongue only (79); others in a more special and paticular manner, by revealing to him the whole extent and propriety of the language, even the letters, points, and accents (80).

[r] Genes. i. 26, 28. [t] PLATO in Cratylo. Vid. eund. in Protagora.

This notion, which some christians embraced, and particularly Eunomius; who, because GOD is introduced by Moses as speaking before the creation, held, that there was in words a certain eternal and immutable nature, was strenuously opposed by Gregory of Nyssa, who declared it a silly, ridiculous, and blasphemous opinion to imagine, the great GOD would condescend to turn grammarian, and set himself down subtilly to invent names for things (81).

(R) The words of this philosopher are; Ὀνόματος ὀρθότητα εἶναι ἑκάστῳ τῶν ὄντων φύσει πεφυκυῖαν (82). And after; ὅτι τὰ πρῶτα ὀνόματα οἱ θεοὶ ἔθεσαν, καὶ διὰ ταῦτα ὀρθῶς ἔχει (83).

(78) Sepher Cozri. (79) R. Is. Abravanel. (80) R. Juda Hallevi. Muscat. Ephodius, &c. (81) Greg. Nyssen. contra Eunom. l. 21. (82) In Cratyl. p. 383. Ed. Serrani. (83) Ibid. p. 425.

bability

bability, aroſe thoſe ſuperſtitious pretences of the holineſs of one tongue above the reſt, as being formed by GOD. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

As we cannot ſee any neceſſity for ſuppoſing the inſpiration of a language, ſo neither can we imagine, that Adam could attain the uſe of ſpeech ſo ſoon as is repreſented to us by Moſes, without divine aſſiſtance. We might ſuppoſe indeed, that mankind might of themſelves, by degrees, form a perfect language; for when men wanted ſigns to expreſs their ideas, and convey them to the underſtanding of others, they could find none more fit for that purpoſe, or which required leſs difficulty to invent, or labour to form, than articulate ſounds; but to frame a number of them ſufficient even for the few occaſions of the firſt men, muſt neceſſarily have taken up a conſiderable time; for which reaſon thoſe who were unacquainted with the Moſaical writings, have imagined, that men were at firſt no better than mute animals, till at length convenience taught them the uſe of ſpeech (S). Several of the antients were of opinion, that men, in the beginning of the world, expreſſed their thoughts by dumb ſigns, or geſticulation only,

(S) This notion Horace has expreſſed in the following lines:

Quum prorepſerunt primis animalia terris,
Mutum ac turpe pecus,——
Donec verba, quibus voces ſenſuſque notarent,
Nominaque invenere (84).

When animals crawl'd forth from parent earth,
A vile dumb herd they were———
'Till words were found, to utter what they thought,
And names were ſet on things.———

And Lucretius to the ſame purpoſe:

At varios linguæ ſonitus natura ſubegit
Mittere, & utilitas expreſſit nomina rerum (85).

Kind nature pow'r of framing ſounds affords
To man; and then convenience taught us words. Creech.

The latter alſo ridicules thoſe who ſuppoſe ſpeech the invention of one man (86).

(84) Horat. Serm. l. 1. Sat. 3. ver. 99, &c. (85) Lucret. de rerum nat. l. 5. ver. 1027, &c. (86) Ibid. ver. 1040, &c.

or

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

or elſe by confuſed ſounds of no ſignification; and afterwards endeavoured at a language, by impoſing diſtinct names on things, which was not brought to any tolerable perfection but by a long courſe of time [u].

The firſt language conſiſted of few words

IF we conſider the primitive ſtate of Adam, and the few things he had occaſion to name, it cannot be conceived, that his language at firſt was very extenſive; for were we to expunge out of our lexicons all words introduced by the gradual invention of arts to ſerve the convenience of life, by accurate diſtinctions of the ſeveral ſpecies of creatures, and metaphyſical conceptions about the operations of the mind, we ſhould find the remainder contained in a very ſmall compaſs; ſo that it muſt neceſſarily be ſeveral ages before a language could be compleated to any degree, in compariſon to our modern tongues. Scaliger, agreeably to this notion, divides ſpeech into three ſorts or degrees, as formed either for neceſſity, uſe, or delight: the firſt is that imperfect ſpeech, or rather eſſay towards ſpeech, above-mentioned, ſerving as the means of neceſſary intercourſe between man and man. The ſecond was ſomewhat more refined and poliſhed, by being adapted and made fit for uſe and convenience, and by applying certain dimenſions, bounds, and lineaments to the firſt rude ſketch; whence aroſe a certain rule of ſpeaking. The third ſort was yet more polite, there being added to the former the ornament of elegance as its dreſs [w].

Whether more tongues than one before the flood.

WHETHER there was more than one language before the flood is a thing about which we are perfectly in the dark; though it is more reaſonable to ſuppoſe that there was but one, in which it is poſſible there might be ſome difference in dialect, but none conſiderable; for the few ages between the creation and the flood, and the long lives of the antediluvians, would effectually prevent any great alteration. However that be, it is probable only one language, and that the primitive, was preſerved by Noah, or at leaſt was ſpoken by his deſcendants till the confuſion of tongues at Babel (T).

[u] DIODOR. SIC. l. 1. p. 8. Vid. LACTANT. de vero cultu, l. 10. [w] SCALIGER in POETIC. l. 1. c. 1.

(T) Suppoſing there were more tongues than one before the flood, and that Noah and his three ſons could ſpeak them all, it is moſt reaſonable to believe, that they taught but one common tongue to their children, who propagated the ſame among their deſcendants; ſo that, the reſt expiring with thoſe firſt patriarchs, there remained but one language amongſt mankind at the building of Babel.

IT

IT may be expected that we ſhould here enter into a formal enquiry concerning the primitive tongue, and endeavour to determine what particular language it was that the firſt progenitors of mankind ſpoke. But as this is an enquiry rather of curioſity than uſe, and we cannot be certain whether that language, whatever it was, be now in being [x]; the moſt we can do will be to ſhew the vanity of the pretenſions of thoſe languages which have laid claim to this honour, as a great number have done; each nation being fond of it, as an undeniable evidence of their own antiquity (U); though they generally argue in a circle, and urge their antiquity as a proof of the former.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

Enquiry concerning the primitive tongue

BESIDES thoſe kindred languages we commonly call the oriental tongues; the Armenian, the Celtic, the Coptic, the Greek, the Teutonic, and the Chineſe have aſpired to the preference in this reſpect. The Armenian, Celtic, and Coptic

Several languages pre-claim this honour.

[x] Vid. GROT. in Geneſ. xi. 1. & CLUVER. GERM. Antiq. l. 1. c. 8. p. 59, 60.

(U) Pſammitichus, a king of Egypt, appears to have been of this opinion; for wanting to know who were the moſt antient people in the world, after ſeveral fruitleſs experiments he at laſt hit on the following expedient. He took two infants newly born, and gave them to a ſhepherd to be brought up, commanding him not to ſuffer any perſon to ſpeak a word in their hearing, but to nurſe them in a ſolitary cottage, by bringing them goats to ſuck, till they could take other food. Pſammitichus's intention herein, was to find out what word the children would firſt utter when they began to articulate; imagining, as others have ſince done, that they would naturally ſpeak the primitive language, if not taught otherwiſe. At two years end, as the ſhepherd one day entered the cottage, he had no ſooner opened the door, than the children ran to him, and holding out their hands, cried Beccos. Of this the ſhepherd at firſt took no notice, but afterwards obſerving they frequently repeated this word at his coming in, he acquainted the king with it, and by his order brought the children into his preſence. Pſammitichus having himſelf heard them pronounce the ſame word, inquired whether any nation made uſe of it; and finding the Phrygians called bread by that name, he and his ſubjects allowed this to be a proof that the Phrygians were the more antient people. Herodotus remarks, that the Greeks, among other ridiculous things reported, that theſe children were brought up by women, whoſe tongues had been cut out by the king's order for that purpoſe (87). The Scholiaſt of Ariſtophanes (88) tells the ſame ſtory of another king of Egypt, named Seſonchoſis.

(87) Herodot. Euterp. in initio. Vid. Suidam, in voce Βικκιστίλλαι.
(88) In Nubes, p. 149, 150.

have

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

have little evidence to produce besides the antiquity of their nations; though the former insist, that as the ark rested in their country, and Noah and his children must have continued there for some time, before the lower and marshy country of Chaldæa could be fit to receive them, it is therefore reasonable to suppose they left their language there. The Greek some writers have fancied to be the most antient, because of its great extent and copiousness [y]. The Teutonic, or that dialect of it which is spoken in lower Germany and Brabant, has found a strenuous patron[z], who has endeavoured to derive even the Hebrew itself from that tongue. And the pretensions of the Chinese have been supported[a] not only from the great antiquity of that nation, their early acquaintance with arts and sciences, and their having preserved themselves so many ages from any considerable mixture or intercourse with other nations; but also from the nature and singularity of the tongue itself, which consists of few words, all monosyllables, is most simple in its construction, having no variety of declensions, conjugations, or grammatical rules; and so modest, that it is said, they have no character to express those parts which we industriously conceal [b]: all which are conceived to be strong marks of its being the first language of mankind: besides the presumption, formerly mentioned, of Noah's being the founder of the Chinese nation [c].

As to the oriental languages, though they have each of them their partisans, yet the generality of Eastern authors allow the preference to the Syriac, or that dialect of it which was spoken in Mesopotamia, Chaldæa, and Assyria, in which countries mankind made their first settlements after the flood, and where it is presumed the language of Noah and his sons remained. For which reason the more judicious Arab writers acknowledge Yarab, the son of Kahtân (or Jerah) the son of Joktan, to be the first whose speech deviated from the Syriac to the Arabic; and little regard the pretences of some of their countrymen, that their language was spoken by Adam before the fall, and then changed into the Syriac, but restored again upon his repentance; that notwithstanding in time it degenerated again into the same language, and would have been utterly lost, had it not been preserved by the elder Jorham, who escaped with Noah in the ark, and propagated it among his posterity [d].

[y] EUTYCH. Annal. p. 50. [z] GOROPIUS BECANUS, in Origin. Antverp. [a] Vid. WEBB's Essay towards the primitive language [b] SEMEDO Rel. de la Cina, parte 1. c. 11. [c] See before, pag. 254, &c. [d] Vid. POCOCK. Orat. præf. in Carmen Tograi, & Specim. Hist. Arab. p. 38, 40.

THE

THE patrons of the Syriac tongue have, as another evidence of its right to the precedency, endeavoured to derive the names of perſons and places mentioned by Moſes from that language [c], and generally with better ſucceſs than ſome writers will allow (X): but this argument, though commonly looked upon as concluſive, yet proves nothing of itſelf, as will be hereafter obſerved. However, thus much we muſt in juſtice acknowledge, that if any of theſe tongues in particular may claim to be the original, or mother of the reſt, it ſeems to be the Syriac; which was probably ſpoken by all the patriarchs from Noah to Abraham, that being, after the confuſion, the tongue of the country where they were born and lived; though, it muſt be confeſſed, it will not thence follow, that it was in uſe there before the confuſion. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt 2597.

BUT the Jews are they who aſſert the antiquity of their tongue with the greateſt warmth. They pretend, that it was immediately framed by GOD; that he ſpake it himſelf, for Hebrew which reaſon it is called the holy tongue; that it is the only language underſtood by the angels, and wherein we can pray [c] Vid. THEODORET. quæſt. 51. in Geneſ. The pretenſions of the tongue conſidered.

(X) It is ſaid in particular that the paronomaſia, in this paſſage, ſhe ſhall be called woman [אישה Iſhſhah], becauſe ſhe was taken [מאיש me-iſh] out of man (89), is not preſerved in the Chaldee and Syriac tranſlations, which inſtead of Iſh and Iſhſhah, uſe the words בעל Baal and אתתא Itta or ܓܒܪܐ Gabro and ܐܢܬܬܐ Atto: whence ſome have concluded, that the tranſlators were not able to expreſs the alluſion in the Syriac tongue (90): but this is a miſtake, for the Syrians from the maſculine ܓܒܪ regularly form the feminine ܓܒܪܬܐ Gbarto; which word is to be found in their lexicons and grammars, though it be antiquated, and therefore not made uſe of by the tranſlators. It is likewiſe objected (91) with as little foundation, that Adam does not ſignify man, nor Cain poſſeſſion, in that tongue. We may obſerve hereafter, that ſome names in Moſes are more happily derived from the Syriac than the Hebrew.

(89) Geneſ. ii. 23. (90) Vid. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. tom. I. Exercit. 16 § 13. Nicholſon Diſſert. philologic. de univ. totius orbis linguis, p. 4. (91) Heidegg ubi ſup.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

and be heard with effect [f]. And several christian writers [g], abating these superstitious fancies of the Jews, have acknowledged and maintained, that the Hebrew tongue is the most antient in the world; the very same which was spoken by Adam and Noah, and preserved in the family of Eber, who were not concerned in the building of Babel, nor consequently shared in the punishment inflicted on those that were. But as we have already shewn this to be a groundless imagination, we shall proceed to consider their principal argument (and indeed the only one which deserves any consideration), drawn from the etymologies of the names in Moses; some of which that inspired writer himself derives from the Hebrew, and the rest are generally supposed to have been taken thence likewise.

AND here it cannot be denied, that several proper names of persons and places, before the confusion of tongues, may be very regularly derived from the Hebrew; and that there are some very pertinent reasons given, and allusions made by the sacred historian to evince their propriety, and the relation they have to the person, or place designed by them: and this is the most that can be allowed; for though all the names in general, mentioned by Moses before the division, may possibly be forced from some Hebrew root or other, yet much the greater part of them seem to be insignificant, at least to have no congruity with the subject; nor can it be expected they should, unless we either imagine all such names, as seem to relate to a future part of a person's life, were given by the spirit of prophecy; or else allow them to be imposed after the events, which occasioned them, happened, and so to be rather surnames than proper names; a concession which manifestly weakens the argument drawn from them.

THUS much being premised, it will be easy to shew, that this demonstrative argument, as it is called [i], will not bear examination. For, 1. It is not certain that the names used by Moses were the very original names themselves, and not translated by him from the primitive tongue into Hebrew, or at least somewhat altered, to accommodate what he wrote to the understandings of the Jews. And how inconsistent soever some may think this method with historical veracity, [f] Vid. BUXTORF. de ling. Hebr. orig. [g] CHRYSOST. Homil. xxx. in Genes. xi. AUGUST. de civit. Dei, l. 17. c. 11. ORIGEN. in Numer. Hom. xi. HIERON. Comment. in Sophon. Vid. etiam SELDEN. de Synedriis vet. Hebræor. l. II. c. 9. BOCHART. Phaleg, l. 1. c. 15. HEIDEGG. Hist. Patriarch. tom. I. Exerc. 16. & alios pene innumeros. [i] ABRAVANEL.

it

it has been frequently practiſed by prophane as well as ſacred hiſtorians, as has been undeniably proved [m]: and Moſes himſelf has given a plain inſtance of his approbation of ſuch changes, in altering his own name, which was of Egyptian original, to adapt it to a Hebrew etymology (H). 2. Suppoſing the names given by Moſes were the true original ones, it would not be ſtrange at all, if ſome of them might by accident aptly admit of a Hebrew derivation; ſuch caſual conformities ſometimes happening in words which are certainly known to be of different origins. 3. Several of thoſe names are more pertinently derived from ſome other of the oriental tongues than from the Hebrew (I): and not a few of the etymologies which Moſes himſelf gives us, are deduced without any regard at leaſt to the preſent rules of analogy (K). 4. A

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

[m] Vid. PLATON. in Critia. GROT. in Geneſ. xi. 1. & de veritate rel. Chriſt lib. 1. HUET. in Demonſtr. Evang. prop. iv. c. 13. § 4. CLERIC. diſſert. de Lingua Heb.

(H) The original name is Moüſe, or (as it is in the Coptic verſion) Moüſes, with the Greek termination, and compoſed of two Coptic, or old Egyptian words, moü, water, and ſe, to preſerve. But Moſes finding the Hebrew verb משה maſha, to draw out, bore ſome reſemblance in ſound to his name, and in ſignification to the occaſion of it, writes it משה Moſheh; and introduces Pharaoh's daughter giving this reaſon for her impoſing it, becauſe משיתיהו maſhitihu, I drew him out of the water (1).

(I) Thus Abel, or Hebel, which in Hebrew ſignifies vanity, or a vapour, ſeems a name not very appoſite to Adam's ſecond ſon, and therefore Moſes has given no reaſon for its impoſition. But if it be derived from the Syriac יהב איל Yhab îl, which anſwers to the Latin name Deus dedit, it is very proper; and accordingly in the margin of a manuſcript copy of Abu'lfaragius, we find the name of Abel interpreted in Arabic هبة الله by that of Hebatallah, the gift of GOD.

The name of Babel itſelf, which the Hebrew text tells us was ſo called becauſe GOD did there בלל balal, i. e. confound the language of all the earth (2), may likewiſe more naturally be derived from the Syriac, in which tongue balbel is to confound, and boblo, or bobel, confuſion.

(K) We ſhall inſtance in the names of Noah and Abraham. The former was ſo called, becauſe, ſaid his father, ינחמנו yenahamenu, he ſhall comfort us, &c. (3). But if his name were derived from the root נחם niham, to comfort, it ſhould have been Nohem, or Menahem, not Noah, which can regularly come from no other verb than נוח nuah, to reſt; and the Septuagint have

(1) Exod. ii. 10. (2) Geneſ. xi. 9. (3) Geneſ. v. 29.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

4. A few lucky paronomasiæ, or allusions, are no proof in this case, because they may happen by accident; and in fact, some of those mentioned by Moses may be expressed in other tongues as well as the Hebrew (L).

THIS argument has been farther enforced from the significancy of the names of several animals in the Hebrew tongue, which are thought to have been imposed by Adam, because of some peculiar qualities in the animal to which they were given, correspondent to their respective roots[n]: but since the same may be as justly asserted of most other languages as the Hebrew, it will conclude nothing. Besides, we are much deceived if we imagine (as has been yet generally supposed), that the verbs were really the original roots of the Hebrew tongue; on the contrary the greatest part of them, at least, were themselves at first derived from nouns, though they be now for grammatical convenience considered as the roots (M).

[n] Vid. BOCHART. Hierozoic. & HEIDEGG. Hist. Patr. tom. 1. Exerc. 16. § 16.

On therefore, instead of he shall comfort us, rendered it διαναπαύσει he shall cause to rest, &c. which has induced some learned men (4) to think the antient and true reading was יְנִיחֵנוּ yanihenu. And Philo Judæus and St. Jerom translate the name Noah, rest.

The name of Abraham was changed from Abram, which signifies high father, by inserting only the letter H, because he was to be made אַב הֲמוֹן Ab hamon, the father of a multitude of nations (5): according to which etymon he should rather have been called Abhamon, or Abham (though we know some fancy the letter ה was inserted from the word רַב rab, many). But the names of these two persons, especially the latter, being too famous and well known in the east to admit any considerable change, Moses was therefore obliged to retain them, and give the best etymology he could from the Hebrew tongue. We might offer a more plausible one, of the name Abraham from the Arabic, wherein أبو رهام Abu rohâm signifies the father of a multitude, did we not consider, that it is one of those casual resemblances we have already mentioned, and most certainly false.

(L) As Adam, which name is an appellative, common to all the species, was so called from adamah, the earth, so the Latins called man homo, which the best etymologists derive from humus, the ground (6). Yet we cannot think any body ever dreamed from hence that the Latin was the primitive tongue.

(M) Many examples might be given of the verbs being manifestly derived from, and posterior to, the noun, in all the oriental

(4) Grotius ad loc. & Lud. Cappel Critic. Sacr. l. 4. c. 8.
(5) Genes. xvii. 5. (6) Vid. Vossii Etymol. ling. Lat.

tongues:

On the whole it must be acknowledged, that no conclusive argument for the antiquity of any language can be drawn from etymologies, which ought, on all occasions, to be urged with great caution, being for the most part uncertain and precarious. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

SOME learned men however have endeavoured to derive all languages in general from the Hebrew, which they imagine to be the parent of all others [o]. That they should succeed very well, in finding a great conformity between that and the other oriental tongues, is no wonder, since they are manifestly sprung from one common original; though it be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish the mother from the daughters. That they have also given tolerable satisfaction, in deducing from the same tongue several words, not only in the Greek and Latin, but in some other European languages, is not matter of much surprise, considering the great intercourse several nations of our continent had with the Phœnicians, whose mother tongue was the Hebrew. But when these writers venture out of their depth, and pretend to deduce the more remote languages from the same fountain, they only shew their ignorance, and make themselves ridiculous to all who have but a moderate skill in those tongues; for a proof of which we could produce a multitude of examples from a celebrated and laborious work of that kind [p]. As to the peculiar excellencies found in the Hebrew tongue by some of its patrons, and which they imagine to be an additional proof of the justness of its pretensions, we may say something hereafter, when we come to give an account of this language.

Whether all other tongues may be derived from the Hebrew.

IF the Hebrew tongue therefore cannot make good its claim, we may, without taking the pains to refute what has been said in favour of the other pretenders, conclude, that the primitive language was entirely lost at Babel, at least that no one can now tell where it was preserved, which is much the same thing.

THE speaking one common language (though it might be of advantage to mankind in other respects) yet, being the great obstacle to that division of them into distinct nations, which GOD had for most wise purposes resolved on [q], he thought fit to break this bond which held them so strictly to-

The confusion of tongues.

[o] Vid. HEIDEGG. ibid. § 18.

[p] THOMASINI Glossar. Universal. Hebr.

[q] Genes. xi. 6.

tongues: so in English, dog, duck, &c. were certainly first imposed as names, and afterwards used as verbs, to express actions proper to those creatures.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

gether, and confound their language, that they ſhould not underſtand one another's ſpeech; the natural conſequence of which was, that they were ſcattered abroad upon the face of all the earth [r]. This event is mentioned by prophane hiſtorians, who write, that mankind uſed one and the ſame language, till the overthrow of the tower of Babylon; at which time a multiplicity of tongues was introduced by the gods: whereupon wars enſued, and thoſe, whoſe ſpeech happened to be intelligible to each other, joined company, and ſeized ſuch countries as they chanced to light upon [s].

How effected.

As to the degree of this Babyloniſh confuſion, and the manner wherein it was effected, there is great diverſity of ſentiments. Several learned men, prepoſſeſſed with an opinion, that all the different idioms now in the world did at firſt ariſe from one original language, to which they may be reduced [t], and that the variety, which we find among them, is no more than muſt naturally have happened in ſo long a courſe of time, ſuppoſing a bare ſeparation of the builders of Babel [u], have been induced to believe, that there were no new languages formed at the confuſion, but that the moſt that was done was only to ſet thoſe builders at variance, by creating a miſunderſtanding among them (N). This ſome think to have been effected without any immediate influence on their lan-

[r] Ibid ver. 7, 8. [s] Abydenus apud Euſeb. de præp. Ev. l. 9. c. 14. Sibylla & Hestiæus, apud eund. ib c. 15. & apud Joſeph. Ant. l. 1. c. 4. [t] Stiernhielmius præfat. in Evang. Ulfilæ. p. 4 [u] Vid. Heidegg. ubi ſup. Exerc. 21. § 21.

(N) To ſupport this opinion it is ſaid, that the Hebrew word שפה ſbaphah, lip, which we render language and ſpeech (7), rather ſignifies agreement, or unanimity, and is equivalent to פה אחד Phe chhad, i. e. one mouth (8), which is juſtly tranſlated with one accord. But this latter is an adverbial expreſſion, which the other is not: nor does it follow, that one lip muſt import the ſame thing as one mouth; the only paſſage that has been produced as an inſtance of its being uſed in that ſenſe (9), being far from proving any ſuch thing (10). Another text has been alledged which ſeems to favour this interpretation much more; it is where David, praying againſt his enemies, begs of God to divide their tongues (11), that is, to ſet them at variance. But this cannot be Moſes's meaning here, becauſe he immediately explains what he means by one lip, by adding, and of one ſpeech, or more literally, of the ſame words (12).

(7) Geneſ. xi. 1, 6, 7. (8) Joſh. ix. 2. 1 Kings xxii. 13. (9) Iſai xix. 18. (10) See Dr. Wotton's Diſc. on the confuſion of languages, p. 9. (11) Pſal. lv. 9. (12) Geneſ. xi. 1.

guage

guage [u], which ſeems contrary to the words and obvious intent of the ſacred hiſtorian: others have imagined it brought about by a temporary confuſion of their ſpeech, or rather of their apprehenſions, cauſing them, while they continued together, though they ſpake the ſame language, yet to underſtand the words differently [w]. A third opinion is, that a variety of inflexions was introduced, and perhaps ſome new words, which diſturbed and perverted the former manner of expreſſion: and this might occaſion different dialects, yet could not create new languages [x]. But none of theſe explications ſeems fully to anſwer the apparent deſign of Moſes, which was not only to inform us, how mankind were at firſt diſperſed and broken into ſo many different nations, but to account for the diverſity of their languages; a thing very difficult, if not impoſſible to do, without having recourſe to ſome extraordinary interpoſition of the divine power. For though time, intercourſe with foreign nations, commerce, the invention and improvement of arts and ſciences, and the difference of climates (O) cauſe very conſiderable alterations

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

[u] CLERIC. Comment. in loc. Vid. Pere SIMON, Hiſt. Crit. du vieux. Teſt. l. 1. c. 14. [w] Judæi apud J. C. SCALIGER. Exercit. in Cardan. 259. § 1. [x] IS. CASAUB. Diatribe de ling. Heb. Vid. M. CASAUB. de quatuor ling. p. 17, & ſub initio.

(O) It has been thought by ſeveral, that the air or climate of ſome countries diſpoſes the inhabitants to a peculiar pronunciation, and renders them unapt for the uttering certain ſounds or letters: whence, as they imagine, it comes to paſs, that ſome languages are ſo full of gutturals, or of conſonants, while others have ſcarce any of the former, and comparatively few of the latter; that the Ephraimites could not pronounce the letter Shin (13); and that the Chineſe find ſo much difficulty in the letter R, and the Arabs in P, &c. But we are far from being ſatisfied, that this difference is cauſed by any quality of the climate; on the contrary, it is much more reaſonable to believe, that ſuch varieties in tongues and dialects, are perfectly caſual, no one language comprehending all the ſeveral ſounds, ſome making greater uſe of one ſound, and ſome of another; and that a man accuſtomed from his infancy, for that reaſon and no other, to a peculiar pronunciation, muſt needs find it hard to imitate even the eaſieſt and ſeemingly moſt natural ſound, that is not agreeable thereto. Thus the Hurons in America, who have no labials at all in their language, and therefore when they ſpeak have no occaſion ever to ſhut their lips (14), would not ſoon

(13) Judges xii. 6. (14) Reland. Diſſert. de ling. Americanis, p. 219.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

tions in languages, yet the utmost effect we can imagine them to have will not come up to the question [y]. We cannot conceive a language can thereby be so much disfigured, that all the general marks and characteristics should disappear. It is not easy to apprehend how all the words of a language should be entirely changed for others; nor is there any one instance to be given of any such total change: but it is next to impossible to conceive, that so great a diversity as we find in the frame and constitution of languages, wherein the grand and essential differences between them consist, rather than in the words which compose them, (as may be observed in the accounts we shall hereafter give of the several languages, of which we have any knowledge) could ever have been occasioned by the causes assigned above. The present diversity of tongues in the world is prodigious [z]; and considering the time that has elapsed since the building of Babel, and the alterations made in some known languages in the course of one, two, or three thousand years, (which alterations we constantly find greater or less, in proportion to the intercourse the nation has had with foreigners) and considering that there are many tongues, which when compared with others have not the least affinity, so that a man must be the greatest visionary in the world to imagine them the offspring of the same parent, it seems to us that the variety of idioms now spoken can be no way possibly accounted for, without either approving the preadamite system, or allowing a formation of new languages at Babel [a]. A very learned man, who warmly espouses the notion of deducing all languages from one, is yet so sensible that exceptions must be made, that he himself excludes the languages of America and of the Indian islands out of the number; adding, that some have thence rashly imagined, that the men who speak those tongues are of a distinct species, and not the descendants of Adam [b]; which concession is enough to overthrow the hypothesis he would maintain.

[y] See Dr. WOTTON's Disc. concerning the conf. of languages, p. 57. Dr. BRETT's Essay on the conf. of lang. p 62, &c. [z] Vid. CALVIN. in Genes. xi. 1, 2. [a] Vid. Dr. WOTTON, ubi sup. p. 36. Dr. BRETT, ubi sup. & DIODOR. SIC. l. 1. p. 8. [b] STIERNHIELM. ubi sup.

be brought to pronounce any one letter of that organ: yet experience shews us how readily and perfectly a child, whose organs are free and not stiffened by long habitude to a peculiar utterance, learns to form strange sounds, which a grown person is not perhaps able to do with the utmost pains and application.

ANOTHER

ANOTHER argument againſt the formation of new languages at Babel, which has been thought to be of ſome weight, is, that if ſuch a diviſion of tongues be underſtood, no good reaſon can be given why thoſe colonies, which ſpoke languages that were near a-kin, were not removed to the greateſt diſtances, and thoſe whoſe languages were entirely different, placed next one onother[c]. To this it may eaſily be anſwered, that there is no neceſſity of ſuppoſing every family had a diſtinct language, or that the ſeveral dialects of the mother tongues were formed at the confuſion. The diſperſion might at firſt be effected without ſuch an abſolute ſeparation of families derived from the ſame ſtock: mankind was not then ſo numerous, but that it would be ſufficient to cut off the communication, between the three great branches and their prime families, by the introduction of new tongues, which alone we contend was the work of GOD; for dialects we allow might, and neceſſarily would, be formed by time. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

UPON the whole, we think we may reaſonably conclude, with a very learned perſon, whoſe ſentiments on this head we entirely approve, that upon the confuſion of Babel there were new languages framed; which languages have been the roots and originals, from which the ſeveral dialects that are, or have been, or will be, ſpoken as long as this earth ſhall laſt (P), have ariſen, and to which they may with eaſe be reduced [d].

IN what manner theſe new languages were formed is a queſtion hard to be determined; it ſeems by the Moſaical account, which is ſo ſolemn, and repreſents GOD as coming down in perſon to view the work of theſe builders[e], that it was the immediate act of GOD; and ſome have thence concluded, that he effected it by inducing an oblivion of their former tongue, and inſtantaneouſly infuſing others into their minds, according to their ſeveral nations[f]. The Jews imagine this was done by the miniſtry of angels, ſeventy of whom deſcended with GOD, and were each of them ſet over a nation to which they taught a peculiar language; but Iſrael fell to the lot of his own inheritance, the LORD's portion being his

[c] RELAND apud WOTTON, ubi ſup. p. 61. See alſo STILLINGFLEET. Orig. Sacr. l. 3. c. 5. § 3. [d] WOTTON, ubi ſup. p 29. [e] Geneſ, xi. 5, &c. [f] PERERIUS in Geneſ. lib. 16. diſp. 9.

(P) Perhaps we ſhould except thoſe languages, which, it is ſaid, have been invented and made by mutual agreement, ſuch as the Chineſe, and that of the Incas of Peru; of which more in a proper place.

people

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

people[g], and therefore, they say, they retained the primitive tongue[h]. Others have supposed, that GOD did no more than cause them to forget their first language, leaving them to form new ones as they could[i]; but this must have taken up some time, and could not answer the immediate occasions of mankind. As it would be to little purpose to enquire so curiously into this matter, as some have done[k], the best we can do is to conclude, that it was effected instantly, in a way and manner of which we can give no account[l].

The number of languages formed at Babel; and the consequence of the confusion.

IT would be of as little use to collect the several opinions, in relation to the number of languages formed at Babel: we may as well allow the number of seventy, just mentioned, as any other. We only know from Moses, that the Canaanitish or Hebrew, the Syriac, and Egyptian languages were formed so soon as the time of Jacob[m]. It is most probable, that the languages of the chief families were fundamentally different from each other, and that the sub-languages, or dialects within each branch, for the sake of immediate intercourse, had a mutual affinity, some more, some less, according as they settled near, or farther from each other. And this was sufficient to bring about the designs of GOD, to divide mankind into distinct societies, kingdoms, and commonwealths; and thereby to occasion the making of wholsome laws, the keeping of strict discipline, the encouragement of labour and industry, of liberal arts, and all social virtues, and the suppression of such vices as weaken government, and introduce a corruption of morals. All which opened a new scene of providence, with a surprising variety of wisdom, in the government of the world[n].

SECT. VI.

Of the dispersion of mankind, and the planting of nations, in the two first general migrations.

Of the dispersion.

COMING now to speak of the dispersion of mankind, which was the consequence of that confusion of tongues we considered in the last section, we beg leave to premise

[g] Deut. xxxii. 9. HAKKAB. p. 93, &c.

[h] ELIEZER Pirke, c. 24. SHALSHEL.

[i] Vid. HEIDEGG. Hist. Patr. Tom. I. Exerc. 21. § 19.

[k] Vid. BUXTORF. Dissert. de Ling. Hebr. confusione & plurium lingu. origine.

[l] MERCER. in loc.

[m] Vid. Genes. xxxi. 47. xlii. 23.

[n] See STACKHOUSE's Body of Divinity, p. 332.

something

ſomething as to the time, order, and other circumſtances of that event.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

THE primitive fathers diſtinguiſh between the diviſion of the earth, and the diſperſion of mankind, and made them two different tranſactions. They ſuppoſe, that Noah, to whom the earth was well known before the flood, as proprietor of the whole world, divided it among his three ſons (A), before any of their poſterity removed to Shinaar (B), from whence they were afterwards diſperſed to take poſſeſſion of their reſpective ſhares [a]. This Noachical diviſion, as groundleſs as it is, was ſo firmly believed, that one author condemns the contrary opinion as heretical [b]. Salianus [c], according to this diſtinction of the fathers, makes the diſperſion happen about the middle of Peleg's life, though he places the diviſion in his firſt year.

OTHER writers have ſuppoſed a double diſperſion, one at the birth of Peleg, and the other of the builders of Babel [d]; and an hiſtorian of ſome antiquity ſeems to have imagined, that mankind increaſed ſo very faſt, that they had peopled

Not different from the diviſion in the days of Peleg.

[a] Vid. HEIDEGG. Hiſt. Patr. t. I Exerc. 22. § 9. [b] PHILASTRIUS Brixiens. Hæreſ. 11. 8. [c] Annal. Eccleſ. [d] SPANHEIM. Hiſt. Eccleſ. col. 291, 292.

(A) The opinion of Epiphanius (1) on this occaſion is very ſingular; he maintained, that they caſt lots for their ſhares in the city of Rhinocorura or Rhinocolura, in the confines of Egypt and Paleſtine. He ſeems to have been led into this notion by the Septuagint tranſlation, where the words נחל מצרים nahal Mizraim (2), which ſignify the torrent of Egypt, are rendered Rhinocolura, expreſſing (as Jerom obſerves) not ſo much the words of ſcripture as the ſenſe of the words. Whence he concluded Rhinocolura was in Hebrew called Nahal, which he interprets a Lot; as if that city had taken its name from Noah's dividing the earth by lot among his ſons at that place. But he is miſtaken in the ſignification of that word, as a learned man has ſhewn (3).

(B) What gave occaſion chiefly to this notion, was alſo a wrong underſtanding of the Hebrew text (4), which the Septuagint, inſtead of leſt we be diſperſed, have rendered before we be diſperſed; from whence the fathers imagined, that Noah not only gave orders to the families ſprung from him to ſeparate, but actually gave to each of them a certain portion of the earth; and that before they obeyed his commands, they undertook to build the tower of Babel, as a monument of their having once dwelt together.

(1) In Ancorat. c. 114. Hæreſ 66. § 83. Syncell. p. 45. b. (2) Iſaiah xxvii. 12. (3) Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. t. I. Exerc. 22. § 10. (4) Geneſ. xi. 4.

ſeveral

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

several countries and islands, and built several towns before they laid the foundation of Babel; absurdly bringing them together again at that place, on purpose to be dispersed a second time, according to the Noachical partition [e]. But the more received opinion [f], and the most agreeable to scripture, is, that the division of the earth in the days of Peleg, and the dispersion of mankind at Babel, were one and the same transaction.

The time of the dispersion fixed.

THOSE who follow the Hebrew chronology, are driven to great straits to fix the time of this event. Some, in order to reconcile the sacred history with the prophane, or led by some fancies of their own, hold a dispersion or plantation of countries, even before the birth of Peleg. Sir John Marsham is of this number; he, to reconcile the Hebrew and Egyptian chronologies, will have Menes to have been the same with Ham, who, in the earliest times after the deluge, travelled, as he supposes, into Egypt, settled there with his children, and was the first king of that country [g]. Others, on the contrary, place the dispersion at Babel towards the end of Peleg's life; for being unable, by any fair calculation, to find people enough to furnish colonies for a plantation of nations at his birth, which according to the Hebrew falls in the year of the flood 101, they are obliged to maintain, that his name was given him prophetically long before the dispersion began, in order to make it fall in such a part of his life as would allow time for propagating a sufficient number of mankind for the purpose. The Jews place it in the last year of his life [h], wherein they are followed by St. Jerom and several of the christian chronologers. Others fix it at various periods towards the middle of his age [i]; Petau about his 52d year, or 153 years after the flood; Cumberland about his 79th year, or the 180th after the flood [k]; Salianus and Kircher [l] in the year of the flood 275; and Usher in one passage seems to place it after the birth of Rëû [m], which fell out in the 30th year of Peleg's age, or 131st of the flood, without mentioning the precise time; though elsewhere he is of opinion it ought to be referred to the time of Peleg's birth [n]. Thus those who follow the Hebrew account, seem to be agreed only in [e] SULPIC. SEVER. Hist. Eccles. l. 1. Vid. HORNIUM in eundem. [f] Vid. USSER. PETAV. COCCEIUM. NATAL. ALEX. &c. [g] MARSH. Canon. Chron. Secul. 1. p. 23. [h] R. DAVID GANZ. ad ann. 1996. SEDER OLAM RABBA in ipso initio. SHALSHEL. HAKKAB. p. 7. [i] CORNEL. A LAPIDE, TORNIELLUS, ABU'LFARAG. p. 11. [k] Orig. gent. Ant. p. 150. [l] See his Turris Babel, cap. 8. p. 20. [m] Ad ann. mund. 1757, & 1787. [n] Chronol. Sacr. part 1. cap. 5. p. 26.

not

not connecting the diſperſion of Babel with the birth of Peleg; which yet the ſcripture requires to be placed at that juncture [o]. For if by the days of Peleg are to be underſtood the whole life of the man, or the middle, or the latter end of it, then Peleg will have nothing peculiar to deſerve the name; becauſe in that ſenſe the diviſion happened in the days of all his progenitors, and even of Noah himſelf: therefore it muſt have been peculiar to Peleg alone, of all the family of Eber or Shem, to be born juſt at the very time of the diviſion, or diſperſion of Babel; from whence, with very good reaſon, he had that name given him by his father [p].

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

PERIZONIUS, who finds himſelf obliged, by the authority both of ſcripture and reaſon, to place the Babyloniſh diſperſion at the time of Peleg's birth, to ſolve the difficulty, endeavours to prove, that neither the ſcripture ſuppoſes any great number of people in being at that juncture, nor did the nature of the tranſaction require it; the firſt plantations being made with only a few, and thoſe ſmall families, which removed no farther than the countries in the neighbourhood of Shinaar [q]. But after all, though he thinks the Hebrew copy ought to be followed, yet he acknowledges, that the interval between the flood and the age of Abraham ſeems to be too ſhort, according to that chronology [r]; and that is the only interval wherein it differs from the Samaritan after the flood.

IN a word, the diſperſion is the Scylla and Charybdis of thoſe who adhere to the Hebrew chronology: according to which, if any regard be had to prophane hiſtory, that event muſt be carried higher than the birth of Peleg; and if a proper number of people be required for planting nations, it muſt be brought down a good way below his birth, if not to the time of his death; which happened within ſixty years of the time wherein the Samaritan chronology places his birth (the true epocha of the diſperſion): a plain demonſtration of the defect of the one, and of the truth of the other computation.

Of the number of mankind at the diſperſion.

HAVING ſettled the time of the diſperſion at Babel, let us next enquire into the number of mankind then in the world. Some authors, imagining that a greater part of the earth was planted in this firſt diſperſion, than we are obliged, either by ſcripture or reaſon, to believe, have endeavoured to ſwell

[o] Vid. JOSEPH. ANTIQ. l. 1. c. 7. AUGUST. de Civit. Dei lib. 16. cap. 2. MERCERUM & MUSCULUM in Geneſ. POSTELL. de orig. c. 20. BEROALD. PERKINS, BROUGHTON, PERER. & USSER. Chronol. Sacr. ubi ſup. [p] Vid. PERIZON. Orig. Babylon. cap. 14. p. 314 [q] Vid. Eund. ibid. p. 309, 310. [r] Ibid. p. 316.

their

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

their calculations as much as ever they can: and several, as if the whole earth was to be peopled at once; whilst others would reduce the number of mankind to a smaller sum than the occasion seems to have required: but a medium is to be observed between these two extremes.

IN this enquiry no computation can be made from the number of persons, mentioned in scripture, as concerned in this first dispersion, which are but fifty three, excluding Noah and his three sons; and if we have recourse to the number of generations, we shall meet with less satisfaction still from that quarter, for they were but three at most; Eber, the father of Peleg, (who could not be a leader in the dispersion, because it happened at his birth) being but the third from Shem: there are likewise only three generations mentioned in the line of Ham, and but two in that of Japhet: so that if we were to confine our calculation to that standard, it would fall vastly short. But as there were certainly many more generations procreated between the flood and the dispersion, the time that intervened ought therefore to be considered, as well as the longevity of those who lived in the first ages after the flood.

THE chronologers (who have drawn this enquiry into their own province) have suited their calculations according to their different hypotheses. Some, relying too much on the prophane historians, have taken such a method as might account for the early beginning of monarchies, and the great armies set on foot by Ctesias and his followers in the time of Ninus, whom many take to be Nimrod, or at least his son. But the Hebrew chronology lays them under a difficulty which they cannot get over, by contracting the space between the flood and the birth of Peleg to 101 years; for if the calculation produces at that period such a number of men as they judge necessary, the world will be over-stocked with inhabitants, by the natural increase of the first planters, in a very few ages after; and if it be proportioned to the number of mankind in the succeeding ages, the number procreated at the dispersion must be excessive small: wherefore most of them, as has been observed, agree, contrary to the plain sense of scripture, to remove that event towards the middle or end of that patriarch's life, according as it suited their purpose.

IT is an easy thing, when a man is determined upon the number, to find out a way to help himself to it. Petau has made a computation, which in 285 years after the flood, (or within seven years of the birth of Abraham, according to his computation) fills the world with above 155 times the number of inhabitants, which are supposed to be at present existing in it; and yet he cannot make them rise at the birth of Peleg to many above 32,768 souls[r]. Dr. Cumberland, who hath also strained the calculation to an extravagant height, can yet bring little more than 30,000 men upon the stage in the year of the flood 101; though 40 years after he increases them to above 300,000; and in 40 years more to 3,000,000[t]. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

HOWEVER, others have been much more moderate: Mr. Mede allows there could not be above 7000 men, besides women and children, in the year of the flood 101[u]; a late writer, who strenuously defends the Hebrew chronology, and has taken a great deal of pains, in his calculations of Noah's issue by his three sons, cannot raise above 1416 males of 20 years old, at the birth of Peleg[w]; and Mr. Whiston, whose principles seem more to be depended on than any of the others, produces by his computation about 2389, and no more, at that time[x]; the largest of which numbers must be allowed to be much too small for the purpose: an evident demonstration of the inconsistency of the Hebrew chronology with the circumstances of this first plantation of the earth (C).

BUT

[r] Vid. PETAVII doctrin. temp. lib. 9. c. 14. [t] CUMBERL. Orig. gent. antiq. p. 150. [u] See MEDE's works, book 1. disc. 49. [w] See BEDFORD's Script. Chronol. p. 205, &c. [x] WHISTON's short view of the Chronol. of theOld Testament, p. 65, &c.

(C) For the readers satisfaction we shall insert tables of the gradual increase of mankind after the flood, according to the calculations of three of the abovementioned authors; with the principles on which they are framed.

I. The

I. The Calculation of Father PETAU (5)

Years of the Flood.	Number of Sons born.
8 - - - - - - - - - -	8
31 - - - - - - - - - -	64
54 - - - - - - - - - -	512
77 - - - - - - - - - -	4,096
100 - - - - - - - - - -	32,768
123 - - - - - - - - - -	262,144
146 - - - - - - - - - -	2,097,152
169 - - - - - - - - - -	16,777,216
192 - - - - - - - - - -	134,217,728
215 - - - - - - - - - -	1,073,741,824
238 - - - - - - - - - -	8,589,934,592
261 - - - - - - - - - -	68,719,476,736
284 - - - - - - - - - -	549,755,813,888
Total ——	628,292,358,728
The double —	1,256,584,717,456

This table ſhews the number of the male deſcendants of one only of Noah's ſons, in ſo many years after the flood, and is formed on the ſuppoſition that they began to generate at the age of 17, and conſequently between that and 24 might each have eight ſons; ſo that the eight ſons, which a ſon of Noah might have had by the eighth year of the flood, might by the 24th year of the flood have each eight ſons more, thus adding continually 23 to the number of the years of the flood, and multiplying the next preceding number of ſons by 8, you have the number of ſons born in each interval. By this ſcheme one at leaſt of the other two ſons of Noah is to ſupply wives for the males. And becauſe the parents were long lived, and ſaw many generations of their own offspring, whereby an exceeding great number of perſons multiplied, and were found alive together out of one ſtock, therefore the whole may be allowed to be caſt up into one ſum; and if another ſon of Noah be taken in to propagate males, the third being reſerved to furniſh wives for both, we ſhall have double the number which was found by the firſt calculation. This ſuppoſition was made to account for the number of mankind in the times of Ninus and Abraham. The method ſeems plauſible at firſt ſight; but the exceſs of its production is a plain argument againſt it.

(5) Doctrin. tempor. l. 9. c. 14.

II. Biſhop CUMBERLAND's Calculation.

Years after the Flood.	Couples born in the 1ſt Vicennium after the Flood; and the couples which deſcended from them.
20 - - - - - - - -	30
60 - - - - - - - -	300
100 - - - - - - - -	3,000
140 - - - - - - - -	30,000
180 - - - - - - - -	300,000
220 - - - - - - -	3,000,000
260 - - - - - - - -	30,000,000
300 - - - - - - -	300,000,000
340 - - - - - - -	3,000,000,000
The Sum —	3,333,333,330

It muſt be obſerved, that this computation exhibits not quite a tenth part of the inhabitants, which are ſuppoſed to have been in the world in the 340th year of the flood, which is that of Peleg's death, being only the iſſue of the three ſons of Noah, for the firſt of the 17 vicennia, or ſpaces of 20 years, into which that period of time is diviſible (6); and is grounded on the gradual ſhortening of mens lives recorded in ſcripture, and a ſuppoſition, that the male iſſue of thoſe three brothers began to generate ſoon after they were 20 years old; the biſhop maintaining againſt Voſſius, that they were no longer in thoſe early ages before they came to puberty, than men now are (7). But experience ſeems to be in favour of Voſſius in this point; for the more robuſt and long-lived creatures are longeſt rearing; and we perceive that generally among brutes, the time of generation is proportioned to the length of their lives; and the births of all the patriarchs before, and a good while after, the flood, being much later in the fathers lives than the time in which men now-a-days begin to generate, is ſome argument, that they did not propagate quite ſo early as they do now.

This calculation was made, like the former, to account for the founding of certain kingdoms, which according to the Hebrew chronology began very early after the flood. Ten times the ſum in this table, gives the number of inhabitants upon earth at the birth of Abraham (8), viz. 33,333,333,300, which is a ſum eight times greater than its inhabitants are at preſent computed at.

(6) See his Orig. gent. antiq. p. 142, 154. (7) Ibid. p. 147.
(8) Ibid. p. 154.

I. The Calculation of Father PETAU (5)

Years of the Flood.	Number of Sons born.
8 - - - - - - - - - -	8
31 - - - - - - - - - -	64
54 - - - - - - - - - -	512
77 - - - - - - - - - -	4,096
100 - - - - - - - - -	32,768
123 - - - - - - - - -	262,144
140 - - - - - - - - -	2,097,152
169 - - - - - - - - -	16,777,216
192 - - - - - - - - -	134,217,728
215 - - - - - - - - -	1,073,741,824
238 - - - - - - - - -	8,589,934,592
261 - - - - - - - - -	68,719,476,736
284 - - - - - - - - -	549,755,813,888
Total ——	628,292,358,728
The double —	1,256,584,717,456

This table ſhews the number of the male deſcendants of one only of Noah's ſons, in ſo many years after the flood, and is formed on the ſuppoſition that they began to generate at the age of 17, and conſequently between that and 24 might each have eight ſons; ſo that the eight ſons, which a ſon of Noah might have had by the eighth year of the flood, might by the 24th year of the flood have each eight ſons more, thus adding continually 23 to the number of the years of the flood, and multiplying the next preceding number of ſons by 8, you have the number of ſons born in each interval. By this ſcheme one at leaſt of the other two ſons of Noah is to ſupply wives for the males. And becauſe the parents were long lived, and ſaw many generations of their own offſpring, whereby an exceeding great number of perſons multiplied, and were found alive together out of one ſtock, therefore the whole may be allowed to be caſt up into one ſum; and if another ſon of Noah be taken in to propagate males, the third being reſerved to furniſh wives for both, we ſhall have double the number which was found by the firſt calculation. This ſupputation was made to account for the number of mankind in the times of Ninus and Abraham. The method ſeems plauſible at firſt ſight; but the exceſs of its production is a plain argument againſt it.

(5) Doctrin. tempor. l. 9 c. 14.

3. II. Biſhop

II. Biſhop CUMBERLAND's Calculation.

Years after the Flood.	Couples born in the 1ſt Vicennium after the Flood; and the couples which deſcended from them.
20 - - - - - - - -	30
60 - - - - - - - -	300
100 - - - - - - - -	3,000
140 - - - - - - - -	30,000
180 - - - - - - - -	300,000
220 - - - - - - - -	3,000,000
260 - - - - - - - -	30,000,000
300 - - - - - - - -	300,000,000
340 - - - - - - - -	3,000,000,000
The Sum —	3,333,333,330

It muſt be obſerved, that this computation exhibits not quite a tenth part of the inhabitants, which are ſuppoſed to have been in the world in the 340th year of the flood, which is that of Peleg's death, being only the iſſue of the three ſons of Noah, for the firſt of the 17 vicennia, or ſpaces of 20 years, into which that period of time is diviſible (6); and is grounded on the gradual ſhortening of mens lives recorded in ſcripture, and a ſuppoſition, that the male iſſue of thoſe three brothers began to generate ſoon after they were 20 years old; the biſhop maintaining againſt Voſſius, that they were no longer in thoſe early ages before they came to puberty, than men now are (7). But experience ſeems to be in favour of Voſſius in this point; for the more robuſt and long-lived creatures are longeſt rearing; and we perceive that generally among brutes, the time of generation is proportioned to the length of their lives; and the births of all the patriarchs before, and a good while after, the flood, being much later in the fathers lives than the time in which men now-a-days begin to generate, is ſome argument, that they did not propagate quite ſo early as they do now.

This calculation was made, like the former, to account for the founding of certain kingdoms, which according to the Hebrew chronology began very early after the flood. Ten times the ſum in this table, gives the number of inhabitants upon earth at the birth of Abraham (8), viz. 33,333,333,300, which is a ſum eight times greater than its inhabitants are at preſent computed at.

(6) See his Orig. gent. antiq. p. 142, 154. (7) Ibid. p. 147.
(8) Ibid. p. 154.

III. Mr. WHISTON's Calculation (9).

Number of mankind.	Years after the flood.	Years of doubling.	Series.
16	4	4	1
32	9	5	2
64	15	6	3
128	23	8	4
256	35	12	5
512	50	15	6
1024	70	20	7
2048	95	25	8
4096	125	30	9
8192	160	35	10
16,384	200	40	11
32,768	245	45	12
65,536	295	50	13
131,072	350	55	14
262,144	410	60	15
524,288	475	65	16
1,048,576	545	70	17
2,097,152	620	75	18
4,194,304	700	80	19
8,388,608	800	100	20
16,777,216	1,000	200	21
33,554,432	1,300	300	22
67,108,864	1,700	400	23
134,217,728	2,100	400	24
268,435,456	2,500	400	25
536,870,912	2,900	400	26
1,073,741,824	3,300	400	27
2,147,483,648	3,700	400	28
4,294,967,296	4,100	400	29

This calculation of Mr. Whiſton's is leſs hypothetical than either of the former. It is now generally owned, that the number of ſouls upon the face of the whole earth, at preſent, does not exceed four thouſand millions, though our author imagines it may come nearer to that ſum than many ſuppoſe (10). It is alſo now generally owned, and this from good obſervations, that mankind do double them-

(9) See his ſhort View of the Chronol. of the old Teſt. p. 65.
(10) See Dr. Nicholl's Conference, part 1. p. 75. 76.

ſelves,

ſelves, at the longeſt, in four hundred years (11); which therefore is to be ſuppoſed the proportion, ever ſince the preſent period of human life was fixed in the days of David. Mr. Whiſton thinks it alſo evident, that from the deluge till the days of David the lives of men were ſix, if not ſeven times as long as they have been ſince, (though much more and leſs than that proportion at the earlieſt and lateſt times of that interval) whence he concludes, that the period of the doubling of mankind from the deluge till the days of David, in a mean, muſt have been, at the leaſt, ſix or ſeven times ſhorter than that which has ſince obtained, by reaſon of their antient longer lives in that proportion; though ſtill this period of doubling muſt have been much ſhorter and longer in the earlieſt and lateſt times of the ſaid interval. Upon theſe grounds he has compoſed the preceding table, taking a ſeries of numbers beginning at eight, (for ſo many ſouls ſurvived the deluge) and doubling themſelves in ſixty years at a mean, from the flood till David, i. e. for about 1300 years (according to the Hebrew account) and thence forward to our own times in four hundred years, i. e. for about two thouſand ſeven hundred years (12).

On this table Mr. Whiſton makes an obſervation, of which we are concerned to take ſome notice. He ſays, "We thereby ſee, that "the number of years, according to the Hebrew chronology, will "very naturally account for the preſent number of ſouls upon the "face of the earth, and afford as many in every age preceding as "any authentic accounts of antient times do require. But if, in-"ſtead of one thouſand three hundred years, in the firſt interval, "we take, with the Septuagint, above one thouſand nine hundred, "this addition of above ſix hundred years, at a time when mankind, "at a mean, doubled in ſixty years, will produce above a thouſand "times as many as this table, or the earth for certain does contain "at preſent. So that if that longer chronology were allowed, the "earth in all probability muſt have had many more inhabitants in "the days of David, than it has in our days, contrary to the cer-"tain obſervations of the increaſe of mankind. And the like is to "be ſaid in due proportion of the Samaritan, or any other chrono-"logy, which lengthens the ſpace ſince the deluge" (13).

However, Mr. Whiſton having, ſince he wrote this, rejected the Hebrew chronology, and declared in favour of the Samaritan, it is to be preſumed he has changed his opinion in this reſpect alſo, and found a way to get over the objection, though he has taken no notice of it as it might have been expected, in a later work, where he has made a calculation of the number of inhabitants before the flood (14). We ſhall therefore ourſelves endeavour to ſolve the difficulty, which we imagine may be done, by obſerving only, that the ſpace of ſixty years, which he takes for the mean period of mankind's doubling, from the flood to David, is much too ſhort, and the leaſt that can be allowed, even for the firſt 500 or 600 years after the flood, according to his own principles; the age of Shem himſelf being little more than ſeven times, and that of Peleg, the fourth in deſcent from him, but three times as long as the preſent ſtandard; whereas he reckons mens lives to be ſix or ſeven times as long, quite down to the time of David. So that we cannot but think, that for the laſt 800 years, at leaſt, of that interval, from the time of Abraham to David, the increaſe of mankind by the table, is above twice as great as it ought to be; allowance being made for which miſcomputation, we doubt not but the years added by the Samaritan Pentateuch will be thought requiſite, inſtead of exceſſive.

(11) See before, p. 222. in not. (12) Whiſton's Chronol. of the old Teſt. p. 65. (13) Ibid. p. 68. (14) See his Theory of the Earth, p. 249; and this work in the place above quoted.

That the reader may judge whether our objection to ſo much of Mr. Whiſton's calculation be well grounded or not, we ſhall annex his own table of the ages of all the perſons which are mentioned in, or can be collected from ſcripture, from the flood to the death of David (15).

Gen. xi.	10, 11.	Shem	600
	12, 13.	Arphaxad	438
	14, 15.	Salah	433
	16, 17.	Heber	464
	18, 19.	Phaleg	239
	20, 21.	Reu	239
	22, 23.	Serug	230
	24, 25.	Nabor	148
	32.	Terah	205
Chap. xxv.	7.	Abraham	175
xxiii.	1.	Sarah	127
xxxv.	28.	Iſaac	180
xxv.	17.	Iſmael	137
xlvii.	28.	Jacob	147
l.	26.	Joſeph	110
Exod. vi.	16.	Levi	137
	18.	Kohath	133
		Hefron about	133
Job. i. 1—4. with xlii.	16	Job about	180
Exod. vi.	20.	Amram	137
		Serug about	137
		Izhar about	137
		Pallu about	137
		Jochebed about	137
Num. xxxiii.	39.	Miriam about	130
		Aaron	123
Deut. xxxiv.	7.	Moſes	120
		Corah about	125
		Dathan about	125
		Abiram about	125

(15) Whiſton's Chronol. of the old Teſt. p. 10, and Theory of the Earth, p. 274.

Joſh.

BUT if we follow the Samaritan computation, which allows us 300 years more in the interval between the flood and the birth of Peleg than the Hebrew, theſe difficulties, which are otherwiſe inſuperable, vaniſh at once, and we may venture to take even the loweſt calculation. According to that of the gentleman we laſt mentioned, the number of mankind in the year of the flood 401, will be above 240,000; which we think may reaſonably be allowed ſufficient to begin the diſperſion, and furniſh fifty three leaders with people enough to form as many colonies. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

IT is to be conſidered alſo, that each of theſe colonies increaſed in proportion as they removed farther from the centre of their migrations, before they arrived at the countries in which they finally ſettled; for the earth was not planted at once, but by degrees; ſo that there is the leſs occaſion for ſtraining to inlarge the number of mankind at the time of the diſperſion, as ſome have done.

As to the order, or method, wherein theſe firſt plantations of the earth were made, ſome have imagined there was little Of the order of the or firſt plantations.

Joſh. xxiv. 29.	Joſhua	110
	Rahab about	135
	Booz about	125
	Obed about	110
1 Sam. iv. 15.	Eli	98
	Jeſſe about	95
2 Sam. xix. 32.	Barzillai above	80
(16) Chap. v. 4.	David	70

Mr. Whiſton obſerves from this table, that the gradual decreaſe of the length of men's lives did not ſtop, nor was the age of man reduced to the preſent ſtandard of ſeventy, or eighty years till the days of king David; and that the 90th plaſm, where the lives of the Iſraelites ſeem to be ſtated, if it was compoſed by Moſes, as the title informs us, had regard only to the ſhortening the lives of the murmurers in the wilderneſs (17), by a divine judgment (when all thoſe were to periſh in the ſpace of forty years, who were grown men at the Exodus), without any reſpect to the common period of human life at that time. Barzillai, in the days of David, is the firſt mentioned in ſcripture who was reckoned ſo old, as not likely to live long at eighty years of age (18); and David himſelf is the firſt who is ſaid to have died, and that in a good old age, and full of days (19);

(16) See Uſſer. Chronol. Sacr. c. 8 and 12, & Annal. A. M. 2552. (17) Numb. xiv. 29, 35. (18) 2 Sam. xix. 35. (19) 1 Chron. xxix. 28.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

or none, but that each colony settled where they did by mere chance [y], every one seizing on such countries as he casually light upon [z]. Yet if we attentively consider the account given of this transaction by the sacred historian, we shall find nothing more foreign to his intention, than a precipitate and confused dissipation: for first we are told, with regard to the sons of Japhet, the eldest branch of Noah's posterity, that by these were the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands; every one after his tongue, after their families, in their nations [a]; in like manner Moses concludes the account he gives us of the sons of Ham, the youngest branch of Noah's posterity, with these words: These are the sons of Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, in their nations [b]; and that of the descendants of Shem ends thus: These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations [c]. From which texts may well be inferred, (as the learned Mede [d] has observed) that this great division of the earth we are speaking of was performed orderly, and was not a confused and irregular dispersion, wherein every one went whither he listed, and seated himself where he liked best [e].

WE see a two-fold order in these first plantations. First, they were ranged according to their nations, and then every nation was ranked after their families; so that every nation dwelt, and had his lot by himself, and in every nation the families also dwelt, and had their lots by themselves; for the true import of the before-cited texts seems to be, that the land, or peculiar lot of each family, did lie within the general lot of each nation.

Of the first plantation of the earth.

THOSE who have undertaken to give an account of these first settlements of the children of Noah, having founded their conjectures chiefly on the similitude of names, a guide too deceitful to be trusted so far as it has been by some, who on emergencies have ransacked the whole world for names of people, countries, rivers, mountains, and cities, which so soon as seventy years, which are the particular numbers mentioned in that psalm, and the standard of human life in all succeeding ages (20).

[y] HEIDEGG. Hist. Patr. t. 1. Exerc. 22. §. 11. [z] HESTIÆUS Milesius apud Euseb. præp. Evang. l. 9. c. 15. [a] Genes. x. 5. [b] Ibid. ver. 20. [c] Ibid. ver. 31. [d] See his works, Book 1. Disc. 49 and 50: [e] WELLS's Geog. of the old Test. vol. 1. p. 93.

(20) Whiston's Chron of the old Test. p. 9 and 11.

had had but the leaſt affinity with thoſe of the planters they were at a loſs to fix; others have therefore taken the precaution to lay down ſome rules [f] for the more ſure proceeding in this enquiry, and which we may reduce to two; 1. To ſuffer ourſelves to be directed chiefly by ſcripture, not neglecting however the light which may be had from prophane authors. 2. To ſeek for the original plantations within a reaſonable compaſs of the earth, and in an orderly diſpoſition; looking for the families where we find the nation, and for the nation where we find the families: and theſe rules, we think, may be admitted; but another, viz. that thoſe nations whoſe families are named by Moſes, are chiefly to be ſought for in the neighbourhood of Judæa, we conceive liable to too many exceptions to deſerve the name of a rule; for it was plainly the deſign of that hiſtorian to give us an account of the original of all nations in the world, as far as he had knowledge of them, and not only of ſuch as had to deal with the Jews, or were their neighbours.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

BUT after all, this is one of thoſe enquiries about which we ought not to be over ſollicitous, for the originals of very few nations can be traced ſo high as the diſperſion of Babel, much the greater part being ſubject to the utmoſt uncertainty. Since the firſt migrations of mankind, countries have often changed their names, and people their countries, without being obſerved by hiſtorians (D). We may form conjectures, and pleaſe ourſelves with the plauſibleneſs of our ſchemes, but who can be ſure that the principles on which they are built have any foundation? moſt of the arguments, in enquiries of this nature, reſult from the identity, or ſimilitude of the names of people and countries; but, for ought we know, the nations we take to be very antient, are modern in reſpect of the times next after the flood; and the names we ſuppoſe to have been retained by cities from antiquity, are of late original as well as themſelves: perhaps alſo many of the names of people and countries mentioned in ſcripture were peculiar to the Jews, ſince we find them no where elſe. And it muſt be obſerved, that that nation, by having loſt the

[f] See MEDE's works, and WELS's Geogr. of the old Teſt. ubi ſup.

(D) Quotidie aliquid in hoc magno orbe mutatur, nova urbium fundamenta jaciuntur, nova gentium nomina, extinctis nominibus prioribus, oriuntur (21).

(21) Senec. de conſol. ad Albin.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

remembrance of the greateſt part of their antiquities, are become as bad guides in matters of this nature as the Greeks, who began too late to keep records for us to expect any great aſſiſtance from them.

WE ſhall from theſe conſiderations be the ſhorter in our account of this matter, which we ſhall begin, as the migrations of the colonies did, from Shinaar; about which we find the branch of Shem placed, incloſed by that of Japhet on the north, and Ham on the ſouth. And it is obſervable, that, generally ſpeaking, the nations and families in each of theſe great diviſions took their ſtations according to ſeniority, the eldeſt remaining neareſt the centre, and the youngeſt removing outermoſt.

The countries planted by the deſcendants of Shem.

SHEM may be ſuppoſed for the few years, viz. eleven, which according to the Samaritan chronology, he lived after the diſperſion of mankind, to have dwelt in Shinaar: his deſcendants ſeem to have ſettled from Media weſtward to the ſea-coaſt of Aram, or Syria. The number of chiefs of his line concerned in the diſperſion were ſeven, Elam, Aſhur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram, the ſons of Shem; Salah, the ſon of Arphaxad; and Eber, the ſon of Salah.

Eloam. 1. ELAM ſettled in the country of Elam, lying to the ſouth-eaſt of Shinaar; in the time of Daniel Suſiana, or Khuzeſtân, ſeems to have been part of it [g], and before the captivity it does not appear that the Jews called Perſia by any other name. Elymæ, and Elymaïs are often mentioned by the antients: Ptolemy, though he makes Elymaïs a province of Media, yet he places the Elymæi (for which the maps corruptly read Eldemæi) in Suſiana near the ſea-coaſt [h]. Stephanus [i] takes it to be a part of Aſſyria, but Pliny [j], and Joſephus [k], more properly, of Perſia, whoſe inhabitants, this latter tells us, ſprang from the Elamites [l]; and this ſeems to have been the moſt eaſterly bounds of the poſterity of Shem; for adjoining on the eaſt was Media, ſuppoſed to be poſſeſſed by Madai, the third ſon of Japhet.

Aſhur. 2. As Aſhur was the ſecond ſon of Shem, ſo we find his country lying next to Elam's on the weſt, or north-weſt, called likewiſe after him Aſhur, and by the Greeks Aſſyria, at preſent Curdeſtân or the country of the Curds. Pezron ſuppoſes he was driven out of Shinaar by Nimrod, Ham's grandſon [m], which indeed ſeems to be the caſe, though it may

[g] Dan. viii. 2. [h] Vid. Tab. 5. Aſiæ, & BOCHART. Phaleg. l. 2. c. 2. [i] De urb. voce Ἐλύμαι. [j] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 25, &c. Vid. STRAB. l. 16. [k] Antiq. l. 12. c. 13. [l] Ibid. l. 1. c. 7. See before, p. 278. [m] Antiquité des tems retablie, p. 148.

may be objected, that if he had not ſettled there originally, he would not have found room in that part, which muſt have been poſſeſſed by ſome other family. However that be, it was Aſſur[n], and not Nimrod, who went out of Shinaar into Aſſyria, and built Nineveh and other cities, as Perizonius has clearly proved that text is to be underſtood [o], and circumſtances require.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt 2597.

3. ARPHAXAD is placed by ſome in Arrapachitis, a province of Aſſyria towards the north part of that country; but others ſettle him with his family in Chaldæa, where indeed we find his deſcendants till the time of Abraham. And could it be proved, that the Chaſdîm, or Chaldeans, derive their name as well as deſcent from that patriarch, as Joſephus affirms [p], there would be no doubt of this laſt being the true opinion. Some, who make but one and the ſame perſon of Arphaxad and Cainan, who is inſerted between him and Salah in the Septuagint verſion, ſuppoſe him to be the founder of the monarchy of China [q].

Arphaxad.

WHERE Salah, the ſon of Arphaxad, ſettled, is very uncertain; ſome ſuppoſe it to have been in Suſiana, or Khuzeſtân, in Perſia, becauſe they find a town there formerly called Sala; but Morocco, Spain, Phrygia, Armenia, and Hyrcania may claim this patriarch for their planter upon the ſame ground; having had each of them a town of the ſame name; and in Colchis we find a nation called Salæ [r], which ſeems to have the beſt pretenſions to him of all, ſince he ought to be conſidered rather as the founder of a nation than of a town. But as affinity of names weighs very little with us, except backed by ſome other proof, we ſhall not remove him out of Chaldæa, where we ſuppoſe room enough for all his deſcendants in the right line till Abraham; for which reaſon we ſettle Eber alſo in the ſame country.

Salah.

Eber.

4. WE can ſee no more reaſon than Sir Walter Raleigh [s], why Lud, Shem's fourth ſon, ſhould ſtraggle ſo far from his friends as Lydia, where Joſephus fixes him: beſides there is a ſtrong objection againſt this opinion, the Lydians having been firſt called Mæones, as all the antients agree, and Lydians from Lydus, the ſon of Atys [t], except we ſuppoſe the Greeks were deceived, and that, the name of Mæones ceaſing, they reſumed their old name of Lydians, which often

Lud.

[n] Geneſ. x. 11. [o] Orig. Babylon. cap. 4. [p] Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 7. See before, p. 280. [q] Vid. BOLDUC. de Eccleſ. ante leg. lib. 2. cap. 2. [r] Vid. PLIN. Hiſt. Nat. lib. 6. c. 4. [s] Book 1. cap. 8. § 15. [t] HEROD. lib. 1. STRABO, lib. 13. PLINIUS, lib. 5. cap. 29.

Ins

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

has happened. But even in that case we ought perhaps to consider Lydia as possessed by the Ludim, or posterity of Lud, on a second, or third remove, and to look for his first settlement nearer his brothers; but here the very similitude of names, which are generally upon these occasions ready at hand to help out at a dead lift, seems to fail us.

Aram.

5. MESOPOTAMIA and Syria comprehending the countries westward of Assyria as far as the Mediterranian sea, seem wholly (if we except Phœnicia and Palestine) to have fallen to the share of Aram, Shem's fifth and youngest son, whose name is given both to the whole and the several regions thereof in scripture.

WITHIN, or bordering on, this country of Aram, it is likely the four sons of Aram settled. It is generally agreed,

Uz. that Uz the eldest built Damascus, and gave name to the country about that city [u], which seems to be different from the land of Uz, where Job dwelt, lying towards Edom. 2. Bo-

Hul. chart supposes Hul to have settled in Cholobetene, a part of the greater Armenia, where he finds several places whose names

Gether. begin with Chol or Col [w]. 3. Gether, according to Josephus, was prince of the Bactrians [x], but Bactria lay out of Shem's lot, as well as too far for the first plantation; and if we allow him a seat about the river Centrites, between Armenia and the Carduchi, it is not that we think there is the least affinity in the two names to induce us to it, as Bochart does. 4.

Mash. Mash, or Meshek, Aram's fourth son, is supposed to fix in Armenia about the mountain Masius, the same with that commonly held to be Ararat, and called by the Armenians Masîs. The people who dwelt near this mountain are by Stephanus named Masieni. Bochart [y] refutes the notion of Josephus [z], who derives the Mesanæans near the mouth of the Tigris from them, not considering that they took their name from their situation between the rivers. However, the Armenians themselves do not lay claim to any of Shem's line as their progenitor, but say, they are descended from Togarmah of Japhet's posterity, as will be seen by and by.

The nations descended from Ham.

HAM probably removed from Shinaar. Supposing him to be the Cronus of Sanchoniatho [a], he reigned in Phœnicia. According to others, who make him to be the same with Menes, he must have settled in Egypt [b], which indeed in [u] BOCHART, Geog. Sacr. lib. 2. cap. 8. JOSEPH. lib. 1. cap. 7. [w] Phaleg. lib. 2. cap. 9. [x] JOSEPH. ubi supr. [y] Ubi supr. [z] Ubi supr. [a] CUMBERL on Sanchon. p. 111. [b] MARSHAM Chron. Canon. p. 18, 23.

scripture

ſcripture is often called the land of Ham; and ſome from the ſimilitude of Ammon, and other words of the like ſound, would infer, that he at leaſt dwelt there for ſome time; but nothing can be concluded from ſuch weak evidence. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

1. CUSH, his eldeſt ſon, according to Joſephus and the antients, was the father of the Ethiopians, who he ſays, were in his time called Cuſhæans, not only by themſelves, but all Aſia over [c]. But it is not likely, that if Mizraïm and Canaan ſettled themſelves in the lands betwixt him and Shinaar, that his ſon Nimrod would be found erecting a monarchy ſo early in that country. It is more probable, that he ſeated himſelf in the ſouth-eaſtern part of Babylonia, and in the adjoining part of Suſiana, ſtill called Khuzeſtân, or the country of Chuz; from whence his poſterity in the ſucceeding generations might have paſſed into other countries. That a part of Arabia near the red ſea was named Cuſh, appears from ſcripture. Cuſhan and Midian are joined together as the ſame, or neighbouring people, dwelling in tents [d]; and in another place [e] the Arabs are made to border on the Cuſhites, which therefore cannot be the Ethiopians; to which may be added other ſcriptural proofs [f]; in a word, by Cuſh in ſcripture is always to be underſtood Arabia. As for thoſe texts which are alledged to prove Cuſh is ſometimes taken for Ethiopia, they may alſo be expounded of Arabia [g]. Cuſh, according to the Arab and Perſian traditions, which name him Cutha, was king of the territory of Babel, and reſided in Erâk [h], where there were two cities of his name [i]; from whence, among other reaſons, Dr. Hyde is of opinion, that Cuſh reigned in Babylonia, and that his deſcendants removed into Arabia [k], though it is hard to fix the quarters of any of them; which has given occaſion to thoſe who ſuppoſe Cuſh to be Ethiopia, to ſpread them all along the coaſt of Africa to the end of Mauritania [l]. Cuſh.

THOSE who place them in Arabia are divided about their ſituations. To follow therefore the rules we have laid down, we will ſuppoſe, 1. That Seba ſeated himſelf ſomewhere in the ſouth of Chaldæa, or the Arabian Erâk: becauſe, 2. His ſecond brother Havilah's country lay thereabouts, watered by the Piſon, as we have formerly obſerved. 3. Sabtah's Seba. Havilah. Sabtah.

[c] Antiquit. lib. 1. cap. 7. [d] Habak. iii. 7. [e] 2 Chron. xxi. 16 [f] Ezek. xxix. 10. 2 Kings xix. 9. 2 Chron. 14. 9. [g] Iſaiah xviii. 1. Zeph. iii. 10. 2 Chron. xii. 3. Jerem. xiii. 23, [h] ALTABARI in cap. de morte Saræ, apud Hyde de Relig. Vet. Perſ. p. 40. [i] HYDE, ibid. p. 80, &c. [k] Idem ibid. p. 39, 40. [l] Vid. BOCHART Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 3.

ſeat

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

has happened. But even in that case we ought perhaps to consider Lydia as possessed by the Ludim, or posterity of Lud, on a second, or third remove, and to look for his first settlement nearer his brothers; but here the very similitude of names, which are generally upon these occasions ready at hand to help out at a dead lift, seems to fail us.

Aram.

5. MESOPOTAMIA and Syria comprehending the countries westward of Assyria as far as the Mediterranian sea, seem wholly (if we except Phœnicia and Palestine) to have fallen to the share of Aram, Shem's fifth and youngest son, whose name is given both to the whole and the several regions thereof in scripture.

WITHIN, or bordering on, this country of Aram, it is likely the four sons of Aram settled. It is generally agreed, that Uz the eldest built Damascus, and gave name to the country about that city [u], which seems to be different from the land of Uz, where Job dwelt, lying towards Edom. 2. Bo-

Uz.

Hul.

chart supposes Hul to have settled in Cholobetene, a part of the greater Armenia, where he finds several places whose names begin with Chol or Col [w]. 3. Gether, according to Josephus, was prince of the Bactrians [x], but Bactria lay out of Shem's lot, as well as too far for the first plantation; and if we allow him a seat about the river Centrites, between Armenia and the Carduchi, it is not that we think there is the least affinity in the two names to induce us to it, as Bochart does. 4.

Gether.

Mash.

Mash, or Meshek, Aram's fourth son, is supposed to fix in Armenia about the mountain Masius, the same with that commonly held to be Ararat, and called by the Armenians Masis. The people who dwelt near this mountain are by Stephanus named Masieni. Bochart [y] refutes the notion of Josephus [z], who derives the Mesanæans near the mouth of the Tigris from them, not considering that they took their name from their situation between the rivers. However, the Armenians themselves do not lay claim to any of Shem's line as their progenitor, but say, they are descended from Togarmah of Japhet's posterity, as will be seen by and by.

The nations descended from Ham.

HAM probably removed from Shinaar. Supposing him to be the Cronus of Sanchoniatho [a], he reigned in Phœnicia. According to others, who make him to be the same with Menes, he must have settled in Egypt [b], which indeed in [u] BOCHART, Geog. Sacr. lib. 2. cap. 8. JOSEPH. lib. 1. cap. 7. [w] Phaleg. lib. 2. cap. 9. [x] JOSEPH. ubi supr. [y] Ubi supr. [z] Ubi supr. [a] CUMBERL on Sanchon. p. 111. [b] MARSHAM Chron. Canon. p. 18, 23.

scripture

ſcripture is often called the land of Ham; and ſome from the ſimilitude of Ammon, and other words of the like ſound, would infer, that he at leaſt dwelt there for ſome time; but nothing can be concluded from ſuch weak evidence. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

1. CUSH, his eldeſt ſon, according to Joſephus and the antients, was the father of the Ethiopians, who he ſays, were in his time called Cuſhæans, not only by themſelves, but all Aſia over [c]. But it is not likely, that if Mizraïm and Canaan ſettled themſelves in the lands betwixt him and Shinaar, that his ſon Nimrod would be found erecting a monarchy ſo early in that country. It is more probable, that he ſeated himſelf in the ſouth-eaſtern part of Babylonia, and in the adjoining part of Suſiana, ſtill called Khuzeſtân, or the country of Chuz; from whence his poſterity in the ſucceeding generations might have paſſed into other countries. That a part of Arabia near the red ſea was named Cuſh, appears from ſcripture. Cuſhan and Midian are joined together as the ſame, or neighbouring people, dwelling in tents [d]; and in another place [e] the Arabs are made to border on the Cuſhites, which therefore cannot be the Ethiopians; to which may be added other ſcriptural proofs [f]; in a word, by Cuſh in ſcripture is always to be underſtood Arabia. As for thoſe texts which are alledged to prove Cuſh is ſometimes taken for Ethiopia, they may alſo be expounded of Arabia [g]. Cuſh, according to the Arab and Perſian traditions, which name him Cutha, was king of the territory of Babel, and reſided in Erâk [h], where there were two cities of his name [i]; from whence, among other reaſons, Dr. Hyde is of opinion, that Cuſh reigned in Babylonia, and that his deſcendants removed into Arabia [k], though it is hard to fix the quarters of any of them; which has given occaſion to thoſe who ſuppoſe Cuſh to be Ethiopia, to ſpread them all along the coaſt of Africa to the end of Mauritania [l]. Cuſh.

THOSE who place them in Arabia are divided about their ſituations. To follow therefore the rules we have laid down, we will ſuppoſe, 1. That Seba ſeated himſelf ſomewhere in the ſouth of Chaldæa, or the Arabian Erâk: becauſe, 2. His ſecond brother Havilah's country lay thereabouts, watered by the Piſon, as we have formerly obſerved. 3. Sabtah's Seba. Havilah. Sabtah.

[c] Antiquit. lib. 1. cap. 7. [d] Habak. iii. 7. [e] 2 Chron. xxi. 16 [f] Ezek. xxix. 10. 2 Kings xix. 9. 2 Chron. 14. 9. [g] Iſaiah xviii. 1. Zeph. iii. 10. 2 Chron. xii. 3. Jerem. xiii. 23, [h] ALTABARI in cap. de morte Saræ, apud Hyde de Relig. Vet. Perſ. p. 40. [i] HYDE, ibid. p. 80, &c. [k] Idem ibid. p. 39, 40. [l] Vid. BOCHART Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 3.

ſeat

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

Raamah. Sheba and Dedan.

seat perhaps lay more to the south, where we find a city called Saphtha by Ptolemy, not far from the Persian gulph, and another named Sabatha, lower down in Arabia Felix, which comes much nearer Sabtah. 4. Raamah or Rhegma may find a place more southward still, about a city called Rhegama by Ptolemy, on the same gulph. Some moderns mention a city not far from it called Daden [m], which Dr. Wells does not doubt was the residence of his son Dedan [n]. Though others will have Raamah and both his sons, Sheba as well as Dedan, to people the parts adjacent to the Red sea [o]. They conclude Dedan to have been near Edom, because Ezekiel joins them together [p]; as Raamah must have been near Sheba, being mentioned as joint-traders to Tyre in spices by the same prophet [q]; and elsewhere [r] Sheba and Seba are joined as neighbours, though distinguished as different kingdoms: they seem to have possessed a larger part of Arabia, for Pliny observes, that the Sabæan nations inhabited from sea to sea, that is, from the Arabian to the Persian gulph. A late writer supposes Sheba lived on the borders of the land of Midian, and gave name to the country whose queen in after-ages went to visit Solomon [s]. But the Arabs say, the country of Sheba lies a great way more to the south in Yaman, or, as we call it, Arabia Felix, near the Indian sea; the chief city of which was formerly Saba, now called Mareb [t], and founded, according to their tradition, by a descendant of Joktan, or Kabtan. And it must be confessed, this seems to be the country of Sheba mentioned in scripture, for the frankincense grows thereabouts.

Sabtecha.

5. Sabtecha has puzzled all the geographers to assign his quarters. Bochart [u] not finding a place in Arabia which bore any resemblance to the name, passes over to Carmania in Persia, and presses the city Samydace into the service, observing that the M and B are often changed the one for the other by the Arabs and their neighbours. On the other hand, Dr. Wells [v] imagines, that the Saracens are the descendants of Sabtecha, which nation being stiled at first by the Grecks Sabtaceni, that name was afterwards softened into Saraceni; and the rather, he thinks, because alluding to the Arabic verb sarâka, to steal, it served for a nick-name.

[m] ORTELIUS, ODOARDUS BARBOZA, nella descrit. di Ormuz. [n] Geog. of the old Test. vol. 1. p. 197. [o] SHUCKFORD's Connect. of the Sacred and Profane Hist. Vol. 1. p. 173. [p] Ezek. xxv. 13. [q] Ibid. xxvii. 22. [r] Psalm, lxxii. 10. [s] SHUCKFORD ubi supr. [t] Geog. Nub. p. 26 and 52. POCOCK. Specimen Hist. Arab. p. 57. D'HERB. Bibl. Orient. Art. Saba. [u] Geog. Sacr. lib. 4. cap. 4. [v] Geog. of the old Test. Vol. I. p. 198.

Though

Though indeed the word Saraceni is no other than Sharkiin, which in Arabic ſignifies Eaſterlings; as the African Arabs weſt of Egypt, are called Mograbins or Weſterlings. For our parts, being afraid to meddle in a point of ſo much uncertainty, we think it the ſafeſt way to paſs this perſon by, and proceed. 6. To his brother Nimrod, who it is agreed kept poſſeſſion of Shinaar and erected a kingdom there, making Babel the ſeat of his empire [w].

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597. Nimrod.

2. MIZRAÏM ſtands in the place of the ſecond ſon of Ham; for there is a great diſpute, whether this is the name of a ſingle perſon or of a people, as having a dual termination, though the verb in the text, where he is ſaid to beget Ludim, is in the ſingular number, which favours the former opinion. However that be, it is plain, that the names of Ludim and all the reſt of his deſcendants are plural, by what we read of the Caphtorim, namely, that they came forth out of Caphtor [x]. Nor do we ſee any harm in that opinion, which ſuppoſes them branches of a large body of people denoted by the name Mizraïm, which divided between them the country called after their name by the Hebrews and other eaſtern people [y]. Mizraïm.

As to the nations deſcended from Mizraïm: 1. The Ludim are judged to be the people above Egypt called by the Greeks Ethiopians, and at preſent Abyſſins. Bochart endeavours to prove it by no leſs than ten arguments [z]. We rarely find them called otherwiſe in ſcripture than Lud, either from the name of their founder, or their country. In one paſſage of ſcripture Lud are called a mixt people [a]; in others [b], they are ſaid to be very ſkilful in drawing the bow, which the Ethiopians were famous for; and in two of the above-mentioned paſſages [c], Lud is joined with Cuſh and Phut, as are the Lubims elſewhere with the Egyptians [d]; from whence it may be inferred, they were all neighbouring people. 2. The Anamim are thought by Bochart to be the Ammonians, or inhabitants of that part of Lybia where ſtood the temple of Jupiter Ammon [e], deſcended, according to Herodotus, partly from the Egyptians, and partly from the Ethiopians. 3. The Lehabim are ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the Lubim, who, with the Sukkiims and Cuſhites, came out of Mizraïm, or Egypt, with Shiſhak, to invade Judæa [f]: theſe therefore may not improbably be judged to be the Libyans of Cyrenaica, or Ludim. Anamim. Lehabim.

w See p. 268. x Deut. ii. 23. y JOSEPHUS Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 7. z Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 26. a Ezek. xxx. 5. b Iſaiah lxvi. 19. Jerem. xlvi. 9. c Ezek. xxx. 5. Jerem. xlvi. 9. d 2 Chron. xii. 3. e Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 30. f 2 Chron. xii. 3.

proper

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

proper Libya, near Egypt. 4. The Naphtuhim are thought to have settled in Marmarica, adjoining to Cyrenaica[g]. It is observed, that the Egyptians called all the skirts of a country, and promontories washed by the sea, Nephthys; and Bochart places the Naphtuhim rather on the coast of the Mediterranean than on that of the red sea, because the Troglodites and Ichthyophagi, who are the inhabitants of the latter, are in the scripture called Ziyim and Sukkiim[h]. Some place the Naphtuhim about Noph, or Memphis, in Egypt[i]. 5. Pathrusim are evidently the inhabitants of Pathros, which some wrongly take for Pelusium; others, more justly, for Thebais, or the upper Egypt, which is distinguished from the lower Egypt, in prophane history as well as sacred[k]. Ezekiel[l] mentions it by itself; and Isaiah[m] distinguishes it from Egypt; but from Jeremiah the country of Pathros appears either to be a part of that kingdom, or adjoining to it, being mentioned with Migdol, Tahpanhes, and Noph[n], which are known to be cities, or districts of Egypt. 6. The Casluhim are supposed to have settled somewhere towards the entrance of Egypt, about mount Cassius, in that part of the lower Egypt called Cassiotis by Ptolemy and others, which places it is thought retain some likeness of the name; but without relying on that argument, they appear to have been planted near the Caphtorim, because the Philistim, as it seems, were descended from both these people[o], and consequently in Egypt. Bochart, misled by following the Jewish notion about Caphtor, fancies them to be the inhabitants of Colchis[p], at present called Mingrelia. As for the Philistim, who in the Mosaic account of the dispersion are derived from the Casluhim[q], we shall consider their original settlement in Egypt before they removed into Canaan, when we come to their particular history. 7. Caphtorim, the last of the offspring of Mizraïm, are, as Bochart[r] observes, by all the fathers said to be the Cappadocians, and Caphtor Cappadocia; as the Septuagint have also rendered it[s]. In this, doubtless, they follow the Jews, who explain those names the same way, as do the three Chaldee paraphrasts. But by Cappadocia in these writings, is not to be understood Cappadocia in Asia minor, as Bochart, and perhaps the rest, Naphtuhim.

Pathrusim.

Casluhim.

Philistim.

Caphtorim.

[g] Bochart Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 29. [h] Ibid. [i] Isaiah xix. 13. [k] Vid. Bochart Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 37. [l] Chap. xxix. v. 14. [m] Chap. xi. v. 11. [n] Chap. xliv. v. 1. [o] Compare Gen. x. 14. with Deut. ii. 23. Jerem. xlvii. 4. and Amos ix. 7. [p] Bochart. Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 31 [q] Gen. x. 14. [r] Lib. 4. cap. 33. [s] Deut. ii. 23.

judged, judged, but ſome place in Egypt, generally ſuppoſed by the Rabbins to be Demyat [t], or Damietta, commonly confounded with Peluſium. One would be inclined to think the Caphtorim derived from Coptus, a noted city of the ſame country, (which by many is ſuppoſed to have taken its name from thence) if it was not that Caphtor appears to have been an iſland [u], and more probably ſituate either in the lake of Tennîs, or Tanis, which extends from Damietta to Tina, the true Peluſium, or in the Arabic gulf, rather than Crete, as will be obſerved hereafter. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

3. AUTHORS are not agreed about the country, where Phut, the third ſon of Ham, planted himſelf. Bochart endeavours to prove that Mizraïm and he divided Africa between them [w]: what is moſt to the purpoſe is taken from St. Jerom, who affirms Phut to be Libya, and that in his time there was a river in Mauritania with the adjacent region, named from him Phut [x]. But to this it may be objected, that Ezekiel [y] mentions Phut with Cuſh and Perſia as auxiliaries to the northern enemies of the Jews, and in the army of Gog; and we find Cuſh, Lud, and Phut, among the nations, who, according to Jeremiah's prophecy, were to over-run Egypt [z], as Nebuchadnezzar afterwards did; which looks as if Phut's quarters lay ſomewhere between Cuſh and Babylon. However, in points ſo uncertain, we will not preſume to determine any thing. Phut.

4. WE are not ſo much to ſeek for the parts planted by Canaan and his poſterity, viz. Sidon, Heth, the Jebuſites Amorites, Girgaſhites, Hivites, Arkites, Sinites, Arvadites, Zemarites, and Hamathites, of whom we ſhall ſpeak more particularly when we come to treat of Phœnicia, in the land of Canaan, where they undoubtedly ſettled. Canaan.

The countries planted by the deſcendants of Japhet.

THE ſcripture leaves us as much in the dark, as to the country where Japhet ſettled, as it does with regard to the particular reſidence of his brothers. All we can collect upon this occaſion is, that he retired from Shinaar with his deſcendants, and ſettled among them to the north of the countries planted by the children of Shem. Some imagine him, from the affinity of names, to be the Japetus of the Greeks [a]; but there is no likelihood of his having ever been known to them, or that their traditions reach ſo high as this ſon of Noah by many ages.

[t] RABBI SAADIAS & MAIMONIDES, apud Lightfoot. oper. tom. 2. p. 398 [u] Jerem. xlvii. 4. [w] Phaleg. l. 4. cap. 33. [x] HIERONYM. in tradit Hebr. [y] Chap. xxxviii 5. [z] Chap. xlvi. 9. [a] BOCHART Phaleg. l. 3. c. 1.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

Gomer.

1. GOMER the eldest son of Japhet, according to Josephus, was the father of the Gomerites, called by the Greeks Galatians [b], who were the Gauls of Asia minor, inhabiting part of Phrygia. Of this opinion is Bochart [c]; and if it be right, those who derive the Cimmerians, or Cimbri, from Gomer, have some grounds for it, the Cimmerians seeming to be the same people with the Gauls, or Celts, under a different name; and it is observable, that the Welsh, who are descended from the Gauls, still call themselves Kumero, or Cymro, and Cumeri. Be that as it will, the Chaldee paraphrasts must be out in placing Gomer in Africa, since it is plain from Ezekiel [d] that his country lay northward of Judea; and that it lay also to the west, or north-west of Madai, or Media, may also be gathered from that prophet's making the house of Togarmah (one of Gomer's sons, and consequently, according to our rules, settled in his father's lot or borders) trading to Tyre in Syria; which could not well be in case they had been situated beyond Media, through which it is not likely they would have been suffered to pass. We may therefore let Gomer rest where the learned Bochart settles him, viz. in Phrygia [e], without straining to make that word to be the Greek translation of his name.

Ashkenaz.

THE plantations of Gomer's sons may, not without some ground, be presumed to be thereabouts. 1. Ashkenaz, as it seems, should be seated near Armenia [f], in the eastern part of Asia minor; for the scripture, among the nations which were to be called by the Medes under Cyrus to destroy Babylon, mentions Ararat, Minni, and Ashkenaz: but if regard be had to the footsteps found of the name, the country which he planted seems to have been in the north-west part of that continent; for in Bithynia there was the Arcanian lake, and a river called Ascanius, with a bay of the same name; and there was also antiently a city named Ascania in lesser Phrygia, or Troas, with isles on the coast called the Ascanian islands: and it is observed, that besides Ascanius the son of Æneas, Homer mentions a king of that name, who was at the siege of Troy. And to prove that the Ashkenaz mentioned by Jeremiah were the people of these parts, it is shewn out of Xenophon [g], that Hystaspes having conquered Phrygia that lies on the Hellespont, brought thence many of the horse and other soldiers which Cyrus carried with him to the siege of Babylon. In a word, the Pontus Euxinus, or Axinus, as it was first called by the Greeks, is supposed to be a corruption

[b] Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. [c] Phaleg. l. 3. c. 10. [d] Chap. 48. 6. [e] In loco superius citat. [f] Jeremiah li. 27. [g] Cyropæd. l. 7.

for

for the ſea of Aſhkenaz [h]. 2. Becauſe Riphath probably ſettled near his brother Aſhkenaz, we may admit the teſtimony of Joſephus, not always to be depended on, who ſays the Paphlagonians were originally called Riphathæans from Riphath [i]. Bochart finds the river Rhebas, Rhebæus, or Rhebanus near Paphlagonia [k]; Stephanus mentions not only the river but alſo a region of the ſame name, whoſe inhabitans were called Rhebæi, and Pliny places here a people called Riphæi, which comes nearer the name of Riphath. 3. Togarmah the laſt ſon of Gomer was probably ſeated to the eaſt of Riphath; ſome think to the north of Armenia, among the Iberians, others in Cappadocia and Galatia; which opinions are not out of the way, ſince theſe countries lie contiguous to thoſe of the reſt of Gomer's family, and are ſituate conformable [k] to that expreſſion of the prophet, Gomer and all his bands, the houſe of Togarmah of the north quarters and all his bands [l]; which ſeems to be ſpoken of their ſituation with reſpect to Judæa. Turcomannia, where many have placed this colony, ſeems too remote, becauſe they are ſaid to have traded to the fairs of Tyre [m]; and what confirms their ſettling, they brought hither, viz. horſes, horſemen, and mules, in, or about, Cappadocia; for that country produced excellent horſes and mules, which laſt are ſuppoſed to have come firſt from thence, and was famous for good horſemen, as is atteſted by ſeveral of the antient profane hiſtorians [n]: Beſides, in the borders of Pontus and Cappadocia, we find a people called Trocmi [o], Trogmi, or Trocmeni, as Stephanus calls them. In the council of Chalcedon they are called Trocmades, or Trogmades, which names have an affinity with Togarmah, or as the Greeks uſually write it, Thorgama.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597. Riphath. Togarmah.

BUT after all, the Armenians give themſelves out to be deſcended from Togarmah (whom they make the ſon of Tiras the ſon of Gomer) by his ſon Haikh, from whom they and their country from all antiquity have born the name of Haikh. They ſay alſo, that the name of Armenia, made uſe of by other nations, is derived from Aram, the ſeventh in deſcent from Haikh, who much enlarged the bounds of his kingdom on all ſides [p]: the Armenians had alſo numerous breeds of excellent horſes, which they paid to Cyrus inſtead of tribute [q]; and many of thoſe creatures, as a learned author [r] aſſures us, [h] BOCHART Phaleg. l. 3. c. 9. [i] JOSEPHUS Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. [k] BOCHART ubi ſupr. c. 10. [k] Idem, ibid. [l] Ezek. xxxviii. 6. [m] Ibid. xxvii. 14. [n] Vid. BOCHART ubi ſupr. [o] PTOL. STRAB. l. 12. CICERO de divinat. l. 2, &c. [p] MOSES CHORENENS. Hiſt. Armen. l. 1. c. 4. [q] XENOPH. [r] SCHRODER Diſſert. de ling. Armen. p. 30.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

Gomer.

1. GOMER the eldest son of Japhet, according to Josephus, was the father of the Gomerites, called by the Greeks Galatians [b], who were the Gauls of Asia minor, inhabiting part of Phrygia. Of this opinion is Bochart [c]; and if it be right, those who derive the Cimmerians, or Cimbri, from Gomer, have some grounds for it, the Cimmerians seeming to be the same people with the Gauls, or Celts, under a different name; and it is observable, that the Welsh, who are descended from the Gauls, still call themselves Kumero, or Cymro, and Cumeri. Be that as it will, the Chaldee paraphrasts must be out in placing Gomer in Africa, since it is plain from Ezekiel [d] that his country lay northward of Judea; and that it lay also to the west, or north-west of Madai, or Media, may also be gathered from that prophet's making the house of Togarmah (one of Gomer's sons, and consequently, according to our rules, settled in his father's lot or borders) trading to Tyre in Syria; which could not well be in case they had been situated beyond Media, through which it is not likely they would have been suffered to pass. We may therefore let Gomer rest where the learned Bochart settles him, viz. in Phrygia [e], without straining to make that word to be the Greek translation of his name.

Ashkenaz.

THE plantations of Gomer's sons may, not without some ground, be presumed to be thereabouts. 1. Ashkenaz, as it seems, should be seated near Armenia [f], in the eastern part of Asia minor; for the scripture, among the nations which were to be called by the Medes under Cyrus to destroy Babylon, mentions Ararat, Minni, and Ashkenaz: but if regard be had to the footsteps found of the name, the country which he planted seems to have been in the north-west part of that continent; for in Bithynia there was the Arcanian lake, and a river called Ascanius, with a bay of the same name; and there was also antiently a city named Ascania in lesser Phrygia, or Troas, with isles on the coast called the Ascanian islands: and it is observed, that besides Ascanius the son of Æneas, Homer mentions a king of that name, who was at the siege of Troy. And to prove that the Ashkenaz mentioned by Jeremiah were the people of these parts, it is shewn out of Xenophon [g], that Hystaspes having conquered Phrygia that lies on the Hellespont, brought thence many of the horse and other soldiers which Cyrus carried with him to the siege of Babylon. In a word, the Pontus Euxinus, or Axinus, as it was first called by the Greeks, is supposed to be a corruption

[b] Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. [c] Phaleg. l. 3. c. 10. [d] Chap. 48. 6. [e] In loco superius citat. [f] Jeremiah li. 27. [g] Cyropæd. l. 7.

for

for the ſea of Aſhkenaz [h]. 2. Becauſe Riphath probably ſettled near his brother Aſhkenaz, we may admit the teſtimony of Joſephus, not always to be depended on, who ſays the Paphlagonians were originally called Riphathæans from Riphath [i]. Bochart finds the river Rhebas, Rhebæus, or Rhebanus near Paphlagonia; Stephanus mentions not only the river but alſo a region of the ſame name, whoſe inhabitans were called Rhebæi, and Pliny places here a people called Riphæi, which comes nearer the name of Riphath. 3. Togarmah the laſt ſon of Gomer was probably ſeated to the eaſt of Riphath; ſome think to the north of Armenia, among the Iberians, others in Cappadocia and Galatia; which opinions are not out of the way, ſince theſe countries lie contiguous to thoſe of the reſt of Gomer's family, and are ſituate conformable [k] to that expreſſion of the prophet, Gomer and all his bands, the houſe of Togarmah of the north quarters and all his bands [l]; which ſeems to be ſpoken of their ſituation with reſpect to Judæa. Turcomannia, where many have placed this colony, ſeems too remote, becauſe they are ſaid to have traded to the fairs of Tyre [m]; and what confirms their ſettling, they brought hither, viz. horſes, horſemen, and mules, in, or about, Cappadocia; for that country produced excellent horſes and mules, which laſt are ſuppoſed to have come firſt from thence, and was famous for good horſemen, as is atteſted by ſeveral of the antient profane hiſtorians [n]: Beſides, in the borders of Pontus and Cappadocia, we find a people called Trocmi [o], Trogmi, or Trocmeni, as Stephanus calls them. In the council of Chalcedon they are called Trocmades, or Tregmades, which names have an affinity with Togarmah, or as the Greeks uſually write it, Thorgama.

Year of the Flood, 401
Year before Chriſt, 2597.
Riphath.
Togarmah.

BUT after all, the Armenians give themſelves out to be deſcended from Togarmah (whom they make the ſon of Tiras the ſon of Gomer) by his ſon Haikh, from whom they and their country from all antiquity have born the name of Haikh. They ſay alſo, that the name of Armenia, made uſe of by other nations, is derived from Aram, the ſeventh in deſcent from Haikh, who much enlarged the bounds of his kingdom on all ſides [p]: the Armenians had alſo numerous breeds of excellent horſes, which they paid to Cyrus inſtead of tribute [q]; and many of thoſe creatures, as a learned author [r] aſſures us, [h] BOCHART Phaleg. l. 3. c. 9. [i] JOSEPHUS Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. BOCHART ubi ſupr. c. 10. [k] Idem, ibid. [l] Ezek. xxxviii. 6. [m] Ibid. xxvii. 14. [n] Vid. BOCHART ubi ſupr. [o] PTOL. STRAB. l. 12. CICERO de divin. l. 2. &c. [p] MOSES CHORENENSIS Hiſt. Armen. l. 1. c. 4. XENOPH. [q] HERODOT. [r] MICHAELIS Diſſert. de ling. Armen. p. 30.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt 2597.

from the teſtimony of credible natives, are ſtill bred there for the uſe of the kings of Perſia, and for preſents to them from the governor. Upon theſe conſiderations we muſt leave Armenia to the deſcendants of Togarmah, or Thûrgûmai, as they call him.

Magog.

2. WE come now to Magog, the ſecond ſon of Japhet, with regard to whoſe ſettlement the learned have many different and confuſed opinions; Joſephus, Jerom, and moſt of the fathers held them to be the Scythians about mount Caucaſus, which name Bochart ſuppoſes was made by the Greeks out of Gog haſan, ſignifying Gog's fort in Chaldee, a dialect of which he imagines to have been the language of the Colchi and Armenians [r]; but perhaps it is rather a wrong pronunciation of Cuh Kaf, which in Perſian ſignifies the mountain of Kaf, as the Arabs alſo call it: that his plantation adjoined upon thoſe of Meſhech and Tubal appears from Ezekiel's [s] making Gog, king of Mageg, to reign over the other two. And it is thought, we ſhould come nearer ſtill to a diſcovery of his quarters, if thoſe words, The chief prince, or (as it is in our marginal tranſlation) the prince of the chief of Meſhech and Tubal [t], be rendered, according to the Septuagint, the prince of Roſh, Meſhech, and Tubal, becauſe in the Iſthmus, or neck of land between the Euxine and Caſpian ſeas, there formerly dwelt two ſorts of people; the one called Rhoſſi, on the river Cyrus, as Joſeph ben Gorion has it, or rather on the Ros, Ras, or Aras, called by the Greeks Araxes; the other called Moſchici, inhabiting a long chain of mountains, ſtretching, acording to Ptolemy, along the north-weſt part of Armenia, and ſeparating it from Colchis and Iberia. From which two people, migrating or driven over Caucaſus, it is ſuppoſed, the Ruſſians and Muſcovites are deſcended.

BOCHART alſo thinks the name of Magog is preſerved in a country of theſe parts called Gogarene [u], according to Strabo and Stephanus; for Gog and Magog ſeem to be the ſame name, the m not being a radical letter. But we cannot ſtrain the matter ſo far as to ſuppoſe the name of Georgia, a well known country in this quarter, derived thence; much leſs that the Palus Mæotis, and Comagene in Syria, draw their names from Magog [w], through ſuch a diſtorted courſe of changes, as to repeat them would put one quite out of conceit with etymologies.

[r] BOCHART. Phaleg. l. 3. c. 13. [s] Chap. xxxviii. 2. [t] Ibid. [u] BOCHART ubi ſupra. [w] Geog. of the old Teſtament, Vol. 1. p. 164.

THE

THE Arabs, who have borrowed the beſt part of their religion from the Jews, are acquainted with Gog and Magog, whom they call Yajuj and Mujuj, and make them to inhabit the mountain of Kaf, or Caucaſus, but remove them at a great diſtance to the farther end of Tartary towards the north, or north-eaſt [x]. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

WE are inclined to think the parts above-mentioned, between the Euxine and Caſpian ſeas, are moſt likely to be thoſe in which Magog ſettled; however we can by no means omit this occaſion of taking notice of an error, which many of the modern writers have fallen into, who place Mogog in Syria. Bochart's great judgment would not ſuffer him wholly to come into it, however he ſuppoſes Magog himſelf gave his name to a town there [y]. Dr. Wells more cautiouſly ſuggeſts, that the name was long after taken from the Scythians, when they made an excurſion into Syria and took the city, as Bethſan in Judeæ was alſo called after them Scythopolis [z]. But Mr. Shuckford fixes Magog himſelf there, with Gomer, Tubal, Togarmah, and Meſhech about him [a]. What gave riſe to this opinion is, a paſſage in Pliny, where he obſerves that Bambyce, otherwiſe Hierapolis, is called by the Syrians Magog [b]; but this proves to be a palpable miſtake of the tranſcriber, who has written Magog inſtead of Mabog, as has been obſerved by Dr. Hyde, who wonders no body had corrected that error in Pliny [c]. Aſſemani has taken notice of it ſince [d]; yet it ſtill remains uncorrected in Hardouins's laſt pompous edition of that author.

3. IT is generally agreed, that Madai planted Media, and the Medes are always called by this name in ſcripture [e]. To this a learned author [f], who makes Macedonia the ſettlement of Madai, objects, 1. That the Madai, or Medes are not mentioned in ſcripture till the later ages; but it may be anſwered, that the Jews always retained the name, and it is plain they made uſe of it as ſoon as they had occaſion. 2. That this ſituation removes Madai too far from the reſt of his brethren, and takes him out of their general lot, which was the iſles of the Gentiles, to put him into that of Shem. But ac- Madai [x] See D'HERBELOT Bibl. Orient. Art. Jagiouge & Magiouge, p. 470. & Geog. Nubiens. p. 247, 267. [y] Phaleg l. 1. c. 2. & l. 3. c. 13. [z] Geogr. of the old Teſt. ubi ſupr. [a] Connect. of the ſacred and profane hiſt. V. I. p. 152 [b] Hiſt. Natur. l. 5 c. 23. [c] In Notis ad Peritſol. Itiner. p 42. [d] Bibliotheca Orientat. Vol II. Differt. de Monophyſ. ad voc. Mabug. [e] Dan v. 28. Ibid. vi. 8. 12, 15. Ibid. viii. 20. Eſth. i. 3. 14, 18, 19. Ibid. x. 2. [f] See MEDE's Works.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

cording to our hypothesis, their plantations hitherto have been contiguous, for the western Media was bounded on the north by the river Ros, or Aras; to which, as we have observed above, the dominion of Magog extended; and perhaps those words, by these were the isles of the Gentiles divided [g], relate only to Javan and his sons, and not to Gomer and his sons, or to a future plantation; the passages in scripture where these last are mentioned requiring a sense which places them on the continent. 3. Several authorities are produced by this writer to shew there were a people in Macedonia called Medi, or Mædi, and a tract called the Medic region in the borders of Pæonia; but even supposing them some later colony of Madai, which is the most that can be allowed, we cannot see how it tends to prove, that Macedonia is compounded of Madai and Cetim, or Kittim, any more than that Æmathia, the antient name of Macedonia, comes from Madai, upon the bare authority of a forced etymology.

Javan. 4. JAVAN may probably be supposed to have settled first near his brothers in the south-west part of the lesser Asia, about Ionia, which contains the radical letters of his name.

HIS four children may find places correspondent with their names in the same parts. 1. The Æoles, who inhabited

Elisha. Æolia to the north of Ionia, are by Josephus made to descend from Elisha, Javan's eldest son; but there is a greater appearance of his name in Hellas, the antient name of Greece; the isles of which seem to be those called the isles of Elisha by Ezekiel, and most probably supplied Tyre with the purple and blue [h], wherewith, as Bochart proves at large, the coast of Peloponnesus and the adjacent islands abounded [i]. Peloponnesus, which may be well comprehended among the isles, as being almost one, contained moreover a city and province, by the name of Elis; and in Attica there was the city

Tarshish. Eleusis, and the river Elissus, or Ilissus. 2. Tarshish, according to Josephus, gave name not only to Tarsus but to all Cilicia, of which it was the capital [k]: it seems also to have been the Tarshish to which Jonas thought to flee from the presence of the Lord [l], as well as that also mentioned so often by the prophets, on account of its trading with Tyre [m]. 3. To Kittim. the west of Tarshish it is supposed Kittim first planted. Homer mentions a people in those parts called Cetii [n] (from the river Cetius), which is the word by which the Septuagint have [g] Gen x. 5. [h] Chap. viii. 7. [i] Phaleg. l. 3. c. 4. [k] Antiq. l. 1 c. 7. [l] Jonas i. 3. [m] Isaiah xxiii. 1, 14. Ezek. xxvii. 12, 25. Ibid. xxxviii. 13. [n] Odyss. 11. v. 520. V. Strab. l. 13.

rendered rendered Kittim. In Ptolemy we find two provinces in the weſtern parts of Cilicia, one maritime called Cetis, the other towards the mountains called Citis. Joſephus will have the iſland of Cyprus to be the ſeat of the Kittim, and the town called Citium which belongs to it, to have taken its name from them [o]; but in the apocrypha Macedonia is plainly denoted by the land of Chettiim, Alexander being mentioned as coming from thence [p], and Perſeus, king of Macedonia, is called king of the Citims [q]. Nor do we ſee any thing amiſs in ſuppoſing that country to be the original plantation of the Kittim, at leaſt in the intention of Moſes, ſince it comes under the general denomination of the iſles which were to be the portion of Japhet, at leaſt of the poſterity of Javan; and their brother Eliſha has been already placed in that neighbourhood. 4. It is not ſo eaſy to find a place for Dodanim, the youngeſt of the ſons, or rather of the deſcendants of Javan, except we admit the change of the D into R, (which letters in the Hebrew are ſcarcely to be diſtinguiſhed) and call him Rodanim, as the Septuagint have done, in order to ſettle the iſland of Rhodes upon him; which, for ought we know, is not a worſe ſhift than to extract the name of Doris, and the Dorians, in Peloponneſus, from Dodanim.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.

Dodanim.

As to, 5. Tubal, and, 6. Meſhech, we have already ſhewn, under the article of Magog, that their lots lay contiguous to his, as may be gathered from the two places of Ezekiel there mentioned [r]; and that is enough, without diſtorting names of countries in order to provide them ſettlements in ſpite of all the rules of etymology. And, 7. That we may ſhorten this account, which the uncertainty of our evidence has made tedious, we ſhall in the laſt place allow Tiras, according to Joſephus [s] and the general opinion, to have led his colony into Thrace.

Tubal and Meſhech.

Tiras.

THUS we have given an account of the nations concerned in the firſt diſperſion of mankind, by which it does not appear that they migrated eaſtward beyond Media, northward beyond the mountains of Caucaſus, ſouthward beyond Ethiopia, or Habaſhia, or weſtward beyond a part of Lybia and Greece, including Macedonia; though it is moſt probable, the more diſtant parts were not planted immediately by theſe firſt colonies, but by their poſterity afterwards.

IT is not our deſign here to enter into a long detail of future migrations, in order to ſhew by what degrees, and in what manner, the ſeveral parts of the world came to be inhabited,

No tracing the original of moſt nations.

[o] Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. [p] 1 MAC. i. 1. [q] Ibid. viii. 5.
[r] Chap. xxvii. 13. chap. xxxviii. 2, 3. [s] Ubi ſup.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

as some with more labour than success have attempted to do; but shall reserve what may be gathered from antient writers in relation thereto, when we enquire into the original of each particular country.

The countries possessed by the descendants of Joktan in a second migration.

HOWEVER, we are obliged to say something with reference to the descendants of Joktan; who, if they were not concerned in the first dispersion, seem to have began their migration sometime within Peleg's life; with regard to which patriarch we shall only observe here, that it is not probable the Pelasgians of Greece and Italy derive their original from him, as some imagine [t]; but it rather appears from scripture, that both he and his posterity remained in Chaldæa, within the lot of their great ancestor Arphaxad, till Terah, the father of Abraham, left Ur of the Chaldees, to remove into the land of Canaan.

MOSES assigns the habitation of Joktan's sons to have been from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east [u]. The want of knowing the situation of these places hath run authors into strange mistakes. Some suppose Mesha to be mount Masius, or Ararat in Armenia, (but it seems rather to be a city) and look for mount Sephar beyond Media, towards India. Jerom, after Josephus, would have both Mesha and Sephar to be in the East-Indies. In short, the antients have generally peopled all the eastern parts of Asia beyond Media, with these sons of Joktan; which is so inconsistent, that Bochart might well wonder so many of the moderns have been led by them [x]; and yet some have done worse, and peopled America immediately by Joktan, from whom Arias Montanus imagined the province of Jucatan took its name; and the same author judges mount Sephar to be the Andes, mountains of Peru.

IN all probability the places in question are to be looked for in Arabia; but we cannot agree in opinion with Bochart [y], that Mesha is Muza, (supposed to be Mokha, a noted port in the Arabian gulf) and Sephar the city Sapphar [z], any more than with the Arab paraphrasts, that they are Mecca and Medinah. We should choose out of these two conjectures to form a third, and suppose Mesha and Sephar to be Mecca and Sapphar, or rather (if the Mosaical description would agree with it) Dhafar, a port in the middle of that coast of Arabia, washed by the Indian sea, which would take in all the country lying beyond that of Cush, and which the Arabs allow to have been possessed by the posterity of Yarab, the son of [t] See CUMBERL. on Sanchon. p. 268. [u] Gen. x. 30.

[x] Phaleg. l. 2. c. 15. [y] Ibid. l. 2. c. 30. [z] Vid. PTOL. Tab. 6. Asiæ.

Kahtân

Kahtân, or Joktan [a]. We do not indeed find Yarab among the ſons of Joktan mentioned by Moſes; but it is no difficult matter to ſet him there by a change of the h, in Jerah, (the fourth ſon) into b.

We meet with no good ſigns of the ſettlement of Almodad and Sheleph, the two firſt ſons of Joktan; but the name of the third, Hazarmaveth, or, as it is better written in the vulgar, Haſarmath, is plainly found in Hadhramaut, a province of Yaman, or Arabia Felix; both having the ſame radicals, and ſignifying the court, or country, of death. 4. Bochart diſcovers the name of Jerah in the iſland Hieracon (or of hawks) in the Arabian gulf, and a town ſo called within land on the river Lar, near the Omanitæ; and, 5. That of Hadoram in the Drimati of Pliny, towards the Perſian gulf [b]. 6. Uzal is the name given to Sanaa, the capital of Yaman, by the Jews who dwelt there [c]; and it appears from Pliny to be the ſame city [d]; its port was Ocela, or Ocilis, as Ptolemy calls it, which alſo bears ſome reſemblance to the name. 7. Diklah ſignifying in the Chaldean, or Syriac, a palm-tree, or a country ſtored with palms, may have choice of ſeats in Arabia. 8. It is with reluctance that we muſt croſs the ſea with Obal from Arabia to the Avalitic port [e], in the Avalitic, or Abalitic bay, on the coaſt of Africa, juſt without the ſtraits of Bab-al-mandad [f], for want of a place in Arabia bearing ſome likeneſs to his name to ſettle him in. It is true, there is a town called Obollah, towards Baſrah, which might ſerve the turn, if that part had not been already diſpoſed of by us to the family of Ham. Some may think the uncertainty of its antiquity might be another objection againſt Obollah; but that would be perhaps to call all that we have already done about the migrations in queſtion. 9. We might be obliged to look for a ſeat on the ſame coaſt for Abimael, if Theophraſtus [g] did not luckily furniſh us with the name of a place, in the aromatic quarters of Arabia, called Mali. It is true, other authors ſeem to write Minæi inſtead of it; and Ptolemy mentions the Minæi, and Manitæ, but no Mali: but the authority of Theophraſtus muſt go againſt them all, ſince it makes for our purpoſe. This is a rule which has the ſanction of moſt authors who

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt, 2597.
Hazarmaveth.
Jerah.
Hadoram.
Uzal.
Diklah
Obal
Abimael.

[a] Mohammed ebn Yacub Shirazi apud GABR. SIONIT. de urb. Orient. c. 1. Vid. D'HERBELOT. Bibl Orient Art. Saba. [b] BOCHART Phaleg. l. 2. c. 19 & 20. [c] ZACUT. in Juchaſin. [d] Nat. Hiſt. Lib. 12. c. 19. l. 6. c. 28. l. 12. c. 14. [e] PTOLEMÆUS. [f] Vid. BOCHART ubi ſup. c. 23. [g] Hiſt. Plant. l. 9. c. 4. apud BOCHART. l. 2. c. 24.

Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Christ, 2597.

Sheba.

have wrote on this subject. 10. Sheba will not have the same difficulty with the rest of his brethren to find a place in Arabia. Pliny says, the Sabæan nations extended themselves from one sea to the other; that is, from the Arabian to the Persian gulf. Indeed there wants no proof of a people of this name possessing a large share of the south parts of Arabia, most authors mentioning them as very numerous, and their country excellent [h], but they seem to differ in the name of their chief city; for some call it Saba [i], others Mariaba, or Maraba [k]. However, that causes no difficulty in the matter, since we learn from the Arab authors, that they are both names of the same place, and that it was the antient regal seat, which was afterwards translated to Sanaa. They also tell us, that Balkis, who visited Solomon, reigned there; and CHRIST seems to allude to this country, when he calls her the queen of the south; for yamin with the Jews, as well as yaman with the Arabs, signifies the south; and Saba, or Mareb, is in that part of Arabia called Yaman [l].

Ophir.

11. We are at a loss again about providing a settlement for Ophir; Arabia furnishes no place which resembles the name, except Copar [m], a place on the Arabian gulf, near the northern limits of the Cinædocolpitæ, and Ogyris, an island in the same sea [n]. Bochart endeavours to squeeze Ophir in among the Cassanitæ, or Gassandæ [o], probably the tribe of Ghassân, consulting the similitude of sense in words, when that of sound fails: and he chooses rather to be put to his shifts, than to run into the common absurdity of planting Ophir in India, where the place which bears his name (so famous in scripture for gold) is supposed to be situate. We shall speak more particularly, with reference to this land, when we come to the reign of Solomon; and shall only observe here, that the gold of this place seeming in one passage of scripture to be called the gold of Parvaim [p], hath occasioned two conjectures: the first, that Ophir is the island of Taprobana [q]; the second, that it is Peru [r], in America. The reader may easily see the latter name comes nearest that of Ophir, but to shew what an ignis fatuus the similitude of names is, Peru, as sir Walter Raleigh assures us, is not the true name of the country, but was was given to it by the Spaniards, on their miſtaking the anſwer of the natives to a queſtion they did not underſtand. 12. Havilah is, by Bochart, ſuppoſed to have ſettled in the land of Khaulan[r], towards Yaman, mentioned by Al Edriſi[s]: but as there ſeem to be two places (as well as two perſons) in ſcripture called by that name; one near the Perſian gulph, poſſeſſed by Havilah the ſon of Cuſh already taken totice of, and another in the borders of the Amalekites, towards the Land of Promiſe, the reader, if he pleaſes, may fix this twelfth ſon of Joktan in this laſt country, and place his brother Jobab, who is the 13th and laſt, with him for company; unleſs he rather chooſes to quarter him upon the Jobarites, near the Sachalites, in the ſouth-eaſt part of Arabia, upon a preſumption that they ſhould be written Jobabites[u]. Year of the Flood, 401. Year before Chriſt 2597. Havilah. Jobab.

[h] AGATHARCHIDES, STRABO, DIOD. SICUL. [i] AGATHARCHIDES, PHILOSTORG. l 3. THEOPHRAST. STEPHANUS. [k] ERATOSTHENES apud Strab. l. 16. ARTEMIDORUS, PLINIUS, l. 12. c. 14. [l] Geog. Nub. p. 26 & 52. ABULFEDA Descr. Arab. [m] PTOL. [n] PLIN. l. 6. c. 28. [o] Phaleg. l. 2. c. 27. [p] 2 Chron. iii. 6. [q] BOCHART Geog. sacr. l. 2. c. 27. [r] ARIAS MONTANUS Antiquit. Judaic. Phaleg. 5. l. 1. c. 9.

SECT. VII.

Of the origin of civil government, and the eſtabliſhment of the firſt kingdoms.

The firſt government patriarchal.

WE have formerly obſerved, that the firſt form of government was certainly patriarchal[a]. For though the father had no natural right to govern his children when out of their minority; and though that honour, reſpect, and ſupport which they indiſpenſibly owe to their parents all their life-time, and in all eſtates, give the father no power in making laws, and enacting penalties on his children: nor any dominion over their properties or actions; yet it is obvious to conceive, how eaſy it was in the firſt ages of the world, and ſtill is, in places where the thinneſs of people gives families leave to ſeparate and plant themſelves in yet vacant habitations, for the father of the family to become the prince of it. He had been a ruler from the beginning of the infancy of his children; and ſince without ſome government it would be hard for them to live together, it was likelieſt it ſhould, by the expreſs, or tacit, conſent of the children, when they were grown up, be in the father; where it ſeemed, without any change, barely to continue; when indeed nothing more was required to it, than the permitting the father to exerciſe alone in his family that executive power of the law of nature, which every freeman naturally hath, and by that permiſſion reſigning up to him a monarchical power while they remained [r] Geogr. ſacr. l, 2 c. 28, [s] Geogr. Nubiens, p. 49.

[u] BOCHART Geog. Sacr. lib. 2. cap. 29. [a] Before. p. 221.

in

in it. Thus it was almoſt natural for the children to make way for the father's authority: they had been accuſtomed in their childhood to follow his directions, and to refer their little differences to him; and when they were men, who fitter to rule them? Their little properties, and leſs covetouſneſs, ſeldom afforded greater controverſies; and when they ſhould ariſe, where could they have a fitter umpire than he, by whoſe care they had every one been ſuſtained and brought up, and who had a tenderneſs for them all? The government they were under continued ſtill to be more their protection than reſtraint; and they could no where find a greater ſecurity to their peace, liberties, and fortunes, than in the rule of a father.

Changed into the monarchical.

THUS fathers of families, by an inſenſible change, might become politic monarchs of them too, and as they chanced to live long, and leave able and worthy heirs, for ſeveral ſucceſſions or otherwiſe, lay the foundations of hereditary or elective kingdoms, under various conſtitutions and manners, according as chance, contrivance, or occaſions happened to mould them [b].

The policy of the Noachidæ.

NOAH therefore being the common parent of the new world, while he lived we may imagine all his deſcendants conſidered themſelves to be in a ſtate of dependance on him; and as he was the ſupreme governor of the whole race of mankind then in being, ſo his ſons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, were in all probability chief governors of their reſpective branches in particular, as their ſons again were heads or rulers of their reſpective families under their fathers. Each ſon of Shem, for inſtance, as head of his own family, not only decided all differences among them, but probably gave laws to them, though his authority extended no farther; for in diſputes between their families, their powers being all equal, they were obliged to have recourſe to the deciſion of their common father Shem, whoſe authority alſo was limited to his proper deſcendants; ſo that in any difference between him and his brothers, Ham and Japhet, the appeal muſt have been to the judgment of their father Noah, as the only common ſuperior.

ON Noah's death the unity of government was diſſolved, and mankind became divided into three grand parties, which no longer acknowledged one common head, but had each its own independent ruler in one of his three ſons. Upon their deaths the bonds of union were again looſed, and mankind became a ſecond time divided in their political ſtate; ſo that by degrees mankind became ranged under a great number of independent chiefs; which ſeems to have been the ſtate of the world for ſome time after the diſperſion.

[b] LOCKE of Government, Treatiſe 2. c. 6, &c.

BUT as families increaſed, and gradually extended their plantations, forming villages and towns, left their different intereſts and inclinations might trouble the public tranquility, it became neceſſary to truſt the government of each ſociety in the hands of one, or at leaſt a ſmall number of perſons, who might reunite all the chiefs under one and the ſame authority, and execute ſuch laws and regulations as were thought conducive to the well-being of the community. The idea they ſtill retained of the patriarchal government, and the happy experience they had of it, naturally directed them to the choice of a ſingle perſon rather than many, and of ſuch as was moſt conſpicuous for paternal care and tenderneſs. Ambition and intrigue had, it is to be thought, little part in this election, which was rather decided in favour of the moſt worthy by his known probity and moderation [c]. The eſtabliſhment of kingdoms.

IN this firſt beginning of political ſocieties, almoſt every town had its own king, who more attentive to preſerve his dominions than to extend them, reſtrained his ambition within the bounds of his native country [d], till diſputes with neighbours, which were ſometimes inevitable, jealouſy of a more powerful prince, an enterprizing genius and martial inclination, the deſire of aggrandizing ones ſelf and ſhewing ones abilities, occaſioned thoſe wars which often ended in the abſolute ſubjection of the vanquiſhed; whoſe poſſeſſions fell into the power of the conqueror, and by enlarging his dominions, both enabled and encouraged him to puſh on his fortune by new enterprizes; and thus ſeveral cities and territories, united under one monarch, formed kingdoms of larger, or leſſer, extent, as the prince happened to have ambition and ſucceſs.

THESE firſt conquerors uſed their victory in different manners, according to their various tempers and intereſts. Some, looking on themſelves as abſolute maſters of the conquered, and thinking it was enough to grant them life, ſtripped them of every thing elſe, and reduced them into the ſtate of ſlavery, obliging them to the meaneſt offices and the moſt laborious employments; which introduced the diſtinction between freemen and ſlaves, which has ſince been in the world.

OTHERS brought in the cuſtom of entirely tranſporting the vanquiſhed people with their families into new countries, [c] JUSTIN l. 1. c. 1. [d] Idem, ibid.

where

where they were to ſettle and cultivate the lands which were aſſigned them.

OTHERS, yet more moderate, contented themſelves with obliging the conquered to purchaſe their liberty by a ranſom, and allowed them the enjoyment of their own laws and privileges on payment of an annual tribute, ſometimes even leaving their kings on their throne, on their acknowledging the ſuperiority of their conqueror, by certain marks of homage and ſubmiſſion.

THE wiſeſt and moſt politic gained the affections of their new ſubjects by admitting them to an equality with their old ones, and granting them the ſame liberties and privileges; by that means making them one people, and uniting their intereſts [e].

Nimrod the firſt uſurper on the rights of others.

IF the Phœnician hiſtory be to be credited, and their Cronus be allowed to be Ham, the deſire of rule began to make havock in the world, even during the life-time of Noah, who was driven out of his ſettlements, and at laſt ſlain by his rebellious ſon [f]. But the firſt act of violence and uſurpation we find recorded in ſcripture was that of Nimrod, who, as it ſeems, diſpoſſeſſed Aſhur the ſon of Shem, who had at firſt ſettled in Shinaar, and obliged him to remove into Aſſyria. The acquiſitions he made on this occaſion muſt be allowed to be unjuſt, though he might have a legal right to govern thoſe who probably choſe him for their chief, on account of his perſonal merit. However, it is to be preſumed, that this revolution, which we ſuppoſe to have happened about thirty years after the diſperſion, extended only to ſome few of the newplanted nations. In the reſt, and eſpecially thoſe which lay outermoſt, we cannot but perſuade ourſelves, that a ſimplicity of manners continued ſeveral ages, and that wars did not ariſe in the world till the colonies, which were at firſt ſeparated, by the increaſe of their numbers began to preſs upon one another, and grow uneaſy for want of room; which inconvenience muſt have affected thoſe moſt who were ſettled neareſt the centre: and accordingly the firſt warlike motions we have any credible account of, were made by the kings of Shinaar and Elam [g].

Great empires not ſoon formed.

IT is very difficult to ſettle the riſe of the firſt empires, but it is ſcarcely poſſible they ſhould begin ſo early as hiſtorians have repreſented them. That the firſt kings were kings of ſingle cities, not of many, much leſs of large countries, is evident from what we find in hiſtory relating to the early ſtate of nations. How long was Greece divided into little ſtates? how many many ages did they continue jarring and contending for the maſtery? By what ſlow degrees did Rome enlarge its territories and riſe up to empire? and how many centuries paſſed before it ſubdued the neighbouring cities which ſurrounded it? The Iſraelites found Canaan in the ſame condition that Italy was, in the time of Romulus, and, notwithſtanding the great ſucceſs of Joſhua, were above four hundred years in reducing the petty monarchies under their dominion.

[e] ROLLIN Hiſt. ancienne, &c. p. 3, &c. [f] See before, p. 300, &c. [g] Gen. xiv. 1.

THE uniting therefore of many ſmaller ſtates into one body by force, being apparently a work of time, thoſe authors who place the riſe of ſeveral great monarchies within two or three ages next after the flood, muſt be greatly deceived, either by following authors who have attributed too great antiquity to ſuch events, or by adhering to a ſyſtem of chronology which is too ſhort; and of the two evils this laſt is the worſt. How unfit the Hebrew computation is for adjuſting the times of prophane hiſtory, will partly be ſeen in that of Egypt which we are now going to enter upon: we ſhall only add here, that the firſt appearance we find of a potent and extenſive monarchy is in that of Elam, whoſe king Chedorlaomer, in the time of Abraham, over-run Canaan and the neighbouring countries as far as the borders of Egypt [h], ſome hundreds of years before we hear any thing of an Aſſyrian monarchy; which could not have had a beginning any number of years before Menahem, when its kings firſt began to paſs the Euphrates at the inſtigation of that prince [i].

Of the original of arts and ſciences.

THOUGH Noah and his ſons had doubtleſs ſome knowledge of the inventions of the antediluvians, and probably acquainted their deſcendants with ſuch of them as were moſt obvious and uſeful in common life, yet it is not to be imagined, that any of the more curious arts, or ſpeculative ſciences, were improved in any degree, ſuppoſing them to have been known or invented, till ſome conſiderable time after the diſperſion. On the contrary, one conſequence of that event ſeems to have been, that ſeveral inventions known to their anceſtors were loſt, and mankind gradually degenerated into ignorance and barbarity, till eaſe and plenty had given them leiſure again to poliſh their manners, and apply themſelves to thoſe arts, which are ſeldom brought to perfection under other circumſtances. For on their ſettling in any country they found it employment ſufficient to cultivate the land (which yet for want of ſeparate property and ſecurity in their poſſeſſions, in thoſe early times, they improved no farther than barely to ſupply preſent neceſſities), and to provide themſelves habitations and neceſſaries for their mutual comfort and ſubſiſtance [k]. Beſides this,

[h] Gen. xiv. 5, &c.

[i] 2 Kings xv. 19.

[k] Vid. THUCYD. l. 1. ſub initio.

they

they were often obliged to remove from one place to another, where they could more conveniently reside; and it was a great while before they came to embody themselves together in towns and cities, and from thence to spread into provinces, and to settle the bounds and extent of their territories [l]. Two, or three ages at least, must have been spent in this manner; and it is not very likely, they should amuse themselves with celestial observations in particular, when they had so many more pressing affairs to mind. So that the astronomical observations of the Babylonians, of which Callisthenes sent an account to his master Aristotle [m], if they reached so far backwards as we are told, viz. 1903 years, are a further proof of the insufficiency of the Hebrew chronology, according to which those observations must have began little more than 100 years after the flood.

—and of commerce.

COMMERCE was in all probability carried on with greater ease before the flood, when there was, as it seems, but one and the same language in the world; yet it was not so necessary then as it is become since, not only because mens wants have been encreased by the ill effects of the deluge on the earth and its productions [n], but because they dwelt more together, and might supply their occasions by bartering with their nearest neighbours, without being obliged to extend their dealings much farther; and that they had no ships to carry on a traffic to remote parts seems evident; for if navigation had been then found out, some others might have saved themselves from the flood as well as Noah and his family. But after that destruction, and the dispersion of mankind, as it became more difficult to trade with nations who spoke different languages, so their necessities were encreased by this division; the colonies, who planted new countries not only perceiving their own wants by the conveniences they had left behind them, but finding something useful in their settlements, which were before unknown to them or their founders. This engaged them to fetch what they wanted from the parts where they had formerly dwelt, and in exchange to carry what they had discovered thither; which seems to have given the first rise to foreign trade, the gradual advances whereof we may occasionally mention hereafter. The invention of shipping was certainly the greatest step to its improvement, which made the sea, before the greatest obstacle to commerce, of the greatest advantage to it [o].

[l] STILLINGFL. Orig. Sacr. book 1. c. 2. § 16. [m] Vid. SIMPLIC de cælo, l. 2. [n] See before, p. 220, &c. [o] Vid. HUET. Hist. du commerce & de la navig. des anciens, c. 2. & 3.

CHAP. III.

The History of Egypt to the time of Alexander the Great.

SECT. I.

A description of Egypt.

EGYPT, called by its antient inhabitants Chemia [a], and by the Copts at present Chemi, was so named, as is supposed, from Ham the son of Noah, being more than once stiled, in the book of Psalms, the land of Ham. But the name by which it is generally denoted in scripture, is the land of Mizraïm, from whence the Arabians and other oriental nation, still call it Mesr, which the Greeks write Mesre and Mestræa. We have already observed, that Mizraïm is a word of a dual termination [b], and is therefore by some thought to have been used in that number, because of the two-fold division of Egypt hereafter mentioned, and thence given to its first planter, the son of Ham [c]: the singular Masor signifies a fortress, and, according to some, is also used in scripture as a proper name of that country [d]; though others, and our version in particular, translate the word as an appellative: Bochart is of opinion, Egypt received this name from the natural strength of its situation [e]. Its names.

THIS country is best known to us by its Greek name Ægypt, the original of which is variously accounted for by authors. Some say, it was so called from one of its kings named Ægyptus [f]; but the contrary seems to have been the case, not only the country, but its famous river Nile also, being antiently called by the same name. Others say, it signifies no more than the land of the Copts, the word Aia being Greek for a country, and Ægoptos easily softened into Ægyp- tus [g] : yet this derivation ſeems as ill grounded as the former; the city of Coptus, whence the remains of the antient Egyptians are ſtill called Copts, being ſituate far up in the higher Egypt, and in all likelihood utterly unknown to the Greeks till long after the name was in uſe among them. The moſt probable opinion therefore, to omit ſome other conjectures ſtill more groundleſs, is, that this region was ſo called from the blackneſs of its ſoil, and the dark colour both of its river and inhabitants, atteſted by all relations. For ſuch a blackiſh colour is called by the Greeks ægyptios, from gyps and ægyps, a vultur, a bird of that hue; and by the Latins, ſubvulturius. And for the ſame reaſon other names of the ſame import have been given to this country by the Greeks, ſuch as Aeria and Melambolus: the river itſelf was called Melo, or Melas; by the Hebrews Shihor, and by the Ethiopians, Siris [h]; all which names ſignify black: and Plutarch ſeems to intimate, the inhabitants therefore called their country Chemia, becauſe its ſoil was very black, like the ſight of the eye [i].

[a] PLUT. de Isid. & Osir. p. 364. [b] Before, p. 365. [c] Vid. PERIZON. orig. Ægypt p. 6. [d] 2 Kings xix. 24. Isai xix. 6. Micah vii. 12. [e] Phaleg. l. 4. c. 24. [f] DIODOR. SIC. Eu-[illegible], &c.

Situation and extent. Egypt is ſituate between the 28th and 34th degrees of longitude, eaſt from London; and the 24th and 33d degrees of north latitude. Its length from north to ſouth about 600 miles, and the breadth of its coaſt on the Mediterranean, from eaſt to weſt near 300 miles; but above the diviſion of the Nile it grows much narrower, ſo that in ſome places the two chains of mountains, which riſe on each ſide of that river, leave a plain between them of leſs than a day's journey to croſs [k]. It is bounded on the ſouth by the kingdom of Sennar, which is tributary to the king of Ethiopia, and the cataracts of the Nile; on the north by the Mediterranean ſea; on the eaſt by the Arabian gulph, or red ſea, and the Iſthmus of Suez; on the weſt by a region of Libya called Marmarica.

The old geographers differ as to the antient bounds of this country; ſome have thought, that the Delta only, or that part encompaſſed by the arms of the Nile, was properly to be called Egypt [l]; others make it reach weſtward to the greater Catabathmus [m], or valley, which divides it from Cyrenaica; but this would give it too great an extent, and include Marmarica and Ammonis, which are by every body elſe agreed to be no part of Egypt. The true limits on that ſide therefore, ſeem rather to be taken from Plinthine, a town beyond the lake

[g] See Well's Geog. of the old Teſt. Vol. II. p, 5. [h] Vid. Perizon. ubi ſup. p. 13. [i] Ubi ſup. [k] Vid. Lucas, Voyages, Tom. II. p. 193. Gol. in Alfrag. p. 100. [l] Ionei apud Herodot. l. 2. c. 15. [m] Strabo. l. 17.

lake Mareotis, and to extend eaſtward as far as the lake Serbonis [n], or more exactly to Oſtracine on the Mediterranean ſea, and Heropolis at the head of the Arabian gulph. The ſouthern bounds were Syene, a city ſituate almoſt under the tropic of Cancer, and Elephantine and Philæ, two others which lie ſomething farther [o].

As the antients differ likewiſe in ſettling the limits of Aſia and Africa, ſome, who make the Nile the boundary of thoſe two parts of the world [p], place ſo much of Egypt as lies eaſt of that river in Aſia; but others place it entirely in that part, by removing the limits of Aſia ſo far as Alexandria [q], or the Catabathmus [r]. But we think the common opinion the moſt natural, which divides Aſia from Africa by the Arabian gulph and the Iſthmus of Suez. However, we hope the former authorities will excuſe our including the Egyptians among the Aſiatic nations, whoſe hiſtories we give in this book; which we have done merely for convenience.

ANTIENT Egypt is divided by ſome into two parts, the upper and the lower Egypt; by others into three, the upper Egypt, properly ſo called, or Thebaïs; the middle Egypt, or Heptanomis; and the lower Egypt, the beſt part of which was the Delta. Its diviſion.

THEBAIS, which was ſo named by the Greeks from its principal city Thebes, is in the ſcripture called Patros, and at preſent al Saïd. It is the moſt ſoutherly part of Egypt next to Ethiopia, and is near as big as all the reſt, including the country on both ſides the Nile down to the Heptanomis; its laſt city, according to the antients, being Lycopolis on the weſtern, and Antæopolis on the eaſtern ſide of the river; which agrees pretty exactly with the preſent extent of al Saïd, the moſt northern city of which is Manfalût [s]. Thebaïs.

THERE were formerly in this part of Egypt a very great number of large and magnificent cities, with temples dedicated to ſeveral deities, and the tombs of their antient princes; and it is ſaid, there are not only ſeveral obeliſks and coloſſes ſtill remaining there, more beautiful than thoſe to be ſeen in the lower Egypt, but alſo ſome pyramids higher than thoſe near al Kâhira (commonly called Cairo) with other ſtupendous works; ſome of which we may take notice of hereafter.

[n] Vid. HEROD. ubi ſup. [o] Vid. CELLAR. Geogr. Ant. l. 4. c. 1. [p] STRABO. l. 11. DIONYS. Perieg. v. 18. PLIN. Hiſt. Nat. l. 3. c 1. [q] HIRTIUS de bello Alex. c. 14. [r] SALLUST. de bello Jugurth. c. 17. POMP. MELA. l. 1. c. 8. [s] LUCAS, Voy. T. IX. p. 209.

Its metropolis Thebes, called afterwards Dioſpolis, or the city of Jupiter, was ſituate on the Nile, and deſervedly reckoned one of the fineſt cities in the world. Its hundred gates are mentioned by Homer, whence it had the ſurname of Hecatompylos (A). It was ſo incredibly populous, that it is ſaid it could ſend out of each gate at one and the ſame time 200 chariots[t], and 10,000 fighting men, if the numbers are true. Its length in Strabo's time was 80 furlongs[u], or ten miles: but this was nothing in compariſon of its antient extent before it was ruined by Cambyſes; which, we are told, was no leſs than 420 ſtadia, or $48\frac{3}{4}$ miles[w] (B). The riches of this city were ſo very great, that after it had been plundered by the Perſians, what was found on burning the remains of the pillage, amounted to above 300 talents of gold, and 2,300 talents of ſilver[x]. Who was the firſt founder of this city is uncertain; ſome ſay, it was built by Oſiris, who gave it firſt the name of his mother[y]; but others make it the work of a ſecond Buſiris[z]. It may not be amiſs to obſerve, that formerly the name of Thebes was given to all Egypt[a], which makes what is ſaid above of its great power more credible.

The other antient cities of great note in Thebaïs, were the leſſer Dioſpolis, This, Abydus, Tentyris, Hermonthis, Latopolis, Syene, Coptos, and ſeveral others, all which are now either quite ruined, or become ſmall towns and villages. The laſt deſerves particular mention, not only as being a very antient city, but for having been the chief reſidence of the native Egyptians for many ages, ſince their country has been

[t] Homer. Il. 10. v. 387. Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 43. Pomp. Mela. l. 1 c. 9. [u] Strab. l. 17. p. 1170. [w] Eustath. ad Dionys. &c. [x] Diod. Sic. ubi ſup. [y] Idem ibid. p. 18. [z] Ibid. p. 42. [a] Herod. l. 11. Aristot. Meteor. 1.

(A) Others ſay this is not the number of the gates of the city itſelf; but the temples within it having many large porches, the city had thence the name, expreſſing a definite for an indefinite number (1).

(B) Yet it contained but 1700 aruras (a meaſure of 100 cubits ſquare); for which reaſon it is ſuppoſed its length much exceeded its breadth, being probably built chiefly on the banks of the Nile (2).

(1) Diodor. Sic. ubi ſup. p. 43. (2) Vid. Voſſium in Melam. p. 871.

ſubject

ſubject to a foreign power, and whence they received their preſent name of Copts.

HEPTANOMIS, or the middle Egypt, was ſo called from the ſeven nomes, or præfectures, into which it was divided, though Strabo ſays it contained ſixteen [b]; which difference may have been occaſioned by the adding of new nomes to thoſe it originally comprized, as were in particular thoſe of Oaſis, of which name there were two cities, not properly in Egypt, but on the borders of Lybia. The Heptanomis comprehended all the country on each ſide of the Nile from Thebaïs to the point of the Delta, where that river divides itſelf into thoſe branches by which it enters the ſea. Some of the antients make this tract a part of the Thebaïs; and ſome of the eaſtern geographers alſo give the ſame extent to al Saïd [c]. Heptanomis.

THIS part of Egypt was alſo in old times very full of large and noble cities, the principal of which was Memphis, built by Menes their firſt king, and for many ages the capital of the whole kingdom. Here alſo were the lake of Mœris, the labyrinths, and the pyramids ſo celebrated by antiquity, of which we ſhall give ſome deſcription hereafter.

THE lower Egypt, reaching from Heptanomis to the Mediterranean ſea, contained not only that part which is encompaſſed by the arms of the Nile, and from its triangular figure named Delta, but alſo Marcotis, and Alexandria with its dependencies, to the weſt; and Caſiotis, and Auguſtamnica, with ſome other territories towards Arabia, to the eaſt. Lower Egypt.

SOME have imagined the Delta, or the greater part of it, to have been an acceſſion of land to Egypt, and that the plains between the mountains beyond Memphis were formerly a bay of the ſea, which was at length filled up by the ſoil brought down by the Nile [d]. But this opinion ſeems very groundleſs, conſidering the little alteration which has been in this part of Egypt for above 2000 years paſt, and the time allowed for this effect by Herodotus, which is no leſs than 20,000 years, a much longer ſpace than the world has laſted. Some Arabs divide the Delta into two parts, al Rif and al Babriya. The former, being the weſtern part, is ſuppoſed by Bochart to be the Rabab of the ſcriptures [e], and was ſo called becauſe of its form reſembling a pear, which the Egyptians call rib or ribi [f]. Al Babriya is the eaſtern part of the Delta according to ſeveral [g], though a late traveller more truly places al Babriya, or as he writes it Beheiré, beyond the weſtern branch of the Nile [h]. The chief cities of the lower Egypt were Tanis, Sais, and Xoïs, famous for being the ſeats of ſeveral races of princes; and in later times Alexandria which was the metropolis of the whole kingdom, while in the poſſeſſion of the Greeks and Romans.

[b] STRABO. l. 16. [c] Vid. GOLII not. ad Alfrag. p. 100.
[d] DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p. 30. HEROD. l. 2. c. 5. [e] Pſal. lxxxvii. 4. & l. xxxix. 10. Iſai. li. 9. [f] BOCHART Geogr. Sacr. l. 4. c. 24.
[g] KIRCHER. Oedip. Ægypt. T. I. p. 8. LUCAS, Voy. T. II. p. 195.

Its diviſions into nomes.

BESIDES this large diviſion, Egypt was alſo diſtributed into ſeveral governments, or præfectures, called by the Egyptians Tabir, and by the Greeks Nomes; whence that paſſage of ſcripture [i], which our verſion renders, I will ſet the Egyptians againſt the Egyptians, and they ſhall fight kingdom againſt kingdom, the Septuagint have rightly tranſlated, nome againſt nome. The number of theſe are uncertain, being, according to the pleaſure of the prince, ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſs; for which reaſon antient authors differ in their accounts of them: but they were about thirty ſix, and generally named from the chief city of each nome. This diviſion is attributed to Seſoſtris [k].

IT is not our purpoſe here to enter into a particular detail of the cities of Egypt, or any geographical diſquiſitions as to their antient and modern ſtates, names, and ſituations; but we ſhall in the courſe of this work occaſionally make ſuch obſervations in relation thereto, as we ſhall judge curious or neceſſary.

Climate.

THE climate of Egypt muſt needs be very warm, from its near ſituation to the tropic. Though the air is generally dry, yet there fall great dews after the ſwelling of the Nile, which continue for ſeveral months; in the lower Egypt it often rains in the winter, notwithſtanding what ſome of the antients ſay to the contrary [l]; and even ſnow has been obſerved to fall at Alexandria, contrary to the expreſs aſſertion of Seneca [m]. In the upper Egypt indeed, towards the catadupes, or cataracts of Nile, it rains very ſeldom [n]. The firſt ſummer (for they reckon two in Egypt), which is in March, April, and May, is the moſt inconvenient and ſickly ſeaſon, becauſe of the unequal weather, exceſſive heats, and hot winds which reign at that time, and cauſe ſeveral diſtempers: but in return, in their ſecond ſummer, in June, July, and Auguſt, and in their autumn and winter, one breaths a much cooler air, the weather is more conſtant, and it is then moſt delightful living in this country. Though the cold is ſeldom felt there, [h] Eſſai d'une carte d'Egypte par SICARD. [i] Iſaiah xix. 2.

[k] DIOD. SIC. l. 2. p. 50. [l] PLATO in Tim. POMP. MELA.
[m] Nat. quæſt. l. 4. [n] Vid. GREAVES's Deſcrip. of the Pyramids, p. 74, &c. RAY's Collect. of Travels, T. II. p. 92.

except except only for about ſeven days, which the Arabs call Berd al ajûz the old woman's cold, from the 7th to the 14th of February, yet thoſe who are tolerably rich wear furs, becauſe of the uncertainty of the ſeaſon [o].

THE fertility of Egypt, and the excellence of its productions and fruits are greatly celebrated by antient writers, and by Moſes himſelf [p], who muſt needs have been well acquainted with this country. It abounds in grain of all ſorts, but particularly rice; inſomuch that, as it was formerly the granary of Rome, while ſubject to the Roman empire, it is now the principal country which ſupplies Conſtantinople. Fertility.

THE moſt plentiful parts of Egypt are the Delta, and that province which is now called al Feyyûm, ſuppoſed to be the antient Heracleotic nome [q]; the capital of which, bearing the ſame name, is thought to have been either Heracleopolis, Nilopolis, or Arſinoe, and is ſaid by the natives to have been built by Joſeph, to whom they own themſelves obliged for the improvements of this territory; which, being much the loweſt part of Egypt, was before nothing but a ſtanding pool, till that patriarch, by cutting canals, and particularly the great one which reaches from the Nile to the lake Mœris, drained it of the water, and clearing it of the ruſhes and marſhy weeds, rendered it fit for tillage. It is now the moſt fertile and beſt cultivated land in the whole kingdom, containing above 360 villages, and yields linen, grapes, and other fruits in abundance; and it fails not bearing, even in thoſe years, when the Nile's not riſing to its uſual height occaſions a ſcarcity in the other parts of Egypt [r].

HAVING ſpoken of the plenty of Egypt, it would be an unpardonable omiſſion not to ſay ſomething of the river Nile, to which this country is indebted for all its fertility and happineſs. The ſources, or ſprings, of this river were ſo abſolutely unknown to the antients, that they thought it even impoſſible to diſcover them: they are now well known to be in Ethiopia, though modern travellers differ in their accounts of them, as will be ſeen when we come to deſcribe them in a more proper place. The Nile enters Egypt almoſt under the tropic of Cancer, violently pouring itſelf, as it paſſes, down no leſs than ſeven cataracts, or falls, from a very conſiderable height, between ragged rocks and precipices, with ſo great a noiſe that it may be heard ſeveral miles off. The people of thoſe parts uſed formerly to entertain ſtrangers with Of the river Nile.

[o] Ibid. & LUCAS, Voy. T. II. p. 239.
[p] Geneſ. xiii. 10.
[q] Vid. STRABON. l. 17.
[r] GOLII not. ad Alfrag. p. 157, &c. KIRCHER Oedip. Vol. I. p. 8. LUCAS, ubi ſup. p 205.

a ſurprizing ſpectacle, which ſome modern travellers ſay is ſtill continued: two of them get into a ſmall boat, one to guide it, and the other to keep it clear of water; after having born the violence of the agitated waves for ſome time, they dexterouſly ſteer their boat through the narrow channels, thereby avoiding the rocks, and letting themſelves be carried down by the falling river, direct their little veſſel with their hands, and ruſhing headlong, to the great terror of the ſpectators, who think them utterly loſt and ſwallowed up, they appear again on the water, far from the place from which they fell, as if they had been ſhot out of an engine[r]. The Nile, having paſſed through the upper and middle Egypt, a little below the antient Memphis divided itſelf into two large arms, which afterwards forming ſeven channels, emptied themſelves into the ſea by as many mouths. Theſe ſeven mouths of the Nile, much ſpoken of by the antient writers, were, to begin from the weſt, the Canopic, the Heracleotic, the Bolbitic, the Sebennytic, the Phatnic, or Pathmetic, the Mendeſian, the Tanitic, or Saïtic, and the Peluſian; which had their names from ſo many cities ſtanding on their ſeveral branches. Beſides theſe, there were the two Pſeudoſtomata, or falſe mouths, as they called them, of Pineptimi and Diolcos, which were too ſmall to carry larger veſſels. But the greater part of theſe mouths have been ſince ſtopped up, and others formed, ſo that there are now reckoned to be above thirty channels which carry the waters of the Nile into the ſea, eſpecially at the time of its overflowing, the greater part of them becoming dry when the waters retire[s]; the two chief, and indeed only conſiderable arms of that river at preſent, being that of Roſetta, or Raſhid, to the weſt, and that of Damietta, or Dimyát, to the eaſt.

Its annual overflowing.

THE annual inundation of the Nile, on which the fertility of Egypt depends, is one of the greateſt wonders of that country. The antient writers tell us, that it begins to riſe in Egypt about the ſummer ſolſtice, and continues ſo to do till after the autumnal equinox, for about the ſpace of one hundred days, and then it gradually decreaſes for as many days, till it retires within its banks, and overflows no more till the next year. If the river did not riſe to the height of ſixteen cubits, or fifteen at leaſt, the country was not covered with water, and a dearth enſued[u]: this account comes very near to thoſe given by modern travellers. Though the river begins to ſwell in May, yet no public notice is taken of it till the [r] Senec. Nat. queſt. l. 4. c. 2. [s] Lucas, ubi ſup. p. 313.

[u] Herod. l. 2. Diod. Sic. l. 1. Vid. Plin. l. 5. c. 9.

28th

28th or 29th of June, by which time it is usually risen to the height of six, or eight pikes (a Turkish measure of about twenty six inches); and then the public criers proclaim it through the capital and other cities, and continue in the same manner to publish how much the river increases every day, till it rises to sixteen pikes, and then they cut down the dam of the Khalîj, or great canal at Bulâk, which passes through the midst of al Kahira, and let in the water on their lands, by an artifice we shall mention by and by. If the river want but an inch of this height, they will not cut the dam, because in such case no tribute is due to the prince for the lands which should be watered by them, the produce being then scarce sufficient to maintain the tillers. And therefore at present, if the Bashaw, or governor, of Egypt cut this dam before the river rise to that determinate height, he is answerable for the consequence, and must pay the Turkish emperor his tribute, whether the year be plentiful or no. If the water increase to the height of twenty three or twenty four pikes, it is judged most favourable; but if it exceed that, it does a great deal of mischief, not only by overthrowing houses, and drowning cattle, but also by engendering a great number of insects which destroy the fruits of the earth [w].

THE Khalij above-mentioned is always opened with great solemnity in the presence of the Bashaw, accompanied by all his great officers, and attended by an innumerable multitude of people, this being one of the greatest festivals in Egypt [x]; and in former times, we are told, the Egyptians used annually at this ceremony to sacrifice a girl, or, as others say, a boy and a girl, to the Nile, as a tribute paid to that river for all the benefits they received from it. And this inhuman custom continued, it is said, till the Turks made themselves masters of Egypt (C); the first governor under whom resolved to abolish it, and by his prudent remonstrances prevailed on the Egyptians to omit it: but the river unfortunately did not rise that year to the accustomed height. The year following it was worſe, ſo that the people, apprehending a famine, began to murmur: whereupon the governor led all the inhabitants of the city, Turks, Jews, and Chriſtians, to a mountain on the eaſt of al Kâhira, and after a pathetic exhortation, he obliged all that were preſent to offer up their prayers to God for the obtaining his mercy; in which exerciſe they paſſed all the reſt of that day and the following night. The next morning before day, ſome women came, with great joy, to acquaint the governor, that the Nile had riſen in the night no leſs than twelve pikes; whereupon nothing was heard but the praiſes of God and acclamations of the people. Coming down from the mountain, they erected an altar at the mouth of the canal ten foot high, whereon they threw a great quantity of flowers, and a branch of olive, which laſt, as they ſay, took root there, as a more agreeable offering to God than the former innocent victim; and they continue ſtill to erect ſuch an altar every year, and when they break down the dam, and the water enters the Khalij, it carries down the altar and flowers with it. The year when this event happened, the Nile roſe two pikes higher than it uſed to do, and there was very great plenty; ſince which time a final ſtop being put to the above-mentioned ſuperſtitious practice, whenever the waters fail of their accuſtomed height, they have recourſe to prayers on the ſame mountain [y].

[w] LUCAS, ubi sup. p. 327, &c. Vid. THEVENOT, Voy. part 1. c. 22, 45, 46, &c. [x] Vid. eosd. ubi sup.

(C) It seems very strange, that such a practice should be suffered, not only during the time Egypt was subject to the christian emperors of Constantinople, but while the Arabs were masters of it. Amasis, one of the antient Egyptian kings, is said to have abolished the human sacrifices offered to Juno, as will be observed hereafter; and it might be reasonably supposed, he would also have put a stop to those offered to the Nile. Perhaps we may set this matter in a clearer light, when we come to the Arabian and Turkish history.

Of the Nilometers. THAT they may the better judge of the daily increaſe of the water, and the conſequent plenty or ſcarcity of the enſuing year, the gradual riſe of the river is very exactly meaſured either by wells ſunk, or pillars erected and divided for that purpoſe. There was one of the former, we are told, on the bank of the Nile, in the upper Egypt near Syene [z]; and one of the latter was ſet up in Memphis [a]. A very antient column, which ſerved for the ſame uſe, is alſo yet to be ſeen in the caſtle of old Kâhira, ſaid to be erected in the time of the emperor Heraclius. The preſent Nilometer (D), or Mikyâs

[y] Lucas, ubi ſup. Vid. Thevenot, ubi ſup. [z] Strabo, l. 17. p. 817. [a] Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 33.

(D) This Nilometer is different from that built in an iſland of the Nile, between Jizah and al Foſtât (which from its pleaſant ſituation, and being planted with ſeveral ſorts of fruit-trees, is much celebrated by the oriental writers, and called al Rawdat, or the Garden) by Aſâmah ebn Yazid (3), collector of the tribute in Egypt, in the reign of the Khaliſah Soleymân ebn Abd'almalek. Some years after the

(3) Elmacin. in vita Soleymân.

Khaliſah

D. Pomarede Sc.

Mikyâs, as the Arabs call it, is in the ſame caſtle; it is a large ſquare reſervoir, round which runs a handſome gallery, ſuſtained by twelve marble pillars, which form arches, with a baluſtrade to lean on when one looks into the water. In the midſt of this baſon, through which paſſes a canal drawn from the Nile, is an octagonal pillar of white marble, divided into twenty two equal parts; the firſt is again divided into twenty four inches, but the ſecond is not; however, the others are all marked to the top of the column. They are very careful, during the time of the inundation, to obſerve the height of the water by the meaſure, and every day proclaim it in the city. This work is ſo exactly finiſhed and nicely levelled, that the water in the reſervoir is neither higher nor lower than that in the river [b].

Of the Sphinxes.

As theſe Nilometers ſerved to meaſure the overflowing of the river, the Sphinxes, of which there were alſo a great many in ſeveral places, ſhewed the beginning of the waters riſing; being a ſymbolic repreſentation, or figure, with the head of a woman and the body of a lion, ſignifying, that the Nile began to ſwell in the months of July and Auguſt, when the ſun paſſes through the ſigns of Leo and Virgo [c]. There are ſeveral of theſe Sphinxes ſtill to be ſeen; one in particular near the pyramids much ſpoken of by the antients, being of a prodigious ſize, and cut out of the rock itſelf: the head and neck only appear at preſent, the reſt of the body being hid in the ſand. It is, according to Thevenot [d], twenty ſix foot high, and fifteen foot from the ear to the chin; but Pliny aſſures us, the head was no leſs than one hundred and two foot about, and ſixty two foot high from the belly, and that the body was one hundred and forty three foot long, and was thought to be the ſepulchre of king Amaſis [e]. There is another alſo at the end of the lake of al Matariya, which lies on its ſide, the head being ſeparated from the body [f].

[b] LUCAS, ubi ſup. p. 313, 321, &c. [c] Ibid. p. 323.
[d] THEVENOT Voy. part, 1. c. 5. c. 12. [e] PLIN. Nat. Hiſt. l. 36. [f] LUCAS ubi ſup.

Khaliſah al Mâhmûn ordered it to be pulled down, on account of ſome defect therein, and a new one to be built in its room, which was at laſt finiſhed in a magnificent manner by al Motawakkel (4). The eaſtern hiſtories mention ſeveral other ſtructures of this ſort, built or repaired by the Khalifahs while maſters of Egypt.

(4) Vid. Golij Not. ad Alfra. p. 156. & D'Herbelot Bibl. orient. p. 672.

As

The manner of conveying the water on their lands.

As it may eaſily be conceived, this river could not of itſelf overflow the lands every where in the neceſſary proportion, the inhabitants have been obliged, with infinite labour, to cut a vaſt number of canals and trenches from one end of Egypt to the other, to convey the water to every part; ſo that each town and village has its canal, which is opened at the proper time, and the water ſucceſſively conducted to the moſt diſtant places. Theſe canals, or trenches are not permitted to be opened till the river has roſe to a certain height, nor yet all at once, becauſe in ſuch caſe ſome lands would have too much water, and others too little; but they begin to open them firſt in the upper Egypt, and then gradually lower, according to a public regulation of the meaſures made for that purpoſe. By this means the water is ſo carefully huſbanded, that if it riſes to twenty four pikes, it ſuffices the whole country; which is ſo large, and the canals ſo numerous, that it is thought ſcarce a tenth part of the waters of the Nile enter the ſea for the firſt three months of its overflowing. However, as ſome places lie too high to be watered by the canals, they are obliged to raiſe the water to cover them by engines. Formerly they made uſe of Archimedes's ſcrew, thence named the Egyptian pump[g]; but they now generally uſe wheels, which carry a rope or chain, of earthen pots, holding about ſeven or eight quarts apiece, and draw the water from the canals. There are beſides a vaſt number of wells in Egypt, from which the water is drawn in the ſame manner to water the gardens and fruit-trees; ſo that it is no exaggeration of the matter to ſay, that there are in Egypt above two hundred thouſand oxen daily employed in this labour, without reckoning the men who draw water in wicker baſkets, ſo cloſe and well made that not a drop runs through. As the land lies perfectly even, they cut their gardens into little ſquare beds, which are all ſurrounded with trenches higher than the level of the gardens, ſo that when they want to water one of theſe beds, they open one of the trenches, which immediately furniſhes as much water as is neceſſary; after which they ſtop it up again, and thus they manage the reſt; by which means they have the fineſt and moſt fertile gardens in the world. Pomegranates, oranges, lemons, and ſeveral other ſorts of trees, afford a ſhade and coolneſs, which, notwithſtanding the heat of the climate, make it delightful walking. When a tree is wanting in any place, they only cut down a branch, which they plant by the ſide of a little trench, and in two or three years it grows to be a tree big enough to tranſplant.

[g] Vid. Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 30, & l. 5. p. 313.

The

THE Nile differing in this from other rivers, which generally carry off the heart of the land they overflow, by the mud, or ſlime, it brings down with it fattens the earth and makes it exceeding fruitful, without any other manure. The Egyptians have not the laborious taſk of ploughing, digging, or breaking the clods, but when the river is retired, they have no more to do than to mingle a little ſand with the earth to abate its ſtrength; after which they ſow with little pains, and almoſt without charge. Anciently, we are told, they uſed to put in their hogs to tread the ſeed into the ground, expecting the harveſt without any further care; and when that ſeaſon came they let in the hogs again to ſhake the grain out of the ear, and had no other trouble than to gather and lay up their corn [h]. They ſow ordinarily in October and November, as the waters fall: within two months the ground is covered with all ſorts of grain and pulſe; and their harveſt is in March and April. The ſame piece of ground produces the ſame year three or four different ſorts of fruits and garden ſtuff: firſt, they ſow lettice and cucumbers, then corn; and after harveſt, melons, and thoſe ſorts of pulſe which are peculiar to Egypt.

The fecundity occaſioned by the Nile.

WHAT is moſt extraordinary is, that this ſurprizing fecundity, cauſed by the inundation of the Nile, reaches not only to the earth, but alſo to mankind and animals [i]. It is found by conſtant experience, that the new waters make the women fruitful, whether they bath in them, or only drink them: they uſually conceive in July and Auguſt, and are delivered in April and May. As to the cattle, the cows almoſt always bring two calves at a time; the ſheep yean twice a year, having two lambs the firſt time, and but one the ſecond; and a goat is often ſeen followed by four kids, which ſhe has brought in ſix months: the paſtures of Egypt are moſt excellent, the graſs generally growing to the height of the cattle: on this they feed in winter, during which ſeaſon great numbers are driven thither from about the Euphrates; in ſummer, the grounds being either burnt up by the ſun, or overflowed by the Nile, they are taken up, and fed with hay, beans, and barley.

THERE is not a more pleaſant ſight in the world than Egypt in two ſeaſons of the year; for if you aſcend ſome mountains, or one of the great pyramids of al Kâhira, about the months of July and Auguſt, you ſee a wide ſea, out of which there ariſe a vaſt number of villages, turrets, and ſpires, appearing like the iſles in the Ægæan ſea [k], with ſome cauſeways for communication, intermixed with groves, and a

Two different appearances of Egypt in two ſeaſons.

[h] HERODOT. l. 2. DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p. 32. [i] Vid. DIODOR. SIC. l. 1. p 32. [k] Vid. HERODOT. & DIODOR. SIC. ubi ſup.

great great number of fruit-trees, whoſe tops only are ſeen; all which affords a moſt inchanting proſpect. This view is terminated by mountains and woods, which at a diſtance forms the moſt agreeable perſpective in the world. On the other hand, in the winter, that is, about January and February, all the country is like a fine meadow, whoſe verdure, enamelled with flowers, charms the ſight. You ſee on every ſide herds and flocks of cattle ſcattered over the plain, with an infinite number of huſbandmen and gardeners. The air is then embalmed by the prodigious quantity of flowers, furniſhed by the oranges, lemons, and other trees; and is ſo pure, that a man cannot breath one more wholeſome or agreeable; ſo that nature, which is then as it were dead in ſo many other climates, ſeems to revive only for the ſake of ſo delightful an abode. If there be any places left which are not quite dried, they are covered with water-fowl in great plenty, which afford diverſion to the ſportſmen, who kill as many of them as they pleaſe.

The cities, towns, and villages in Egypt, to ſecure them from the inundation of the Nile, are all built either on ſome riſing ground formed by nature, or elſe, which is generally the caſe, on mounds raiſed by infinite labour; the communication between one town and another, while the country is under water, being carried on either by the cauſeways abovementioned or boats. When the river is retired within its banks, the canals ſerve for the ſame purpoſe, and to furniſh the inhabitants and cattle with water, which the maidens are continually to be ſeen fetching thence, according to the antient cuſtom ſo often taken notice of in ſcripture [l].

The cauſe of the inundation of the Nile.

As the antients were ignorant of the true cauſe of the inundation of the Nile, which ſeemed the more unaccountable to them, becauſe, contrary to other rivers, it overflowed in the ſummer, and was loweſt in winter, they made ſeveral ſubtil conjectures to explain this phænomenon [m]. But it has been long ſince well known to be occaſioned by the great rains which fall in Ethiopia, about the ſprings of the Nile, and ſwell that river into the ſea, which firſt lays Ethiopia almoſt entirely under water, as it afterwards does Egypt. Agatharchides of Gnidos [n], and ſome others, gueſſed this to be the cauſe, though they were not certain of it; but it was afterwards confirmed by eye-witneſſes; Ptolemy Philadelphus, a very inquiſitive prince, having ſent ſome perſons on purpoſe to examine

[l] Vid. Lucas, ubi ſup. p. 328, &c. [m] Vid. Herodot. l. 2. Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 33, &c. [n] Diod. Sic. ibid. p. 39.

examine into the matter. It has been thought, that this piece of natural hiſtory was not unknown to Homer himſelf, and that he alludes to it when he ſays [o], that the Nile came down from heaven [p]. Theſe rains conſtantly fall in Ethiopia during the months of April and May [q]; at which time it alſo rains with the ſame regularity in the Indies, cauſing the Indus and the Ganges to overflow their banks in the ſame manner as the Nile does [r].

THE divine providence has been juſtly admired, in ſending the rains in Ethiopia ſo very punctually for the ſupply of Egypt, where it rains ſo ſeldom, and thereby rendering a moſt dry and ſandy ſoil one of the moſt fruitful in the univerſe. Nor is it to be omitted, that in the beginning of June and the four following months, the Eteſian winds (which ſome formerly imagined to be the great cauſe of the inundation [s]) conſtantly blow from the north-eaſt, and keep back the water from flowing down and emptying itſelf into the ſea too faſt [t]. As the fertility of the land of Canaan was owing to a very different method of providence, that is, to the former and latter rains, which regularly fell at two appointed ſeaſons of the year, while the children of Iſrael continued in their duty, Moſes thought proper to acquaint them before-hand with ſo material a difference between the promiſed land and that they had lately left; The land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, ſays that lawgiver, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs; but the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven: a land which the Lord thy God careth for; the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year [u].

Of the animals of Egypt.

LET us now take a view of the animal and vegetable productions of Egypt. The crocodile, and hippopotamus, or river-horſe, are, it is to be preſumed, too well known to the reader, to need a particular deſcription here [v]: they are both inhabitants of the Nile. The crocodiles are often killed by the natives. One way of taking them is, by a piece of fleſh ſtuck on an iron hook, and let down into the river by a rope, the other end of which is faſtened to a ſtake: when the crocodile has ſeized the bait, he is drawn to land, and knocked knocked on the head [w]. Herodotus describes this manner with very little variation [x]. Another more dangerous way is sometimes practised, by striking them, as they sleep, under the belly, with a stake armed with a bearded point of iron, and also fastened to a rope [y]. A more extraordinary method still was made use of to catch one of these creatures that had done much mischief: the person, who undertook it for a reward, bound his son, a young lad, to a stake in the place where the crocodile used to come, and laid himself flat on his belly with two short clubs in his hand, one of which was wound round at the end with a very large ball of course thread dipped in pitch, and so waited for the crocodile; who coming out of the river and smelling the boy, made directly towards him; but as he opened his mouth to seize him, the father thrust the stake with the pitched ball into his jaws, which sticking in his teeth and entangling them as he bit it, the man broke his back, and killed him with the other [z]. The inhabitants of Tentyris are reported to have been very bold and dexterous in hunting these creatures, and that they would even leap on their backs in the water, and clapping a stick across their mouths, as they open them to bite, manage them as with a bridle, and bring them to land; so that these creatures were terrified even by their voice and smell [a]. The flesh of the crocodile is white and fat, and is a delicious dish when young; the Arabs of the upper Egypt are very fond of it [b], and formerly the inhabitants of Elephantis used also to eat these animals [c].

[o] HOM. Odyſſ. 4. v. 581. [p] STRABO l. 17. p. 1137. [q] Vid. LUCAS, ubi ſup. p. 321. [r] BERNIER, Voyage de Cachemire, p. 343, &c. [s] HERODOT. ubi. ſup. [t] LE BRUYN Voyage Tom II. [u] Deut. xi. 10, 11, 12. [v] Vid. HEROD. l. 2. DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p 32. STRABO. l. 17.

The hippopotami are common in the upper Egypt, especially near the cataracts, but are scarce to be met with in any part of the lower Egypt. These creatures never go in herds, and it is rare to see two of them together. They are so distrustful, and fly with that swiftness from their pursuers, that they are very seldom taken [d].

Besides wild and tame oxen, camels, asses, goats, and sheep, of which there is great plenty in Egypt, and the flesh of the last very delicate food, there are a vast number of antelopes, and a large kind of ape, with a head somewhat like a dog, whence it was called cynocephalus: the Egyptians often used the figure of this beast as a hieroglyphic. The camelcon is also common in the hedges near al Kahira.

[w] Lettre du P. Sicard, dans les Mem. des Missions. Tom. VI. p. 252. [x] Ubi supr. [y] Sicard, ubi supr. [z] Lucas, ubi sup. Tom I. p. 88 [a] Plin. Nat Hist. l. 8 c 25. [b] Sicard, ubi supr. [c] Herod. ubi. supr. [d] Sicard, ubi supr. p. 251.

The

THE animal called the little, or land-crocodile (which we take to be the ſcincus of Pliny [e]) is about the bigneſs of a lizard, and has a round tail covered with ſcales. It is found near the Nile and the red ſea, and uſually feeds on the moſt odoriferous flowers: the fleſh is of uſe in phyſic, great numbers of them being for that reaſon carried to Venice and other places.

THE Egyptian rat, called by the antients ichneumon, is of the ſize of a cat, with very rough hair, ſpotted with white, yellow, and aſh colour; its noſe like that of a hog, with which it digs up the earth: it has ſhort black legs, and a tail like a fox. It lives on lizards, ſerpents, ſnails, cameleons, rats, and other animals; and is of great ſervice in Egypt, by its natural inſtinct hunting out and breaking the eggs of the crocodile, and thereby preventing too great an increaſe of that deſtructive creature. The naturaliſts alſo ſay, that it is ſo greedy after the crocodile's liver, that rolling itſelf in mud, it ſlips down his throat, while he ſleeps with his mouth open, and gnaws its way out again [f]. This animal is eaſily tamed, but muſt not be kept where cats are, with which they are at perpetual enmity [g].

OF birds there are alſo great numbers in Egypt, particularly oſtriches, eagles, hawks, and a prodigious number of water-fowl, as pelicans, flamingoes, or phœnicopteri, wild geeſe, herons, ducks, and various other ſorts. Thoſe which are proper to the Nile, are the ibis, the gooſe with golden feathers, the rice-hen, or hen of Dimyât and the ſakſak; which laſt is the trochilus of the antients [h], obſerved by them to be the only creature with which the crocodile is in friendſhip, becauſe this bird picks and clears his mouth of the leeches which infeſt it [i]. The ibis deſerves particular notice, not only becauſe it is ſo peculiar to Egypt, that it pines away and dies if carried elſewhere, but for the great uſe it is of in that country, by deſtroying the flying ſerpents, which the ſouth winds bring from the deſerts of Lybia, and are ſhaped, as the water-ſnakes, with wings like a bat: in the proper ſeaſon of the year, theſe birds in vaſt numbers, by a peculiar inſtinct, go and wait on the frontiers for theſe ſerpents, and devour them as they fly, before they enter Egypt. There are two kinds of the ibis, one is of a deep black, and about the bigneſs of a heron: this is the ibis which kills the ſerpents, and is ſeldom found except only in the lower Egypt: the other is white,

[e] Nat. Hiſt. ubi ſupr. [f] Vid. DIOD. SIC. p. 32, 78. [g] Vid. LUCAS, ubi ſupr. p 245. [h] SICARD, Mem. des Miſſ. Tom. VI. p. 249. [i] HERODOT. ubi ſup.

white, but has the head, neck, and ends of the wings and tail as black as the former; and are ſo common that one often ſees vaſt numbers of them. The bill and legs of this bird reſemble thoſe of a ſtork; its uſual food (beſides the ſerpents above-mentioned) are ſnails, locuſts, and other inſects j.

Besides the lakes which are in other parts of Egypt, thoſe in the Delta near the ſea, of which there are three pretty large ones between Alexandria and Tinah [k], the antient Peluſium, afford great numbers of fiſh, though not of above ſeven or eight ſorts; two of which they ſalt; and ſend large quantities to Syria, Cyprus, and Conſtantinople. The revenues of one of theſe lakes alone, called Manzalah, bring into the Turkiſh emperor's treaſury no leſs than forty thouſand crowns a year. Thoſe who live near theſe lakes eat a great deal of freſh fiſh, and very cheap, as the Iſraelites formerly did [l]; but the heat of the climate will not ſuffer them to be carried far; for which reaſon the inhabitants of al Kâhira are obliged to content themſelves with the fiſh which the Nile affords them. The bed of that river, being very full of mud and ſlime, communicates a muddy taſte to all the fiſh that are fed in it, except four ſorts, which are very excellent. Theſe are the keſher, or lates, the latos of the antients, which is often ſo large as to weigh two or three hundred pounds; the caſhouc, formerly called oxyrinchus, from the ſharpneſs of its noſe; the bonni, which weighs ſometimes twenty or thirty pounds, and is the lepidotus ſo much eſteemed by the old Egyptians; and the kârmud, known in antient writers by the name of phagrus: this laſt is black, grows to the ſame ſize as the bonni, and is a very voracious fiſh. What makes theſe fiſh the more ſerviceable to the inhabitants of al Kâhira is, that they are to be found in the Nile at all ſeaſons of the year, and are very eaſily taken [m].

Of the vegetables of Egypt.

Though woods are very rare in Egypt, yet there are ſome foreſts of palm-trees towards the deſerts of Libya, and near Dandera, the antient Tentyra, there is one of doms, or wild date-trees [n], whoſe fruit is exceſſive hard, but much admired by thoſe of the country. Palm-trees are the moſt common of all others in this country; beſides which there are ſeveral ſorts of fruit-trees, and alſo ſome cedars, though not ſo large, or ſo frequently to be ſeen as in Syria; and a great thorny tree called al bilaji, out of which perhaps the antient Egyptians made thoſe boats mentioned by Herodotus [o].

j Vid. Herod. ibid. Lucas, ubi ſupr. p. 246. [k] Sicard, ubi ſupr. p. 233, &c. [l] Numb. xi. 5. [m] Sicard. p. 245, &c. Lucas, ubi ſupr. p. 242. [n] Sicard, ubi ſupr. p. 157. [o] Lib. 2.

However,

However, Egypt is not a country proper for trees, which thrive not there without great care and cultivation. As to plants, the caſe is very different; the kinds are ſo very various, that we ſhall mention only a few, and chiefly thoſe which may give ſome light into antient hiſtory.

THE firſt we ſhall take notice of is the reed papyrus, or byblus, called at preſent by the natives al berdi. It grows on the banks of the Nile, and ſhoots out a ſtalk of nine or ten foot high; the trunk is compoſed of a great number of long ſtrait fibres, which produce ſmall flowers; the leaves are like the blade of a ſword, and they make uſe of them to keep wounds open; the aſhes of the ſtalk alſo cure thoſe that are not inveterate. This is the plant whereof the antients made their writing-paper, which thence took its name. The way of making it was, by taking out the pith of the ſtalk, which they worked into a white paſte, or glew, and of that made the paper, almoſt in the ſame manner as we do our linen rags; but others ſay, it was made of the inner rind of the plant. Before agriculture was improved in Egypt, this reed was of great ſervice; for they did not only uſe it as food, but made cloaths, boats, and domeſtic utenſils of it; and alſo crowns for their gods, and ſhoes for their prieſts. But more uſeful inventions have ſet all this aſide, and the plant is now entirely neglected [p].

THE flax of Egypt, eſpecially one ſort of it, was ſo exceeding fine, and they dreſſed and ſpun it ſo curiouſly, that the threads could ſcarce be ſeen [q]. It grew in ſo great plenty, that they had not only enough to cloath their prieſts (who wore nothing elſe) and people of condition [r], and to make ſhrouds for their dead, but to drive a very great trade with it into foreign parts. The fine linen of Egypt was in great requeſt over all the eaſt [s]; that ſuperfine ſort of it, called byſſus, was often died in purple, and was ſo dear, that none but rich people could afford to wear it.

THE lotus, which grows plentifully in the lower Egypt, eſpecially near Raſhid, or Roſetta, is called by the inhabitants al baſhnin, and is a ſpecies of nenuphar, nymphæa, or water-lilly. Its leaves float on the water, and cover the ſurface of it, producing many flowers, which were formerly wove into the crowns of conquerors. The antient Egyptians made bread of the middle, or pulp of this plant dried, which re-ſembled that of a poppy; and the root of it, which is round, and as big as an apple, was alſo eaten by them [t]. This lotus is different from that fruit of the ſame name whereon the Lotophagi lived [u]: the Arabs at this day make a drink of the Egyptian lotus, which is very good for inward heat; and they eat the ſtalk and heads of them raw, which are very moiſt and cooling [w].

[p] LUCAS, ubi ſupr. p. 249, &c. Vid. ROLLIN Hiſt. anc. V. I. p. 106. Vid. PLIN. l. 13. c. 11. [q] Vid. PLIN. Nat. Hiſt. l. 19. c. 1. [r] Vid. Geneſ. xli. 42. [s] Prov. vii. 16. Ezek. xxvii. 7.

The henna, called alcanna by the botaniſts, is a ſhrub which ſhoots forth a great many branches. Its leaves are like that of an olive-tree, but ſhorter, broader, and of a more pleaſant green. The flowers, which are ſet like thoſe of the elder, have an agreeable ſmell, and are thrown by the inhabitants into their baths [x]. The women dye their nails and other parts with a reddiſh colour extracted from this plant, by way of ornament.

Other plants, the fruits or roots of which are eaten by the inhabitants, are in ſo great abundance, and ſo excellent in their kind, that they are almoſt ſufficient to maintain them without the uſe of corn [y]; and formerly the labouring people ſcarce lived on any thing elſe. It is not therefore ſo ſurprizing, that the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs regretted the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick [z], which they uſed to eat ſo freely in Egypt.

Of the artificial rarities of Egypt.

The buildings, and other works of the antient Egyptians, which have raiſed the admiration of all ſucceeding ages, deſerve a more particular view.

The pyramids.

The firſt enquiry generally made by thoſe who would be acquainted with this country, is concerning the pyramids, thoſe ſtupendous ſtructures, which were deſervedly reckoned by the antients among the wonders of the world.

There are many of them in ſeveral parts of Egypt, and particularly in the upper Egypt, as we have already obſerved; but thoſe which have been chiefly taken notice of and deſcribed by travellers, ſtand on the weſt ſide of the Nile, not far from Jizah, which ſucceeded the antient Memphis. The number of theſe pyramids is about twenty, of which three, ſtanding pretty near together, are moſt remarkable, and are thoſe which have been ſo often deſcribed. The other lie far ſcattered in the Libyan deſert, and are leſſer models of the three, though ſome of them are very conſiderable, particularly one, which ſtands ſouth and by weſt from them, at about twenty miles diſtance more within the deſert, and has been undeſervedly neglected both by antient and modern writers, though it be as worthy of memory, and as near a miracle as any of the former three.

[t] Herod. l. 2. Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 30. [u] Herod. l. 4. [w] Lucas, ubi ſupr. p. 257. [x] Idem, Ibid. [y] Plin. l. 21. c. 15. [z] Numb. xi. 5.

neglected

IT is the common opinion, that the word pyramid is derived from the Greek pyr, or pur, fire; and that these structures were so called from their shape, ascending from a broad base, and ending in a point like a flame of fire; others, whose opinion Vossius [a] seems to approve, say, they took the name from pyros, which in the same language signifies wheat, because they will have them to be the granaries of the antient Egyptian kings; but a late writer, versed in the Coptic tongue, has given us another etymology from that language, wherein pouro signifies a king, and misi, a race, or generation: and the reason why the pyramids had this name given them was, as he tells us, because they were erected to preserve the memory of those princes and their families; and that those who were descended from them, had therefore recourse, to those pillars to prove their pedigree [b] (E). Whence so named.

WHO were the builders of these pyramids has been matter of much dispute. Josephus [c], followed by some modern writers [d], supposed, they were erected by the Israelites during their heavy pressure under the tyranny of the Pharaohs. The scriptures however seem to be against this opinion, for they expressly make the slavish employment of that people to have By whom built.

[a] Etymol. ling. Lat. voce Pyramis. Vid. STEPH. de urb. voce Πυραμίδες. [b] WILKINS Dissert. de ling. Copt. p. 108. [c] Antiq. l. 2. c. 5. [d] SPONDANUS de cœmet. sacr. l. 1. c. 6. PERIZON. Orig. Ægypt. p. 387, &c.

(E) This gentleman endeavours to support his assertion by the authority of Herodotus, as if he affirmed, that the Egyptians preserved their genealogies on pillars, and that those pillars were called pyramids: but we do not remember any such thing in that author. The passage quoted is no more than this; that when Hecatæus the historian acquainted the priest of Jupiter with his genealogy, and derived himself from no less than sixteen gods, the priests would by no means admit, that a man could be begotten by a god, but shewed him three hundred and forty five large wooden images of their high priests in a spacious edifice, which stood in regular order, the son being placed after the father; and told him, that none of them had been reputed either a god or a hero; but that each image which he saw represented a piromis, begotten by another piromis; the word piromis signifying no more in their language, than an honest man (1). It may be observed, that romi, and, with the article, piromi, signifies a man in the present Coptic.

(1). Herod. l. 2.

been the making of bricks, whereas all theſe pyramids are of ſtone. Others pretend, they were built by the patriarch Joſeph, for granaries to lay up the corn of the ſeven plentiful years [e]; and to ſupport this imagination, alledge the above-mentioned derivation from pyros, wheat: but this opinion is much more groundleſs than the former; for beſides that their figure is the leaſt capacious of any regular mathematical body, and therefore improper for ſuch a purpoſe, the ſtraightneſs and fewneſs of the rooms within (the reſt being a ſolid fabric of ſtone) do utterly overthrow ſuch a conjecture.

Herodotus ſays, the firſt or greateſt of the three moſt remarkable pyramids was built by Cheops, whom Diodorus names Chemmis; for that they were the ſame perſon will appear hereafter. The ſecond, both thoſe hiſtorians agree to have been erected by Cephren, brother and ſucceſſor to the former prince. And the third was the work of Mycerinus, the ſon of Cheops [f]. This laſt, ſome of the Greeks pretended was built by Rhodopis [g], or Rhodope, a courtezan, whom Sappho called Doricha, miſtreſs to her brother Charaxus [h]. But this is very improbable, if we conſider either her condition, or the vaſtneſs of the expence; though ſome, to amend the ſtory, ſay ſeveral governors of provinces, who were in love with her, built it for her by contribution [i]: beſides, Herodotus has ſhewn that ſhe lived long after theſe pyramids were in being [k]. Yet, after all, Diodorus confeſſes, that there is little agreement as to theſe pyramids, either among the natives or hiſtorians; ſome ſaying, that the largeſt was built by Armæus, the ſecond by Amaſis, and the third by Inaron [l]; and this uncertainty Pliny mentions as a juſt reward of the vanity of the undertakers [m].

The Arab writers aſſign other founders of theſe three pyramids different from thoſe mentioned by the Greeks. To omit the fancy of thoſe who thought them built by Jân ebn Ján, univerſal monarch of the whole world before Adam [n], and the above-mentioned opinion, which attributes them to Joſeph; ſome ſay, they were erected by Nimrod; ſome, by queen Dalûka; and others, by the Egyptians before the flood. The Copts report, that the eaſt pyramid is the ſepulchre of king Saurid, the weſtern of his brother Hûjib,

[e] Steph. de urb. ubi ſupr. Nicetas, Nonnus, &c. apud Greaves, ubi infra. [f] Vid. Herod. l. 2. Diod. Sic. l. 1. [g] Herod. ubi ſupr. [h] Strabo. l. 17. [i] Diodor ubi ſupr. [k] Herod. ubi ſupr. [l] Diodor. ubi ſupr. [m] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 36. c. 12. [n] D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. p. 311. See Introd. p. ult.

and

and the coloured pyramid of Fazfarinûn the ſon of Hûjib. The Sabians pretend, that one of them is the ſepulchre of Seth, the ſecond of Hermes (or Enoch), and the third of Sabi, from whom this ſect ſay they are denominated: it is alſo ſaid, they go in pilgrimage thither, and ſacrifice at them a cock and a black calf, and offer up incenſe [o]. But the general opinion is, that they were built by Saurid before the flood; and the Copts mention an inſcription engraven on them to this effect. I Saurid, the king built the pyramids in ſuch and ſuch a time, and finiſhed them in ſix years: he that comes after me, and ſays he is equal to me, let him deſtroy them in ſix hundred years; and yet it is known, that it is eaſier to pluck down than to build; and when I had finiſhed them I covered them with ſattin, and let him cover them with mats [p].

As the antients have omitted ſpeaking of ſeveral pyramids ſtill remaining in the Libyan deſert, ſo have they on the other hand mentioned the names and founders of ſome others, not much inferior to theſe three in magnitude, which have been long ſince ruined and defaced by time. Herodotus ſays, there was one of forty fathoms, or two hundred and forty feet, which ſtood at the end of the labyrinth, with large figures of animals in ſculpture, and a ſubterraneous paſſage to it [q]. This ſeems to be that pyramid wherein Strabo tells us Imandes, or, as Diodorus names him, Oſymanduas, was buried [r], and therefore probably built by him; though he differs from Herodotus as to the dimenſions, making each ſide of it to be four hundred feet, and the height as much [s]. Pliny, who agrees with Herodotus in this laſt particular, mentions ſeveral pyramids built near the labyrinth, but, if his expreſſion [t] be not miſtaken, deſcribes them to be ſexangular. Mœris, who lived after Oſymanduas, but long before Cheops, alſo built two pyramids, one for himſelf and the other for his wife, in the midſt of a lake which he dug, and which we ſhall take notice of by and by. Theſe pyramids were each a furlong in height, and ſtood one half above the water, and the other half under the water; and on the top of each there was placed a marble ſtatue, or coloſſus, ſitting on a throne [u]. It is ſaid, that Cheops, having exhauſted his treaſures in building the firſt and largeſt pyramid, proſtituted his own daughter, commanding her to get as much money as ſhe could; and that ſhe, at the ſame time ſhe obeyed her father, contrived to leave a monument of herſelf alſo, and aſked every one that came to her to give her a ſtone towards the ſtructure ſhe deſigned: by which means ſhe built a pyramid which ſtood in the midſt of the three, within view of the great pyramid, and extended to the length of a plethron and a half (or about one hundred and fifty foot) on every ſide of the baſis [x]. This ſtory has ſome reſemblance to that of Rhodopis above-mentioned, and might perhaps have given occaſion to it. After all theſe, Aſychis, the ſucceſſor of Mycerinus, built a pyramid of brick, with this inſcription cut in ſtone: Compare me not with the pyramids of ſtone, for I as far excel them as Jupiter does the other gods: for, ſtriking the bottom of the lake with long poles, and gathering the mud which ſtuck to them, thereof they made bricks, and formed me in that manner [y]. Diodorus mentions three other pyramids, each ſide of which contained two hundred feet, and ſays, that Chemmis, Cephren, and Mycerinus were reputed to have erected them for their wives [z]. Theſe likewiſe are not now to be ſeen, unleſs they ſhould be ſome of thoſe in the deſert, which well anſwer the meaſure aſſigned by Diodorus; but if thoſe princes built them for their queens, it may be wondered why they placed them ſo remote from their own ſepulchres, or at ſuch large and unequal diſtances of ſeveral miles from one another [a].

[o] MERAT ALZEMAN. apud Greaves, ubi infr. Vid. KIRCH. Oedip. Vol. I. p. 74. [p] EBN ABDIAL HOKM. [q] HERODOT. l. 2. [r] DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p. 44. [s] STRABO. l. 17. [t] Senas radicum oras obtinentes. PLIN. l. 36. c. 13. [u] HEROD. & DIOD. ubi ſupr.

The time when the pyramids were built.

Since it is uncertain who were the founders of the pyramids that are now ſtanding, it would be in vain to endeavour to determine the time when they were built. The ages of the ſeveral princes to whom they have been attributed, will beſt appear when we diſcourſe of the Egyptian chronology: in the mean time we ſhall obſerve, that the leaſt antiquity which can be allowed the ſtructures, ſeems to be near three thouſand years; ſince Herodotus, who lived two thouſand two hundred years ago, was able to find ſo little ſatisfaction in his enquiries after them; and Diodorus who lived before the birth of our Saviour, ſuppoſes the great pyramid to have been built at leaſt one thouſand years before his time [b].

The end for which they were erected.

Not to mention a ſecond time the improbability of their conjecture, who imagine theſe buildings were deſigned for granaries, it is the conſtant opinion of moſt authors who have wrote on this ſubject, that they were intended for ſepulchres and monuments of the dead. Diodorus expreſly tells us, that [x] Herod. ubi ſupr. [y] Idem. ib. [z] Diod. Sic. ubi ſupr. [a] Greaves Deſcr. of the pyramids, p. 113. [b] Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 57.

Chemmis

Chemmis and Cephren deſigned thoſe built by them for their ſepulchres, though it happened that neither of them were buried in them[c]; and Strabo judges all thoſe near Memphis to have been royal ſepulchres[d]: to which the writings of the Arabs are conſonant, as has been obſerved above. And if none of theſe authorities were extant, the tomb, which ſtands at this day in the firſt pyramid, puts it out of controverſy.

WHY the Egyptian kings ſhould have been at ſo vaſt an expence in building of theſe pyramids, is an enquiry of a higher nature. Ariſtotle makes them to have been the works of tyranny[e]: and Pliny conjectures, that they built them partly out of oſtentation and partly out of ſtate policy, to divert the people, by this employment, from mutinies and rebellions[f]. But the true reaſon depends on higher conſiderations, and ſprang from the theology of the Egyptians; who not only believed the reſurrection, but that as long as the body endured, ſo long the ſoul continued with it; which laſt was alſo the opinion of the Stoics[g]. And hence it was, that this nation took that exceſſive care to preſerve the corps from corruption, and were at ſo great coſts in raiſing monuments for them, as will be ſpecified hereafter.

THE reaſon why they frequently made uſe of the pyramidal figure for theſe monuments (for they were not always of that ſhape), to omit ſeveral philoſophical fancies of little ſolidity[h], ſeems to have been, becauſe it is the moſt permanent form of ſtructure; for by reaſon of the gradual contracting and leſſening of it at the top, it is neither overpreſſed with its own weight, nor is ſubject to the ſinking in of rain, as other buildings: or elſe they might thereby intend to repreſent ſome of their gods; pyramids, and obeliſks, which are but a leſſer ſort of pyramids being both by them and other heathens, antiently made uſe of and worſhipped as images of ſeveral deities[i].

THIS practice of the Egyptians of erecting pyramids, or columns of that ſhape, for ſepulchres, was alſo ſometimes, though not very frequently, imitated by other nations. That of Porſena king of Etruria, built by him near Cluſium in Italy, was accounted almoſt miraculous; though it was more to be admired for the number and contrivance of the pyramids, which were fourteen, than for any exceſſive magnitude[k].

[c] Idem, ibid. p. 58. [d] STRABO, l. 17. [e] ARISTOT. polit. l. 3. [f] PLIN. l. 36. c. 12. [g] Vid. SERVIUM in Virgil. Æn. 3. [h] Vid. Auctor. anonym. ad calcem Hieroglyph. PIERII. [i] Vid. GREAVES, ubi ſupr. p. 62. [k] Vid. eund. ibid. p. 64.

the tomb of C. Cæſtius, now ſtanding at Rome near the mons teſtaceus, or il Doliolo, is built after the model of thoſe of Egypt, but is much leſs [1].

Their deſcription.

THE dimenſions and deſcriptions of the three greateſt of the pyramids of Memphis have been given by ſeveral writers, both antient hiſtorians and modern travellers. They differ pretty much from one another as to the dimenſions. A countryman of our own, who meaſured them with great care, and wanted not ability to do it with the greateſt accuracy, ſeems to have been the moſt exact; for which reaſon we ſhall chiefly adhere to his obſervations.

The dimenſions of the firſt pyramid.

THE firſt and faireſt of theſe three pyramids is ſituated on a rocky hill, in the ſandy deſert of Lybia, about a quarter of a mile from the plains of Egypt; above which the rock riſes 100 feet or better, with a gentle and eaſy aſcent. Upon this advantageous riſe and ſolid foundation is the pyramid erected; the height of the ſituation adding to the beauty of the work, and the ſolidity of the rock affording it a ſtable ſupport. The north ſide, near the baſis, being meaſured by a radius of 10 feet in length, taking two ſeveral ſtations, was found by our author to be 693 Engliſh feet. The other ſides were examined by a line, for want of an even level, and a convenient diſtance to place the inſtruments. The altitude, if meaſured by its perpendicular, is 481 feet; but if it be taken as the pyramid aſcends inclining, then it is equal in reſpect of the lines ſubtending the ſeveral angles, to the latitude of the baſis (F). Whereby it appears, that though ſeveral of the antients have

[1] Vid. SOLIN. Polyhiſt. c. 45. AMMIAN. MARCEL. l. 23.

(F) According to Herodotus, each face of this pyramid contains 8 plethra, or 800 Grecian feet in length (1). Diodorus Siculus (who comes neareſt the truth) makes this dimenſion but 7 plethra, or 700 feet (2): and Strabo, leſs than a furlong (3); that is, leſs than 600 Grecian, or 625 Roman feet. Whereas Pliny equals it to 883 (4). As to the height, Herodotus ſays, it is equal to the breadth of one of its ſides; which is true, if taken for the inclining, and not the perpendicular altitude. By Strabo's computation, the height exceeds the breadth: but Diodorus rightly acknowledges it to be ſomething leſs. The altitude of this pyramid was taken by Thales the Mileſian; but his admeaſurement is not preſerved. The method propoſed by him to do it, muſt be very uncertain; for it was

(1) Herod. l. 2. (2) Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 57. (3) Strabo, l. 17. p. 1161. (4) Plin. l. 36. c. 12.

have exceſſively magnified the height of theſe pyramids, yet the biggeſt of them falls ſhort of the height of St. Paul's church in London: which from the ground to the top of the lanthorn only, is no leſs than 470 feet. If we imagine on the ſides of the baſis, which is perfectly ſquare, four equilateral triangles mutually inclining till they meet in a point (for ſo the top ſeems to thoſe who ſtand below) then we ſhall have a juſt idea of the true dimenſions and figure of this pyramid; the area of whoſe baſis contains 480,249 ſquare feet, or ſomething more than eleven Engliſh acres of ground; a proportion ſo monſtrous, that did not the antients atteſt as much, and ſome of them more (G), it might appear incredible.

was by obſerving the hour when the ſhadow of the body is equal to its height (5).

Of the modern travellers, Belon or rather Gyllius, (for the other, it is ſaid, was a plagiary, and publiſhed the obſervations of Gyllius in his own name) (6) makes the breadth of each ſide 324 paces; and the height 250 ſteps, each ſtep being 45 inches high (7). Marco Grimani, patriarch of Aquileia, and afterwards cardinal, computes it to be 270 paces broad, and as much in height (8). Prince Radzivil ſays, it is reported to be 300 cubits every way (9). Della Valle ſets down nothing preciſely, but acquieſces in the meaſures of Belon (10). Thevenot tells us it is 520 feet high, on a ſquare baſe of 682 feet (11). And Le Bruyn calculates the height to be 112 fathom; which, at 5 feet and a half to the fathom, is 616 feet: and the breadth 300 paces, or 128 fathom; that is, according to the ſame proportion, 704 feet 12). Wanſleb ſays, the ſides of the pyramids are not equal; it being viſible in the largeſt, and ſo in the others, that the north ſide is longer than that which ſtretches from eaſt to weſt; (which expreſſion perhaps the reader may underſtand, but we do not): the dimenſions he gives us, are thoſe of Thevenot (13). The Arab writers make the perpendicular height 317 cubits, and the breadth of each ſide 460 (14).

(G) The area, according to Herodotus, muſt be 640,000; and according to Diodorus 490,000 ſquare feet. Pliny aſſigns the baſis to be but eight Roman jugera; which is probably a miſtake of the tranſcriber; for the ſquare of the ſide, by his admeaſurement, muſt be no leſs than 779,689 Roman feet, almoſt equal to 28 jugera (15).

(5) Plin. ibid. Vid. Diog. Laert. in vita Thaletis. (6) Vid. Thuan. Hiſt. l. 16. (7) Belon. obſerv. l. 2. c. 44. (8) Apud Kircher Oedip. Vol. III. p 204. (9) Radzivil. Jeroſol. peregr. p. 161. (10) Della Valle Lett. 11. p. 359. (11) Theven. Voy. l 1. c. 5. (12) Le Bruyn. Voy. (13) Wanſleb, apud Ray, Collect. of travels, Vol. II. p. 137, 138. (14) Vid. Kircher. ubi ſupr. p. 300. (15) Vid. Plin l. 36. c. 12.

THE

The outſide of the pyramid.

The aſcent to the top of the pyramid is contrived by degrees, or ſteps, the lowermoſt of which is near four feet in height, and three in breadth; and running about the pyramid in a level, made a narrow walk, when the ſtones were entire, on every ſide. The ſecond degree is like the firſt, benching in near three feet. In the ſame manner is the third row placed on the ſecond; and the reſt in order, like ſo many ſtairs, riſing one above another to the top; which ends not in a point, as mathematical pyramids do, but in a little flat, or ſquare of 13.280 Engliſh feet broad, and conſiſting of nine ſtones, beſides two which are wanting at the corners (H). This pyramid, by reaſon of the ſtones being worn by the weather, cannot be conveniently aſcended, except on the ſouth ſide, or at the north-eaſt angle. The ſteps are made of maſſy and poliſhed ſtones (ſaid to have been hewn out of the Arabian mountains [m], which bound the upper Egypt on the eaſt), and are ſo vaſt, that the breadth and depth of every ſtep is one ſingle ſtone. Herodotus makes the leaſt ſtone to be 30 feet [n]; and this may be granted in ſome, but not in all, unleſs his words be underſtood of cubical feet; which dimenſion, or a greater in the exterior ones, may, without difficulty, be admitted. It is alſo to be obſerved, that the ſteps

[m] Herod. & Diod. ubi ſupr. [n] Herod. ubi ſup. Pomp. Mela. l. 1. c. 9.

(H) Herodotus gives no dimenſions of this flat; Diodorus ſays, it is 9 feet (2); but Pliny ſeems to make it 25 feet, if we rightly underſtand the paſſage of that author; for Hardouin is ſurely miſtaken, in ſuppoſing him to mean that the pyramid was 15,000 feet high (3). Belon ſays, the diameter is 2 paces (4), Radzivil 10 cubits (5), and Thevenot about 16 feet and 2 thirds (6). They differ alſo in the number of ſtones which cover it; one will have it a ſingle ſtone (7); another counts 3 (8); and a third 11 or 12 (9).

On this platform Proclus ſuppoſed the Egyptian prieſts made their aſtronomical obſervations (10); but it is far from being probable, that theſe ſtructures were deſigned for obſervatories. And it is ſcarce to be conceived, that the prieſts would take the pains to aſcend ſo high, when they might make the ſame obſervations with more eaſe, and as much certainty below; having as free and open a proſpect of the heavens, and over the plains of Egypt, from the rock itſelf, as from the tops of the pyramids (11).

(2) Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 57. (3) Plin. ubi ſupr. Vid. Hardouin. in loc. (4) Belon, ubi ſupr. (5) Radziv. Ieroſ. peregr. p. 162. (6) Thev. ubi ſupr. (7) Voy. de Villamont. (8) Sandys Trav. p. 128. 4 Edit. (9) Theven. ubi ſupr. (10) Procl. in Tim. (11) Greaves ubi ſupr. p. 73. Vid. Cicero. de divinat. l 1.

are

are not all of equal depth; for ſome are near four feet, and others want of three, diminiſhing the higher one aſcends: and the breadth of them is proportionable to their depth; ſo that a right line, extended from the baſis to the top, will equally touch the outward angle of every degree. The number of theſe ſteps is not mentioned by any of the antients; but modern travellers differ very much in their computation (I). Our author and two others counted them very carefully, and found them to be 207; though one of them in deſcending reckoned 208.

HENCE it may be conſidered, how far we may credit what ſome ſay, viz. that an arrow ſhot from the top of this pyramid cannot fly beyond the baſis, but will fall on ſome of the ſteps; it being certain, that an indifferent arm can eaſily ſhoot an arrrow much farther than one half of the breadth of this pyramid: it is confeſſed, however, that a man, unleſs he be very ſtrong, cannot throw a ſtone from the top, ſo as to make it fall beyond the ſteps [o]. Some of the antients have reported, that theſe pyramids caſt no ſhadow [p]; which if taken ſtrictly, muſt be alſo a miſtake: it is true, for almoſt three quarters of the year they caſt no ſhadow at noon; but in winter they certainly do.

As to the inſide of this pyramid, the antients are altogether ſilent; except only that Herodotus ſays, there were ſubterraneous vaults built within the hill on which it ſtands; and that the founder of it conveyed the water of the Nile thither by a trench, and formed a little iſland in the midſt of the water, deſigning to place his ſepulchre on that ground [q]. Strabo alſo mentions an oblique entrance into this pyramid, to be ſeen on removing a ſtone which covered it [r]; and Pliny takes notice of a well of 86 cubits in depth, into which he ſuppoſes the water of the Nile was brought by ſome ſecret aqueduct [s]. What the Arabs relate of the inner parts of theſe buildings, is no better than a romance; for which reaſon we The inſide of it.

[o] LE BRUYN. Voy. Yet ſee LUCAS, T. I. p. 45. [p] SOLIN. Polyhiſt. c. 45. AUSON. Idyll 3. AMM. MARCELL. l. 22. CASSIODOR. var. 7. form. 15. [q] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [r] STRABO, ubi ſupr. [s] PLIN. ubi ſupr.

(I) Belon counts 250, Sandys 255, Lewenſtein 260, Helfricus 230, Grimani and Le Bruyn 210, Lucas 243, and Thevenot 208 (12). This laſt author obſerves, it is very difficult to count them exactly; not only becauſe a man may miſcount, but becauſe ſeveral of the lower ſteps are, in ſome places, covered with ſand.

(12) See the places quoted above, and Lucas Voy. T. I. p. 45.

ſhall

ſhall proceed to thoſe accounts that may be better depended on.

The entrance into the pyramid is by a ſquare narrow paſſage, which opens in the midſt of the north ſide on the 16th ſtep, or aſcending 38 feet (K), on an artificial bank of earth. The ſtone that is over it is very big, being near 12 feet long, and above 8 feet wide. This entry goes declining with an angle of 26 degrees, and is in breadth exactly 3.463 Engliſh feet, and in length 92 feet and an half. The ſtructure of it has been the labour of an exquiſite hand, as appears by the ſmoothneſs and evenneſs of the work, and cloſe knitting of the joints, a property long ſince obſerved by Diodorus to have run through the whole fabric of this pyramid. At the end of this paſſage there is another like the former, but goes a little riſing: at the meeting of theſe two paſſages, the one deſcending, and the other aſcending, the lowermoſt ſtone of the roof, perpendicular to it, forms a ſharp ridge, between which and the ſand there is ſometimes not a foot ſpace to paſs through; ſo that a man muſt ſlide on his belly cloſe to the ground, and yet grate his back againſt the above-mentioned ſtone, unleſs he be very ſlender. However this difficulty is occaſioned chiefly by the ſand which the wind drives into this place; for if the paſſage be cleared, it is of the ſame dimenſions there as at the entrance. There being no window, or other opening in this pyramid to admit the light, it may eaſily be conceived, that thoſe who would view the inſide muſt carry lights with them.

Having paſſed this ſtreight, on the right hand there is an ugly broken hole of about 89 feet in length, the height and breadth various, and not worthy conſideration: whether this part be decayed by time, or has been dug away for curioſity, or hopes of diſcovering ſome hidden treaſure, is uncertain. On the left hand, adjoining to the narrow entrance, climbing up a ſteep and maſſy ſtone, 8 or 9 feet in height, one enters on the lower end of the firſt gallery; the pavement of which riſes with a gentle acclivity, conſiſting of ſmooth poliſhed marble, and where not ſmeared with duſt and filth, appearing of a white and alabaſter colour; the ſides and roof of unpoliſhed ſtone, not ſo hard and compact as that of the pavement; the breadth of this gallery is almoſt 5 feet, the height about as much, and the length 110 feet. At the end of it

(K) In the following deſcription we have only given the meaſures of Greaves, though other travellers vary both from him and one another therein. But we did not think thoſe variations conſiderable enough to be particularly ſet down.

there

there are two paſſages, one low and horizontal, or level with the ground, and the other high and riſing like the former. At the entry of the lower paſſage, on the right hand, is the well mentioned by Pliny, which is circular, and a little above 3 foot diameter: the ſides are lined with white marble, and the deſcent is by fixing the hands and feet in little open ſpaces cut in the ſides within, oppoſite and anſwering to one another in a perpendicular; which is the contrivance for deſcending into moſt of the wells and ciſterns at Alexandria. This well might lead to the vault above-mentioned; but it is almoſt now ſtopped up with rubbiſh, and not above 20 feet deep.

LEAVING the well, and going ſtrait on the diſtance of 15 feet, one enters another paſſage opening againſt the former, and of the ſame dimenſions, the ſtones of which are very maſſy, and exquiſitely joined. This paſſage runs in a level 110 feet, and leads to an arched vault, or chamber, ſtanding due eaſt and weſt, of a grave-like ſmell, and half full of rubbiſh; its length not quite 20 feet, and the breadth about 17, and the height leſs than 15: the walls are entire, and plaiſtered over with lime; the roof is covered with large ſmooth ſtones, not lying flat, but ſhelving, and meeting above in an angle. On the eaſt ſide of this room, in the middle of it, Greaves ſays, there ſeems to have been a paſſage leading to ſome other place, but neither Thevenot, nor Le Bruyn could diſcover any ſuch.

RETURNING back through the narrow horizontal paſſage, you climb over it, and enter into the other, or ſecond gallery, on the left, divided from the firſt gallery by the wall, in which is the entrance to the laſt-mentioned paſſage. This ſecond gallery is a very ſtately piece of work, and not inferior, either in curioſity of art, or richneſs of materials, to the moſt ſumptuous and magnificent buildings: it riſes with an angle of 26 degrees, and is in length 154 feet from the well below; but if meaſured on the pavement, ſomewhat leſs, by reaſon of a little vacuity of about 15 feet, before deſcribed, between the well and the ſquare hole: the height of it is 26 feet, and the breadth 6.87 feet, of which one half is to be allowed for the way in the midſt, there being a ſtone bench on each ſide of the wall, of one foot and $\frac{717}{1000}$ in breadth, and as much in depth. On the top of theſe benches, near the angle where they cloſe with the wall, are little ſpaces, cut in right-angled parallel figures, ſet in each ſide oppoſite to one another; intended, no queſtion, for ſome other end than ornament. The ſtone of which this gallery is built, is a white and poliſhed marble, very evenly cut in large tables; and the joints are ſo cloſe, that they are ſcarce diſcernable by a curious eye: but what adds grace to the whole ſtructure, though it makes the paſſage the more ſlippery and difficult, is the acclivity and riſing of the aſcent. However, the going up is not a little facilitated by certain holes made in the floor, about ſix hands breadth from one another, into which a man may ſet his feet, while he holds by the bench with one hand. In the ranging of the marble tables, in both the ſide-walls, there is one piece of architecture very graceful; and that is, that all the courſes, which are but ſeven, do ſet and flag over one another about 3 inches, the bottom of the upper courſe overſetting the higher part of the next below it, in order as they deſcend.

HAVING paſſed this admirable gallery, one enters another ſquare hole, of the ſame dimenſions with the former, which leads into two ſmall antichambers, or cloſets, lined with a rich and ſpeckled kind of Thebaic marble. The firſt of theſe is almoſt equal to the ſecond, which is of an oblong figure, one ſide containing 7 feet, and the other 3 and a half: the height is ten feet, and the floor level. On the eaſt and weſt ſides, within 2 feet and a half of the top, which is ſomewhat larger than the bottom, are three ſemicircular cavities, or little ſeats.

THE inner antichamber is ſeparated from the former by a ſtone of red ſpeckled marble, which hangs in two mortices (like the leaf of a ſluice) between two walls, more than 3 feet above the pavement, and wanting two of the roof. From this ſecond cloſet you enter another ſquare hole, over which are five lines cut parallel and perpendicular; beſides which, no other ſculptures, or engravings, are obſerved in the whole pyramid (L). This ſquare paſſage is of the ſame wideneſs as the reſt, and in length near 9 feet, being all of Thebaic marble moſt exquiſitely cut, and landing you at the north end of a very ſumptuous and well proportioned room. The diſtance from the end of the ſecond gallery to this entry, running upon the ſame level, is 24 feet.

THIS magnificent and ſpacious chamber, in which art may ſeem to have contended with nature, the curious work being not inferior to the rich materials, ſtands, as it were, in the heart and centre of the pyramid, equidiſtant from all

(L) It may therefore be juſtly wondered, whence the Arabians borrowed thoſe vain traditions, that all ſciences are inſcribed within the pyramids in hieroglyphics; and alſo upon what authority Cornelius (or rather Ælius) Gallus is ſaid to have therein ingraven his victories (1).

(1) Xiphil. in Cæſ. Aug.

the

2

the ſides, and almoſt in the midſt between the baſis and the top. The floor, the ſides, and the roof of it are all made of vaſt and exquiſite tables of Thebaic marble, which, if they were not obſcured by the ſteam of torches, would appear gliſtering and ſhining. From the top of it deſcending to the bottom, there are about ſix ranges of ſtone, all which being reſpectively ſized to an equal height, very gracefully in one and the ſame altitude run round the room. The ſtones which cover this chamber are of a ſtupendous length, like ſo many huge beams lying flat and traverſing the room, and withal ſupporting that infinite maſs and weight of the pyramid above. Of theſe there are nine which cover the roof; two of them are leſs by half in breadth than the reſt, the one at the eaſt end, and the other at the weſt. The length of the chamber on the ſouth ſide, moſt accurately taken at the joint, or line, where the firſt and ſecond row of ſtones meet, is 34.38 Engliſh feet; the breadth of the weſt ſide, at the joint or line, where the firſt and ſecond row of ſtones meet, is 1.719 feet; and the height 19 feet and a half.

WITHIN this glorious room ſtands the monument of Cheops, or Chemmis, of one piece of marble, hollow within, uncovered at the top, and ſounding like a bell; which laſt particular is mentioned not as a rarity, but becauſe ſome authors have taken notice of it as ſuch. Some write, that the body has been removed hence; but it has been already obſerved, that the founder was not buried in it. This monument is of the ſame kind of ſtone with which the whole room is lined, being a ſpeckled marble, with black, white, and red ſpots, as it were, equally mixed, which ſome call Thebaic marble; but Mr. Greaves rather conceives it to be that ſort of porphyry which Pliny calls Leucoſticos, of which there were, and ſtill are, an infinite number of columns in Egypt; though Burretini, who accompanied him, imagined this kind of marble came from mount Sinai, where he affirmed the rocks to be of the ſame colours, and that he had ſeen among them a great column of the ſame marble left imperfect, almoſt as big as that called Pompey's pillar, near Alexandria.

THE figure of the tomb is like an altar, or two cubes finely ſet together; it is cut ſmooth and plain, without any ſculpture, or engraving. The outward ſuperficies is in length 7 feet 3 inches and a half, and in depth 3 feet 3 inches and 3 quarters. The hollow inſide is in length on the weſt ſide 6.488 feet in breadth at the north end 2.218 feet, and in depth 2.860 feet. As this monument could not have been brought hither through the above-mentioned narrow paſſages, it is ſuppoſed to have been raiſed and placed there before the roof of the chamber was closed. It stands exactly in the meridian, or due north and south, and as it were equidistant from all sides of the chamber, except the east, from whence it is doubly remoter than from the west. Under it there is a little hollow space dug away, and a large stone in the pavement removed at the angle next adjoining to it, which Sandys imagined to be a passage into some other apartment, but more probably done in hopes of finding some treasure hidden there; it being a superstitious prodigality practised by the antients, and continued to this day in the East-Indies, to conceal money in their sepulchres. In the south and north sides of the chamber there are two inlets opposite to one another, seven tenths of a foot broad, four tenths of a foot deep, evenly cut, and running in a strait line 6 feet and farther into the thickness of the wall: that on the south side is larger and somewhat round, not so long as the former, and by the blackness within seems to have been made use of for setting of lamps.

roof

This is all that is to be seen within this first pyramid; but there is one thing more to be observed, and that is a very surprizing echo, which Plutarch takes notice of, and says, that it answers four or five times [t]; but a late traveller assures us, that it repeats no less than ten or twelve times very distinctly [u]. If we consider the narrow entrance of the pyramid, and the length of the two galleries, which all lie as it were in one continued line, and leading to the middle of the pyramid, we need not be at a loss to account for this effect; for the sound being shut in, and carried in those smooth passages, as in so many pipes, or trunks, finding no issue out, reflects on itself, and causes a circulation of the air, which by degrees vanishes as the motion ceases [w].

The second pyramid. Scarce the flight of an arrow distant from the first, towards the south, stands the second pyramid, of which, besides the miracle, both antient and modern writers have delivered very little. Herodotus says it falls short of the other in magnitude, he having measured them both, but he does not give the dimensions: he adds, that it has no subterraneous chambers, neither is the Nile conveyed into it by a channel, as into the former, but that it is of equal altitude [x]. Diodorus is somewhat more particular, and tells us, that for the architecture it is like the former, but much inferior to it in respect

[t] Plut. de placitis Philos. l. 4. c. 20. [u] Lucas, ubi supr. T. I. p. 43. [w] Vid. Greaves, ubi supr. p. 67.----101. Thevenot, part 1. c. 5. Le Bruyn. T. 2. Della Valle. Let. 11. p. 359, &c. [x] Herod. l. 2.

reſpect of magnitude; each ſide of the baſis containing a ſtadium, or 600 Grecian feet, in length [y]; ſo that, by his computation, each ſide ſhould want 100 Grecian feet of the former pyramid. Pliny makes the difference to be greater by 46 feet [z]. Moſt of the modern travellers do alſo agree this pyramid to be leſs than the other [a]. Thevenot makes it but 631 feet ſquare [b]. However, Strabo ſuppoſes theſe pyramids to be equal [c]; and Mr. Greaves, on the credit of a perſon who meaſured the ſecond with a line, aſſures us, the baſes of both are alike; and that the height taken by a deliberate conjecture (which it is eaſy to do by reaſon of the nearneſs of this and the former, and their ſtanding on the ſame plain) is not inferior to that of the firſt. This pyramid has no entrance, and is built of white ſtones, not near ſo vaſt as thoſe of the firſt; the ſides riſe not with degrees like that, but are ſmooth and equal; the whole fabric (except where it is oppoſed to the ſouth) ſeeming very entire, free from any deformed breaches [d].

The prieſts lodgings near it.

ON the north and weſt ſides of this ſecond pyramid are two very ſtately and elaborate pieces, about 30 feet in depth, and above 1400 in length, cut out of the rock in a perpendicular, and ſquared by the chiſſel; being deſigned, as is ſuppoſed, for lodgings of the Egyptian prieſts. They run parallel to the two ſides of the pyramid, at a convenient diſtance from it, and meeting in a right angle make a very fair proſpect. The entrance is by ſquare openings hewn out of the rock, much of the ſame ſize with the narrow paſſages of the firſt pyramid, each leading into a ſquare chamber, arched above with the natural rock. In moſt of them was a paſſage opening into ſome other apartments, but dark, and full of rubbiſh. On the north ſide without, there is a line engraven in ſacred Egyptian characters [e].

The third Pyramid.

THE third pyramid ſtands at the diſtance of about a furlong from the ſecond, on an advantageous riſing of the rock, whereby afar off it ſeems equal to the former, though the pile be much leſs and lower. Herodotus ſays it is 300 feet on every ſide (M), and to the middle built of Ethiopic marble [f].

Diodorus

[y] DIOD. SIC. l. 1. [z] PLIN. l. 36. p. 12. [a] RADZIVIL. p. 163. LUCAS, ubi ſupr. p. 46. SANDYS, p. 128. 4th Edit. [b] THEVEN. ubi ſupr. [c] STRABO, l. 17. [d] GREAVES, ubi ſupr. p. 103, &c. [e] Idem ibid. p. 106, &c. [f] HERODOT. l. 2.

(M) Yet he tells us that it wants but 20 feet on each ſide of the firſt pyramid, which muſt be a miſtake; unleſs we charge it rather Diodorus gives the same dimensions of the basis, and adds, that the walls were raised fifteen stories with black stone, like Thebaic marble, and the rest finished with such materials as the other pyramids are built with; that this piece of work, though it be exceeded by the two former in magnitude, yet for the structure, art, and magnificence of the marble, it far excels them; and that in the side, towards the north, the name of Mycerinus, the founder, is engraved[g] Pliny writes to the same effect, except only that he makes this pyramid 363 feet between the angles[h]. Belon tells us, that it is but a third part greater than that of C. Cæstius at Rome; and that it is still perfect, and no more decayed than if it had been newly built, consisting of a kind of Ethiopic marble called Basaltes, harder than iron itself[i]. The descriptions of others of the moderns concur in the same tale as to substance, only differing as to some circumstances; so that they all seem to have copied Herodotus, or one another, and, surfeited with the view of the two other pyramids, not to have been near this, since they so constantly agree in what is most evidently false; for they have mistaken both the quality of the stone, and the colour of the pyramid, the whole appearing to be of a clear and white stone, somewhat choicer and brighter than that in either of the two other pyramids: there are indeed the ruins of a pile of buildings on the east side of it, of a sad and dusky colour, which might be the occasion of the error. But Belon, and those who follow him, are more inexcusable in making this pyramid but a third part greater than that of Cæstius, which exactly measured, on that side which stands within the city, is compleatly 78 English feet in breadth, to which if we add a third part, the result will be 104, which should be equal to this Egyptian pyramid. An unpardonable oversight of no less than 200 feet in a very little more than 300. For so much besides the authority of Herodotus and Diodorus, Mr. Greaves takes the side of this pyramid to be, and the altitude to have much the same proportion. The name of Mycerinus is not now to be seen on it, the engraving having been defaced by time[k].

[g] Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 57. Vid. Strab. ubi supr. [h] Plin. ubi supr. [i] Belon. Observ. l. 2. c. 44. [k] Greaves, ubi supr. p. 108, &c.

on the copies, and instead of 20 read 500 feet. Mr. Littlebury, in his translation of Herodotus, supposes the meaning to be, that this pyramid was 20 feet lower than the former. As great a mistake as the other.

To

To the deſcriptions of theſe three pyramids we ſhall add that of a fourth, which ſtands near the mummies, and which we take to be that remarkable one mentioned above. This pyramid would fall nothing ſhort of the beauty of the firſt, if it had been finiſhed: it has 148 ſteps of large ſtones like the firſt pyramid; the platform of it is not even, the ſtones being ſet together without order, which ſhews, that it has not been finiſhed, and yet it is much more antient than the other; as is evident by the ſtones which are all worn out and crumbled into ſand. It is 643 feet ſquare, and has its entry at the fourth part of its height on the north ſide, as the former, being diſtant from the eaſt ſide 316 feet, and by conſequence 327 from the weſt. There is but one paſſage into it, 3 feet and a half broad, and 4 feet high, which reaching 267 feet downwards ends in a hall with a ſharp arched roof 25 feet and a half in length, and 11 in breadth. In the corner of the hall there is another paſſage, or gallery, parallel to the horizon, 3 feet ſquare within, and nine feet and a half long, which leads to another chamber 21 feet in length and 11 in breadth, with a very high arched roof alſo, having at the weſt end a ſquare window raiſed 24 feet and two thirds from the floor, by which one enters into a paſſage indifferent broad, and of a man's height, parallel to the horizon, and reaching in length 13 feet and 2 inches. There is a great room, or hall, at the end of this paſſage, with an arched roof, containing in length 26 feet 8 inches, and in breadth 24 feet and 1 inch: the floor of it is the natural rock, which on all ſides is rough and unequal, leaving only a little ſmooth and even ſpace in the middle encompaſſed round with the rock, and much lower than the entry into the room or the foundation of the wall [l].

A fourth pyramid.

IN what manner theſe wonderful ſtructures were erected, and by what contrivance the ſtones, eſpecially thoſe vaſt ones in the firſt, were raiſed to that height, has been the ſubject of much ſpeculation. Herodotus, whoſe expreſſions are not very clear, ſuppoſes, that when they had laid the firſt range, they raiſed other ſtones thither from the ground, by ſhort engines made of wood; that when the ſtone was lodged on this row, it was put into another engine ſtanding on the firſt ſtep, from whence it was drawn up to the ſecond row by another, there being as many engines as orders of ſtone; or elſe there might be but one engine, which they might remove as there was occaſion. He ſays alſo, that the higheſt parts were firſt finiſhed, and the reſt in order, but laſt of all thoſe that are loweſt and next the ground [m]. Diodorus imagines the work was erected by the help of mounds, which he ſays the Egyptians pretended were raiſed of ſalt and nitre, and that they were diſſolved and waſhed away by letting in the river [n]. With this writer Pliny agrees, adding, that others were of opinion that bridges were made of bricks, which the work being ended, were diſtributed into private houſes; conceiving that the Nile being much lower, could not come to waſh them away [o]. Greaves thinks it was done none of theſe ways; but that they firſt built a large tower in the midſt, reaching to the top; to the ſides of which he conceives the reſt of the building to have been applied, piece after piece, like ſo many buttreſſes, ſtill leſſening in height, till at laſt they came to the lowermoſt degree. A difficult piece of building taken in the eaſieſt projection.

How the pyramids were built.

[l] THEVENOT, Voy. part 1. c. 6. [m] HEROD. l. 2.

If what the antients deliver be true, that the ſtones made uſe of in the building of theſe pyramids, were fetched either from the quarries in the Arabian Mountains, Thebaïs, or Ethiopia, we need not be ſurprized when we are told, that Cheops employed 100,000 men in this labour, 10,000 every three months [p]. But ſome modern travellers, obſerving that theſe ſtructures are built not with marble, but with a white ſandy ſtone, and very hard, rather believe it was dug out of the rock whereon they ſtand [q]. We think a middle opinion the moſt probable; that the aforeſaid rock indeed ſupplied them with great part of the materials, but that the marble of the inner rooms and paſſages was brought thither from ſome other place. Wanſleb imagines the greateſt pyramid to be nothing but a rock cut in that ſhape, and covered with a wall of ſtone [r]; a piece of work, to our apprehenſion, full as difficult as erecting a like maſs of ſtones from the quarry.

Diodorus makes the number of men employed in building the firſt pyramid 360,000, and Pliny 366,000. It is agreed, that twenty years were ſpent in the work: and Herodotus adds, that there was in his time an inſcription on the pyramid, though it be ſince worn out, declaring, how much was expended in radiſhes, onions, and garlick for the workmen, which his interpreter told him, amounted to no leſs than 1600 talents of ſilver, or about 413,333 l. 6 s. 8 d. ſterling [s].

Some late writers think, there is no beauty in theſe ſtructures, except their prodigious ſize [t], though they might formerly be reckoned among the wonders of the world, when they were, as is ſuppoſed, caſed with marble, before the later kings of Egypt took it away to adorn their palaces [u]; which is a piece of hiſtory we cannot warrant. However a very intelligent traveller judges them, in their preſent condition, worthy the magnificence of the old Egyptian kings; adding, that no prince now in the world (without diſparagement to any) is able to raiſe ſuch a pile of building [w]: and antient writers ſay, that they were magnificent beyond expreſſion, and ſingly comparable to many of the greateſt ſtructures in Greece conſidered together; that they exceeded all other works in Egypt, not only in the maſſineſs of the building, and in the expence, but alſo in the induſtry and ſkill of the workmen; the Egyptians themſelves, thinking, very juſtly, that the architects were more to be admired than the kings who were at the expence; for the former erected them by their own abilities and contrivance, the latter by their wealth received by inheritance, and the labours of others [x].

[n] Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 57. [o] Plin. ubi ſupr. [p] Herod. l. 2. [q] Thevenot, part 1. c. 5. Wansleb, ubi ſupr. [r] Wansleb, ibid. [s] Vid. Herod. Diodor. & Plin. ubi ſupr. [t] Figueroa, Emb. di Perſia. Sicard, Mem. des Miſſ. T. II. p. 281, merly

ONE thing more remarkable in the firſt pyramid is, that the ſides of it do ſtand exactly facing the four quarters of the world, and conſequently mark the true meridian of the place (N); which preciſe poſition could not well have been owing to chance, but was in all probability the effect of art and deſign; and that it was really ſo, is confirmed by the ſame poſition of the tomb within. A permanent proof of the early progreſs made by the Egyptians in aſtronomy [y].

HERODOTUS mentions a bridge near this pyramid, and little leſs conſiderable than the pyramid itſelf: but there are now no remains of it to be ſeen. It was 40 ſtadia, or about 5 Miles in length, 60 feet broad, and in the higheſt

[u] SICARD, ibid. [w] THEVENOT, ubi ſupr. [x] HEROD & DIODOR. ubi ſupr. [y] Vid. FONTENELLE, Elog. de Mr. DE CHAZELLES, p. 91. LUCAS, Tom. I. p. 366.

(N) Mr. de Chazelles, who made this obſervation, and was on the ſpot in the year 1693, being an excellent mathematician, we ſhall here ſet down the dimenſions of this pyramid as taken by him, and the rather becauſe they come the neareſt to thoſe of Mr. Greaves. The ſide of the baſe is, according to this gentleman, 110 toiſes, which is, as we compute, 704,880 Engliſh feet; and the perpendicular height 77 toiſes and 3 quarters, or 498,222 Engliſh feet (1).

(1) Vid. Rollin. Hiſt. anc. T. I. p. 20.

part 80 feet in altitude; all of polished stones, and carved with the figures of various animals. This was the work of ten years [z].

Other pyramids.

HAVING been so diffusive in the description of the pyramids of Memphis, we may be excused taking notice of those which are to be seen in other parts of Egypt; observing only that they are not all of the same form, some being round and almost like a sugar-loaf, and others rising with a lesser inclination, and not so pointed at the top [a]. Lucas assures us, that there are no less than twelve pyramids near the cataracts, and two in al Feyyûm, nothing inferior to those of al Kâhira [b].

Of the labyrinth.

THE Egyptian labyrinth, from whence Dædalus is supposed to have taken the model of that which he afterwards built in Crete, though he therein imitated but the hundredth part of it [c], was a celebrated structure; and yet Herodotus, who saw it, says, that it far surpassed the report of fame, being, in his judgment, even more admirable than the pyramids [d]. As there were at least 3 buildings of this kind, antient writers, not distinguishing them, generally speak but of one, and consequently with great confusion and disagreement.

THEY tell us, it stood in the Heracleotic nome, near the city of Crocodiles or Arsinoe, a little above the lake Mœris [e]. Pliny says, it was built by Petesuccus, or Tithoes, one of the demigods, 4600 years before his time; but that Demoteles would have it to be the palace of Motherudes; Lyceas the sepulchre of Mœris; and others the temple of the sun [f]. It is recorded by Manetho, that Lachares, or Labares, the successor of Sesostris, provided a labyrinth for his monument [g]. And Diodorus writes, that Mendes, or Marus, also built one for the same purpose, which was not so considerable on account of its magnitude, as for the artificial contrivance of it [h]: but this seems to be a different building from that described by him a little after, which is in all probability the same with the labyrinth of Herodotus; for they both agree in the situation, that it was the work of twelve kings, among whom Egypt was at one time divided; and that they built it at their common charge, as a public monument of their reign, and were buried there [i].

[z] HEROD. ubi sup. [a] LUCAS Voy. T. II. p. 10. [b] Idem, T. I. p. 99, and II. p 75. [c] DIODOR. SIC. l. 1. p. 55. [d] HEROD. l. 2. [e] Idem. ibid. PLIN. l. 36. c. 13. [f] PLIN. ibid. [g] SYNCELL. Chronog. p. 59, 60. [h] DIOD. ubi supr. [i] Idem. ibid. p. 59. HEROD. ubi supr.

THIS

THIS ſtructure ſeems to have been deſigned as a pantheon, or univerſal temple of all the Egyptian deities, which were ſeparately worſhipped in the provinces. It was alſo the place of the general aſſembly of the magiſtracy of the whole nation, thoſe of all the provinces, or nomes, meeting here to feaſt and ſacrifice, and to judge cauſes of great conſequence [k]. And for this reaſon every nome had a hall, or palace, appropriate to it; the whole edifice containing, according to Herodotus, twelve; Egypt being then divided into ſo many kingdoms. But Pliny makes the number of theſe palaces ſixteen, and Strabo, as it ſeems, twenty ſeven [l]. The firſt of theſe writers tells us, that the halls were vaulted, and had an equal number of doors oppoſite to one another, ſix opening to the north, and ſix to the ſouth, all encompaſſed by the ſame wall; that there were three thouſand chambers in this edifice, fifteen hundred in the upper part, and as many under ground; and that he viewed every room in the upper part, but was not permitted, by thoſe who kept the palace to go into the ſubterraneous part, becauſe the ſepulchres of the holy crocodiles, and of the kings who built the labyrinth were there. He reports, that what he ſaw ſeemed to ſurpaſs the art of man: ſo many ways out by various paſſages, and infinite returns, afforded a thouſand occaſions of wonder, as he paſſed from a ſpacious hall to a chamber; from thence to a private cabinet; then again into other paſſages out of the cabinets, and out of the chambers into the more ſpacious rooms. All the roofs and walls within were incruſted with marble; but the walls farther adorned with figures of ſculpture. The halls were ſurrounded with pillars of white ſtone finely poliſhed; and at the angle, where the labyrinth ends, ſtood the pyramid formerly mentioned [m], which Strabo will have to be the ſepulchre of the prince who built the labyrinth [n].

To this deſcription of Herodotus others add, that it ſtood in the midſt of an immenſe ſquare, ſurrounded with buildings at a great diſtance; that the porch was of Parian marble, and all the other pillars of marble of Syene; that within it were the temples of their ſeveral deities, and galleries, to which one aſcended by 90 ſteps, adorned with many columns of porphyry, images of their gods, and ſtatues of their kings, of monſtrous ſize; that the whole edifice conſiſted of ſtone, the floors being laid with vaſt tables, and the roof appearing like a field of ſtone; that the paſſages met, and croſſed each other with ſo much intricacy, that it was impoſſible for a ſtranger to find his way, either in or out, without a guide; and that ſeveral of the apartments were ſo contrived, that on opening of the doors, there was heard within a terrible noiſe of thunder [o].

[k] STRABO, l. 17. p. 1165. [l] See the places above quoted.
[m] HEROD. ubi ſupr. See before, p. 405. [n] STRABO, ubi ſup.

We ſhall ſubjoin part of the deſcription given by Diodorus of a fabric, which though he does not call it a labyrinth, but a ſepulchre, yet appears to be the ſame we are now ſpeaking of. He ſays it was of a ſquare form, each ſide being a furlong in length, built of moſt beautiful ſtone, the ſculpture and other work of which poſterity could not exceed; that when one had paſſed the outer encloſure, a building preſented itſelf to view, ſurrounded by a piazza, every ſide conſiſting of 400 pillars; and that it contained the enſigns, or memorials of the country of each king; and was, in all reſpects, a work ſo ſumptuous, and of ſuch vaſt dimenſions, that if the twelve princes who began it, had not been dethroned before it was finiſhed, the magnificence of it could never have been ſurpaſſed [p]. Whence it ſeems, that Pſammitichus, one of the twelve, who expelling his aſſociates, made himſelf maſter of all Egypt, finiſhed the deſign, but not with a grandeur anſwerable to the reſt of the ſtructure; though Mela attributes the glory of the whole to that king [q].

The ſolidity of this wonderful building was ſuch, that it withſtood for many ages not only the rage of time, but that of the inhabitants of Heracleopolis, who, worſhipping the ichneumon, the mortal enemy of the crocodile, which was the peculiar deity of Arſinoe, bore an irreconcileable hatred to the labyrinth, which ſerved alſo for a ſepulchre to the ſacred crocodiles, and therefore aſſiſted to demoliſh it. Pliny ſays, it was remaining in his days, and that about 500 years before Alexander, Circumnon, eunuch to king Nectanebis, was reported to have beſtowed ſome ſmall reparations on it, ſupporting the building with beams of Acacia, or the Egyptian thorn boiled in oil, while the arches of ſquare ſtone were erecting [r].

Though the Arabs have alſo, ſince the days of Pliny, helped to ruin this ſtructure, yet a conſiderable part of it is ſtill ſtanding almoſt at the ſouth end of the lake Mœris, a little to the eaſt, and about ten leagues from the ruins of Arſinoe. The people of the country call it the palace of Charon, of whom we ſhall ſay ſomething by and by.

[o] Plin. & Strabo, ubi ſupr.. [p] Diod. Sic. p. 59, 60. [q] Pomp. Mela. l. 1. c. 9. [r] Plin. ubi ſupr. Vid. Strabo, p. 1166.

The

THE remains we ſpeak of retain yet ſome marks of the antient ſplendor of the whole. The firſt thing one ſees is a large portico of marble, facing the riſing ſun, and ſuſtained by four great pillars of marble alſo, but compoſed of ſeveral pieces: three of theſe pillars are ſtill ſtanding, and one of the two middle ones is half fallen. In the middle is a door, whoſe ſides and entablature are very maſſy; and above is a frize, whereon is repreſented a head with wings ſtretched out along the frize, and ſeveral hieroglyphics underneath. This head is covered with a kind of vail, and ſurrounded with four points of marble, like rays; over this firſt entablature runs a frize, the ſtones of which are cut into the figures of ſerpents, very big below the head, but growing inſenſibly leſs to the tail. On this frize are the ruins of ſeveral doors, in different ſtories, by which probably they entered into the apartments that were above, but they are at preſent entirely ruined: on each ſide of that in the middle there is an Anubis full of hieroglyphics.

THIS edifice reſembles none of the four orders of architecture which we received from the antients. Having paſſed through the portico, one enters into a fine large hall, all of marble, the roof conſiſting of twelve tables of marble, exquiſitely joined, each 25 feet long and 3 broad, which croſs the room from one end to the other; the roof, being not arched (as Herodotus ſays) but flat, ſtrikes one with admiration at the boldneſs of its architecture; it being ſcarce conceivable, how it could continue ſo many ages in a poſition ſo improper to ſupport ſo prodigious a weight. This hall is at preſent 40 feet high without making any allowance for the duſt and rubbiſh with which the floor is covered. At the end of this hall, over-againſt the firſt door, there is a ſecond portico, with the ſame ornaments as the firſt, but leſs, by which one enters into a ſecond hall, not ſo big as the firſt, which is covered with eight ſtones. At the end of this room, ſtrait forwards, there is a third portico, ſtill leſs than the ſecond, as well as the hall into which it leads, though it has thirteen ſtones to roof it. At the end of this third hall there is a fourth portico, ſet againſt the wall, and placed there for ſymmetry only to anſwer the reſt. The length of theſe three halls is the whole depth of the building in its preſent condition: it was on the two ſides, and eſpecially under ground, that the prodigious number of rooms and avenues, mentioned by the antients, were built; the halls we have deſcribed having ſeveral openings made in them, through which one may go into other rooms on the ſame level, from whence there are ſtair-caſes to go up into thoſe above, and down into thoſe under under ground. Our author having firſt taken the precaution which Ariadne taught Theſeus, and provided himſelf with above 2000 fathom of thread, and ſome chopped ſtraw to ſtrew in his way, went into above 150 of theſe chambers, but was often obliged either to creep on his belly, or to remove the rubbiſh which choaked up the paſſages; but with all his endeavours he was not able to go very far.

To have a perfect idea of the conſtruction of this edifice, you muſt imagine, that you go from one chamber into another, ſometimes into an alley, which has apertures in ſeveral places anſwering to other avenues, from which often, without perceiving it, you come to the place from whence you ſet out. All theſe chambers and paſſages, where a perfect obſcurity reigns, are not of equal dimenſions, nor of the ſame figure: ſome being long, ſome ſquare, and others triangular.

The diſagreement which may be found between this relation and the accounts of the antients, and even among the ſeveral deſcriptions of the antients themſelves in a building of ſo great variety and extent, need not be wondered at. What is now remaining of it, ſeems to be no more than a fourth part of the inner edifice, which, in all probability, had four fronts, and twelve halls anſwering to them; the reſt being decayed by time, or demoliſhed by deſign, as appears from the prodigious ruins which are to be ſeen all around it [r].

Of the lake Mœris.

How admirable ſoever the labyrinth was, yet the lake Mœris, by which that monument ſtood, is ſaid to be yet more wonderful. The antients make it no leſs than 3600 ſtadia in circumference [s], which is ſomewhat incredible (O); but later relations aſſure us, that it is not above half a league broad and a day's journey in length, being in circuit about [r] Lucas, Voy. T. II. p. 18, &c. [s] Herod. ubi ſupr. Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 49.

(O) Pomponius Mela makes the circuit of this lake no more than 20 miles; which being ſo very diſſonant from what Herodotus and Diodorus have delivered, the critics will have it to be a miſtake in Mela's copy, and have corrected it by thoſe authors (1); but, as we imagine, without reaſon: though we muſt not diſſemble the tradition of the people of the country, who ſay, the lake was formerly much larger than it is now; and one place in particular, which the water has left, is become a dangerous quickſand, wherein men and cattle are ſometimes loſt (2).

(1) Vid. Voſſium & alios in Melam, l. 1. c. 9. (2) Lucas, ubi ſup. p. 64, 71.

12 or

12 or 15 leagues [u]: which is prodigious enough, if we conſider that it was the work of mens hands, as appeared from the two pyramids built in the midſt of it, which were ſtanding in the time of Herodotus. In the deepeſt parts it has 50 fathom of water. This lake ſtretches from north to ſouth, and is not fed by the ſea, the adjacent country being exceſſively dry, but by water derived from the Nile, by a channel cut for that purpoſe, 80 ſtadia long and 300 feet broad, through which the water flowed into the lake ſix months of the year, and back again to the river the other ſix months: yet we are told, by a modern traveller, that there are two conſiderable ſprings in the lake, which keep it from becoming ever quite dry; though in thoſe years that the Nile increaſes but little, it has not much water, and then ſeveral fine ruins are diſcovered, which at other times are not to be ſeen [w].

THIS lake was dug by a king of Egypt, called by Herodotus Mœris, and by Diodorus Myris, whoſe name it afterwards received, to correct the irregularities of the Nile, by receiving the ſuperfluous waters when that river roſe too high, and thereby preventing their ſtagnation in other places to the detriment of the land, and by ſupplying water for the lands when the river failed; which was effected by many canals and ditches cut from the main channel [x]. Theſe canals are ſtill ſubſiſting, and almoſt entire at this day, their number and ſtructure being worthy admiration. And as they were of the greateſt benefit to the antient inhabitants, ſo are they no leſs ſerviceable to the preſent, who, as has been obſerved, attribute theſe works, and indeed almoſt all other antient works of public utility, to Joſeph [y].

THE canal of communication between the Nile and the lake, had antiently large ſluices to let the water in or out as occaſion required; and whenever they were either to be opened or ſhut, the charge of doing it was no leſs than 50 talents, or about 12,916*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. On the other hand, the lake brought in a very conſiderable revenue to the prince; the fiſhery, during the ſix months of the river's retreat, yielding a talent of ſilver, or about 258*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. every day to the royal treaſury; and the reſt of the time 20 minæ, or a fourth part of that ſum; there being twenty two ſorts of fiſh in this lake, and in ſuch plenty, that though a great number of people were employed in ſalting them, yet there wanted hands for the work. Mœris, it is ſaid, gave theſe revenues to his wife, to buy her ointments, or, as we expreſs it, it, for pin-money. The earth dug for the making of the lake, was, as the Egyptians told Herodotus, carried to the Nile, and dispersed by the current of that river [z].

[u] LUCAS Voy. T. III. p. 63. [w] LUCAS, ubi ſupr. p. 53.
[x] DIODOR. ubi ſupr. [y] LUCAS, ubi ſupr. See before, p. 389.

There is an isle in the middle of the lake Mœris, of about a league in circumference: but nothing is now to be seen of the two pyramids which were built here, though they say there are several ruins of temples and tombs in the isle, with large figures of men and animals. On the farther side of the lake there are some little mountains with grottos in them, which were formerly made use of for sepulchres [a].

The inhabitants, at present, call this lake, the lake of Charon, concerning whom they tell the following story; that being a person of mean extraction, and resolved to get money by any means, he planted himself by this lake, and exacted of every corps that was ferried over to be interred a certain sum: though he did this without any authority from the prince, yet he carried on the imposition for several years, till refusing passage to the dead body of the king's son, unless the usual sum were paid him, the cheat was discovered: however, he made the king so sensible of the great advantage it would be to him to continue this duty by his royal authority, that he ordered it to be constantly paid for the future, appointing Charon his first minister, and confirming him in his old employment, which he made the first post in the kingdom. And Charon got such vast riches in it, that he became powerful enough to assassinate the king, and mount the throne in his stead [b]. There is so much correspondence between this fable and what the antients say of Charon, that we could not omit it.

The time would fail us if we should go through an exact description of the other buildings and admirable works of the antient Egyptians, though perhaps they deserve it equally with what we have already mentioned; the very spoils of them making at this day the principal ornament of Rome; where is scarce a column, or an obelisk, worthy of note, but what has been formerly brought thither out of Egypt. We may, however, find occasions in the progress of this work to speak of what we here omit; and shall only take notice, as briefly as we can, of two or three things more, which we judge extraordinary, and for which, we apprehend, we may not hereafter find a more proper place.

A palace near the Cataracts.

One is a most magnificent palace in the upper Egypt, not far from Aswan, the antient Syene; the ruins whereof are enough to strike a spectator with astonishment. It is as large [z] Herod. & Diodor. ubi sup. [a] Lucas, ubi sup. [b] Idem.

as

as a little city, having four avenues of columns, leading to as many porticos. At each gate between two pillars of porphyry, there ſtand two gigantic figures of fine black marble, armed with maces. The avenues conſiſt of columns, ſet three and three together in a triangle on one pedeſtal; on the chapiter of each triangle is placed a Sphinx and a tomb alternately. Every column is 70 feet high, all of one ſtone. There are in the whole, in all the four avenues above five or ſix thouſand of theſe columns, a great many of which are fallen down.

THE firſt hall of this palace is painted with fine pieces of hiſtory, and it ſeems as if the painting had not been long finiſhed. In ſome places they have repreſented the hunting of antelopes, in others feaſts, and a great many young children playing with all kinds of animals. From hence you go into other apartments, encruſted with marble, the roofs being ſupported by pillars of porphyry and black marble. Notwithſtanding the vaſt quantity of rubbiſh, our author made ſhift to get up to the top of this building, from whence he had a proſpect of the ruins of the greateſt city that had ever been, as he thought, in the world. He ſuppoſes it might be the antient Thebes [c], though that city probably ſtood much lower.

THE grots near Oſyût ought not to be neglected. One of them is large enough to contain above 600 horſe in battle array: it is cut out of the rock by the chiſſel, and ſupported by vaſt ſquare pillars of the ſame rock. In this grotto ſeveral little ſeats are made to reſt on; and it ſeems by ſome footſteps which ſtill remain of them, that formerly the figures of ſeveral deities were painted there; but they are now almoſt entirely defaced. There are a great many other grots in the ſame mountain, more beautiful than this. They are ranged in order, with doors anſwering one another, on which there are ſeveral images of the antient gods of Egypt in baſſo relievo; ſome having a ſtaff in their hand, as if they guarded the entrance. In theſe grottos various apartments have been made, and ſome wells ſunk; but, what is moſt wonderful of all, at the farther end there are catacombs hollowed in the rock, where there are a great number of mummies, and tombs adorned with ſepulchres in baſſo relievo, which have been almoſt all disfigured by the Arabs. Our author went into above 200 of theſe grots, each of them more ſingular than the other; and he aſſures us there are above a thouſand of them. It is ſurprizing to conſider the time and number of men that Grots near Oſyût.

[c] Idem, T. I. p. 98, &c.

muſt

muſt have been employed in a work of ſuch difficulty; there being ſcarce a monument in any other part of the world, which carries ſuch evidence of the power of thoſe who executed it; for which reaſon the people of the country believe theſe grots the work of dæmons, who have hid immenſe treaſures in them. As to the time when they were cut, and for what purpoſe, it is in vain to expect any light from hiſtory [d].

A magnificent ſtructure at Dandera.

AMONG the antiquities of Dandera, the antient Tentyra, there is ſtanding part of a temple, or palace, of ſurprizing height and dimenſions. The back part of this ſtructure is a vaſt wall, without any windows, built of large ſtones of greyiſh granite, covered with baſſo relievos bigger than the life, repreſenting the antient Egyptian deities, with all their attributes in different attitudes. Two lions of white marble, as big as horſes, ſtand above half the length of their bodies out of the wall. The ſide is about 300 paces long, filled alſo with ſculptures of the ſame kind, and has three lions jutting out, of the ſame ſize with the former. The front of this glorious edifice expoſes to view, in the midſt, a porch, ſuſtained by ſquare pilaſters of a prodigious ſize; a large piazza ſupported by three rows of columns, one of which eight men can hardly fathom, extends it ſelf on each ſide the porch, and bears up a flat roof, made of ſtones of 6 or 7 feet broad, and of an extraordinary length. This roof appears to have been formerly painted, and ſome colours, which time has ſpared, are ſtill to be perceived. The columns, made of great ſtones of granite, and full of hieroglyphics in relief, have each, on their corniſh, a capital compoſed of four womens heads, with their head-dreſs ſet back to back, and appearing like the faces of a double Janus: theſe heads are of a proportion ſuitable to the columns: there is above them an abacus of a ſquare ſtone, of about 6 feet high, ſomewhat longer than it is broad, which ſupports the roof. A kind of corniſh, of a ſingular conſtruction, runs all round this piazza; and in the middle over the porch, there are two great ſerpents interwoven, whoſe heads reſt on two large wings extended on each ſide. Though theſe columns are above half buried in the ruins, yet one may judge of their height by the circumference; and according to the proportions of architecture, they ought to be, at leaſt, 44 or 45 feet high, and 120 including the baſis with the capital. From this porch one enters directly into a large ſquare hall, where there are three doors, opening into different apartments which lead ſtill into others, ſup-

[d] Lucas, ubi ſupr. T. II. p. 76, &c.

ported

ported alſo by a great many fine columns, though dark and full of rubbiſh.

As this edifice is almoſt entirely buried on one ſide under the ruins and heaps of ſtones, which have formed a kind of mountain, one may eaſily get up to the top; and to give ſome idea of its dimenſions, it is ſufficient to ſay, that the Arabs had formerly built a very large town upon it, the ruins of which are ſtill to be ſeen. At ſome diſtance from the front, there is a large arch of a beautiful order of architecture, and above 40 feet high, which ſeems to have been the firſt gate.

THE tradition of the country is, that this was a temple of Serapis; which ſeems to be confirmed by a Greek inſcription on the frize, wherein the name of that deity appears; but the whole is ſo imperfectly taken, that there is no making any certain judgment of it. They alſo pretend, that this temple had as many windows as there are days in the year, and that thoſe windows were ſo diſpoſed, that each anſwering to one of the degrees of the ecliptic, the ſun every day ſaluted the deity who preſided there, through them in order, one after another [e].

WE ſhall conclude this ſection, which is perhaps already too long, with a reflexion made on occaſion of this ſtructure: That if in ſuch cities as Tentyra, and ſome others of inferior note, there are found monuments of ſuch exquiſite beauty and grandeur, what ought we to think of thoſe erected in the principal cities, which were the ordinary reſidence of the kings; as Thebes, Memphis, and Alexandria? and how great an idea ought we to entertain of the power and magnificence of the antient inhabitants of Egypt [f]?

SECT. II.

Of the antiquity, government, laws, religion, cuſtoms, arts, learning, and trade of the antient Egyptians.

The antiquity of the Egyptians

THERE are few nations in the world which can pretend to an equal antiquity with the Egyptians. Their country is the only one in the world which has born the name of a ſon of Noah; though it be uncertain, whether Ham himſelf made any ſettlement there. However, his ſon Miz-

[e] SICARD, Mem. des miſſions, T. II. p. 158. LUCAS, T. II. p. 133, &c. [f] LUCAS, ibid. p. 139.

raïm

raïm certainly peopled Egypt with his own iſſue, which inhabited ſeveral parts of it, under the names of Mizraïm, Pathruſim, Caſluhim, and Caphtorim [a].

And yet the Egyptians themſelves being ignorant of their true deſcent, pretended even to a greater antiquity than this, aſſerting themſelves to have been the firſt men in the world, which (as well as animals) they imagined muſt have been originally produced in their country, rather than in any other part of the world, becauſe of the benign temperature of the air, the natural fecundity of the Nile, and its ſpontaneous bringing forth ſeveral kinds of vegetables, as proper food for the newly produced men and animals. And to ſupport this opinion by fact, they inſtanced in the great numbers of mice which were every year bred out of the mud left by the Nile on its retreat, ſome of them, as they ſay, appearing alive, and formed ſo far as the fore-part of the body only, the other part being inanimate and without motion, as having not yet quite put off the nature of earth [b]. That the concurrence of proper cauſes, in certain ſeaſons will occaſion a prodigious increaſe of thoſe vermin, is obſerved in other countries; but as to the other part of the relation, it is not improbable, that the mice which are generated at that ſeaſon in Egypt, are of the ſame kind with thoſe mentioned by antient authors to breed in that country, and ſome other parts, which have but two legs [c], and which an incurious ſpectator might therefore eaſily take to be imperfect animals, and but half formed. On this miſtaken notion of their original, the Egyptians built their hiſtory, reckoning an extravagant number of years, during which they pretended they had the moſt flouriſhing kingdom in the world, under the adminiſtration of their own native kings. However, we are told, that in the time of Pſammitichus they acknowledge the Phrygians to be more antient, yielding that nation the priority, and challenging only the ſecond rank to themſelves [d].

Their government and laws.

The Egyptians are ſaid to have been the firſt who found out the rules of government, and the art of making life eaſy, and a people happy; the true end of politics. Their laws and inſtitutions were not only highly reverenced by thoſe who lived under their immediate influence, but by other nations, and particularly the Grecians, whoſe firſt ſages and law-givers travelled into this country to acquaint themſelves herewith, and borrowed thence the beſt part of thoſe which they afterwards eſtabliſhed at home.

[a] See before, p. 365. &c. [b] Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 9. [c] Theophrast. in fragm. de animalibus. Plin. nat. hiſt. l. 10. c. 65. Herod. l. 4. [d] Herod. l. 2. ſub init. See before, p. 335. note U.

THE crown of Egypt was hereditary; their firſt kings did not live after the manner of other monarchs, or govern by their own arbitrary will and pleaſure, ſubject to the control of none; but they were obliged to conform themſelves to the eſtabliſhed laws of the land, not only in the management of public affairs, but even in their private way of life. No ſlave bought with money, or ſervant born in their own houſe, was admitted into their ſervice; but they were attended by the ſons of the prieſts of moſt diſtinguiſhed birth; who after having had a ſuitable education, were at the age of twenty placed about the king's perſon; that, being waited on both day and night by men of ſuch extraordinary merit, he might learn nothing unworthy of the royal majeſty, and be in the leſs danger of falling into any vicious exceſs; which princes ſeldom do, unleſs they find, among thoſe who approach their perſons, encouragers of their debauchery, and miniſters of their paſſions. Their kings manner of life.

THERE were ſtated hours of night as well as day, when the king could not do what he had a fancy to, but was indiſpenſibly obliged to give attention to buſineſs and ſerious employment. When he aroſe early in the morning, the firſt thing he did was to peruſe the public diſpatches and letters, which came from ſeveral parts of his dominions, that ſo he might be well acquainted with the ſtate and affairs of his kingdom. Then bathing himſelf, and putting on ſplendid attire, and aſſuming the enſigns of his regal office, he went to the temple to ſacrifice: the victims being brought to the altar, the chief prieſt, in the preſence of the king and the aſſiſtants, prayed with a loud voice for the health and proſperity of the king, who governed according to juſtice and the laws of the kingdom. And on this occaſion he enlarged on his royal virtues, obſerving that he was pious towards the gods, tender towards his people, moderare, juſt, magnanimous, of ſtrict veracity, liberal, maſter of himſelf, puniſhing below, and rewarding above, deſert. He then ſpake with execration of the faults which the king might have committed through ſurprize or ignorance; but withal abſolving him, and laying the guilt on his miniſters and council. And this method they took to win their kings to the practice of virtue; not by ſharp admonitions, but by the pleaſing praiſes due to good actions. The ſacrifices being duly performed, the ſcribe read, out of the ſacred records, ſuch of the counſels and actions of the moſt famous men as might be of uſe in life, and fit for imitation; that the king might thereby be inſtructed ſtructed to govern his ſtate by their maxims, and regulate his adminiſtration, in every reſpect, according to the eſtabliſhed laws.

Nor was the king obliged to this exactneſs in public affairs only; but he was ſo little maſter of himſelf in private, that he could not take the air, lie with his queen, bath, or do the moſt indifferent thing, but at certain times, which were particularly appointed, and ſet apart for this or that purpoſe. He was not permitted to chooſe what he would eat, but his table was furniſhed with the moſt ſimple food, generally veal or gooſe; and he was allowed but a certain quantity of wine to drink. And this regulation was ſo moderate, that it ſeemed not to have been the inſtitution of a legiſlator, but the preſcription of an experienced phyſician for the preſervation of health; to which it was ſo conducive, that one of the kings of Egypt, named Tachos, who had the beſt of conſtitutions while he lived after the frugal manner of his own country, retiring into Perſia, ſoon ruined it by the luxurious diet of that nation [e]. It is ſaid, that there was, in a certain temple in Thebes, a pillar, with an inſcription on it, containing imprecations againſt a king, who had firſt introduced luxury among the Egyptians [f].

So great a reſtraint laid on the prince in matters ſeemingly of little conſequence, is indeed extraordinary; but what deſerves greater admiration is, that it was not in his power to ſatisfy more dangerous appetites, by wronging or oppreſſing the ſubject; for he could not puniſh any perſon out of paſſion or caprice, nor give judgment in any caſe otherwiſe than as the laws ordained. And all this was ſo far from being thought hard or diſhonourable by the kings, that on the contrary they eſteemed it a ſingular bleſſing, that while other men were ſubject to the ill conſequences of indulging their natural paſſions, themſelves were exempt from ſuch dangers, by living up to a rule of life approved by the moſt prudent perſons. While the princes behaved themſelves with this juſtice and moderation, they were infinitely dear to their people; not only the colleges of prieſts, but the whole Egyptian nation being more ſollicitous for the king's ſafety, than that of their wives, children, or poſſeſſions. Wherefore, ſo long as theſe laws were obſerved, their ſtate was flouriſhing, and the people happy; they extended their dominions by the conqueſt of ſeveral nations, became exceeding rich and populous, and enabled to adorn the ſeveral provinces of the kingdom with works of inimitable magnificence [g].

[e] Ælian. var. hiſt. l. 5. c. 1. [f] Plutarch. de Iſid. & Oſirid. p. 354.

abled

THE affection of the Egyptians to their king appeared in nothing more than in the lamentations they made for them, and the honours they paid them when dead; for upon the death of any of their kings, the whole kingdom went into mourning, rending their garments, ſhutting up their temples, and putting a ſtop to all ſacrifices, feaſts, and ſolemnities, for the ſpace of ſeventy two days. Companies of 200 or 300, both men and women, having thrown dirt on their heads, and being girt with linen girdles, marched ſolemnly in proceſſion twice a day, ſinging his praiſe in mournful dirges, calling on the virtue of the deceaſed. All this while they abſtained from fleſh and wheat, as alſo from wine and all delicacies; they neither bathed, nor anointed themſelves, nor ſlept in their beds, nor uſed the company of their wives; but every one mourned both night and day, as for the loſs of a beloved ſon. In the mean time the funeral pomp being prepared with great magnificence, on the laſt day, the body was expoſed in a coffin at the entrance of the ſepulchre, where, in purſuance of a law, the actions of his life were recited, and every one was at free liberty to accuſe him. The prieſts pronounced his elogy; and if it ſo happened that the deceaſed had reigned worthily, the numerous multitude, aſſembled on the occaſion, ſeconded the applauſes of the prieſts; but if he had governed unworthily, they boldly expreſſed their diſapprobation. It even depended on the inclinations of the people, whether the deceaſed prince ſhould be honoured with a ſolemn burial, which through their diſlike was denied to ſeveral. Upon which account (among others), and leſt their dead bodies ſhould be abuſed, and their memory blaſted with eternal infamy, they did their utmoſt to deſerve the good opinion of their ſubjects by an unblameable conduct.

The honours paid them when dead.

As to the adminiſtration of public affairs, each nome, or province had its peculiar governor, who ordered and took care of every thing within his juriſdiction. The lands were divided into three parts; of which one was allotted to the prieſts, and the revenues thereof were employed not only for the maintenance of them and their families, but for the providing ſacrifices and all other expences of public worſhip. The ſecond belonged to the king, and was appropriated to defray the charges of his wars, and for the ſupport of the regal dignity with ſplendor. By ſuch an abundant proviſion, he was enabled liberally to reward men of diſtinguiſhed merit;

The political diviſion of the kingdom.

[g] DIOD. SIC. l. 1. p. 63, &c.

and had no occaſion to lay any burthenſome taxes on his people. The third part was the ſoldiers, who, having ſo handſome a maintenance, were thereby encouraged to venture their lives in defence of their country: for they thought it abſurd to truſt the ſafety of the whole nation in the hands of thoſe, who had nothing dear or valuable at home to fight for [h].

HERODOTUS ſays, the Egyptians were diſtinguiſhed into ſeven orders of men; prieſts, ſoldiers, herdſmen, hogherds, traders, interpreters, and ſeamen; who took their names from the profeſſions they exerciſed [i]. But Diodorus mentions no more than five; prieſts, ſoldiers, ſhepherds, huſbandmen, and artificers, including probably ſome of the former denominations under ſome of theſe.

Of the prieſts.

THE king, prieſts, and ſoldiery made as it were the three eſtates of the kingdom. The prieſts were held in great reverence and eſteem, not only for their attendance on the worſhip of their gods, but becauſe by their learning and prudence they were of great ſervice to the ſtate; being for that reaſon always near the king's perſon, as the chief of his council, to aſſiſt him with their advice, to give their judgments as to the event of any enterprize, by their ſkill in aſtrology, and in divination by inſpection of the ſacrifices; and to read uſeful points of hiſtory out of the ſacred commentaries. Theſe were exempt from all taxes, and were the next in power and dignity to the king [k].

THE prieſts wore linen garments and ſhoes, being not permitted to dreſs in any other manner; they took particular care to waſh them often, and have them always clean: and for greater neatneſs, they ſhaved all parts of their bodies once in three days, and bathed conſtantly twice by day, and twice by night in cold water, with a great deal of ſuperſtition. The ſervice of every god was performed, not by one, but by many prieſts; and they had a chief prieſt over them, in whoſe room, when he died, his ſon was ſubſtituted. The prieſthood enjoyed very great advantages, being never diſturbed with domeſtic cares; for they eat the conſecrated bread, and were daily furniſhed with beef and geeſe in abundance, and had alſo an allowance of wine; but they might not taſte of fiſh. Beans, which were never eaten by the other Egyptians, the prieſts abhorred the ſight of, accounting them impure and abominable: whence Pythagoras took the averſion he had to that kind of pulſe.

[h] DIODOR. ubi ſupr. p. 66. [i] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [k] DIODOR. ubi ſupr. [l] HEROD. ubi ſupr.

THE

THE military men were called Calaſirians, or Hermotybians, according to the different nomes they inhabited. Thoſe of the latter were the nomes of Buſiris, Saïs, Chemmis, Papremis, and one half of the iſland Proſopis, from whence 160,000 men might be drawn, when they were moſt numerous. The nomes of the Calaſirians were thoſe of Thebes, Bubaſtis, Aphthis, Tanis, Mendes, Sebennytus, Athribis, Pharbæthus, Thmuïs, Onuphis, Anytis, and Myecphoris; which laſt was ſituate in an iſland over-againſt the city of Bubaſtis. And theſe nomes of the Calaſirians might furniſh 250,000 men at the moſt. The ſoldiers of both denominations were not permitted to learn, or exerciſe any mechanical art, but were obliged, from father to ſon, to apply themſelves to the art of war only [m]; wherein it may be ſuppoſed, they therefore, made a more than ordinary proficiency; but their great excellency ſeems to have been in horſemanſhip, and the ſkill of guiding chariots; for which they were particularly and early famous, as appears from ſcripture [n]. For neglect of duty, flying in battle, or cowardice, they were puniſhed only by marks of infamy; it being thought more adviſeable to keep them in order by the motive of honour, than the fear of chaſtiſement [o]. Of the ſoldiery.

THE lands conferred on the militia were exempted from public taxes, as well as thoſe of the prieſts. The portion aſſigned to each man was 12 aruræ, every one containing a ſquare of 100 Egyptian cubits (A). The king's guard conſiſted of 1000 Hermotybians, and as many Calaſirians, who were changed every year, that they might all have that honour and advantage in their turn. For, beſides the revenues of their lands, thoſe that were on duty at court had a daily allowance of five pounds of bread, two pounds of beef, and two pints of wine. This liberal proviſion for the militia, was alſo an encouragement for them to marry, helping to people the country, and leaving behind them a ſucceſſion of troops ſufficient for the defence of the kingdom [p].

BUT after all, the Egyptians cannot be ſaid to have been a warlike nation; it being real and not imaginary combats that form a ſoldier. They rather extended their dominions by ſending out colonies, than by their arms: however, we ſhall find ſome conquerors of great fame among their kings.

[m] Idem ibid. [n] Exod. xiv. 7, &c. Cant. i. 9. Iſai. xxxvi. 9. [o] DIOD. l. 1. p. 70. [p] HEROD. & DIODOR. ubi ſupr.

(A) The Egyptian Arura muſt therefore have been ſomewhat more than three quarters of an Engliſh acre.

We had almoſt forgot to obſerve, that if the Egyptians at any time created a new king by election (which ſometimes happened), he was always choſen, either out of the prieſts, or the ſoldiers; and if out of the latter, he was immediately received into the order of prieſts, and initiated in their learning and myſteries [q].

Of the inferior claſſes.

The huſbandmen taking the lands from the king, prieſts, and ſoldiers, at an eaſy rent, and employing themſelves wholly in their tillage, and the ſon continually ſucceeding the father in the ſame occupation, they became the moſt expert in agriculture of any people in the world. The ſhepherds, in like manner, were always ſhepherds from generation to generation; and, by the obſervations of their fore-fathers, and their own experience, arrived at great ſkill in their way; endeavouring to vie with one another in contrivances to encreaſe the breed of the animals they fed. One thing in particular deſerves to be mentioned, which was practiſed by thoſe who fed hens and geeſe. For not contented with the ordinary way of natural encreaſe, they did not ſuffer them to ſit, but themſelves hatched the eggs by an artificial fecundation; and by that means raiſed prodigious flocks of thoſe fowls [r]. The method was moſt probably by ovens, which are ſtill uſed in Egypt for the ſame purpoſe, and much ſpoken of by travellers (B).

The

[q] Plut. de Iſid. & Oſirid. p. 354. [r] Diod. Sic. ubi ſupr.

(B) It may not be amiſs to give a ſhort account of this method; which perhaps might be practicable in other countries as well as Egypt.

The houſes built for this uſe have a long entry, on each ſide of which are fourteen ovens on the ground (ſome places have more, and ſome leſs): the bottoms and ſides of which are all of ſun-dried bricks; upon them they put mats, and on the mats eggs. The tops of theſe ovens are flat, and covered with ſticks, except two long channels or hearths, of ſun-dried bricks, three or four inches deep, wherein the fires are made, to heat the eggs lying under them in the lower ovens.

Above theſe lower ovens are ſo many other, alſo of ſun-dried bricks, and arched at the top; where are ſome holes, which are ſtopped, or left open, as they pleaſe, to govern the heat in the ovens below. Theſe upper ovens have not only mouths opening into the long entry, but mouths of communication with each other, and every one of them has two of the above-mentioned hearths. The depth of the lower oven is about two feet and a half Engliſh; that of the upper above four.

They

THE law which obliged the ſon of the huſbandman and ſhepherd to follow the vocation of his father, extended to all arts and trades: for amongſt the Egyptians a man was under an indiſpenſable neceſſity of taking up his father's employment, and of applying himſelf wholly to that, without med-

They begin to heat the ovens in the middle of January, burning every morning one hundred kintars (or hundred weight) of camels or buffaloes dung, and the like proportion at night, till the middle of February, about which time the ovens are ſo hot, that one cannot well endure to lay his hand upon the walls,

After this they put the eggs into the ovens to hatch the chickens; which they continue ſucceſſively to the end of May. The eggs are firſt put on mats in the lower ovens, ſeven or eight thouſand eggs in number, and laid only double, one upon another. In the upper ovens the fire is made in the long channels, or hearths, from whence the heat is conveyed into the lower ovens. The eggs which are directly under theſe hearths, lie treble one upon another; the reſt, as was ſaid, only double.

At night, when they make new fires in the hearths, they remove the eggs that were directly under them, and lay treble, into the place of thoſe which lay on the ſides, and double only; and theſe being now removed, lie treble under the hearth, becauſe the heat is greater there than on the ſides.

Theſe eggs continue in the lower ovens fourteen days and nights: afterwards they remove them into the upper ovens, which are juſt over the lower. In thoſe (there being now no more fire uſed) they turn all the eggs four times every twenty four hours. The twenty firſt or twenty ſecond day the chickens are hatched; which the firſt day eat not; the ſecond they are fetched away and fed.

The maſter of the oven has a third part of the eggs for his coſt and pains; out of which he is to make good unto the owners, (who have two thirds in chickens for their eggs) if any happen to be ſpoiled or miſcarry.

The fire in the upper ovens, when the eggs are placed in the lower, is thus proportioned. The firſt day the greateſt fire; the ſecond leſs than the firſt; the fourth more than the third; the fifth leſs; the ſixth more than the fifth; the ſeventh leſs; the eighth more; the ninth without fire; the tenth a little fire in the morning; the eleventh they ſtop all the holes with flax or ſtraw, making no more fire; for if they ſhould, the eggs would break. They take care that the eggs be no hotter than the eye of a man, when they are laid upon it, can well endure.

When the chickens are hatched, they put them into the lower ovens, which are covered with mats. Under theſe mats is bran to dry them; and upon the mats ſtraw for them to ſtand on (1).

(1) Greaves, Manner of hatching chickens at Cairo. Phil. Tranſ. No. 137. Vid. Lucas Voy. Vol. 1. p. 279, &c.

dling with any other. Thus being cut off from all hopes of riſing to the magiſtracy, and having no room left for popular ambition, they ſtuck cloſely to what they profeſſed. They were never permitted to concern themſelves with civil affairs: and if they happened to attempt it, or undertook any buſineſs that did not belong to their hereditary profeſſion, they were ſeverely puniſhed.

Of their courts of juſtice.

The Egyptians were very careful in the adminiſtration of juſtice; for they rightly judged the ſentences pronounced from the tribunals to be of the greateſt conſequence to the public; and that as nothing could conduce more to the reformation of mens manners, than the puniſhment of offenders, and the relieving the oppreſſed; ſo nothing could be more deſtructive of ſociety, or a greater cauſe of confuſion, than the ſuffering of bribery or favour in ſuch caſes. For this reaſon, they were very ſcrupulous in the choice of their judges; who were men of the beſt reputation, and taken from the three chief cities, Heliopolis, Thebes, and Memphis; ten from each; ſo that their whole number was thirty. This tribunal was thought to be inferior neither to that of the Areopagus at Athens, nor to the Lacedemonian ſenate.

This venerable aſſembly choſe a preſident out of their own number, whoſe place, as an inferior judge, was upon his election ſupplied by the city that ſent him. Their ſalaries were paid by the king, who allowed the preſident a ſtipend proportioned to his ſuperior rank; and that he might be more viſibly diſtinguiſhed from his brethren, he wore a chain of gold about his neck, from which hung an image of precious ſtones, which they called truth. Whenever the preſident aſſumed this enſign of his office, it ſignified, that he was prepared to hear cauſes. The court being ſeated, and the eight books, which contained all the laws laid before them, the plaintiff preferred his complaint, clearly and diſtinctly ſet forth in writing; a copy of which being granted to the defendant, he gave in his anſwer. To this the plaintiff replied, and then the defendant rejoined. Each party having given in two writings, the court took them into conſideration; and after conſulting together, proceeded to ſentence; and the preſident turned the effigies of truth towards the party in whoſe favour judgment was given. All this was done without the clamorous harangues of lawyers, who are too apt to diſguiſe truth, or falſhood, to ſerve their turn, and pervert judgment by their ſpecious rhetoric. The Egyptians therefore, ſenſible of the fallacies of oratory, and the evil arts of public pleaders, baniſhed them from the tribunal; nor would they even ſuffer a man to ſpeak in his own cauſe, well knowing ing the advantage one perſon might have over another by more artful ſpeaking, or greater confidence; but contented themſelves with a ſimple and intelligible ſtate of the caſe in writing, which being readily underſtood, was as readily decided. By which means every man ſtood upon the level with his antagoniſt, and nothing but the merits had any weight in the determination of a cauſe.

Their remarkable laws.

HAVING ſpoken of their courts of judicature, it may not be amiſs briefly to mention ſuch of their laws as are moſt remarkable, for their antiquity or uſe.

I. PERJURY was puniſhed with death; it being looked on as ſinful in the ſight of the gods, and deſtructive of human ſociety.

II. HE that ſaw a man killed, or violently aſſaulted on the highway, and did not endeavour to reſcue him if he could, was puniſhed with death. If it appeared that he was unable to give aſſiſtance, he was nevertheleſs obliged to diſcover, and proſecute the offenders according to law; which if he neglected, he received a certain number of ſtripes, and was kept without food for three days.

III. FALSE accuſers underwent the ſame puniſhment as the accuſed ſhould have undergone in caſe of conviction.

IV. EVERY Egyptian was enjoined to give in his name, and by what means he gained his livelihood, in writing, to the governor of the province where he lived. But if it could be proved, that he had given in a wrong information, or got his living in an unlawful way, he was puniſhed with death. This law was made by Amaſis, and Solon is ſaid to have introduced it, from Egypt among the Athenians [f].

V. HE that wilfully killed any perſon, whether freeman or ſlave, was condemned to die.

VI. PARENTS that killed their children were not adjudged to die; but were obliged to embrace their dead bodies for three days and three nights together; a guard being ſet over them to ſee that they punctually obeyed this law.

VII. BUT parricides were put to a moſt cruel death; firſt they had their limbs mangled, and their fleſh cut into ſmall pieces with ſharp reeds, after which they were laid upon thorns, and burned alive.

VIII. WOMEN with child were not executed till they had been delivered; that the innocent might not be involved in the puniſhent of the guilty.

[f] Vid. HEROD. ubi ſupr.

IX. Mu-

IX. Mutiny and desertion were punished only by degradation and disgrace; which could never be wiped away, but by brave actions and amendment.

X. Those who betrayed their secret designs to the enemy had their tongues cut out.

XI. Coining false money, using false weights, and forgery of all sorts, were punished by cutting off the offending parts, both the hands.

XII. He that committed a rape on a free-woman, had his privities cut off; for they held a ravisher guilty of three most enormous crimes, having besides the injustice of the action, brought infamy on the woman, and bastardized her issue.

XIII. Adultery by consent, was punished in the man by giving him a thousand lashes with rods; and in the woman by the loss of her nose.

XIV. According to the commercial laws, which are said to have been made by Bocchoris; if a man borrowed money without giving a note in writing for it, he was discharged from the debt, provided, he would make oath that he was no ways indebted to his creditor. The oath in this case was very solemn, and preceded by sacrifice.

XV. In cases where the debt was acknowledged by proper instruments, the interest was not to exceed the double of the capital or sum lent. The debtor's goods, and not his body, were answerable for the debt; for his body was claimed by the city, or place, where he lived, which had the greatest interest in him, and had a right to his service, both in peace and war. In short, they did not apprehend wherein lay the policy of sacrificing an useful member of the republic to the cruelty or avarice of a private person. This law, or one very like it, is said to have been established by Solon [s].

XVI. To help the circulation of money, Asychis made a law, that a man might borrow on the pledge of his father's dead body, which was to be put into the hands of the creditor; and if he did not redeem it, he was to be deprived of the honour of a funeral himself, nor could he have the liberty of burying any person descended from him; which was accounted the greatest ignominy [t].

XVII. The Egyptian priests were allowed no more than one wife, but all others might marry as many as they pleased: nor was any child reckoned a bastard, though begotten on a slave bought with money; for they held the father to be the sole cause of generation, and that the mother only provided nourishment and lodging for the infant [u].

[s] Diod. Sic. ubi supr. p. 69, &c. [t] Herod. ubi sup.
[u] Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 72.

XVIII. By

XVIII. By the laws of Egypt brothers were permitted to marry their ſiſters; becauſe they had an inſtance of the happineſs of ſuch marriages in that of Iſis with her own brother Oſiris; for having vowed, on his death, never to ſuffer the embraces of any other, ſhe revenged his murder, and governed the kingdom during her widowhood with great prudence, being the author of infinite benefits to mankind. For which reaſon, in Egypt, the queen had more power, and more honour ſhewn her than the king; and in private contracts the greater authority was given to the women, the husbands thereby promiſing to be obedient to their wives in all things [w].

XIX. THERE was a very remarkable law, or rather a cuſtom which had the ſanction of law, with regard to the Egyptian robbers and ſharpers. Whoever entered himſelf of their gang, gave in his name to their chief, promiſing to deliver him all the booty he ſhould from time to time purloin. Upon this account it was cuſtomary for ſuch as had any thing ſtolen from them to apply themſelves to the chief of the gang, and give him a very particular account and deſcription, in writing, of what they had loſt, as alſo of the day, hour, and place, when, and where, they loſt it. This information being given, the ſtolen goods were eaſily found, and reſtored to the right owner, upon his paying a fourth part of their value. The inſtitutor of this extraordinary law thought, that ſince it would be impoſſible to prevent thieving entirely, it would be more tolerable for the injured party to loſe a fourth, by way of redemption, than the whole [x].

Of the religion of the Egyptians.

As much as the Egyptians ſeemed to excel other nations in the wiſdom of their laws and conſtitutions, they yet ſurpaſſed them more in bigotry and ſuperſtition.

IDOLATRY was ſo antient among them, that the Greci-ans confeſſed, they borrowed not only their religious ceremonies, but the names of almoſt all their gods from Egypt. For the Egyptians are ſaid to have been the firſt people who erected altars, images, and temples, and the firſt inventers of feſtivals, ceremonies, and tranſactions with the gods by the mediation of others; and alſo to have firſt given names to the twelve gods [y].

THE Egyptians had a great many deities of different ranks and orders. Thoſe who were chiefly honoured in Egypt, were Oſiris and Iſis; by which it is moſt probable they originally

[w] Idem ibid. p. 23. [x] Idem ibid. p. 69. [y] HEROD. ubi ſupr.

originally meant the ſun and the moon (C), whoſe influences governed and preſerved the world; thoſe two planets being reckoned by them to be the great cauſes of nutrition and generation, and as it were the ſources from whence the other parts of nature, which alſo they looked upon as gods, and to which they gave diſtinct names, were derived. Theſe were Jupiter, or ſpirit, the vis vivifica of living creatures; Vulcan, or fire; Ceres, or the earth; Oceanus (by which the Egyptians meant their Nile), or moiſture; and Minerva (called alſo by that nation Neith), or air.

BESIDES theſe celeſtial and eternal gods, they had alſo terreſtrial and mortal deities, which had merited the honours paid them, by the benefits they conferred on mankind in their life-time; ſeveral of them having been kings of Egypt: ſome of theſe bore the ſame names with the celeſtial gods, and others had proper names of their own. Such were the Sun, Cronus, or Saturn, Rhea, Jupiter (called by them Ammon) Juno, Vulcan, Veſta, Hermes, or Mercury, Orus, Venus, Pan, Arueris, Nephthys, Harpocrates, and others [z]. Serapis is ſaid to have been an upſtart deity, introduced by one of the Ptolemies at Alexandria [a]; but others ſuppoſe it to be only another name for Oſiris [b], who was alſo called Bacchus. As Oſiris was ſuppoſed to have been of a good and beneficent nature, ſo his brother Typhon was eſteemed the reverſe, and held in univerſal deteſtation for the evils brought by him on his family and nation, as will be mentioned hereafter. The other names of Typhon were Seth, Bebon, and Smy [c].

THOUGH the bodies of theſe mortal deities remained in their ſepulchres on earth, yet they believed their ſouls ſhone

[z] Vid. DIOD SIC. ubi ſupr. p. 11, &c. [a] ORIGEN, cont. Celſ. Vid. TACIT. Hiſt. l. 20. [b] PLUTARCH. de Iſid. & Oſir. p. 362. [c] Idem ibid. p, 367.

(C) Agreeably hereto, the name of Oſiris, we are told, in the Egyptian tongue ſignifies many-eyed; an epithet very proper for the ſun; and Iſis antient (1).

There are ſeveral other mythological interpretations of theſe two deities. Sometimes Iſis is the earth in general; ſometimes only the land of Egypt; and Oſiris is the moon, or elſe the Nile, which is loſt, or deſtroyed, in the ſea, which they call Typhon. At other times Oſiris is Pluto and Bacchus, and Iſis Ceres, Proſerpine, Cybele, &c. One ſuppoſes Oſiris to ſignify the efficient cauſe of things, and Iſis matter; and another thinks Iſis denotes nature in general (2).

(1) DIOD. SIC. ubi ſupr. p. 10, 11. (2) Vid. PLUT. de Iſid. & Oſirid. APULEIUM, Metam, l. 2.

in

in the ſtars in heaven; the ſoul of Iſis in particular in the dog-ſtar, called by them Sothis; the ſoul of Orus in Orion; and that of Typhon in the bear [d].

NOTWITHSTANDING this polytheiſm of the Egyptians, they are yet ſaid in reality to have acknowledged one ſupreme god, the maker and ruler of the world, whom they ſometimes denoted by the name of Oſiris, or Serapis, ſometimes by that of Iſis, and at other times by that of Neith, on whoſe temple at Saïs was the following remarkable inſcription; I am all that hath been, is, and ſhall be; and my vail hath no mortal yet uncovered [e]. There is alſo an inſcription to Iſis ſtill remaining at Capua, to this effect; To thee who, being one, art all things, the goddeſs Iſis [f]. The inhabitants of Thebaïs are reported to have worſhipped only the immortal and unbegotten god Cneph, or Emeph; for which reaſon they were exempt from all contributions towards the maintenance of the ſacred animals which were worſhipped in the lower Egypt [g]. From this god Cneph they ſuppoſed a ſecondary god proceeded, repreſenting the world, and was called Phtha, which word is at preſent uſed among the Copts to ſignify the divine being [h].

HOWEVER, the idolatrous humour which prevailed at firſt, perhaps only in ſome parts of Egypt, appears at length to have entirely over-run it, and, which ſeems ſcarcely credible, they came at length to give divine honours to ſeveral animals, nay even to vegetables themſelves, as leeks and onions; and that with ſo great variety and diſagreement among themſelves, that except ſome of the principal gods who were honoured all over the kingdom, the worſhip of every deity was confined to one or two cities or provinces; whence it came to paſs, that the names of a great number of the chief cities of Egypt were by the Grecians named after the gods, or animals, that were worſhipped there; as Dioſpolis, or the city of Jupiter, Heliopolis, or the city of the ſun; and in the ſame manner others bore the names of Pan, Apollo, Latona, Hermes, Hercules, and Venus; and alſo of the Dog, the Lion, the Wolf, the Crocodile, the fiſhes Latos, Oxyrinchus, and Phagrus, and other animals.

THIS diverſity of worſhip was ſometimes attended with very ill conſequences, eſpecially if their deities happened to be ſuch as were naturally enemies to one another; the inhabitants of one place often paying their adoration to that kind of animals which were held in the greateſt abhorrence by their neighbours. Hence proceeded inveterate quarrels and dangerous wars; as happened in particular between thoſe of Heracleopolis, who worſhipped the ichneumon, and thoſe of Arſinoe, who worſhipped the crocodile; and to mention no more, between the cities of Oxyrinchus and Cynopolis, the former of which ſacrificed and eat dogs, the deity of the latter, in revenge for their eating that ſort of fiſh, which was the object of their own worſhip [i]. It was thought, however, that the kings themſelves, out of policy, firſt occaſioned, or at leaſt encouraged and fomented theſe diſſenſions, to prevent the peoples attempting any thing againſt the ſtate; for Diodorus tells us, that one of their firſt and moſt prudent kings, finding the Egyptians very prone to ſedition, enjoined to each province the worſhip of ſome particular animal different from all the reſt, and likewiſe to uſe a different diet; ſo that the Egyptians, being by this means divided into ſo many diſtinct ſocieties, prejudiced againſt each other in religious matters, and mutually deſpiſing one another on account of their different cuſtoms in the ordinary affairs of life, there was no likelihood of their ever uniting again [k].

[d] Idem ibid. p. 359. [e] Idem ibid. p. 354. [f] Vid. CUDWORTH Intell Syſt. p. 412, &c. Vid. IAMBLICH. de myſt § 8. c. 3. [g] PLUT. ubi ſupr. p. 359. [h] See before p. 27.

mals

It would be rather tedious than entertaining, to ſet down all the fables, and uncertain traditions, which might be found in antient authors, concerning the Egyptian gods; ſome of them may perhaps be occaſionally taken notice of hereafter: wherefore we ſhall immediately proceed to give an account of the images, by which they repreſented thoſe deities which were moſt peculiar to this nation, and of their ſacrifices, feſtivals, and religious ceremonies.

Osiris was variouſly repreſented; ſometimes by a ſceptre and eye, to expreſs his power and providence; at other times by the image of a hawk, becauſe of its ſharp ſight, ſwiftneſs, and other qualities; and in later times in a human form, in a poſture not very decent, ſignifying his generative and nutritive faculty [l]. But the greateſt adoration was paid to his living image, the bull, as we ſhall obſerve by and by.

The image of Iſis was uſually in the form of a woman, with cow's horns on her head [m], repreſenting the appearance of the moon in her increaſe and decreaſe, and holding the Siſtrum (a kind of cymbal) in her right hand, and a pitcher in her left; the former ſignifying the perpetual motion there is in nature, and the other the fecundity of the Nile. But [i] Plutarch. ubi ſup. p. 380. Vid. Juven. Sat. 15. & Athanasium, orat. contr. Julian. [k] Diod. ubi ſup. p. 80.

[l] Plut. ubi ſup. p. 371. [m] Herod. ubi ſup.

ſometimes ſhe was repreſented as Cybele,, having her body full of breaſts, to expreſs her nouriſhing of all things [n].

THE ſtatue of Sarapis was of a human form, with a baſket or buſhel, on his head, ſignifying plenty; his right hand leaned on the head of a ſerpent, whoſe body was wound round a figure with three heads, of a dog, a lion, and a wolf; in his left hand he held a meaſure of a cubit length, as it were to take the height of the waters of the Nile [o].

JUPITER, or Ammon, was by the Egyptians repreſented by an image with the head of a ram; the reaſon of which, they ſay, was this; Hercules being very deſirous to ſee Jupiter, did not without great difficulty obtain his requeſt, for the god was unwilling to be ſeen: but at length Jupiter yielded to his importunity, and having ſeparated the head from the body of a ram, and flayed the whole carcaſs, he put on the ſkin with the wool, and in that form ſhewed himſelf to Hercules. And in this manner of repreſenting Jupiter, the Egyptians were imitated by the Ammonians, who were a colony of them and the Ethiopians [p].

THE other more famous deities of the Egyptians were Anubis, Harpocrates, Orus, and Canopus. The firſt was uſually painted with the head of a dog, becauſe he accompanied Oſiris in his expedition cloathed in a dog's ſkin [q], and was the guard of him and Iſis [r]. Sometimes this deity is confounded with Hermes, and then the dog's head may denote his great ſagacity. Harpocrates was the ſon of Iſis, begotten as is ſaid, by Oſiris on her after his death; for which reaſon he was weak in his lower limbs [s]. This was the god of ſilence, being therefore uſually repreſented with his finger on his mouth; he was always placed near the ſtatues of Oſiris and Iſis, to intimate, that their having been once mortals was not to be ſpoken of [t]. Orus is often confounded with Apollo; he was the ſon of Iſis and Oſiris; and was generally repreſented as a child wrapped up in ſwadling-cloaths, and ſometimes, by thoſe of Coptos, as holding in one hand the privities of Typhon [u]. Canopus was the pilot of Oſiris's ſhip, whoſe ſoul, after his death migrated into the fixed ſtar of that name [w], which is one of the firſt magnitude, but not viſible in Eu- rope.

[n] Vid. PLUT. ubi ſup. p. 376. SERV. in Virg. HOR. APOLL. l. 1. c. 3. APULEIUM, Metam. l. 2. [o] Vid. MACROB. in Saturn. l. 1. c. 20. SUIDAM. in Σάραπις. [p] HEROD. ubi ſup. [q] DIOD. SIC. p. 15. [r] Ibid. p. 77. PLUT. ubi ſup. p. 357. [s] PLUT. ubi. ſup p. 358. [t] VARRO apud Auguſt. de civit. Dei. [u] PLUT. ubi ſup. p. 373. Vid. KIRCHER Oedip. v. 1. p. 214. [w] PLUT. ibid. p. 359.

:ope [x]. This god became famous for the victory obtained by him over the Chaldean god, Fire; the ſtory of which in brief is this: the Chaldeans carried about their god, to combat with thoſe of other provinces, all which it eaſily overcame and deſtroyed, none of their images being able to reſiſt the force of the fire, till at length the prieſt of Canopus deviſed this artifice; he took an earthen water-pot full of holes, which he ſtopped up with wax, and having filled it with water, painted it over, and placed the head of an old image upon it, and produced it as a god. In the conflict, the wax being ſoon melted, the water ruſhed out at the holes, and quickly extinguiſhed the fire: In memory of this victory, Canopus is uſually repreſented in the manner we have juſt deſcribed, without arms, and having ſcarce any feet to be ſeen [y]. Yet others ſuppoſe, theſe were really no more than veſſels filled with the water of the Nile, which the antient Egyptians uſed alſo to worſhip.

Of the ſacred animals, adored by the Egyptians, none was held in ſo great reverence as the bull, by which they repreſented Oſiris. There were two of this kind kept in Egypt, one at Memphis, called Apis, by the Grecians Epaphus, and the other at Heliopolis, called Mneuïs, this laſt was black, and the honours paid to him were inferior to thoſe due to Apis [z]. The Apis was to be the calf of a cow incapable of bearing another, and no otherwiſe to be impregnated (as the Egyptians imagined) than by thunder. The marks which diſtinguiſhed him from all others were theſe: his body was black; except one ſquare of white on the forehead; he had the figure of an eagle on his back; a double liſt of hair on his tail, and a knot like a beetle under his tongue [a]. And others reckon no leſs than twenty nine marks peculiar to this beaſt [b]. They ſacrificed bulls to Apis, but were ſo nice in the choice of them, that if they found but one black hair upon them, they judged them to be unclean. This ſearch was made by the prieſt with the utmoſt precaution; after which he drew out his tongue, to ſee if he were clean in that part; and in the laſt place he examined his tail, to ſee whether the hairs were natural, and as they ought to be. The beaſt being found without blemiſh, the prieſt tied a label about his horns, and ſealing it with his ſignet, ordered him to be taken away and ſecured; for it was death to ſacrifice any beaſt of this kind that was not marked with ſuch a ſeal. The order and ceremony of the ſacrifice was thus: the victim being brought to the altar, they immediately kindled a fire, and pouring wine upon him, they offered their prayers to the god. Then killing the beaſt they flayed him, and ſtruck off his head, which they carried, with many imprecations, to the market or other public place, and ſold it to ſome Grecian, if they met with any; but if no ſuch perſon were to be found, they threw it into the river, with this form of execration; May the evils impending over the perſons now ſacrificing, or the Egyptians in general fall upon this head. This ceremony of libation, and the manner of devoting the head of the victim, was an univerſal practice over all Egypt; for which reaſon no Egyptian would eat of the head of any animal. But in the choice of their victims, there were different cuſtoms in different places [c].

[x] Vid. Plin. l. 6. c. 22. [y] Suidas in Canop. Ruffin. Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 11. [z] Plut. ubi ſup. p. 364. [a] Herod. l. 3. Vid. Plin. l. 8. c. 46. [b] Ælian. Hiſt. anim. l. 11. c. 9.

WHEN the Apis died, and his funeral pomp was over, the prieſts, who had this office, ſought out for another with the ſame marks, and when they had found one, the lamentations immediately ceaſed; and the prieſts led the calf firſt into the city of Nile, where he was fed for forty days: from thence he was tranſported in a veſſel with a gilded cabin to Memphis, as their god, and turned into the grove of Vulcan. For the above-mentioned forty days women only were admitted into his preſence, who ſtanding before him, lifted up their coats, and ſhewed him their privities; after which time they were not permitted to ſee the new god. The reaſon they gave for this worſhip was, becauſe the ſoul of Oſiris, as they pretended, migrated into a bull of this ſort, and by ſucceſſive tranſmigration paſſed from one to another, as often as one died, and another was found. But others ſay, that it was becauſe when Oſiris was killed by Typhon, Iſis threw his limbs into a wooden cow, covered with fine linen, from whence the city of Buſiris received its name [d].

THE feſtival of Iſis was celebrated with the utmoſt ſolemnity; for on the vigil thereof they faſted, and, having prayed, ſacrificed a bullock; taking out the bowels, and leaving the fat and vitals in the carcaſs; then cutting off the legs, rump, neck, and ſhoulders, and filling the body with fine bread, honey, dried raiſins, figs, incenſe, myrrh, and other perfumes, they proceeded to the conſecration, pouring in great quantities of oil. They ſacrificed faſting, and beat themſelves all the while the fleſh lay on the fire, and afterwards they feaſted on the remainder. The offerings of this kind of cattle, whether young or old, were to be unblemiſhed males; for the females, being ſacred to Iſis, could not be offered. Whence it was, that the Egyptians paid the firſt degree of veneration to that creature, and abominated the Grecians for not doing the ſame. When a cow died, they threw her into the river; but a bull was buried without the cities, leaving one horn, and ſometimes both, ſticking up as a mark of the grave. The fleſh being perfectly conſumed, and nothing but the bare bones left, they were tranſported to an iſland of the Delta, called Proſopitis, from whence veſſels were diſpatched to ſeveral parts of the kingdom, to collect the bones, and carry them away, and bury them together: the ſame was obſerved in relation to other cattle, the Egyptians being forbidden to kill any [e].

[c] HEROD. l. 2. [d] DIOD. SIC. ubi ſup. p. 76.

Jupiter was principally worſhipped at Thebes, thence named Dioſpolis; they eſteemed the ram ſacred on that deity's account, and, abſtaining from ſheep, ſacrificed goats only; only once a year, at the feſtival of Jupiter, they killed a ram, and flaying the carcaſs, put the ſkin on the ſtatue of the god, bringing at the ſame time an image of Hercules into his preſence, in memory of the above-mentioned paſſage between thoſe two deities: after which every one preſent gave the ram a blow, and he was buried in a conſecrated coffin.

The inhabitants of Mendes, on the other hand, ſacrificed ſheep, and no goats, becauſe they worſhipped Pan, whom they took to be one of the eight moſt antient gods, and always repreſented him with the face and legs of a goat, juſt as the Grecians did. Not that they imagined him to have been really of that ſhape (for as to that they deemed him to be like other gods), but for ſome myſtical reaſon. Though the Mendeſians had a religious veneration for goats of both ſexes, yet they eſteemed the male above the female, and paid great reverence to goatherds; and particularly to one, who at his death was univerſally lamented. In the Egyptian tongue, Mendes ſignified both Pan and a goat [f].

To the moon it was their cuſtom to ſacrifice when ſhe was at the full. The victims offered to her were ſwine, which the Egyptians held to be impure animals, and were forbidden to offer them to any other deities, than to that planet and Bacchus. When they made their ſacrifice to the moon, and had killed the victim, they put the end of the tail, with the ſpleen and fat, into the caul, and burned them on the ſacred fire, and eat the reſt of the fleſh on the day of the new moon, though they would not have taſted it at any other time. Thoſe whoſe poverty would not admit of the expence of this ſacrifice,

[e] Herod. ubi ſup. [f] Idem ibid.

fice, moulded a bit of paſte into the ſhape of a hog, and offered up that.

AT the feſtival of Bacchus, though every one was obliged to kill a hog before the door of his houſe in the evening, yet they inſtantly returned the carcaſs to the ſwineherd of whom it was bought. The reſt of this feſtival was celebrated in the ſame manner in Egypt as in Greece; excepting that, inſtead of the Phallus, the Egyptian women carried about little images of a cubit in height, each of which had a priapus almoſt as big as the reſt of its body, and ſo contrived with ſtrings as to move. With theſe the women marched in proceſſion, all the while ſinging the praiſes of Bacchus, and preceded by a flute [g].

THEY did not think it ſufficient in Egypt to ſolemnize the feſtivals of their gods at annual periods only; but they had ſeveral times in the year appointed for that purpoſe, when they viſited the ſeveral cities, where the particular deities were worſhipped, with great devotion.

THOSE of Iſis at Buſiris, and of Jupiter at Thebes, we have already mentioned; only in reſpect to the former, we muſt add, that after the ſacrifices were duly performed, the men and women who met together on that occaſion, to the number of many thouſands, diſciplined themſelves with an inſtrument our author dared not diſcover. In which devotion the Carians who lived in Egypt ſurpaſſed all others, cutting their foreheads with ſwords. The other moſt remarkable feſtivals were thoſe of Diana, at Bubaſtis, which was the Egyptian name of that goddeſs; of Minerva, at Saïs; of the ſun, at Heliopolis; of Latona, at Butus; and of Mars, at Papremis. Thoſe who aſſembled on ſuch ſolemn occaſions at Heliopolis and Butus, offered ſacrifices only, without any farther ceremony: but the others deſerve a more particular deſcription.

THE feſtival of Diana, in the city of Bubaſtis, was obſerved after this manner: great numbers of men and women embarked promiſcuouſly together, and during the voyage ſome of the women beat on the tabor, whilſt ſome of the men played on the pipe; the reſt of both ſexes ſinging and ſtriking their hands together at the ſame time. They ſtopped at every city they came to; where during their ſtay, the women were partly employed in their muſic, and partly in railing at the women of the place where they had ſtopped, or in dancing, and ſhewing themſelves naked. At length being arrived at Bubaſtis, they celebrated the feſtival with numerous ſacrifices, and conſumed more wine than in all the reſt of the year; for the concourſe of people upon this occaſion was reported to have uſually amounted to 700,000 men and women, beſides children.

[g] Idem ibid.

When they met to ſacrifice to Minerva at Saïs, they hung up by night a great number of lamps filled with oil mingled with ſalt, round every houſe, the tow ſwimming on the ſurface. Theſe burned during the whole night, and the feſtival was thence named, the lighting of lamps. The Egyptians who were not preſent at this ſolemnity, obſerved the ſame ceremonies, wherever they happened to be; and lamps were lighted that night, not only at Saïs, but throughout all Egypt. The reaſons for uſing theſe illuminations, and paying ſo great reſpect to this night, were kept ſecret.

At Papremis a very extraordinary cuſtom was obſerved; for after having gone through the uſual form of worſhip, a few of the prieſts, towards the ſetting of the ſun, attended about the image of Mars, whilſt the far greater part of them poſted themſelves before the gates of the temple with ſtaves or clubs in their hands; on the other hand, a company of men, who had devoted themſelves to this ſervice, and frequently amounted to above a thouſand, armed in like manner, drew up oppoſite to the prieſts, who guarded the avenues of the temple. The image of the god, which was kept in a gilded wooden ſhrine, and had been removed out of the temple on the eve of the feſtival, and placed in another chapel, was drawn by thoſe few who were appointed to attend it, together with the ſhrine in which it ſtood, on a four-wheeled chariot back again to the temple. But the prieſts who guarded the entrance refuſing to give them admittance, the before-mentioned votaries, in duty to the god, began to lay on the opponents with their clubs, whereon a violent conflict enſued, the blows being chiefly dealt on the head: inſomuch, that in all probability many muſt have died of their bruiſes, though the Egyptians would never allow it. The inhabitants of the place accounted for this barbarous inſtitution, by relating, that Mars having been educated abroad till he attained to man's eſtate, and coming home to ſee his mother, who was an inhabitant of this ſacred place, her ſervants, having never ſeen him, refuſed to admit him, and forcibly drove him away. Whereupon, retiring to another city, he got together a good number of men, and returning fell upon his mother's ſervants, and entered by force; in commemoration of which action this combat was inſtituted.

But there was nothing ſo remarkable in the Egyptian religion, as the prepoſterous worſhip that nation paid to animals; ſuch as the cat, the ichneumon, the dog, the ibis, the wolf, the the crocodile, and ſeveral others, which they had in high veneration as well dead as living. Whilſt they were living, they had lands ſet apart for maintenance of each kind; and both men and women were employed in feeding and attending on them, the children ſucceeding their parents in the office, which was ſo far from being declined, or thought deſpicable by the Egyptians, that they gloried in it as a high honour, wearing certain badges and enſigns, by which being diſtinguiſhed at a diſtance, they were ſaluted by bending of the knee, and other demonſtrations of reſpect. To theſe, and to the deities to which they were ſacred, the inhabitants of the ſeveral cities where they were worſhipped, offered up their prayers; and in particular for the recovery of their children, whoſe heads they ſhaved ſometimes all over, ſometimes only one half, or a third part, and putting the hair into one balance, and ſilver into the other, when the ſilver overbalanced, they gave it to the keepers of the animals; who therewith provided food for them, which was uſually fiſh cut in pieces; but the ichneumons and cats were ſometimes fed with bread and milk.

IF a perſon killed any of theſe ſacred animals deſignedly, he was puniſhed with death; if involuntarily, his puniſhment was referred to the diſcretion of the prieſts; but if a man killed either a cat, a hawk, or an ibis, whether with deſign or not, he was to die without mercy; the enraged multitude hurrying away the unfortunate perſon to certain death, ſometimes without any formal proceſs or trial [h]: an inſtance of which is given in a Roman, who happening accidentally to kill a cat, the mob immediately gathered about the houſe where he was, and neither the entreaties of ſome principal men ſent by the king, nor the fear of the Romans, with whom they were then negotiating a peace, could ſave the man's life [i]. For this reaſon, if any one by chance found one of theſe creatures dead, he ſtood at a convenient diſtance from it, and with great lamentation proteſted, that he found it dead. And, what may ſeem ſtill more incredible, it is reported, that at a time when there was a famine in Egypt, which drove the inhabitants to ſo great a diſtreſs that they fed on one another, there was no one perſon accuſed of having taſted of any of theſe ſacred animals.

THE extravagant worſhip which the Egyptians paid to theſe deities, as to the bulls at Memphis and Heliopolis, the o at at Mendes, the lion at Leontopolis, and the crocodile at the lake Mœris (D), and to many others in different places, exceeds all belief. For they were kept in conſecrated enclоſures, and well attended on by men of high rank, who at a great expence provided victuals for them, which conſiſted of the greateſt dainties, ſuch as the fineſt flour boiled in milk, cakes of ſeveral ſorts made with honey, and the fleſh of geeſe boiled and roaſted: thoſe who fed on raw meat were ſupplied with ſeveral ſorts of birds. And not only this, but they were waſhed in hot baths, anointed with moſt precious ointments, and perfumed with the moſt odoriferous ſcents: they lay on the richeſt carpets and other coſtly furniture; and that they might want nothing to make their life as happy as poſſible, they had the moſt beautiful females of their ſeveral kinds provided for them, to which they gave the title of their concubines, beſtowing extravagant attendance and expence upon them.

[h] HEROD. & DIOD. SIC. ubi ſupr. [i] DIOD. ibid. p. 75.

When any of theſe animals died, they lamented them, as if they had been their deareſt children, and frequently laid out more than they were worth in their funeral; as an inſtance of which, it is ſaid, that in the beginning of the reign of Ptolemy, the ſon of Lagus, the Apis dying of old age (E) at Memphis, his keeper beſtowed no leſs than fifty talents of ſilver, or almoſt 13,000 l. over and above all his ſubſtance, in the burying of him. And leſt this ſhould ſeem improbable, we are told, that ſome keepers of theſe creatures had ſquandered away 100,000 talents, a moſt immenſe ſum, in the maintenance of them [k]. In whatever houſe a cat died, all the family ſhaved their eyebrows; and if a dog, their whole body; nor would they make uſe of any proviſion which hap-

[k] Idem. ibid.

(D) The crocodile ſeems to be the laſt animal to which mankind could be tempted to pay divine adoration. That it might be done with ſafety, one of theſe creatures was trained up to be tame and familiar for the purpoſe, and had his ears adorned with ſtrings of jewels and gold, and his fore feet with chains. He was fed with conſecrated proviſions at the public charge; and when ſtrangers went to ſee him, which often happened out of curioſity, they alſo carried him a preſent of a cake, dreſſed meat, and wine, or a drink made with honey, which was offered to him by the prieſts, one opening his mouth, and the other feeding him. When he died, his body was embalmed, and buried in a ſacred coffin at Arſinoe (1).

(E) This contradicts that aſſertion of ſome, that the Apis was not ſuffered to live beyond a certain time; after which the prieſts drowned him in a ſacred fountain (2).

(1) Herod ubi ſupr. Strab, l. 17. p. 165. (2) Ammian. Marcell. l. 22. p. 227.

pened

pened to be in the houſe at ſuch times. In caſe of a fire, there was generally great lamentation among the Egyptians on account of their cats; for though, when ſuch accidents happened, they took greater care to preſerve the cats than their houſes, yet thoſe creatures, either by creeping ſlily on the ground, or leaping over the mens heads, for the moſt part found a way to throw themſelves into the fire. The dead bodies of the ſacred animals were wrapped up in fine linen, and carried to be embalmed, and being anointed with oil of cedar, and other aromatic preparations, to preſerve them from putrefaction, were buried in ſacred coffins. Dead cats were carried to be interred to the city of Buba ſtis; hawks, and the venemous mole were carried to Butus; dogs, bears, (of which there are but few in Egypt) and a ſmall kind of wolves, no bigger than foxes, were buried where they were found dead. And in performing this laſt honour to them, the Egyptians were ſo exact, that when they had been abroad in foreign wars, they frequently brought home dead cats and hawks along with them for that purpoſe, with great demonſtrations of ſorrow, though at the ſame time they often wanted neceſſaries [1].

How abſurd and ridiculous ſoever theſe ſuperſtitions may ſeem, yet they wanted not thoſe who endeavoured to defend them by various reaſons; though the prieſts generally affected ſilence on theſe occaſions, referring all to certain myſteries which they might not reveal.

1. THE firſt reaſon alledged, was from the fabulous tradition, that the gods, in the early ages, were obliged to transform themſelves into ſeveral kinds of animals, to avoid the aſſaults and cruelties of men, who had conſpired againſt them; but afterwards, out of gratitude for the many benefits beſtowed by them on mankind, thoſe in power ordained, that the creatures, whoſe ſhapes the gods had aſſumed, ſhould be well maintained while they lived, and honourably buried when they died.

2. SOME pretended this worſhip had the following original; They ſay, that the antient Egyptians being often routed by their neighbours, for want of a regular diſpoſition of their troops, they at length invented the uſe of ſtandards, to diſtinguiſh the different companies; and for that end fixed the images of the animals they afterwards adored on ſo many ſpears, and cauſed the leaders to carry them at the head of each troop; by which means every man knew his poſt: their obſerving this order often gained them the victory, the honour of which they aſcribed to the animals whoſe figures they had uſed for enſigns. Others will have theſe images to have been made uſe of in the moſt early times, to diſtinguiſh the firſt civil ſocieties, who united for mutual defence againſt the violence of their fellow creatures.

[1] Idem, & HEROD. ubi ſupr.

3. A third reaſon is taken from the great uſe and ſervice the ſeveral animals are of to mankind: as the ox for tilling the land; the ſheep by ſupplying milk and wool; the dog for guarding the houſe and hunting; the ibis and hawk for deſtroying the ſerpents and noxious inſects; the crocodile for defending the country againſt the incurſions of the Arabian robbers; the ichneumon for preventing the two great multiplication of the crocodiles; and the cat againſt the aſp and other venemous reptiles [m].

4. But men of better judgment, not ſatisfied with theſe reaſons, which ſeemed to them too weak to excuſe practices ſo diſhonourable to paganiſm, and at which they bluſhed in private [n], urged ſomething more ſpecious in favour of it, by pretending, that the worſhip paid by the Egyptians to animals, did not terminate in the animals themſelves, but in the gods, whoſe ſymbols they were, and to whom they had ſome peculiar relation. The philoſophers, ſay they, honoured the image of god wherever they met with it, even in inanimate beings, and conſequently much more in thoſe which partook of life. They therefore are to be commended who worſhip not the creatures, but the ſupreme Deity through them; which ſhould be eſteemed as ſo many mirrors, offered us by nature, reflecting the divine image; or as ſo many inſtruments of God in the eternal ſupport and preſervation of the world. Wherefore, if ſtatues ſhould be adorned with all the gold and precious ſtones in the world, it is not to them that men ſhould direct their worſhip; for the divine nature cannot dwell in the artful diſpoſition of colours, nor in matter which is ſubject to decay, and deſtitute both of ſenſe and motion. And they add, that as the ſun, moon, heaven, earth, and ſea are common to all men, but have different names in different nations; ſo there is but one Mind, and one Providence, which governs the univerſe, and has ſeveral ſubordinate miniſters, though called by different names, and worſhipped in divers manners, and with different ceremonies, according to the laws and cuſtoms of every country [o].

[m] Vid. Diod. Sic. ubi ſupr. Plut. de Iſid. & Oſirid. p. 380. [n] Vid. Plut. ibid. p. 379. [o] Idem ibid. p. 377, 382, &c.

Agree-

AGREEABLY to this notion, they pretended, that the hawk was an emblem of the ſupreme Deity, becauſe of its piercing ſight and ſwiftneſs. The aſp, the cat, and the beetle were alſo honoured as images of the divine power; the firſt, as not ſubject to old age, and moving without the aſſiſtance of limbs; the cat, becauſe they imagined ſhe conceived by her ear, and brought forth her young by her mouth, repreſenting the generation of ſpeech; and the beetle, becauſe they ſuppoſed there was no female in the whole ſpecies. The crocodile alſo they took to be another image of the Deity, becauſe of all animals it has no tongue, which organ GOD has no occaſion for [p].

THE relation the ſacred animals bore to ſome particular gods, or the ſervices they had rendered on ſome particular occaſions, or their being typical reſemblances of ſome parts of nature, are alſo mentioned as further reaſons for the great reſpect ſhewn them. Thus it is ſaid, that dogs were worſhipped becauſe they guided Iſis when ſhe ſought for the body of Oſiris, which they had guarded from wild beaſts [q]; though this creature afterwards loſt much of its reputation, by eating part of the Apis, which had been killed by Cambyſes, when no other animal approached the dead body [r]: that the hawk was deified becauſe one of thoſe birds, in antient times, brought a book to the prieſts of Thebes, tied round with a ſcarlet thread, containing the rites and ceremonies which were to be obſerved in the worſhip of the gods; for which reaſon the ſacred ſcribes wore a ſcarlet fillet, with a hawk's feather on their head: that the wolf was adored becauſe Oſiris aroſe in that ſhape from the infernal regions, and aſſiſted Iſis and her ſon Orus, in the battle againſt Typhon, wherein that uſurper was ſlain; or elſe becauſe when the Ethiopians once broke into Egypt, a great company of wolves fell upon the invaders and drove them beyond Elephantis; whence that nome was called Lycopolites; though others give no other reaſon for the reſpect paid them, than the near relation they bore to dogs: that the crocodile attained this honour, becauſe one of thoſe creatures ſaved Menes, an antient king of Egypt, from being worried by his own dogs, which purſued him to the lake Mæris, where a crocodile took him on his back, and carried him to the other ſide of the lake [s]: that the cat was revered as an emblem of the moon, for its various ſpots, fruitfulneſs, and activity in the night [t]: and the goat, the moſt luſtful of all creatures

[p] Idem ibid. p. 363, 380, &c. [q] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 77. [r] PLUT. ubi ſupr. p. 368. [s] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 78, &c. [t] PLUT. ubi ſupr. p. 376.

creatures, was the hieroglyphic of that violent impulse by which men are urged to propagate their species; and in honouring this animal, they testified their gratitude to the gods for the populousness of their country [u].

Not to take up the reader's time in enumerating the other animals worshipped in the several parts of Egypt, we shall conclude what we intend to say of them, with Herodotus's account of the Phœnix, which fable has given rise to whatever has been since related of that imaginary bird. He tells us, that the Phœnix was one of the sacred birds, which himself had never seen but in effigy; for he appeared in Egypt but once in five hundred years, immediately after the death of his father, as those of Heliopolis affirmed. The painters represented him with a plumage of crimson and gold, and of the shape and size of an eagle. They pretended, he came from Arabia, and brought the body of his father embalmed, which he buried in the temple of the sun. And this he performed in the following manner: first he moulded as much myrrh as he could carry in the shape of an egg, and having tried its weight, hollowed the egg, and put his father into it; he then stopped up the aperture again with myrrh, in such proportion that the weight of the whole might equal that of the egg before the body was put in, and carried it to Heliopolis [w].

Some other institutions of the Egyptians.

The Egytians are reported to have been the first who ordained that men should abstain from women in temples, and not enter any sacred place without washing after the use of a woman. They were also the first who assigned each month and day to a particular deity, and observed the times of each person's nativity; by which they judged of their future fortunes. They carefully registered all prodigies (in which their country is said to have abounded more than any other) with an account of their consequences; supposing, that if the like happened at another time, the event would be the same. However, they did not pretend to foretel any thing themselves, but all predictions were delivered by the gods. For if they were not the first nation which erected oracles, and introduced the custom of consulting them, it is however allowed, that the most antient and famous oracles among the heathens, particularly those of Jupiter in Libya, and at Dodona, owed their original to Egypt [x]; as will be mentioned in a more proper place.

[u] Diod. ubi supr. [w] Herodot. ubi supr. [x] Idem ibid.

There

THERE were ſeveral oracles in Egypt, as thoſe of Hercules, Apollo, Minerva, Diana, Mars, and Jupiter; but that which they reverenced above all others, was the Oracle of Latona, in the city of Butus [y]: and in after-times there was a very famous one of Serapis at Alexandria [z]. The ſacred animals alſo themſelves had their ſeveral oracles; as the Apis, the goat, the lion, and the crocodile [a]. The manner of conſulting the Apis was, by obſerving into which chamber, of two that were prepared for him, he entered; his going into one of them being conſtrued as a good omen, and into the other as a bad one: or elſe they offered him food, and from his accepting, or refuſing of it, concluded the anſwer favourable, or the contrary. It is ſaid, that Germanicus Cæſar conſulting this oracle ſome ſhort time before his death, the beaſt would not eat out of his hand [b].

WE muſt not omit to ſay ſomething of the human ſacrifices, which are ſaid to have been offered by the antient Egyptians. As red oxen were allowed to be ſacrificed, becauſe of their reſemblance to Typhon, who, it is ſaid, was red-haired; ſo men of that complexion were reported to have been ſlain in former times by their kings at the tomb of Oſiris: but few of the Egyptians having red hair, ſtrangers were the uſual victims; whence it is ſuppoſed, the fable, ſo current among the Greeks, of the cruelty of Buſiris to ſtrangers, took its riſe; not from any king of that name, but becauſe Oſiris's tomb was ſo called in the Egyptian tongue [c]. Men were alſo in old times ſacrificed at Heliopolis, and to Juno, or Lucina, at a city in the upper Thebaïs, called by the name of that goddeſs, who was worſhipped there under the form of a vultur. Theſe human victims were to be approved of in the ſame manner as the calves that were ſearched and ſealed as clean; and three were ſacrificed every day at a certain ſeaſon in the dog-days, being burnt alive, and their aſhes ſcattered abroad; to theſe unhappy men they gave the epithet of Typhonian [d]. This barbarous cuſtom was aboliſhed by Amaſis, who ordered, that ſo many images of wax ſhould be offered in their ſtead [e]: and there was ſo little remembrance of it left in the days of Herodotus, that mentioning a fable of the Grecians, that when Hercules arrived in Egypt, the Egyptians,

[y] Idem ibid. [z] PAUSAN. l. 7 RUFFIN. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 2. c. 23. [a] Vid VAN DALE de Orac p. 274. [b] PLIN. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 46. AMM. MARCELL. l. 22. c. 15. [c] DIOD. Sic. l. 1. p. 79. [d] MANETHO, apud Porphyr. de abſtin. l. 2. c. 55. Euſeb. præp. Ev. l. 4. c. 16. & Plut. de Iſid. & Oſir. p. 380. [e] Idem apud eoſd.

deſigning

deſigning to ſacrifice him to Jupiter, conducted him to the altar with great ceremony; but that he delivered himſelf, by killing all that were preſent; that hiſtorian judges thoſe who invented that ſtory utterly ignorant of the Egyptian laws and cuſtoms; for how, ſays he, can we imagine, that a people forbidden to kill any kind of animal, except geeſe, ſwine, and ſuch bulls, and calves as they find without blemiſh (F), would ſacrifice men [f]? however, that there was really ſuch a cuſtom ſeems undeniable from good authority; and is confirmed by the impreſs of the prieſts ſeal, which was ſet on the oxen that were to be ſacrificed; and on which a man was engraved kneeling, with his hands bound behind him, and a ſword at his throat [g]. We have formerly mentioned the human ſacrifices which were offered to the Nile, according to a tradition of the Egyptians [h]; but we do not find any notice taken of them in antient authors.

We have mentioned the worſhip of leeks and onions as one part of the Egyptian ſuperſtition; but as the hiſtorians mention nothing of this, we imagine the ſatyriſt, to heighten the ridicule, might go a little beyond ſtrict truth [i]; though there might poſſibly be ſome foundation for ſuch an opinion, from the ſcrupulous abſtinence of ſome of that nation from particular vegetables, as lentils, beans, and onions; the latter of which the prieſts abominated, as ſome pretend, becauſe Dictys, who had been brought up by Iſis, was drowned in hunting after them; or rather becauſe onions alone of all plants thrive when the moon is in the wane [k].

Before we quit this ſubject, the ſtructure of the Egyptian temples deſerves ſome notice. The firſt thing which offered itſelf to the view, was an avenue, or ſtone pavement, of a plethron in breadth, or ſomething leſs, and about three or four times as long; having on each ſide a row of ſphinxes, twenty cubits diſtant from each other. This avenue led to a portico, behind which was a ſecond, and ſometimes a third (the number of theſe porticos being not always the ſame). The temple itſelf conſiſted of a ſpacious and magnificent [f] Herod. ubi ſupr. c. 45. [g] Plut. ubi ſupr. p. 363. [h] See before, p. 391. [i] Juven. Sat. 15. v. 10. [k] Plut. ubi ſupr. p. 353. Vid. Diod. p. 80.

(F) From this paſſage, and what has been ſaid above, we cannot but think thoſe miſtaken who have aſſerted, that it was never lawful for the Egyptians to appeaſe the gods with cattle or blood, but only with prayers and incenſe (1).

(1) Vid. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 7.

court,

court, and a well proportioned chapel; in which was generally no image (for the Egyptians in the eldeſt times uſed none [l]), or if there was any, it was not of human form, but in the ſhape of ſome irrational animal [m].

The miſcellaneous cuſtoms of the Egyptians.

FEW nations in the world obſerved their original laws and cuſtoms ſo long as the Egyptians; and their exactneſs in obſerving ordinances of a higher nature was not to be admired, conſidering their ſtrict attachment to their own uſages and manners in trivial things; for a new cuſtom was a prodigy in Egypt [n].

IN the education of their children they were very careful; but they brought them up with great frugality, feeding them with cheap broths, made of common things, and with the ſtems of the papyrus roaſted under the aſhes, and the ſtalks and roots of other plants which grew in the marſhes, ſometimes raw, and ſometimes dreſſed. They went for the moſt part naked and barefoot during their childhood, becauſe of the warmth of the climate: ſo that the whole expence of a child, from his birth till he arrived at the ſtate of manhood, did not exceed twenty Drachmæ, or about thirteen ſhillings; which was one great cauſe that Egypt was ſo exceeding populous. As to the inſtruction they gave their children, the prieſts taught them two ſorts of letters, thoſe called ſacred, and thoſe in which their common learning was written: but exerciſed them chiefly in geometry and arithmetic: however, there were few of the inferior claſſes who learned to write and read, except the tradeſmen. But that they might be uſeful members of the commonwealth, and be enabled to maintain themſelves, they began very early to learn their paternal art, or profeſſion, either from their fathers, or near relations. Muſic and wreſtling they never taught their children, as diſapproving them both: the firſt they eſteemed not only uſeleſs, but rather hurtful, ſerving only to emaſculate the mind; and the other they believed did not tend to the preſervation of health, the ſtrength gained by it being of ſhort duration, and the exerciſe itſelf dangerous [o]. One particular of the education of the Egyptian youth was very commendable; for they were taught to behave with great reſpect towards their elders; being obliged to riſe up from their ſeats, and to retire at the approach of thoſe that were more aged; which cuſtom was alſo practiſed at Sparta [p].

[l] LUCIAN. de Dea Syria.
[m] PLATO, in Tim. p. 656.
[n] HERODOT. ubi ſupr.
[o] STRABO, l. 17. p. 1158.
[p] DIODOR. ubi ſupr. p. 72.

As to the diet of the Egyptians we have already made some occasional observations; to which we may add, that among them it was a reproach to eat bread made of barley or wheat; instead of which they used a fine flower, called by some olyra, and by others zea, or spelt; and this bread they named collestis, probably from its glutinous quality [q]. Their usual drink was (as it is at this present) the water of the Nile, which is very agreeable to the taste, and so fattening, that they never gave it to the Apis, lest he should grow too corpulent [r]. It is true, the water of this river is pretty muddy, but the Egyptians have a way of clarifying it, by rubbing the vessel with a little pounded almonds [s]. Their better sort of drink, or wine, as Herodotus calls it, was made of barley, because they had antiently no vines in that country [t], or rather did not cultivate them, nor do they yet in any other part than the province of al Feyyûm [u]. So that we are probably indebted to this nation for the invention of beer.

The Egyptians abstained from different sorts of animals, in different parts of the kingdom, according to the different deities they worshipped; but they all agreed in the aversion they had to swine's flesh; which was accounted by them so impure, that if a man but touched one of those animals by accident, he went immediately and plunged himself in the river with his cloaths on. And for this reason hogherds alone of all the Egyptians were not suffered to enter any of their temples; neither would any man give his daughter in marriage to one of that profession, or take a wife born of such parents; so that they were forced to intermarry among themselves. They eat fish, either pickled or dried in the sun; and also quails, ducks, and smaller birds, preserved in salt, without any other preparation: all other birds, or fishes, except such as they accounted sacred, they eat without scruple, either boiled or roasted. Those who dwelt in the marshes made food of several plants, which annually grow there, particularly the lotus, of which they made a sort of bread, and the lower stems of the papyrus, the head of which was reserved for other uses [w].

At their principal feasts it was their custom, when they began to taste the wine after supper, to bring in a coffin with the image of a dead man carved in wood and painted, of one or two cubits in length, or, as others say, a real corps [x]; which was carried about to all the company by a person appointed for that purpose, who repeated these words distinctly; Look upon this, and be merry; for ſuch as this is ſhalt thou be, when thou art dead [y]. This image ſome will have to be that of Maneros in memory of whom they ſung a mournful ſong at their entertainments, which they called by his name. Of this perſon there are various traditions: the Egyptians made him the ſon of their firſt king, who died in the flower of his age; others ſay, he was the ſon of a king of Byblus, in Phœnicia, and was frighted to death by the angry look of Iſis, for his prying too nearly into her behaviour to the dead body of Oſiris. This Maneros is reported to have been the firſt inventor of muſic; for which reaſon, and the conformity of the ſong to that ſung by other nations in honour of the Grecian Linus, Herodotus ſuppoſes him to be the ſame with that poet: but after all, ſome pretend, Maneros was not the name of a perſon, but of the ſong itſelf; and that the dead image repreſented the fate of Oſiris [z].

[q] Idem ibid. [r] Plutarch. de Isid. & Osir. p. 353. [s] Sicard, Mem des Miss. V. II. p. 401. [t] Herod. ubi supr. [u] Lucas, V. II. p 226. [w] See before, p. 401. [x] Lucian. de luctu. Silius de bello Pun. l. 3.

THE Egyptians were very cleanly, both at their meals and in other reſpects; carefully ſcouring the drinking-veſſels, which were of braſs, every day; and uſing frequent ablutions and purifications: they ſcrupulouſly avoided eating with ſtrangers, as unclean [a]; and for neatneſs chiefly it was that they circumciſed themſelves, which was a cuſtom among them from time immemorial [b], and eſteemed by them ſo neceſſary that Pythagoras, to have the liberty of converſing with the Egyptian prieſts, and entering into their temples, was obliged to ſubmit to this operation [b]. One of the fathers tells us, they were circumciſed at the age of fourteen [c]; but whence he had his information we do not know. Whether the Jews learned this cuſton of the Egyptians, as ſome of the prophane hiſtorians pretend, is a point we ſhall conſider in another place.

THE habit of this nation was a linen veſt, fringed at the bottom, which they called calaſiris; and over that they wore a white mantle of woollen cloth. But to enter any of their temples in that upper garment, or to bury their dead in woollen, was accounted prophane. Their manner of ſaluting one another abroad, was by bowing very reſpectfully, letting their hands fall down to their knees [d].

THE Egyptians, in ſeveral of their manners and cuſtoms, ſeemed induſtriouſly to act in contradiction to the reſt of mankind. For amongſt them it was the cuſtom for the women

[y] HEROD ubi ſupr. [z] PLUTARCH. de Iſid. & Oſir. p. 357. [a] Gen. xliii. 32. HEROD. ibid. [b] HEROD. ibid. DIOD. SIC. ubi ſup. p. 24. [b] CLEM. ALEX. Stromat. 1. p. 30. [c] AMBROS. de Abrahamo, l. 2. c. 11. [d] HEROD. ubi ſupr.

to

to be employed in trade and buſineſs abroad, while the men ſtaid at home to ſpin, and minded domeſtic affairs; and this perhaps gave occaſion to that extraordinary law, by which the ſons were not obliged to provide for their parents, but the daughters were. In carrying of burthens, the men bore them on their head, and the women on their ſhoulders; and when they made water, the women ſtood upright, but the men ſat. They uſed to eaſe nature at home, and eat publicly in the ſtreets; ſaying very juſtly, that ſuch things as were filthy, though neceſſary, ſhould be done in private, and ſuch as were decent in public. They kneaded dough with their feet, and tempered mortar with their hands. And whereas in other countries, the apartments of the cattle were ſeparated from thoſe of the men, in Egypt men and beaſts dwelt together [e]. And we might mention ſeveral other inſtances of the like ſingularity.

THE great virtue of the Egyptians, and wherein they pretended to excel all mankind, was gratitude; which they eſteemed to be of the greateſt ſervice in life, as the only encouragement to beneficent actions. And for this reaſon it was, that they honoured their princes as gods, ſuppoſing that thoſe whom providence had exalted to the throne, and endued with both the power and will to do good to mankind, participated in ſome meaſure of the divine nature; hence alſo proceeded the great reſpect they ſhewed to the remains of their dead anceſtors, and their conſtant endeavour to teſtify their gratitude to every perſon and thing from which they received benefit [f].

Of their funeral ceremonies.

THE Egyptians are ſaid to have been the firſt who aſſerted the immortality of the ſoul, which according to their doctrine, when the body was corrupted, entered into ſome other animal, and, paſſing by a continual metempſychoſis through the different kinds of animals, belonging to the air, earth, and water, returned again into a human body, after the revolution of 3000 years [g]. For this reaſon they endeavoured by art to preſerve the body as long as poſſible, that the ſoul might be obliged to contine with it, and not ſoon paſs into another [h]: and as the dead bodies, by the means they uſed, were of long duration, they ſpared no labour nor coſt in building their ſepulchres, which they termed their eternal manſions; at the ſame time being little curious in the ſtructure of their houſes, calling them inns, where they ſtaid but for a

[e] Idem ibid. [f] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 81. [g] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [h] SERVIUS in Virgil. Æn. 3. v. 67. Vid. AUGUST. Serm. de diverſis, & PLATON. in Phædon.

ſhort

ſhort time, whereas they remained in the other for a long courſe of years [i].

THE mourning for the dead, and funeral rites, in Egypt, were antiently theſe: when a man of any conſideration died, all the women of that family beſmeared their heads and faces with dirt, then making bare their breaſts, and girding their waiſts, they left the body at home, and marched through the ſtreets of the city, lamenting and beating themſelves as they went, attended by all their relations of the ſame ſex; the men at the ſame time forming another company, mourned in the ſame manner. And this they continued till the corps was interred; abſtaining in the mean time from bathing, wine, and the more delicate meats, and laying aſide their beſt attire. The firſt lamentation being over, the body was carried to thoſe who profeſſed the art of embalming, which like other trades, they learned from their anceſtors. Theſe ſhewed the kindred of the deceaſed ſeveral models, or patterns, in wood, and painted, together with the bill of the charges of each manner of preparation, and aſked them which they would chooſe: for there were three different ways of preparing dead bodies for burial. One was very exquiſite and expenſive, and came to a talent of ſilver, or about 258 l. 6 s. 8 d. the ſecond was inferior, and of a moderate price, the charge being 20 minæ, or a fourth part of the former ſum; and the third was very mean, and coſt but a trifle. This preliminary being ſettled, the embalmers took the body, and firſt drew out the brains through the noſtrils with a crooked inſtrument of iron, and filled the vacancy with certain medicaments. Then one, whom they called the ſcribe, marked out on the left ſide of the belly, how far the inciſion was to be made; and the parachiſtes, whoſe office it was to make the inciſion, taking a ſharp Ethiopic ſtone, cut open the body, as far as the law ordained, and immediately ran away as faſt as he could, all that were preſent purſuing him, throwing ſtones at him, and curſing him, to turn the execration upon him: for they thought it a very heinous crime to wound, or offer violence to a dead body; but the tarichevtæ, or embalmers, were highly eſteemed and reſpected, converſing with the prieſts, and being with them admitted, as perſons of ſanctity, into the more ſacred parts of their temples. When theſe came to dreſs the diſſected body, one of them thruſt his hand into it by the wound, and drew out all the inteſtines, except the heart and kidneys; another cleanſed all the entrails, waſhing them with wine of palms and aromatic odours (G). Then the belly was filled with pounded myrrh, caſſia, and other odoriferous drugs (frankincenſe only excepted); and the inciſion being ſewed up, the body was carefully anointed with the oil of cedar and other things for above 30 days, or elſe laid in nitre for 70 days, which was the longeſt time allowed. At the expiration of which term, they waſhed the whole body, and bound fillets of fine linen round every part, covering it with gum, which the Egyptians uſed inſtead of glue. And all this was done without disfiguring the body; ſo that the very hairs remained on the brows and eye-lids, and the reſemblance of the countenance was preſerved, and eaſy to be known (H). The embalmers having done their parts, the relations received the corps, and put it into a wooden coffin, ſhaped like a man, which they ſet upright againſt the wall of the edifice deſigned for that purpoſe (I). For ſeveral of the Egyptians kept their

[i] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 47.

(G) Plutarch writes, that when the belly was opened, they firſt expoſed it to the ſun, and caſt the bowels into the Nile, as what defiled the body (1)

(H) This ſeems a little extraordinary, conſidering how the fleſh of the face muſt have been dried by the ſalt; but an eye witneſs aſſures us, that he ſaw ſome embalmed bodies in Egypt, with the hair, beard, and nails, the fillets which covered the head and feet being rotted off. 2).

(I) To the deſcription of Herodotus and Diodorus given above, we beg leave to add ſome obſervations as to thoſe embalmed bodies, or mummies, as they are now called, which are frequently taken up and brought from Egypt.

The coffins in which they lie are very thick, and generally of ſycamore, which in Egypt they call Pharaoh's fig-tree, and does not rot ſo ſoon as other wood; though ſome are of ſtone, and others of cloths paſted together and very ſtrong. The top of the coffin is uſually cut into the ſhape of a head, with a face painted on it, reſembling a woman; the reſt is one continued trunk, and at the end of it is a broad pedeſtal, to ſet it upright upon in the reconditory. Some of theſe coffins are handſomely painted with ſeveral hieroglyphics.

The bodies appear in this manner: they are wrapped up in a ſhroud of linen, upon which are faſtened divers ſcrolls of linen alſo, painted with ſacred characters: theſe ſcrolls generally run down the belly and ſides, or elſe are placed on the knees and legs. The face is covered with a kind of head-piece of linnen cloth fitted with plaiſter, on which the countenance of the perſon is repreſent-

(1) Plut. apud Greaves, ubi inf. (2) Voyages de M. de Breves.

ed

their dead at home with them above ground [k], in magnificent apartments, having by this means the pleaſure of ſeeing the lineaments of their anceſtors, who died many ages before they were born; and they often brought the dried corps of a friend as a gueſt to their feaſts [l]. The way of embalming which we have deſcribed, was the moſt coſtly manner of preſerving the dead: thoſe who were unable, or unwilling to be at ſo great an expence, were contented with a more ordinary preparation, which was done in this manner: they injected a clyſter of oil of cedar by the common way, without opening the belly, or taking out the bowels, and laid the body in nitre the number of days above-mentioned; at the end of which they let out the oil of cedar by the fundament, which by a peculiar efficacy, brought away the whole paunch and entrails ſhrunk and putrified; the nitre having conſumed the fleſh, and left nothing but the ſkin and bones. And when this was done, they delivered the body to the relations with-ed in gold; and the feet have alſo a cover of the ſame, painted with hieroglyphics, and faſhioned like a high ſlipper. The whole body is ſwathed with fillets, or narrow bands of linen, beginning with the head and ending with the feet, ſo artificially, and in ſo inimitable a manner wound round with ſo many caſts and turnings, and ſo often one upon another, that there cannot be leſs than a thouſand ells of filletting upon one body. Thoſe which cover the head and face being ſo neatly done, that they hinder not, but one may ſee the ſhape of the eyes, noſe, and mouth. On the breaſt is a ſort of breaſt-plate, made with folds of linen cut ſcollop-wiſe, richly painted and gilt: on which is uſually the face of a woman with her arms expanded.

[k] CICER. Tuſc. quæſt. l. 1. c. 9. [l] LUCIAN. de luctu.

The inſide of the body is filled with medicaments of the conſiſtence, colour, and ſcent of pitch, or bitumen, which waxes ſoft by the heat of the ſun. In a ſcull of one of theſe bodies, there was found the quantity of two pounds of this preparation, which could not be infuſed any other way than by the noſtrils, as Herodotus intimates. And the tongue of one being weighed, was leſs than ſeven grains Engliſh (3). Some curious perſons in vain ſearched one of theſe mummies for the piece of money, which the antient Grecians are ſaid to put in the mouths of the dead, to pay Charon his fare (4). We are told however, that the greater part of theſe embalmed bodies have under the tongue a ſmall plate of gold, worth about two piſtoles (5).

(3) Thevenot Voy. part. 1. c. 6. Greaves Pyramidogr. p. 49. 50.
(4) Vid. Gaſſend. de vita Peireſc l. 4. (5) Burretini apud Thevenot. Relat. part. 1. p xxv.

out any further operation. The third and laſt manner of preſerving the dead, uſed only for the poorer ſort, was performed by cleanſing the belly by injected lotions, and ſalting the body for 70 days; after which it was taken away [m]. The wives of conſiderable perſons, and all women who had been beautiful and dear to their relations, were not delivered to the embalmers preſently after death; but were kept at home three or four days before they were carried out, to prevent thoſe artiſts from abuſing the bodies of ſuch perſons; for one of them was caught in ſuch an action, and accuſed of it by his companion. If any Egyptian, or even a ſtranger, was found killed by a crocodile, or drowned in the river, whereever the body came aſhore, the inhabitants were by law obliged, at their own charge, to embalm and place it among the conſecrated monuments, in the moſt coſtly manner; for none of his friends, or relations, or any other might touch his body, except the prieſts of the Nile, who buried him with their own hands, as ſomething more than human [n].

When the corps of the deceaſed was prepared for the ſepulchre, his neareſt relations gave public notice of the day when ſuch a one, by name, was to paſs the lake, in order for his interment; to which the judges and all his friends were invited. At the time prefixed, above forty judges aſſembled, and ſat in a ſemicircle in a certain place beyond the lake (which we ſuppoſe to be that of Mœris). The veſſel, whoſe pilot was, in the Egyptian tongue, called Charon, being ready hauled up to the ſhore, before the coffin which contained the body was ſuffered to embark (K), every one was at liberty to accuſe the deceaſed. If an accuſer appeared, and made good his charge, that the deceaſed had led an ill life, the judges gave ſentence accordingly, and the body was denied the uſual burial: but if the accuſer was convicted of having accuſed him unjuſtly, he incurred a ſevere puniſhment. If no accuſer appeared, or if the accuſation proved falſe, then the relations, laying aſide their lamentation, proceeded to recite the praiſes of the deceaſed; in doing which they took no notice of his deſcent, for all the Egyptians were held equally noble; but having mentioned in what manner he had been brought up and educated, they declared how he

[m] Herod. & Diodor. ubi ſupr. [n] Herod. ibid.

(K) This is the ſenſe of the original; though it ſhould rather ſeem, by the judges ſitting on the farther ſide of the lake, that the corps was actually ferried over, but was not ſuffered to be diſembarked, till ſentence had paſſed.

had had lived and behaved himſelf after he became a man, enlarging on his piety, juſtice, temperance, and other virtues; and beſeeching the infernal gods to give him a favourable reception among the pious. The aſſiſtants joined their acclamations to this funeral oration, and celebrated the praiſes of the departed, as of one who was going to dwell for a long ſpace of time with the juſt below. After this the body was depoſited in the ſepulchre of the family, if they had one; and if they had not, they kept it at home with them in the manner above-mentioned. Thoſe that were forbidden to be interred, either for crimes by them committed, or for debt, were depoſited privately in their own houſes. But it often happened, that the poſterity of ſuch perſons growing rich, paid their debts, or obtained their pardon, and buried them in an honourable manner.

IT muſt be acknowledged, that this inſtitution of the Egyptians, in relation to their treatment of dead bodies, was excellently contrived for the encouragement of virtue, and the diſcouragement of vice. It is very plain, that the Greeks took all they fabled concerning the infernal judges, and the happineſs and puniſhments of men after death, from this practice of the Egyptians: but Diodorus obſerves, that inſtead of bringing men to amendment of life by thoſe fables, they incurred the ridicule and contempt of profligate perſons: whereas in Egypt the reward of the good and puniſhment of the wicked, after death, was not fabulous or imaginary, but really and daily diſtributed in public, in the ſight of all men [o].

THE ſepulchres, wherein the Egyptians depoſited the bodies of their dead, were built in various manners, according to the perſon's condition. The magnificence of the royal tombs have been already hinted; thoſe of the antient kings at Thebes, it is ſaid, could not be exceeded by their poſterity. The ſacred commentaries mentioned forty ſeven of them; but in the time of Ptolemy, the ſon of Lagus, there were but ſeventeen remaining; moſt of which were quite decayed when Diodorus viſited thoſe parts in the 180th Olympiad. Of the pyramids, which were built for the ſame purpoſe, we have ſpoken ſufficiently; and the ſepulchre of Oſymandias we may mention hereafter. The Egyptians of lower quality, at a great expence, cut ſubterraneous grots, or dormitories, in the rocks; ſuch as thoſe in the Libyan deſerts, of which travellers ſpeak ſo much, calling them catacombs, or mummy-pits. The entrance into them is by a ſquare well, by which one may deſcend, ſetting the feet in the holes cut on each ſide for that purpoſe. Theſe wells are not of equal depth, but the ſhalloweſt are above ſix mens height. At the bottom of the well there is a ſquare opening, and a paſſage of ten or fifteen feet long, leading into ſeveral ſquare vaulted chambers, each ſide of which is uſually fifteen or twenty feet; and in the midſt of every one of the four ſides of the chamber is a bench cut out of the rock, upon which the embalmed bodies lie. At the head of them there is commonly an idol, at the feet the image of a bird; and on the walls are ſeveral hieroglyphics, which might ſerve for epitaphs. Beſides the principal bodies, there are other ſmaller ones, and particularly of children, which lie on the ground. Sometimes there are no leſs than twenty five or thirty of theſe chambers, or grots, having communication with one another; and the deſcent to them all is by one well [p]. The ſtones, of which Strabo obſerved a great number in a plain between Syene and Philæ, are alſo by ſome thought to have been tombs. That author calls them Hermæa, from the reſemblance they bore to the heaps of ſtones frequently erected by the highways in honour of Mercury; and he deſcribes them to be a great ſmooth ſtone, almoſt ſpherical, of that hard and black marble of which mortars were made, placed upon a greater ſtone, and ſurmounted by another; ſome of them lying by themſelves: the greateſt of them was no leſs than twelve feet diameter, and all of them above half ſo big [q].

[o] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 82, &c.

Of their arts and ſciences.

The antient Egyptians were the inventers of many uſeful arts and ſciences: and though they did not perhaps carry them afterwards to that perfection which might have been expected from them, ſince among them every man was obliged to apply himſelf to his paternal profeſſion, and was confined to one particular art, or branch of learning only; yet, whoever conſiders how difficult it is to lay the firſt foundations of any ſcience, be they ever ſo ſmall, will allow them great commendation.

As they acknowledge themſelves indebted to their firſt kings for inſtructing them how to provide the common neceſſaries and conveniences of life, ſo they attributed the honour of the firſt invention of the ſciences to their Hermes, or Mercuries [r]. How many there were of this name, when they lived, and what they invented, or wrote, we ſhall enquire in another place, contenting ourſelves here with a ſhort account of the arts and learning which the Egyptians are ſuppoſed to have [p] Burretini, ubi ſupr.

[q] Strabo, l. 17. p. 1173.
[r] Diodor. ubi ſupr. p. 41.

communi-

communicated to the reſt of mankind, and the progreſs they made therein.

THAT the Egyptians were early famous for wiſdom and learning, appears from many antient writers, and even from the ſcriptures themſelves: it is ſaid, among other things, to the honour of Moſes, that he was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians [r]; and to magnify the wiſdom of Solomon, we are told, that it excelled all the wiſdom of Egypt [t]. Prophane authors alſo unanimouſly teſtify this nation to have been the parents of all philoſophical knowledge, and the only men that perfectly underſtood divine things [u].

Of their geometry.

GEOMETRY is on all hands agreed to have been firſt found out in Egypt [w]; and is ſaid to have owed its riſe to the ſetting out and meaſuring of their lands, the bounds of which were annually diſturbed by the overflowing of the Nile [x]. How far the Egyptians improved this ſcience, is not very certain; but their ſkill therein ſeems not to have been very profound, or to have extended to all geometrical quantities and ſubtile theories, like that of the moderns: the utmoſt they knew was probably no more than plain meaſuring, and ſuch rules as were of common uſe in life. For Pythagoras, who travelled into Egypt for the ſake of their learning, after his return home offered an hecatomb, on his finding out the proportion of the longeſt ſide of a right-angled triangle to the other two [y]; and Thales, who alſo learned geometry in Egypt, ſacrificed an ox to the gods, for joy that he had hit on a method of inſcribing a rect-angled triangle within a circle [z]: both which inventions they could not have had from the Egyptians; unleſs we ſhould ſay that the Egyptians did not teach them all they could, or that thoſe two philoſophers unjuſtly arrogated to themſelves what they were beholden to their maſters for. Now, if theſe more ſimple, though noble propoſitions, were not then to be found in the Egyptian geometry, much leſs can it be ſuppoſed to have contained thoſe more abſtruſe theorems, and analytical methods, which were afterwards known, and for which we are indebted to the Greeks, who built ſo fine a ſuperſtructure on the old Egyptian foundation [a].

[r] Acts vii. 22. [t] 1 Kings iv. 30. [u] MACROB. in Somn. Scip. l. 1. c. 19. & Saturn. l. 1. c. 14. & l. 7. c. 13. [w] DIOC. LAERT. in Procem. STRABO, l. 16, 17. PLATO, in Phædro. ACHILL. TATIUS ad Arati Phæn. IAMBLICH. de vita Pythag. p. 144. [x] HEROD. ubi ſupr. DIOD. p. 73. [y] DIOG. LAERT. in Pythag. [z] Idem in Thalete. [a] Vid. BURNET Archæol. l. 1. p. 72. WOTTON's Reflections on antient and modern learning, c. 9. p. 115.

Arithmetic As arithmetic is not only of great use in itself, but absolutely necessary both in the theory and practise of geometry, that science was diligently cultivated in Egypt. That there was in later ages a kind of algebra known in that country, appears from the writings of Diophantus; but whether it was not an improvement made by the Grecians, after their settling there, cannot be affirmed; however, it was greatly inferior to the modern algebra in many respects [b].

Astronomy. It is generally supposed, that astronomy was also an invention of the Egyptians [c], who, by reason of the constant serenity of the air and the flatness of their country, might observe the heavenly motions earlier, and with more ease than other people. Herodotus indeed gives the honour of this to the Babylonians [d]; but Diodorus makes the Babylonians themselves, as well as their sciences, to have been transplanted from Egypt. He attributes the first invention to those of Thebes; and says, the Egyptians were accurate observers of the places and motions of the stars, and kept registers of their observations for an incredible number of years, having addicted themselves to this study in the most early ages; that they were well acquainted with the motions, periods, and stations of the planets, and with their influences and effects; and by long experience were often able to make surprizing predictions of events in life; and to foretel famines, plenty, pestilential diseases, earthquakes, the appearance of comets, and other things which seemed to exceed human capacity. The phænomena they seem to have observed were indeed the most obvious and easy; but thereby they were directed to adjust the length of the year to the annual revolution of the sun, which this nation first did, by adding to their twelve months, of thirty days apiece, five additional days and six hours, while the Greeks and Romans used the more rude and inconvenient form of lunar years, intercalating a month every third year [e]. But the great use they seem to have made of their astronomy was, either for the use of husbandry, or else for astrological calculations, with which the Egyptians were much in love. It is probable, they might have a true notion of the system of the world, and of the matter of the planets and fixed stars; for they called the moon, an ethereal earth, and affirmed the stars to be fire [f]; however, they were far from having an exact knowledge of the theory of the plane-

[b] Ibid. c. 14. p. 180. [c] Plato, in Epinom. Aristot. Metaph. l. 1. Diog. Laert. & Achill. Tatius, ubi supr. Manil. Astron. l. 1. [d] Herod. ubi sup. [e] Diodor. ubi supr. p. 46. Herod. ubi supr. [f] Procl. in Tim. Platonis, l. 1. p. 45.

tary

tary motions, ſo as to make any artificial calculations; ſince Thales was the firſt man who ventured to foretel an eclipſe [g], and Eudoxus and Ptolemy firſt reduced the heavenly motions into hypotheſes and tables [h].

THE ſcience of phyſic ſeems alſo to have owed its original to the Egyptians [i]. The invention of it is generally aſcribed to Æſculapius, which name was given to Toſorthrus, or Seſorthrus a king of Memphis, and the ſecond of the third dynaſty of Manetho, for his great skill in that art [k]. This prince was much more antient than the Grecian Æſculapius; and though Africanus places him ſome ages after Athothes, the ſucceſſor of Menes, and ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Thoth, or the firſt Hermes; yet others make them contemporaries [l], as they muſt have been, if this Æſculapius was the ſame with the ſon of Sydyc, and the brother of the Cabiri [m]. Athothes is alſo ſaid to have been a phyſician, and to have written ſome books of anatomy [n], unleſs we rather aſcribe thoſe writings to the ſecond Hermes, who might publiſh ſeveral inventions of the firſt Hermes, and of Æſculapius; for we are told, that among the Hermaic books there were ſix which treated of phyſic, and that the firſt of them was anatomical [o]. Iſis herſelf is ſaid alſo to have invented ſeveral medicines, and to have taught the art to her ſon Orus, or Apollo; whence ſhe was held by the Egyptians to be the goddeſs of health [p]. Phyſic.

THE Egyptian phyſicians mentioned by Moſes [q], ſeem rather to have been embalmers than phyſicians, in the ſtrict ſenſe of the word; unleſs we ſuppoſe both arts were originally profeſſed by the ſame perſon, which poſſibly might be the caſe, though in after-times it was otherwiſe. For every phyſician was not permitted to practiſe every branch of the art; but it was diſtributed into diſtinct parts, and each man applied himſelf to the cure of one diſeaſe only, pretending to no more. This occaſioned a great number of phyſicians in Egypt: ſome profeſſing to cure the diſeaſe of the eyes; others thoſe of the head, teeth, or parts about the belly; ſome applied themſelves to chirurgical operations, whilſt others undertook the care of internal diſtempers [r]: by which regulation great improvements might have been expected from them in their

[g] DIOG. LAERT. in Thal. et. CICER. de Divinat. l. 1. PLIN. l. 2. c. 12. [h] Vid. BURNET ubi ſupr p. 73, &c. [i] PLIN. Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 56. [k] Vid. SYNCELL. Chronogr p. 56, 57. [l] MARSHAM. Canon. Chron. p. 40. [m] See before, p. 302. [n] SYNCELL. ubi ſupr. [o] CLEM. ALEX. Str. l. 1. p. 634. [p] DIODOR. SIC. l, 1. p. 22. [q] Geneſ. l. 2. [r] HERODOT. ubi ſupr.

their ſeveral provinces, had not the laws as it were ſhut the door to any future diſcoveries, by obliging the phyſicians to preſcribe according to fixed rules and receipts, ſet down in their ſacred regiſters, which had been collected from long obſervation and experience, and approved by the moſt famous men of the profeſſion. So long as the phyſician followed theſe legal preſcriptions he was ſafe, let the ſucceſs of the medicines be what it would; but if once he ventured to depart from them, and to follow his own private judgment, he was anſwerable for the event, and run the hazard of his life in caſe the patient died [r]. It muſt be confeſſed however, that this was a moſt effectual method to prevent the miſchievous practice of empirics. Another thing obſervable, in reſpect of the Egyptian phyſicians, is, that they had a public proviſion made for them by law; for which reaſon they were not to take any fee from thoſe who happened to be ſick in the army, or on a journey within the kingdom [t].

The Egyptian medicines ſeem rather to have been calculated for prevention than cure; they chiefly preſcribed evacuations, which they effected either by clyſters, potions, or emetics, or elſe by faſting; and this they repeated every day, or let the patient reſt three or four days, according to the caſe: for they were of opinion, that in the digeſtion of all food, the greater part was ſuperfluous, and loading nature, cauſed diſeaſes [u]; for which reaſon thoſe who lived in the corn country uſed to vomit and purge themſelves every month, three days ſucceſſively, to preſerve health, though otherwiſe they were by nature one of the moſt healthful people in the world [w]. The better to promote the operation of their medicines, the phyſicians, together with their proper art, alſo ſtudied aſtrology and their ritual myſteries [x]; for the Egyptian practice of phyſic depended much on aſtrological and magical grounds, either the influence of ſome particular planet, or ſome tutelar dæmon were ſtill conſidered [y]; which precarious foundations muſt needs depreciate their ſkill, and ſtop any encreaſe of knowledge which might be made on other principles. However, we cannot wholly aſſent to the opinion of a modern writer, who thence imagines the antient Egyptian preſcriptions were not medicinal, but religious purifications only; and that their pharmaceutic books were filled, not with recipes for [r] Diodor. ubi ſupr. p. 74. [t] Idem ibid. [u] Idem ibid, p. 73. [w] Herod. ubi ſupr. [x] Scholiaſt. in Ptolem. Tetrabibl. l. 1. [y] Vid. Conringium de Hermetica. Ægyptior. vetere, & Paracelſica novâ medicina, and Wotton's Reſl. on antient and modern learning, p. 119, &c.

ſick-

ſickneſſes and diſtempers, but with meats and drinks, unguents, lotions, and purgations, proper to be uſed in the ſeveral ſervices of each deity [z]. What we have already obſerved from good authority, cannot agree with this notion.

Chymiſtry. THERE ſeems much leſs foundation for the aſſertion of ſome moderns, who tell us, there was a particular medicine uſed only among the Egyptian prieſts, and kept ſecret from the Greeks, and the generality of the natives themſelves; which medicine was of ſuch efficacy, that it could do any thing but reſtore life to the dead. This, they ſay, was the grand elixir, a chymical preparation made with the philoſopher's ſtone, the invention of Hermes; by the help of which the Egyptian kings were enabled to build the pyramids with the treaſures their furnaces afforded them [a]. But ſuch fancies are ſufficiently confuted by the profound ſilence of antient authors in the matter, and the weak arguments of thoſe who contend for this antiquity of chymiſtry, built on ſuſpicious authorities, uncertain conjectures, and allegorical interpretations of the fabulous ſtories of the Greeks, which they will have to be chymical ſecrets diſguiſed; fancying the golden fleece, which Jaſon fetched from Colchis, was only a receipt to make the philoſopher's ſtone; and that Medea reſtored Æſon, his father, to his youth again, by the grand elixir [b].

Anatomy. As they began to cultivate anatomy in Egypt very early, if credit may be given to what is ſaid above, and their kings ordered dead bodies to be diſſected for the perfection of this part of phyſic, it might be preſumed they made greater progreſs therein than we can allow, if two inſtances that are given of the accuracy of the Egyptian anatomiſts be genuine. One of their obſervations was, that there is a particular nerve which goes from the heart to the little finger of the left hand; for which reaſon the Egyptians always wore rings upon that finger, and the prieſt dipped that finger in their perfumed ointments [d]. And the following reaſon is given, why a man cannot live above one hundred years; becauſe the Alexandrian embalmers obſerved a conſtant encreaſe and diminution of the hearts of thoſe found perſons whom they opened, whereby they judged of their age; finding that the hearts of infants of a year old weighed two drachms, and this weight encreaſed annually by two drachms every year till men came to the age of fifty; from which time they as gradually decreaſed till

[z] SHUCKFORD's Connection, Vol. II. p. 408, &c. [a] Vid. BORRICHIUM de ortu & progreſſu Chemiæ. [b] Vid. WOTTON, ubi ſupr. p, 120, &c. [c] PLIN. l. 19. c. 5. [d] A. GELLIUS Noct. Attic. l. 10. c. 12. MACROB. Sat. l. 7. c. 13.

till they came to an hundred; when, for want of a heart, they must neceſſarily die [e].

Natural philoſophy.

Of the phyſiology of the old Egyptians (to conſider it here diſtinctly from their theology, which two the antients conſtantly joined together) we have not much to ſay. Their opinion as to the origin of things, and the mundane revolutions, we have conſidered elſewhere [f]. Their philoſophical doctrines, as it ſeems, may beſt be known by looking into that of the antient Greeks, who were their ſcholars, and travelled into Egypt for inſtruction in theſe higher parts of learning; from whence it was, in all probability, that Pythagoras brought home the knowledge of that antient ſyſtem of the world which bears his name, and is now ſo generally received; though it ſeems to have been part of the ſecret doctrine of the Egyptians, and not revealed to the vulgar. It may not be amiſs to obſerve, that the antient Barbarian philoſophers did not employ their ſtudies in the explication of this or that particular phænomenon, or direct their enquiries to the examination of things taken ſingly; it being in vain to expect from them, for example, the cauſe of the attractive power of the loadſtone, or of the colours of the rainbow; what is the ſubſtance of fire, and what the particles of water, or how great the force of compreſſed air: but their ſpeculations were about the mundane phænomena, or thoſe which affected univerſal nature; ſuch as the firſt beginning of things, their revolutions, periods, and final cataſtrophe [g].

Magic.

But the ſcience for which the Egyptians were particularly famous, and the attainment whereof was eſteemed the higheſt pitch of knowledge [h], was magic. Some, imagining the invention of this art to exceed human capacity, pretend, the angels, who fell in love with the antediluvian women, firſt taught it; that Ham preſerved the principal rules of it from being loſt at the deluge; and that Mizraïm learned thoſe ſecrets of his father [i]. But others aſcribe the invention to Hermes [k]; though it is ſaid to have been much improved by Nechepſos, a king of Egypt [l]. However, the art was certainly very antient in Egypt; they had magicians who pretended to the interpretation of dreams, and a way of divining by a cup in the time of Joſeph [m]; and very extraordinary inſtances were given of the power of inchantments in the days of Moſes [n].

[e] Plin. l. 9. c. 37. Censorin. de die natali, c. 17. [f] Introd. p 25, &c. [g] Burnet Archæol. l. 1. p. 78. Vid. Strabon. l. 17. [h] Plin. l. 30. c. 1. [i] See before, p. 265, and 166 in the notes. [k] Vid. Philastrium Brixienſ. Hæreſ. n. 3. [l] Auson. Ep. 19. [m] Gen. xli. 8. xliv. 5. 15. [n] Exod. vii. 11, &c.

The

The profeſſors of magic, among the Egyptians, were the prieſts and ſacred ſcribes, two of which order, named Jannes and Jambres, were pitched upon to withſtand that prophet [o]. Nor was this ſcience confined to that nation in thoſe early times: from the caution given by Moſes to the Iſraelites againſt them [p] it is evident, there were pretenders to it under various denominations, among moſt of the idolatrous people; and Balaam, in particular, ſeems to have been a conſiderable proficient therein [q]. The claim of Zoroaſtres, and the Babylonians, to the honour of the firſt practiſing and teaching magic, ſhall be conſidered in another place.

WHAT were the real grounds of this ſcience we cannot ſay; there is an innocent kind of magic, which conſiſts only in an excelling knowledge of nature, and its various powers and qualities in its ſeveral productions, and the application of certain agents to certain patients, which, by force of ſome peculiar qualities, produce effects very different from what fall under vulgar obſervation and comprehenſion [r]; but the magical wiſdom of the Egyptians muſt have been ſomething very different from this, or have gone much beyond what we are now maſters of, notwithſtanding thoſe vaſt and various diſcoveries which have been lately made in the properties of natural bodies; there being no one, as we preſume, who will now pretend to do thoſe wonderful things, which Pharaoh's magicians did when they contended with Moſes, not to inſiſt on the improbability, that that law-giver would forbid the practice of an art which he muſt know to be not only innocent, but valuable.

IT is therefore ſuppoſed, that theſe antient magicians formed the rules of their art, either from their ſuperſtitious belief of the great influence the heavenly bodies had on this lower world; or, from that other, though more late opinion, that the world was governed by inferior intelligences, or dæmons, and the ſpirits of heroes and extraordinary men deceaſed. As to the firſt foundation of this ſcience, we have already obſerved, that the Egyptians aſſigned each month and day to a particular god: they imagined, that the ſeven planets governed the ſeven days of the week [s]; and pretended, that, by the obſervation of the motion of the celeſtial bodies, through a long ſeries of years, they had obtained the art of foreſeeing future events [t]. They alſo

[o] 2 Tim. iii. 8. NUMENIUS apud Euſeb. Præp. Ev. l. 8. c. 8. ARTAPANUS apud eund. ibid. l. 9. c. 27.
[p] Deut. xviii. 10, &c.
[q] Ibid. c. xxiii. 4. Num. xxii. 5.
[r] Vid. Sir W. TEMPLE's Eſſay on the wiſdom of the antients.
[s] CICERO de divin. l. 1. c. 1.
[t] DION CASSIUS, l. 36. p. 37.

thought

thought the influence of thoſe heavenly bodies on the elements cauſed ſuch effluxes, as might affect the mind of thoſe who were duly prepared to receive them, ſo as to enable them to deliver oracles; and even that they might, by a proper diſcipline, make them capable of working wonders, and procuring prodigies [u]. For they believed the ſun, moon, ſtars, and elements were endued with intelligence, and appointed by the ſupreme Deity to govern the world [w]; and though they acknowledged, that God might [x], upon extraordinary occaſions, work miracles, reveal his will by audible voices, divine appearances, dreams, or propheſies; yet they imagined alſo, that, generally ſpeaking, prodigies were cauſed, oracles given, and viſions occaſioned in a natural way, by the obſervation, or influence of the courſes of heavenly bodies, and by the operations of the powers of nature: and they conceived, that their learned profeſſors could work miracles, obtain oracles and omens, and interpret dreams, by a deep ſtudy of, and profound enquiry into, natural knowledge, and, aſſiſted by a proper temper and diſpoſition of mind, attainable by the uſe of ſuch means as they thought had a natural power to raiſe warm conceptions, produce enthuſiaſtic fury, and fetter their reaſon, which they fancied averted the divine inſtinct, ſuch as inebriating liquors, muſic, and the like [y]; and in all theſe things they ſuppoſed the Deity not immediately concerned, but that they were the natural effects of the influence of the planets and elements, ſeeming ſtrange and unaccountable to the vulgar and unlearned, but fully underſtood by perſons of ſcience and philoſophy [z]. The other foundation of magic was built on an opinion which was ſomething later than the former, viz. that ſpirits or dæmons, of a nature ſuperior to men, were employed in the government of the world, and had their ſeveral provinces appointed them by God [a]; and to this honour they imagined the ſouls of departed heroes and extraordinary men were alſo admitted: for which reaſon they ſuppoſed, they had not only powers far exceeding thoſe of mortal men, but aſcribed oracles, viſions, and omens to the miniſtry of ſuch ſpirits. And theſe notions are not greatly different from the almoſt unanimous opinion of Jews and Chriſtians, who acknowledge the ſuperintendence of angels over human affairs, the malicious intermeddling of evil ſpirits [u] Plutarch. de defect. orac. [w] Vid. Cicer. de nat. Deor. l. 2. c. 15. & Acad. quæſt. l. 4. c. 34, 37. [x] Vid. eund. de divinat. l. 1. c. 55. [y] Vid. Plut. ubi ſup. p. 432. [z] Vid. Shuckford, ubi ſupr. p, 391, &c. [a] Plut. ubi ſupr. p. 418.

therein, and the great knowledge and abilities of both [b]. Whether, by the law of nature all kind of commerce with theſe inviſible agents was prohibited, or not, has been thought not ſo clear; though it be plainly forbidden to Chriſtians, either becauſe the government of the intellectual world was changed at the coming of CHRIST [c]; or rather becauſe of the miſchiefs that ill-deſigning men might thereby be enabled to do, and the door it might open to idolatry and ſuperſtition. That ſuch a commerce is, or at leaſt formerly was, poſſible, we cannot but confeſs; and we conceive it very difficult to account for ſeveral paſſages in ſcripture, without allowing it to have been practiſed; as we may obſerve hereafter: however much the greater part of what has been attributed to this ſort of magic, was undoubtedly the effect of impoſture and deluſion, which have been ſo apparent in ſeveral inſtances, as to tempt one almoſt to believe the ſame of all the reſt.

And other arts.

SOME of the other arts of the Egyptians, which were leſs conſiderable, we have already occaſionally taken notice of. The Greek writers tell us, that all trades and profeſſions in Egypt, even the moſt inferior, were not reckoned ignoble; huſbandmen, and thoſe who fed cattle, in particular, were much conſidered [e]; though theſe latter, in ſome parts of the country, were not ſuffered, but counted an abomination [f]; the reaſon of which was chiefly the difference in religion. For the ſkill of the Egyptians in architecture, mechanics, painting, and ſculpture, we need only refer to what we have ſaid in the preceding ſection: yet, as to the laſt, we may add, that their ſtatuaries worked by the moſt methodical rules of proportion, and not by the eye, as the Grecians did; and they judged of the exactneſs of the ſymmetry by the ſame. For they divided the whole body into twenty one parts and one fourth; and after the artiſts, who were employed, had come to a reſolution as to the ſize of the ſtatue, they went home, each taking his taſk, which they performed with ſuch ſingular ſkill, and made the ſeveral parts ſo accurately proportionable to one another as was wonderful. It is ſaid, the moſt famous ſtatuaries among the antients lived ſometime in Egypt; particularly Telecles and Theodorus, the ſons of Rhœcus, who made the famous ſtatue of Apollo Pythius in Samos, after the Egyptian manner; for it was divided into two parts, from the head to the groin; Telecles cutting one half in Samos, and his brother the other half at Epheſus; which being [b] See before, p. 103, 104.

[iv] See before, p. 301, 313.
[d] Geneſ. xlvi. 34.
[e] See BURNET Archæol. l. 1. p. 103.
[f] DIOD. Sic. l. 1. p. 67, &c.

joined joined together, fitted ſo exactly, that they ſeemed to have been made by one hand : and this ſeemed the more admirable, conſidering the attitude of the ſtatue, which had its hands ſtretched out, and its legs at a diſtance from each other, in a moving poſture [g].

Of their navigation on the Nile.

We had almoſt forgot to ſpeak of the extraordinary conſtruction of the veſſels which the old Egyptians made uſe of on the Nile. Their ſhips of burthen were made of the acantha, or Egyptian thorn [h]; from which they cut ſmall planks about two cubits ſquare : theſe pieces of timber they ſet together like tiles, and faſtened with a great number of long pins ; and when the whole was thus well compacted, they erected benches for the rowers. For they uſed no kind of ribs, or bent timber in their work, but ſecured the joints of the inſide with bands of papyrus. They had but one rudder, which paſſed quite through the keel, a maſt of acantha, and a ſail made of the papyrus. Theſe veſſels were very unfit to mount the river againſt the ſtream, and therefore were always towed up, unleſs the wind proved very freſh and favourable. But when they came down with the current, they faſtened a hurdle of tamariſk with a rope to the prow of the veſſel ; which hurdle they ſtrengthened with bands of reeds, and let it down into the water : they alſo hung a ſtone, pierced through the middle, and of a conſiderable weight, by another rope to the poop. By this means the ſtream bearing on the hurdle, carried down the boat with great expedition, the ſtone at the ſame time balancing and keeping it ſteady. Of theſe veſſels they had great numbers on the river, and ſome very large [i]. The Egyptian navigation by ſea we ſhall mention by and by, when we come to ſpeak of their trade.

How the Egyptians preſerved their knowledge.

The manner wherein the old Egyptians preſerved their knowledge, and tranſmitted it to poſterity, deſerves to be particularly conſidered. Their prieſts, as we have already intimated, were the depoſitaries of all their learning ; they had the care of their philoſophy and other ſciences, as well as of their religion and ſacred rites [k] ; and were the perſons to whom thoſe who deſired to be inſtructed therein were obliged to apply themſelves [l] ; for which purpoſes they had divers colleges, or academies, in ſeveral parts of the kingdom : one of which, at Heliopolis, is mentioned by Strabo, who viſited the apartments where Eudoxus and Plato had ſtudied for ſeveral years [m]. The Egyptian learning was partly inſcribed on columns, and partly committed to writing in the ſacred books. Not only the Egyptians, but ſeveral other antient nations uſed to preſerve the memory of things by inſcriptions on pillars: to ſay nothing of thoſe which Seth, as it is pretended, erected before the flood for the ſame purpoſe [n]; we are told, the Babylonians kept their aſtronomical obſervations engraven on bricks [o]; and Democritus is ſaid to have tranſcribed his moral diſcourſes from a Babyloniſh pillar [p]. But the moſt famous of all others were the columns of Hermes in Egypt, mentioned by ſeveral valuable authors: upon them he is reported to have inſcribed his learning, which was afterwards explained more at large by the ſecond Hermes in ſeveral books. It is certain, at leaſt, that from theſe pillars the Greek philoſophers and Egyptian hiſtorians took many things. Pythagoras and Plato both read them, and borrowed their philoſophy from thence [q]: Sanchoniatho and Manetho likewiſe made uſe of the ſame monuments [r], which were ſtill remaining in the time of Proclus, or not long before [s]. They ſtood in certain ſubterraneous apartments near Thebes [t]. To theſe inſcriptions ſucceeded the ſacred books, ſomewhat more recent, but not leſs famous; to which Sanchoniatho [u] and Manetho [w] are alſo ſaid to have been beholden for the perfecting of their hiſtories. For theſe books did not only contain what related to the worſhip of the gods, and the laws of the kingdom, but hiſtorical collections, nay, even all kind of miſcellaneous and philoſophical matters of conſiderable moment. For it was part of the buſineſs of the prieſts, or ſacred ſcribes, to inſert in thoſe public regiſters whatever deſerved to be recorded and tranſmitted to poſterity, as well as carefully to preſerve what had been delivered down to them from their anceſtors [x].

[g] Diod. Sic. ubi ſup. p. 88. [h] See before p. 401. [i] Herod. l. 2. [k] Vid. Porphyr. de Abſtin. Strab. l. 17. p. 1159 [l] Clem. Alex. Str. 1. Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 86. [m] Strabo, ubi ſupr.

THESE were the literary monuments of the Egyptians. Of each kind there were ſome that were obvious and plain to be underſtood by the common people and ſtrangers; and others more dark and myſterious, which were laid up in the inner receſſes of the temples, and communicated but to a very few. For there were two ſorts of learning among the antients, and particularly the Egyptians, the vulgar and the ſe- cret; the difference between which consisted not so much in the matter, as in the manner of delivering it [y]. The first was open to all, who might be instructed therein by the public monuments, and the ordinary masters; but the other, lest it should grow cheap, or be corrupted by passing through vulgar hands, was vailed and disguised by more methods than one. For the monuments of this superior sort of learning, besides being hidden in the private apartments of the temples, were written in a character not commonly understood, and guarded by the priests, who were extremely difficult of access, and could not be prevailed on to explain them, but after abundance of preparation and initiatory ceremonies [z]; a memorable instance of which was their usage of Pythagoras. This person, designing to travel into Egypt, desired Polycrates, the tyrant of Samos, to recommend him, by letter to Amasis king of Egypt, who was his particular friend, that he might have the freer admission to the secret learning of the priests; and when he came to Amasis, he obtained also of him letters to the priests, ordering them to communicate their knowledge to him. Thence he went, first to those of Heliopolis, who referred him to the college at Memphis, as their seniors; and from Memphis he was sent, under the same pretext, to Thebes: after much tergiversation, not daring to disobey the king's command, by any farther dilatory excuses, they endeavoured to deter Pythagoras from his purpose, by the infinite labour and trouble he was to expect, injoining him, in his noviciate, things that were very hard, and contrary to the religion of the Greeks [a]. And when he had undergone all this with invincible courage, he obliged them at length, against their wills, to admit him to a participation of their sacred mysteries, and profoundest learning [b].

[n] See before, p. 163. [o] PLIN. l. 7. c. 56. [p] CLEM. ALEX. ubi ſupr. [q] IAMBLICH. de Myſt. § 1. c. 2. PROCLUS apud Burnet, ubi infra. [r] EUSEB. Præp. Ev. l 1. c. 9 & 10. & Chron. Gr. p. 6. [s] PROCLUS ubi ſupr. [t] PAUSAN. l. 1. p. 78. AMMIAN. MARCEL. l. 22. p. 232. [u] EUSEB. Præp. Ev. l 1. c. 9. [w] JOSEPH. cont. Apion. l. 1. [x] Vid. eund. ibid. PLAT. in Tim. STRAB. l. 17. p. 139.

The last method, which the Egyptians took to conceal their doctrines from popular conception, was, by wrapping them up in hieroglyphics, symbols, ænigmas, and fables. Of the hieroglyphic figures we shall take notice immediately. As to the rest, it is well known, that the antients in general used to deliver their instructions under those dark vails of allegory and fiction; instances of which are too frequent, both in sacred and prophane writers, to need quotation: there being few, or none, in the most early times, either among the Greeks or Barbarians, who taught any part of philosophy

[y] See before, p. 120, Strab. l. 17. p. 1159. Porphyr. de vita Pythag.

[z] Plutarch de Isid. & Osir, p. 354.

[a] See before, p. 463.

[b] Por-plainly

plainly and intelligibly [c]; as if they thought, that to expreſs things in a familiar and eaſy manner argued want of acuteneſs; or elſe imagined, that modeſty forbad them to ſhew truth naked to the vulgar. The Egyptians ſeem to have excelled other nations in the obſcurity of their fictions; wherein the footſteps of truth were often ſo faint, that they required a ſagacious tracer, and one able to diſcern things of moment from trifles [d].

IN their inſcriptions and writings, the Egyptians made uſe of three ſeveral ſorts of characters; the firſt and moſt antient was that of hieroglyphical figures of various animals, the parts of human bodies, and mechanical inſtruments; of which three things the hieroglyphics, both of the Ethiopians and Egyptians, conſiſted [e]: though there is reaſon to think, the Egyptians had alſo another ſort of characters, called hieroglyphical, and made uſe of by the prieſts, ſomething reſembling the preſent Chineſe characters [f]. They are ſaid to have been the invention of Hermes; and a ſpecimen of his performance therein is given us by Sanchoniatho [g]. The conjecture of Sir John Marſham is by no means improbable, that the uſe of theſe hieroglyphical figures of animals introduced the ſtrange worſhip which was paid them by that nation [h]; for as thoſe figures were made choice of according to the reſpective qualities of each animal, to expreſs the qualities and dignities of the perſons they repreſented, which were generally their gods, princes, and great men; the people became gradually accuſtomed to theſe figures, which they uſed to place in their temples as the images of their deities; whence it is not abſurd to imagine, that they came at length to pay a ſuperſtitious veneration to the living animals themſelves. And this opinion we rather approve, than the contrary one of a late learned writer, who ſuppoſes the ſacred animals were firſt appointed and conſecrated to each god, and the hieroglyphics afterwards formed from them [i].

THERE are large collections among the antiquaries of hieroglyphical inſcriptions, images, and pictures, which they have taken a great deal of pains to explain, but with very little ſucceſs [k]; for if we except a few of theſe characters,

[c] Vid. DIOG. LAERT. in proœm. PHORNUT. cap. de fab. antiq. trad. CLEM. ALEX. Strom. l. 5. p. 556, &c.
[d] PLUT. Erotic. p. 762. [e] DIOD. SIC. l. 3. p. 145.
[f] Vid PORPHYR. de vita Pythag. p. 12. [g] See before, p. 307.
[h] MARSH. Can. Chron. p. 38. [i] SHUCKFORD. Connect. Vol. II. p. 331, &c. [k] Vid. KIRCHER. Oedip. MONTFAUCON, Antiq. expliq PIGNORII Menſ. Iſiac. &c.

the meaning of which has been preſerved by old writers (L), there is great reaſon to ſuſpect their conjectures are very ill founded; and particularly as to thoſe figures which they ſuppoſe to repreſent the old Egyptian gods; the greater part of them being in human form, with the head of ſome animal, or elſe diſtinguiſhed by ſome animal repreſentation ſet upon their heads, or near them; whereas images of human form, as we have obſerved, were not introduced among the Egyptians till later times; and why ſuch figures might not be made in memory of ſome of their moſt famous men, we cannot ſee, ſince it was the old Egyptian cuſtom to repreſent, not the man's perſon, but his manners, characters, ſtation, and honour [l]; and this they did by hieroglyphics.

Besides theſe the Egyptians alſo uſed literal characters, of which they had two ſorts, one of them they called the ſacred letters, in which their public regiſters, and all matters of a higher nature were written; and the other the vulgar, or epiſtolographic, made uſe of by every body in common buſineſs [m]. The Egyptians were not the only people who obſerved ſuch a diſtinction in their writing; ſeveral of the eaſtern nations, particularly the Ethiopians and Babylonians, had two different kinds of letters [n]; and the modern Bramins among the Indians, have not only a ſacred character, but a ſacred language alſo, in which they are very ſhy of inſtructing ſtrangers [o].

When, and by whom letters were invented, we ſhall not now enquire; it will be ſufficient to obſerve here, that

[l] Vid. Plut. ubi ſup. See Shuckford, Connect. Vol. II. p. 348, &c. [m] Herod. l. 2. Diodor. l. 1. p. 72. Vid. Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. p. 555. Porphyr. de vita Pythag. p. 185. [n] Vid. Diodor. l. 3. p. 144. Diog. Laert. in Democrito, Lucian. de Macrob. [o] Vid. Burnet Archæol. l. 1. cap. 8.

(L) Thus we are told, they repreſented the ſupreme Deity, by a ſerpent with the head of a hawk (1). The hawk itſelf was the hieroglyphic of Oſiris; the river-horſe of Typhon; the dog of Mercury; the cat of the moon, or Diana; the beetle of a couragious warrior; a new-born child of the riſing ſun, and the like (2).

(1) Euſeb. de præp. Ev. l. 3. c. 10. p. 41. (2) Vid. Plut. de Iſid. & Oſir. Diod. l. 3. p. 145. Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5 p. 566.

though

though moſt other nations are ſuppoſed to have received them from the Egyptians, yet themſelves poſſibly learned them of their neighbours the Ethiopians, among whom letters were in uſe very early, and whoſe vulgar character became the ſacred one of the Egyptians [P]. Both theſe ſorts of old Egyptian letters are now loſt, or if the forms of them remain in any old inſcriptions, they are unintelligible, and cannot be decyphered. All that we know of them is, that the alphabet conſiſted of twenty five letters [q], and that they wrote from the right hand to the left [r], as moſt of the oriental nations ſtill do. We can by no means come into the opinion of thoſe who imagine the preſent Coptic letters to have been thoſe of the antient Egyptians (M); for the Coptic alphabet

[P] DIODOR. ubi ſup. [q] PLUT. de Iſid. & Oſir. p. 374. [r] HERROD. ubi ſup.

(M) Della Valle thinks the modern Coptic letters were the vulgar letters of the antient Egyptians, and not taken by them from the Greeks; becauſe, 1. the Greeks, when they expreſs numbers by letters, according to the order of the alphabet, for the number 6, uſe ϛ, which is ſuppoſed to be not a ſingle letter, but the compound character Sigma-tau; for which they are not able to give any reaſon; where s by the Coptic alphabet it appears to have been originally the ſixth letter, though it be wanting in the Greek. 2. The Copts pronounce the vowels and dipthongs, not according to the corrupt pronunciation of the modern Greeks, but after the antient manner. 3. He found ſome Coptic letters on a mummy among hieroglyphics; which ſhews they were in uſe before that way of writing was loſt (3). But it may be anſwered, that the Greek numeral ϛ, and the Coptic So, are really no other than the Samaritan Waw ſet backwards, or the Æolic Digamma, which the Greeks afterwards threw out of their common alphabet, as they did the Koppa and Sampi (the Samaritan Koph and Sade), they being alſo uſed as numerals only; but the Copts have retained the figure of the Waw, calling it So, or Sou (which ſignifies ſix, the number it ſtands for) though they never uſe it, we believe, otherwiſe than as a numeral; nay in ſome Coptic alphabets, the Koppa and Sampi are ſtill inſerted (4). Which joined with the other two arguments of della Valle, may prove the Greek letters to have been uſed very early in Egypt, but not that they were originally Egyptian.

Kircher (5) goes ſomething farther. He endeavours to prove the Coptic letters were invented by Hermes, and moſt of them form-alphabet is manifeſtly nothing elſe but the Greek, with the addition of ſome few letters, to expreſs ſounds which the Grecians had not, and probably came to be uſed in Egypt after the time of Alexander, though we know the Greek language, and perhaps their letters alſo, was taught there long before, in the reign of Pſammitichus [f]. That the reader may judge of this affinity, we have here inſerted the Coptic alphabet.

(3) Della Valle, Viag. let. II. (4) Vid. Ed. Bernardi Tab. alphabetor. n. XXVI. (5) In Oedip. Egypt. Tom. 3. p. 42, &c. & in Turr. Babel. p. 177, &c.

The

[f] Idem. ibid. Diodor. l. 1. p. 61.

ed from ſome of the ſacred animals, as the ibis, the ſerpent, the bull, the ram, and the hawk. And to ſuch as have not pertinent names, he gives others, which have an apt ſignification in Coptic: Zida, for example, he calls Zeuta, i. e. life, of which the ſerpent, whoſe form this letter bears, is the ſymbol; & Xi he calls Xanuti, i. e. a chain, the links of which it ſeems to reſemble. Plutarch indeed tells us, that the firſt Egyptian letter was the ibis (6); that bird with its legs divaricated, and bill inſerted between them, making the figure of an equilateral triangle (7), which comes ſomething near the Coptic Alpha; but we know not how this can be carried farther with any certainty. Clemens Alexandrinus mentions four golden images of gods, viz. two dogs, a hawk, and an ibis, which uſed to be carried in proceſſion at a certain ſolemnity, and that they called them four letters (8). Now though Kircher has derived ſeven letters from the ibis, and one from the hawk, yet he could find none that ſeemed to have any affinity with the dog; which ſhews how precarious theſe conjectures are, though we confeſs them to be ingenious. It is not improbable, that the Egyptians in later times, when they had loſt their antient letters and learning, and had for ſome centuries made uſe of the Greek alphabet only, the introduction of which they had forgotten, might imagine their preſent letters to be thoſe antient ones uſed by their anceſtors, and thereupon endeavour to find myſteries in them, which it is eaſy for men of warm conceptions, and a peculiar way of thinking, to do in the moſt trivial things.

Another learned author ſeems alſo to have been once of opinion, that the Greek alphabet was derived from the Coptic; for he ſays, the letters uſed by Moſes, and throughout all Aſia, have not the leaſt affinity with the Greek (contrary to the ſentiments of almoſt all learned men beſides); but that the Coptic, or Egyptian, letters have the utmoſt reſemblance to them, and, which he thinks more obſervable, the manner of writing in all Aſia is from the right hand to the lef; but the manner of writing in Egypt and Greece, is from the left hand to the right; and this he wonders Sir Iſaac

(6) Plut. Sympoſ. l. 4. quæſt. 5. (7) Ibid. l. 9. quæſt. 3.
(8) Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. p. 567.

Newton

The COPTIC ALPHABET.

Figure.	Name.	Power.	Figure.	Name.	Power.
Ⲁ ⲁ	Alphe	A.	Ⲡ ⲡ	Pi	P.
Ⲃ ⲃ	Bita	B. V.	Ⲣ ⲣ	Ro	R.
Ⲅ ⲅ	Gamma	G.	Ⲥ ⲥ	Sima	S.
Ⲇ ⲇ	Delda	D	Ⲧ ⲧ	Tau	T.
Ⲉ ⲉ	Ei	E.	Ⲩ ⲩ	Ypſilon	Y. U.
Ⲋ ⲋ	So	S.	Ⲫ ⲫ	Phi	Ph.
Ⲍ ⲍ	Zita	Z.	Ⲭ ⲭ	Chi	Ch. Grat.
Ⲏ ⲏ	Hita	I. Æ.	Ⲱ ⲱ	O	O long.
Ⲑ ⲑ	Thita	Th.	Ⲯ ⲯ	Shei	Sh.
Ⲓ ⲓ	Iauda	I.	Ⲫ ⲫ	Fei	F.
Ⲕ ⲕ	Kappa	K.	Ⲭ ⲭ	Khei	Kh.
Ⲗ ⲗ	Lauda	L.	Ⲭ ⲭ	Hori	H.
Ⲙ ⲙ ⲛ	Mi	M.	Ⲍ ⲍ	Janja	J.
Ⲛ ⲛ	Ni	N.	Ⲥ ⲥ	Shima	Sh.
Ⲝ ⲝ	Xi	X.	Ⲧ ⲧ	Dhei	Dh.
Ⲟ ⲟ	O	O ſhort.	Ⲯ ⲯ	Epſi	Pſ.

THE Egyptian language is certainly one of the moſt antient in the world, and in all probability an original, or mother tongue, formed at the confuſion of Babel[t]. It was certainly a diſtinct tongue, at leaſt ſo early as the time of Joſeph, who, when he was made governor of Egypt, had a new name given him of Egyptian derivation[u], and ſpeaking to his brethren in that language, was obliged to make uſe of an interpreter[x]: and yet this very language is in great meaſure preſerved to our own times in the preſent Coptic, though, by reaſon of the almoſt continual ſubjection of that nation to foreigners, ever ſince their conqueſt by Cambyſes, a conſiderable part of it has been loſt; in return for which it has received a great number of Greek, and ſome Perſian, Latin, and Arabic words, during the long time they were under the ſucceſſive government of thoſe people. The Arabic at preſent prevails ſo univerſally in Egypt, that the Copts, or native Egyptians themſelves, generally ſpeak no other, the common people having utterly loſt the knowledge of their antient tongue, which few, even of their prieſts, underſtand to any degree of perfection[y].

Of their language.

THE Coptic tongue at preſent conſiſts chiefly of the old Egyptian and Greek; ſtill bearing evident marks of primitive antiquity in its ſtructure and conſtitution, wherein it differs ſo widely from all the oriental and European languages, that it is impoſſible to conceive it derived from any of them. For the Copts neither decline their nouns, nor conjugate their verbs, (not even thoſe of foreign extract) otherwiſe than by prefixing [t] See before, p. 346. [u] Geneſ. xli 45. [x] Geneſ. xlii. 23. [y] Vid. SICARD. dans les Memoires des Miſſions, Tom. II. p. 61.

Newton could not diſtinguiſh (1). We agree, that the manner of writing in Egypt, is now as this gentleman ſays, (we mean when they write Coptic) but that it was ſo antiently he would have been much in the wrong to affirm, Herodotus expreſly teſtifying the contrary (2); and the derivation of the Greek alphabet from the Samaritan is ſo apparent, that this writer himſelf, in a later work of his, ſeems to make no doubt of it; and goes a little too far, as we apprehend, on the other ſide, in aſſerting the Samaritan Characters to have been the old Egyptian (3); which may poſſibly be true, but is more, we believe, than he is able to prove.

We will not deny however, but that the ſeven letters added by the Egyptians to the Greek alphabet, may be the remains of their antient character; though we are rather of a contrary opinion.

(1) Bedford's Animad. on Sir Iſaac Newton's Chronol. p. 27, 68. (2) See before, page 485. (3) Bedford's Script. Chronol. p. 494.

particles sometimes of one or more syllables, and sometimes of a single letter, which denote the case, gender, number, and person; several of them being often joined together in one word, and the primitive word usually placed last. So that the difficulty of this tongue consists in the incredible combination of the words and particles, in the change of the vowels, and in transposing the middle part of the word, and adding of superfluous letters; to distinguish which requires great labour and skill [z].

Of their trade and navigation.

As Egypt is excellently situated for commerce, the trade of the western parts of Asia, all Europe, and the north lying open to it by the Mediterranean sea, and that of Arabia, Persia, India, and the southern and western coasts of Africa by the red sea; the eastern merchandises being commodiously brought into Egypt on camels by the Isthmus of Sues; it is to be presumed so industrious and sensible a people were not long without making use of those advantages; which they might be induced to, not only by the prospect of gain, but also to supply themselves with those things which their country wanted, such as metals, wood, pitch, rosin, and the like; which they might do, by disposing of their own many and rich productions and manufactures, such as corn, linen, paper, glass, and several other valuable commodities. Sir John Marsham [a] supposes, that the Egyptians did not apply themselves to merchandise till the time of the Ptolemies; but in this he seems to be mistaken; for though those princes did very much encourage trade, recovering that of the east of their subjects, by building of Berenice, Myos hormos, and other ports on the Arabian gulph, so that Alexandria became the greatest mart in the world; yet the Egyptians certainly traded very considerably with foreigners long before. For, not to insist on their claim to the first invention of commerce, which they say was found out by Osiris, and their Mercury [b], Diodorus does not only tell us, that Psammitichus gained great riches by trade before he was king of all Egypt [c]; but we learn from scripture, that the Midianites and Ismaelites traded thither so early as the time of Jacob [d]; and it is presumed, that they had antiently the sovereignty of the red sea, by which means they engrossed all the trade of the Indies, and other parts which were then carried on that way [e]. They seem indeed to have been dispossessed of it, if what Philostratus [f] re[z] Vid. Wilkins, Differt. de ling. Coptica, p. 120, &c. [a] Canon Chron. Sec. 14. p. 367. [b] Vid. Huet. Hist. du Commerce & de la Navig. des anciens, c. 7 [c] Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 60. [d] Genes xxxvii. 25, 36. [e] Vid. Huet. ubi supr. c. 48. [f] De vita Apollonii, l. 3. c. 35.

lates

lates be true, by a certain prince named Erythras (whom ſome imagine to be the ſame with Eſau, or Edom); for he, being maſter of the red ſea, made a law, or regulation, that the Egyptians ſhould not enter that ſea with any ſhips of war, and with no more than one merchant ſhip at a time. To evade which, the Egyptians built a veſſel ſo large and capacious, that it might ſupply the place of ſeveral. However, afterwards David, becoming maſter of Elath and Eſiongeber, two ports on the red ſea belonging to Edom, which he had conquered, built ſhips there, as ſome ſay, and fetched gold from Ophir [g]; but whether that be true or no, Solomon his ſon certainly eſtabliſhed a very great trade there [h], which it is not improbable he might do by permiſſion, or connivance of the Egyptians, to whoſe king he was ſon-in-law. And this trade the Jews continued to ſhare with them, with ſome little interruption, till the time of Ahaz, when they entirely loſt it, and it fell into the hands of the Syrians [i], and after of the Tyrians [k], till the Ptolemies recovered the whole again to their own ſubjects, as has been ſaid.

SOME writers [l] have indeed expreſly aſſerted, that Pſammitichus was the firſt king of Egypt who opened the ports to ſtrangers, and granted foreign traders ſecurity in his dominions; and that the antient princes, being content with the abundant riches of their own country, permitted ſtrangers to have no acceſs to it, fortifying the frontiers againſt them, and particularly againſt the Greeks. But this cannot be underſtood of any other commerce than that which was driven by the Mediterranean ſea, where the Greeks exerciſed their piracies along the coaſts of Egypt [m], and being themſelves excluded thence on that account, complained of ſuch treatment as a great injuſtice, and an attempt againſt the law of nations, repreſenting the Egyptians as a barbarous nation, which had renounced all humanity and hoſpitality; whence aroſe the fable of the cruelty of Buſiris: for that the Egyptians did before this trade with other nations, is evident from the above-mentioned inſtance of the Midianites and Iſmaelites, the eaſy acceſs which Abraham and the ſons of Jacob had to Egypt [n], and from Solomon's having horſes from thence [o].

[g] EUPOLEM, ap. Euſeb. de præp. Evang. l. 9. c. 30. [h] 2 Chron. viii. 17. 18. 1 Kings ix. 26, &c [i] 2 Kings xvi. 6. [k] Vid. Strab. l. 16. [l] STRAB. l. 17 p. 1142. DIOD SIC. l. 1. p. 61. [m] Vid. STRAB. ubi ſupr [n] Geneſ. xii. 10. xlii. 1. &c. [o] 2 Chron. ix. 28. 1 Kings x. 28.

TOM. A R

Toward the Greeks indeed they behaved themselves with some caution and reserve, even after they were admitted; for, after the time of Psammitichus, though Amasis, who was their great friend, suffered them to build the city of Naucratis for the settlement and residence of their merchants; yet that was the sole place in the whole kingdom where he allowed them to have a factory. They sailed up to it by the Canopic mouth of the Nile (N); and if by any accident a vessel entered any other mouth of that river, the owners, after making oath that they were forced in there against their will, were obliged to go back to that channel; or, if the winds were contrary, to unlade, and send up their goods to Naucratis by the river vessels [p].

Though the Egyptians, on a religious account, bore a great aversion to the sea, which they called Typhon, because it swallows up their Nile, and hated sailors so much that they would not speak to them [q]; and though they were not fond of going out of their own country, for fear of introducing foreign luxury and customs [r], yet were they not ignorant of sea affairs, having an order of men among them who followed nothing else; nay, the Grecians confess, they learned navigation from them [s]. Sesostris built a formidable navy of four hundred ships of war for his expedition to the southern seas; and also a very large vessel of cedar, two hundred and eighty cubits long (O), gilt without, and beautified with silver within, which he dedicated to Osiris [t]. And it is to be presumed, they improved in this art in succeeding times.

We shall here conclude this account of the antient Egyptians, and hope we may be excused, if we have been somewhat prolix in speaking of so extraordinary a people.

[p] Herod. l. 2. sub finem. Sympos. l. 8. p. 729.
[q] Plut. de Isid. & Osirid. p. 363.
[r] Clem. Alex. Strom. 1. p. 302.
[s] Euripid. in Troad.
[t] Diod. Sic. l. 1. p. 50, 52.

(N) Yet others make this city of Naucratis to be a colony of the Milesians, and to stand on the Bolbitic, or Heracleotic mouth of the Nile (4). But this we shall examine hereafter.

(O) This ship must vastly exceed any modern vessels in bulk, being near twice as big as one of our largest first rates; the length of the Royal Sovereign being no more than 175 feet on the middle gun-deck; and the breadth about 70 feet by the beam.

(4) See Bayle Dict. Hist. Art. Naucratis Rem. A. B.

SECT.

SECT. III.

Of the Egyptian chronology to the time of Alexander the Great.

BEFORE we enter on ſo intricate a ſubject as the Egyptian chronology, it will be neceſſary, for the better underſtanding of what ſhall be ſaid, to exhibit the ſeries of the kings of Egypt, according to the ſeveral authors who have recorded their ſucceſſions.

I. A TABLE of the laſt ſixteen of the thirty Dynaſties, according to the old Egyptian chronicle [a], the fourteen firſt Dynaſties being wanting.

Dynaſty.	Generations.	Years.
XV.	15	Of the Cynic circle reigned 443
XVI.	8	Tanites 190
XVII.	4	Memphites 103
XVIII.	14	Memphites 348
XIX.	5	Dioſpolites 194
XX.	8	Dioſpolites 228
XXI.	6	Tanites 121
XXII.	3	Tanites 48
XXIII	2	Dioſpolites 19
XXIV.	3	Saïtes 44
XXV.	3	Ethiopians 44
XXVI.	7	Memphites 177
XXVII.	5	Perſians 124
XXVIII.	* * *	* * * * *
XXIX.	* * *	* * * * * 39
XXX.	1	Tanites 18
		The Sum of the thirty Dynaſties is, 36525

[a] See before p. 188. SYNCELL. chronogr. p. 51, 52. EUSEB. chron. Græc. ap. SYNCELL. p. 55. &c.

II. A

II. A Table of the Egyptian Dynasties from Manetho.

TOME I.

According to Africanus.	Years.	According to Eusebius.	Years.
The I. Dynasty of Thinites, or kings of This; consisting of eight princes.		The I. Dynasty of Thinites, or kings of This; consisting of eight princes.
1. Menes (A), reigned	62	1. Menes reigned	60
2. Athothis (B)	57	2. Athoſtis	27
3. Cencenes	31	3. Cencenes	39
4. Venephes (C)	23	4. Venephes	42
5. Uſaphædus	20	5. Uſaphaes	20
6. Miebidus	26	6. Niebes	26
7. Sememphſis	18	7. Simenpſes	18
8. Bienaches	26	8. Ubienthes	26
	253		252
The II. Dynasty of Thinites, consisting of nine kings.		The II. Dynasty of Thinites, consisting of nine kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Boethus reigned	38	1 Bochus reigned	-
2 Cæachos (D)	39	2 Choüs (D)	-
3 Binothris	47	3 Biophis	-
4 Tlas	17	4	-
5 Sethenes	41	5	-
6 Chœres	17	6	-
7 Nephercheres	25	7	-
8 Seſochris (E)	48	8 Seſochris	48
9	-	9 Cheneres	30
	297		302

(A) This prince, they ſay, was the firſt man who reigned in Egypt, and ſucceeded the demi-gods; he was killed by a Hippopotamus (1).

(B) Athothis, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Thoth, or Hermes, practiſed phyſic, and wrote ſome books of anatomy. He alſo built the palace at Memphis (2).

(C) He built the pyramids at Cochame (3)

(D) In his reign the ox Apis began to be worſhipped at Memphis, Mneuis at Heliopolis, and the goat at Mendes (4).

(E) This prince is ſaid to have been of very large ſtature, that is, five cubits high, and three broad (5).

(1) Syncell. p. 54, 55. (2) Ibid. (3) Ibid. (4) Ibid. (5) Idem, p. 56, 57.

The III.

According to Africanus.		According to Eusebius.
The III. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of nine kings.		The III. Dynasty of Memphites consisting of eight kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Necherophes reigned -	28	1 Nacherochis - -	-
2 Tosorthrus (F) -	29	2 Sesorthus - - -	-
3 Tyris -	7
4 Mesochris - -	17
5 Soiphis - -	16
6 Tosertasis - -	19	* * * * * *
7 Achis - -	42
8 Siphuris - -	30
9 Cerpheres - -	26
	214		198
The IV. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of eight kings.		The IV. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of 17 kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Soris reigned - - -	29	- reigned - - -	-
2 Suphis (G) - -	63
3 Suphis - -	66	3 Suphis (G) - -	-
4 Mencheres - -	63
5 Rhatæses - -	25
6 Bicheres - -	22
7 Sebercheres - -	7	* * * * * *
8 Thamphthis - -	9
	274		448
The V. Dynasty of Elephantines.		The V. Dynasty of Elephantines, consisting of 31 kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Usercheris reigned -	28	1 Othoes reigned -
2 Sephres - -	13
3 Nephercheres -	20	* * * * * *
4 Sisiris - -	7	4 Phiops - -	100
5 Cheres - -	20
6 Rathuris - -	44	* * * * * *
7 Mercheres - -	9
8 Tarcheres - -	44
9 Obnus - -	33
	248

(F) Tosorthrus was the Egptian Æsculapius, excelling in the art of physic. He first found out the manner of building with hewn stones, and improved letters (6).

(G) This king is reported to have seen the gods, and repenting of it, to have wrote a sacred book, greatly esteemed by the Egyptians. It is also said he built the largest pyramid near Memphis, attributed by Herodotus to Cheops (7). According

(6) Ibid. (7) Ibid.

According to Africanus.		According to Eusebius.
The VI. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of six princes.	Years.	The VI. Dynasty of Memphites.	Years.
1 Othoes reigned -		* * * *
2 Phius - -	53
3 Methusuphis -	7
4 Phiops - -	94
5 Mentesuphis - -	1
6 Nitocris (H) - -	12	Nitocris - -	3
	203		203
The VII. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of seventy kings, who reigned 70 days.		The VII. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of five kings, who reigned 75 days.
* * * *		* * * *
The VIII. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of twenty seven kings, who reigned 146 years.		The VIII. Dynasty of Memphites, consisting of five kings, who reigned 100 years.
* * * *		* * * *
The IX. Dynasty of Heracleots, consisting of nineteen kings.	Years.	The IX. Dynasty of Heracleopolites, consisting of four kings.	Years.
1 Achthoes (I) reigned - -		1 Achthus - -
* * * *		* * * *
	409		100
The X. Dynasty of Heracleots, consisting of nineteen kings, who reigned 185 years.		The X. Dynasty of Heracleopolites, consisting of nineteen kings, who reigned 185 years.
* * * *		* * * *

(H) A most illustrious and beautiful woman, who built the third pyramid near Memphis, which Herodotus attributes to Mycerinus (8).

(I) Achthoes was a most inhuman prince: after several cruelties by him exercised on his subjects, he fell into madness, and was slain by a crocodile (9).

(8) Idem, p. 58. (9) Ibid. p. 59.

According to Africanus.

The XI. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſixteen kings, who reigned 43 years.

* * * *

After whom Ammenemes reigned 16 years.

According to Euſebius.

The XI. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſixteen kings, who reigned 43 years.

* * * *

After whom Ammenemes reigned 16 years.

TOME II.

The XII. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſeven kings.

		Years.
1	Geſon Goſes, or Seſonchoris reigned	46
2	Ammanemes	38
3	Seſoſtris	48
4	Lachares (K)	8
5	Ammeres	8
6	Ammenemes	8
7	Sceniophris, his ſiſter	4
		160

The XII. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſeven kings.

		Years.
1	Seſynchoris reigned	46
2	Ammenemes	38
3	Seſoſtris	48
4	Labaris (K)	8
5	-	42
6	-
7	-
		245

The XIII. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſixty kings, who reigned 184 years.

* * * * *

The XIV. Dynaſty is wanting.

* * * * *

The XIII. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſixty kings, who reigned 453 years.

* * * * *

The XIV. Dynaſty of Xoïtes, conſiſting of ſeventy ſix kings, who reigned 184, or 484 years.

* * * * *

(K) This prince made choice of the labyrinth at Arſinoe for his ſepulchre (10).

(10) Ibid. & p. 60.

According

According to Africanus.

The XV. Dynasty of Phœnician shepherds, consisting of six kings.

Years.

1 Saïtes reigned - - 19
2 Byon, or Beon - - 44
3 Pachnan, or Apachnas 61
4 Staan - - - 50
5 Archles - - - 49
6 Aphobis (L) - - 61

284

The XVI. Dynasty of Greek shepherds, consisting of thirty two kings, who reigned 518 years.

* * * * *

The XVII. Dynasty, consisting of forty three other pastor kings, and forty three Thebans, who reigned together 153 years.

* * * * *

According to Eusebius.

The XV. Dynasty of Diospolites, who reigned 250 years.

* * * * *

The XVI. Dynasty of Thebans, consisting of five kings, who reigned 190 years.

* * * * *

The XVII. Dynasty of Phœnician shepherds.

Years.

1 Saïtes reigned - - 19
2 Beon - - - 43
3 Aphophis (L) - - 14
4 Archles - - - 30

106

(L) This prince is supposed by some to be the Pharaoh who advanced Joseph (11).

(11) Ibid. p. 69.

According

According to Africanus.

The XVIII. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſixteen kings.

		Years.
1	Amos (M), called alſo Amoſis and Tethmoſis, ſon of Aſſeth, reigned
2	Chebros	13
3	Amenophthis	21
4	Amerſis	22
5	Miſaphris	13
6	Miſphragmuthoſis, or Amoſis II.	26
7	Tuthmoſis	9
8	Amenophis, or Memnon	31
9	Horus	37
10	Acherres I.	32
11	Rathos	6
12	Chebres	12
13	Acherres II.	12
14	Armeſes	5
15	Rammeſſes	1
16	Amenoph	19
		263

The XIX. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſix kings.

		Years.
1	Sethos reigned	51
2	Rhapſaces	61
3	Ammenephthes	20
4	Rameſes	60
5	Ammenemnes	5
6	Thuoris, the Polybus of Homer	7
		209

According to Euſebius.

The XVIII. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of ſixteen kings.

		Years.
1	Amoſis reigned	25
2	Chebron	13
3	Ammenophis	21
4	Miphris	12
5	Miſphragmuthoſis	26
6	Tuthmoſis	9
7	Amenophis	31
8	Horus	36
9	Achencherſes	12
10	Athoris	39
11	Chencheres	16
12	Acherres	8
13	Cherres	15
14	Armes, or Danaus	5
15	Ammeſes, or Ægyptus	68
16	Memophis	40
		348

The XIX. Dynaſty of Dioſpolites, conſiſting of five kings.

		Years.
1	Sethos	55
2	Rhapſes	66
3	Ammenephthes	40
4	Ammenemmes	26
5	Thuoris	7
		194

(M) Under Amoſis it is ſuppoſed, by Africanus, that the Iſraelites departed out of Egypt; but Euſebius places the Exodus under Chencheres the eleventh of this Dynaſty (12).

(12) Ibid. p. 62, 72, &c.

According to Africanus.	According to Eusebius.
T O M E III.
The XX. Dynasty of Diospolites, consisting of twelve kings, who reigned 135 years.	The XX. Dynasty of Diospolites, consisting of twelve kings, who reigned 178 years.
* * * * *	* * * * *

The XXI. Dynasty of Tanites, consisting of seven kings.		The XXI. Dynasty of Tanites, consisting of seven kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Smedes reigned	26	1 Smendis	26
2 Psusenes, or Psuneses	46	2 Psusennes I.	41
3 Nephelcheres	4	3 Nephercheres	4
4 Amenenophthis	9	4 Amenophthis	9
5 Osochor	6	5 Osochor	6
6 Pinaches	9	6 Psinaches	9
7 Susennes	30	7 Psusennes II.	35
	130		130

The XXII. Dynasty of Bubastites, consisting of nine kings.		The XXII. Dynasty of Bubastites, consisting of three kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Sesonchis reigned	21	1 Sesenchosis reigned	21
2 Osoroth	15	2 Osorthon	15
3	}	3 Tacellothis	13
4	} 25
5	}
6 Tacellothis	13
7	}
8	} 42
9	}
	120		49

The XXIII. Dynasty of Tanites, consisting of four kings.		The XXIII. Dynasty of Tanites, consisting of three kings.
	Years.		Years.
1 Petubates reigned	40	1 Petubastes reigned	25
2 Osorcho, or Hercules	8	2 Osorthon, or Hercules	9
3 Psammus	10	3 Psammus	10
4 Zet	31
	89		44

According

According to Africanus.

The XXIV. Dynasty of one Saïte.

		Years.
	Bochchoris reigned - -	6

The XXV. Dynasty of Ethiopians, consisting of three kings.

		Years.
1	Sabbacon reigned - -	8
2	Seuechus - - -	14
3	Tarcus - - -	18
		40

The XXVI. Dynasty of Saïtes, consisting of nine kings.

		Yrs.	Mths.
1	Stephinates reigned	7
2	Nerepsos - -	6
3	Nechao I. - -	8
4	Psammitichus -	54
5	Nechao II. - -	6
6	Psammuthis - -	6
7	Uaphris - -	19
8	Amosis - -	44
9	Psammacherites -	0	6
		150	6

The XXVII. Dynasty of Persians, consisting of eight kings.

		Yrs.	Mths.
1	Cambyses reigned	6
2	Darius, the son of Hystaspes, -	36
3	Xerxes the Great	21
4	Artabanus - -	0	7
5	Artaxerxes -	41
6	Xerxes II. -	0	2
7	Sogdianus - -	0	7
8	Darius, the son of Xerxes, - -	19
		124	4
		0	0	2

According to Eusebius.

The XXIV. Dynasty of one Saïte.

		Years.
	Bochchoris, or Bonchoris, reigned - - -	44

The XXV. Dynasty of Ethiopians, consisting of three kings.

		Years.
1	Sabbacon reigned - -	12
2	Seuechus - - -	12
3	Taracus - - -	20
		44

The XXVI. Dynasty of Saïtes, consisting of nine kings.

		Years.
1	Ammeris reigned - -	12
2	Stephanathis - - -	7
3	Necheptos - - -	6
4	Nechao I. - - -	8
5	Psammitichus -	45
6	Nechao II. - -	6
7	Psammuthis, or Psammitichus II. - -	17
8	Uaphris - -	25
9	Amosis - -	42
		168

The XXVII. Dynasty of Persians, consisting of eight kings.

		Yrs.	Mths.
1	Cambyses reigned	3
2	The Magi - -	0	7
3	Darius - -	36
4	Xerxes I. - -	21
5	Artaxerxes Longimanus -	40
6	Xerxes II. - -	0	2
7	Sogdianus -	0	7
8	Darius, the son of Xerxes, -	19
		120	4

According to Africanus.

The XXVIII. Dynasty of one Saïte.

	Years.
Amyrteos reigned - -	6

The XXIX. Dynasty of Mendesians, consisting of four kings.

	Yrs.	Mths.
1 Nepherites reigned	6
2 Achoris - -	13
3 Psammuthis -	1
4 Nephorotes - -	0	4
	20	4

The XXX. Dynasty of princes of Sebennytus, consisting of three kings.

	Years.
1 Nectanebes I. reigned	18
2 Teos - - -	2
3 Nectanebes II. -	18
	38

III. A Table of Egyptian kings from Manetho, according to Josephus [b].

	Yrs.	Mths.
Timaus reigned - - -

The pastor kings.

1 Salatis - -	19
2 Bæon - -	44
3 Aphachnas - -	36	7
4 Aphophis - -	61
5 Janias - -	50	1
6 Assis - -	49	2

According to Eusebius.

The XXVIII. Dynasty of one Saïte.

	Years.
Amyrtanus, or Amyrtæus reigned - -	6

The XXIX. Dynasty of Mendesians, consisting of five kings.

	Yrs.	Mths.
1 Nepherites reigned	6
2 Achoris - -	13
3 Psammuthis -	1
4 Anapherites -	0	4
5 Muthis - -	1
	21	4

The XXX. Dynasty of princes of Sebennytus, consisting of three kings.

	Years.
1 Nectanebes reigned -	10
2 Teos - -	2
3 Nectanebes - -	8
	20

	Yrs.	Mths.
Egyptians.
Halisphragmuthosis - -
Tethmosis - -	25	4
Chebron - -	13
Amenophis - -	20	7
Amesses, a woman	21	9
Mephres - -	12	9
Mephramuthosis, or Misphragmuthosis	21	10
Thmosis - -	9	8
Amenophis - -	30	10
Orus - -	36	5
Acenchres - -	12	1
Rathosis - -	9

[b] Contra Apion l. 1.

Acencheres

		Yrs.	Mths.
	Acencheres I.	12	5
	Acencheres II.	12	3
	Armaïs	4
	Rameſſes	1	4
	Harmeſſes Miamun	66	2
	Amenophis	19	6
		393

IV. A TABLE of the Theban kings from the Laterculus of Eratoſthenes [c].

		Years.
1	Menes, or Mines, reigned	62
2	Athothes I.	59
3	Athothes II.	32
4	Diabies	19
5	Pemphos	18
6	Tægar Amachus Momchiri, or Tægaramus	79
7	Stœchus	6
8	Goſormies, or Eleſipantus	30
9	Mares	26
10	Anoyphes	20
11	Sirius	18
12	Chnubus Gneurus	27
13	Rauoſis	13
14	Biyris	10
15	Saophis	29
16	Senſaophis	27
17	Moſcheris	31
18	Muſthis	33
19	Pammus Archondes	35
20	Apappus the Great	100
21	Echeſcus Caras	1
22	Nitocris	6
23	Myrtæus	22
24	Thyoſimares	12
25	Thyrillus, or Thinillus	8
26	Semphucrates	18
27	Chuther Taurus	7
28	Meres, or Meures, the philoſopher	12
29	Choma Ephtha	11
30	Anchunius Ochy, or Scunioſochos	60
31	Penteathyris	16
32	Stamenemes	23
33	Siſtoſichermes	55
34	Maris	43
35	Siphoas Hermes	5
36		14
37	Phruron, or Nilus	5
38	Amurthæus, or Amythantæus	63

V. A TABLE of the Egyptian kings according to the ſeries of Syncellus [d].

		Years.
1	Meſtraim, or Menes, reigned	35
2	Curudes, or Cudrus	63
3	Ariſtarchus	34
4	Spanius	36
5		72
6
7	Serapis	23
8	Seſonchoſis	49
9	Amenemes	29
10	Amaſis, or Amoſis	2
11	Aceſephthres	13
12	Achoreas	9
13	Amiyſes, or Armiyſes	4
14	Chamoïs	12
15	Ameſiſes	65
16		14
17	Uſe	50
18	Rhameſes	29
19	Rhameſſomenes	15
20	Thyſimares	31
21	Rhameſſeſeos	23
22	Rhameſſemeno	19
23	Rhameſſe, ſon of Baëtes	39
24	Rhameſſe, ſon of Uaphres	29
25	Concharis	6
26	Silites	19
27	Bæon	44

[c] Apud. SYNCELL. p. 92, &c.

[d] 1 Chronog. p. 91, &c.

		Years.			Years.
28	Apachnas - -	36	62	Suſſacim - -	34
29	Aphophis - -	61	63	Pſuenus, or Senipſuerus	25
30	Sethos - -	50	64	Ammenophes - -	9
31	Certus - -	29	65	Nephecheres - -	6
32	Aſeth - -	24	66	Saïtes - -	15
33	Amoſis, or Tethmoſis	22	67	Pſinaches - -	9
34	Chebron - -	13	68	Petubaſtes - -	44
35	Amephes - -	15	69	Oſorthon - -	9
36	Amenſes - -	11	70	Pſammus - -	10
37	Miſphragmuthoſis -	16	71	Concharis - -	21
38	Miſphres - -	23	72	Oſorthon - -	15
39	Tuthmoſis - -	39	73	Tacelophes - -	13
40	Amenophthis -	34	74	Bocchoris - -	44
41	Horus - -	48	75	Sabacon - -	12
42	Achencheres -	25	76	Sebechon - -	12
43	Athoris - -	29	77	Taraces - -	20
44	Chencheres -	26	78	Amaes - -	38
45	Acheres - 8 or	30	79	Stephinathes -	27
46	Armæus, or Danaus	9	80	Nacepſus - -	13
47	Rhameſſes, or Ægyptus	68	81	Nechaab I. - -	8
48	Amenophis - -	8	82	Pſammitichus -	14
49	Thuoris - -	17	83	Nechaab II. - -	9
50	Nechepſos -	19	84	Pſammuthis, or Pſammitichus II. - -	17
51	Pſammuthis -	13
52	- - - -	4	85	Uaphres - -	34
53	Certus - -	20	86	Amaſis - -	50
54	Rhampſis - -	45	87	Amyrtæus - - -	6
55	Amenſes, or Amenemes	26	88	Nepherites - -	6
56	Ochyras - -	14	89	Achoris - -	13
57	Amedes - -	27	90	Pſammuthis - -	2
58	Thuoris, or Polybus	50	91	Menas - -	4
59	Athothis, or Phuſanus	28	92	Nectanebes - -	8
60	Cencenes - -	39	93	Teos - - -	2
61	Uennephes -	42

VI. A Table of the kings of Egypt.

According to Herodotus.	According to Diodorus Siculus.
Menes - - -	Menas, or Mneves - -
* * * * *	- - - 52 of his deſcendants
	1400 years.
* * * * *	Buſiris - - - -
* * * * *	- - 7 of his deſcendants,
Nitocris - - -	Buſiris the 8th of them.
* * * * *	* * * * *

Accordin

According to Herodotus.	According to Diodorus Siculus.
* * * * *	Oſymanduas - - -
* * * * *	- - 8 of his deſcendants,
* * * * *	Uchoreus the 8th of them.
* * * * *	- - 12 generations.
Mœris - - - -	Myris - - -
* * * * *	- - 7 Generations, one of theſe Saſyches, the lawgiver.
Seſoſtris - - -	Seſooſis I. - - -
Pheron - - -	Seſooſis II. - - -
* * * * *	- - ſeveral generations.
* * * * *	Amaſis (Amnoſis) - -
* * * * *	Actiſanes the Ethiopian -
* * * * *	Mendes, or Marus - - -
	- - 5 generations, an Interregnum.
Proteus - - -	Proteus - - - -
Rhampſinitus - - -	Remphis - - - - -
	- -
* * * * *	Nilus } 6 generations. -
* * * * *	- -
Cheops - - -	Chemmis, or Chembes - -
Cephrenes - - -	Cephren, or Chabryis - -
Mycerinus - - -	Mycerinus, or Cherinus -
Aſychis - - -	Gnephachthus - - -
Anyſis - - - -	Bocchoris - - -
Sabaco - - - -	Sabaco - - -
Anyſis again - -	- - Interregnum 2 years
Sethon - - -	* * * *
- - - 12 kings - -	- - 12 kings - -
Pſammitichus - -	Pſammitichus - - -
Necus - - -	- - 4 generations - -
Pſammis - -	* * * *
Apries - - -	Apries - - -
Amaſis - - - -	Amaſis - - -
Pſammenitus - -	* * * *

THE diſagreement between theſe ſeveral ſucceſſions of Egyptian kings, both in their names and the years of their reſpective reigns, is ſo great, and there are ſuch chaſms, and ſuch apparent corruptions and miſtakes therein, that it ſhould ſeem loſt labour to go about to reduce them into a chronological ſeries, ſo as to agree with one another, much leſs with ſcripture, and the chronological obſervations of other historians. However we shall say something of each of the preceding tables.

Of the numbers of the old chronicle.

And, to begin with the first of them, the sum total of the thirty dynasties, according to the old chronicle, is not only an immense number, vastly exceeding the age of the world, but appears to be an astronomical calculation, by which the Egyptians would have their dynasties to have run through a whole periodic revolution of the zodiac [e]; and therefore we shall not offer to make any use of it. It may only be observed, that though this sum be said to be the amount of the thirty dynasties, yet therein must be included the 30,000 years which the Sun reigned, the 3984 years reign of Saturn, and the other twelve gods, and the 217 years reign of the eight demi-gods, making together 34,201 years. As to the fourteen first dynasties, which we conceive to be omitted in the fragment we have remaining of this chronicle, the meaning of the original may perhaps be, that the fifteen generations of the cynic circle, which are placed in the table in the fifteenth dynasty, and reigned 443 years, do make up the first fifteen dynasties: and this seems to be confirmed by the sum total of the years of the sixteen last dynasties, as in the table, which is 2140 years, and with the said 34,201 years, makes 36,341; to which, if we add 184 years, for the duration of the twenty eighth dynasty, the number of which is ommitted, we shall have the complete sum of 36,525. And consequently deducting thence the sum of the reigns of the gods and demi-gods, the remainder will be 2324 years, for the duration of the succeeding dynasties, according to this chronicle; which is a number reasonable enough, though it cannot be reconciled to those of Manetho.

Of the Dynasties of Manetho.

The successions of Manetho, which are given in the second table, have this additional corruption, that their order has been disturbed by transcribers; and as in their present disposition they cannot possibly be reduced to any one system of chronology, some have altered that disposition according to their various hypotheses, while others make short work with them, and absolutely reject these dynasties, or great part of them as fabulous.

The credit of Manetho has been called in question by several writers [f], not only because of the incredible antiquity to which his history is supposed to have ascended, but from the account which, it is said, he himself gave of the records

[e] See before, p. 183, in the notes. [f] Vid. Jac. Cappell. in Hist. Sacr. & Exot. ad Ann. M. 2269. Stillingfleet Orig. Sacr. Book I. c. 2. § 10, &c.

from

from whence he took it, pretending to have extracted it from certain pillars in the Syriadic land, on which inſcriptions had been made in the ſacred dialect and letters, by Thoth, the firſt Hermes, and were tranſlated, after the flood, out of the ſacred dialect into the Greek (N) tongue in ſacred letters (O), and laid up in books by Agathodæmon, the ſon of the ſecond Hermes, the father of Tat, in the inner receſſes of the Egyptian temples [g]. Now it is abſolutely impoſſible, that the firſt Hermes, who lived in the earlieſt ages of the Egyptian monarchy, could write a hiſtory of ſo many generations which came into the world after his death, unleſs he did it by inſpiration; and if Manetho could be ſo ſtupid as to aſſert this, it muſt neceſſarily have overthrown the credit of his whole work. But we do not think that writer could mean any ſuch thing; the words cited from him do not ſay he took his whole hiſtory from thoſe pillars; though he might probably quote thoſe records to ſupport the antient hiſtory, which preceded the time of Thoth; and ſuch pillars, or at leaſt ſome pillars which were of great antiquity, and by the prieſts attributed to Thoth, muſt have been extant in the days of Manetho, [g] SYNCELL. p. 40. See before, p. 163, and the note there.

(N) Dr. Stillingfleet (13), with great reaſon thinks this abſolutely incredible, the Greek language being not known in Egypt, at leaſt not in requeſt there, ſo early as this; for the Grecians had little or no commerce with the Egyptians till the time of Pſammitichus, as we have obſerved more than once. It ſeems alſo very unlikely that Manetho ſhould aſſert this; for, beſides the improbability above-mentioned, the Egyptian hiſtory was ſo far from being tranſlated to his hand, that he himſelf was obliged to tranſlate it into Greek from the ſacred regiſters (14); for which reaſon we ſuſpect ſome corruption in this paſſage; and, if it be not too bold a conjecture, we ſhould gueſs that, inſtead of ἑλληνίδα φωνὴν, the Greek tongue, it ought to be read ἐλλισχὴν φωνὴν, the vulgar tongue; but we dare not dictate in ſo dubious a point.

(O) The original words are γράμμασιν ἱερογλυφικοῖς, which the learned writer named in the preceding note, tranſlates hieroglyphic characters, and very juſtly wonders, how any tranſlation can be made into ſuch characters, which repreſent things, and not words (15). But as theſe characters are plainly called letters, we conceive they could not be hieroglyphical in the common acceptation of the word, but rather ſuppoſe them to be the ſame with the hierographic, or ſacred letters above-mentioned.

(13) Orig. Sacr. Book I. c. 2. p. 1336. (14) Joſeph. cont. Apion. l. 1. (15) Stillingfl. ubi ſupr.

netho,

netho, or he could never have appealed to them in ſo public a manner, eſpecially in writing to his prince. It may alſo be anſwered, that though Thoth made the firſt inſcriptions on thoſe pillars, yet it is not impoſſible, but in ſucceeding times other inſcriptions might be added to thoſe of Thoth; for the pillars might be in common phraſe aſcribed to him, though the hiſtorical inſcriptions were continued after his death by others. But after all it may be queſtioned, whether Manetho really intended to ſupport his hiſtory by the authority of thoſe pillars; for the paſſage wherein he mentions them, ſeems to have been taken out of another book of his, called Sothis, or Seth, which was not hiſtorical, but prophetical; for, in his dedication of that work to Ptolemy Philadelphus, he ſays, that his interpreting the ſacred books of Hermes was in obedience to that prince's command, who enquired of him concerning the future events that were to happen in the world [h]. And as to the records from whence he took his hiſtory, we are elſewhere aſſured, it was from the ſacred regiſters [i] which were kept by the prieſts, and written in the Egyptian language, ſince he tranſlated them into Greek.

THE ſtronger prejudice therefore againſt the credit of this writer ariſes from his chronology. The Egyptians, it is true, pretended to an exceſſive antiquity, and to have certain records for a prodigious length of time paſt. This appears not only from the old chronicle above-mentioned, but from the extravagant numbers of years their prieſts impoſed on Herodotus, Plato, and Diodorus (P); but Manetho ſeems to have

[h] Vid. SYNCELL. p. 40. [i] Joſeph. cont. Apion. l. 1. p. 1336. EUSEB. præp. Ev. l. 2. in procem.

(P) Some of theſe random accounts are as follow:

	Years.
From Vulcan to Alexander (16)	48,863
From the reign of the Sun to Alexander (17)	23,000
From Oſiris to Alexander (18) above	10,000
Or almoſt	23,000
From Hercules to Amaſis (19)	17,000
From Bacchus to Amaſis (20)	15,000
The gods and heroes reigned (21)	18,000
From Orus, the laſt of them, to the 180th Olympiad (22)	15,000
Kings of Egypt before Amaſis reigned (23)	13,000
From their firſt mortal king to Setbon (24)	11,340
There were chronicles at Laïs (25) of	8,000

(16) Diog. Laert. in Proœm. (17) Diodor. Sic. l. 1 p. 22. (18) Idem, ibid. p. 20. (19) Herod. l. 2. (20) Idem ibid. (21) Diodor. ubi ſup. p. 41. (22) Idem, ibid (23) Pomp. Mela. l. 1. c. 9. (24) Herod. ubi ſup. (25) Plato in Tim.

been

been much more modeſt. The ſum of his thirty one dynaſties from Menes to fifteen years before Alexander (without taking the reigns of the gods and demi-gods into the account), if caſt up, will amount to above 5300 years, which will reach higher than the creation of the world; and Joſeph Scaliger [k] has accordingly ſettled their chronology in ſuch a manner, that, by his own way of reckoning, it exceeds the epoch of the creation 1336 years. But there is a leſſer number mentioned by Syncellus, who ſays the account of the years of all the dynaſties was 3555, which is much more reaſonable than the other, and yet will agree with no ſyſtem of chronology, unleſs we take part of this number for the reigns of the antediluvian princes of Egypt. Manetho, as we have already obſerved, began his hiſtory with ſeven gods, and nine demigods [l], who reigned 1985 years; and then ſucceeded mortal kings, the firſt of whom was Menes. Theſe three races ſeem to be the ſame with thoſe called in the old chronicle Auritæ, Meſtræi, and Egyptians [m]. Now, if we allow (as is moſt reaſonable, in caſe there be any ſhadow of truth in this part of the hiſtory), that the gods, or Auritæ, were antediluvians; the demi-gods, or Meſtræi, the poſtdiluvians of the race of Mizraïm; and the mortal men, or Egyptians, Menes and his ſucceſſors; and, if we allow 1200 years part of the 1985 for the reigns of the firſt [n], the remainder, 785, will be the years of the reign of Mizraïm and his deſcendants. And deducting the whole 1985 out of the ſaid 3555, there will remain 1570 years, the diſtance from Menes to the fifteenth year before Alexander; from which time, if we compute backwards, the beginning of Menes's reign will fall about eleven years before Abraham went into Egypt, according to the Samaritan chronology; and that of Mizraïm about 298 years after the flood. This way of computing would be plauſible, were it not that the epoch of the Egyptian kingdom will by this means precede the diſperſion of mankind 103 years, which can hardly be ſuppoſed, unleſs it be allowed, that the Egyptians reckoned the years of the government of their firſt anceſtors over their deſcendants, before they left Shinaar, and arrived in Egypt. But the great objection of all is, that Manetho's number of 3555 appears to belong wholly to the ſucceſſors of Menes, and we have no manner of warrant to make any deduction from it.

SOME chronologers therefore, particularly father Petau [o], (who took delight in contradicting Scaliger) reject the whole [k] Canon Iſagog. l. 2. p. 228. [l] See before, p. 190. [m] See p. 188.

[n] See before, p. 191, 193. [o] De Doctr. Tempor. l. 9. c. 15.

ſcheme

ſcheme of Manetho's dynaſties as fabulous, and of no manner of value or credit. And others [p], to whom Euſebius led the way in his canon [q], omit the firſt ſixteen dynaſties only, and begin their chronology with the ſeventeen; though they differ among themſelves in their computations. The firſt who, without rejecting any, earneſtly ſet about reducing the entire ſeries to the ſcripture chronology, was the learned Sir John Marſham [r], who firſt gueſſed that theſe dynaſties were not ſucceſſive, but collateral. He ſuppoſes, that Egypt, immediately after the death of Menes, was divided into four diſtinct kingdoms, of Thebes, This, Memphis, and the lower Egypt, beſides ſome of leſſer note which aroſe afterwards, and whoſe epochs are more difficult to be ſettled; and that it continued ſo divided for almoſt ſeven centuries, till the paſtors made themſelves maſters of all, except that of Thebes; after whoſe expulſion, in about 500 years after, Egypt became ſubject to one prince. By this means the duration of the whole empire, from Menes to the end of the reign of Amaſis, is reduced to 1819 years. This gentleman's work is full of uncommon learning and curious obſervations; but his great misfortune ſeems to have been his adhering ſo very ſcrupulouſly to the Hebrew chronology; whereby he is obliged to make Menes the ſame with Ham, and not Mizraïm, (as almoſt all other writers imagine) and abſurdly to begin the date of his reign immediately from the flood. He follows Diodorus [s] in reckoning 1400 years from Menes to Seſoſtris, whom therefore he aſſerts to be the Shiſhak of the ſcriptures, though Diodorus plainly reckons a much larger interval between them. In which laſt particular, as he has been ſtrenuouſly oppoſed by ſeveral writers [t], ſo he has been followed by others [u]. It muſt be obſerved, that Sir John Marſham makes great uſe of the table of the Theban kings given us by Eratoſthenes, of which we ſhall ſpeak by and by.

The next who undertook to model this Egyptian chronology is father Pezron, who, by following the larger chronology of the Septuagint, has more latitude, and allows the duration of the Egyptian empire 2619 years from Menes to Nectanebus. This author likewiſe goes on the ſame foundation with Sir John Marſham, in making the firſt ſeventeen

[p] Calvisius, Usserius, Jac. Capellus & Perizonius eſteem the firſt fourteen or fifteen to be fabulous. [q] Chron. Græc. p. 89. [r] In his Canon Chronicus Ægyptiacus, &c. [s] Lib 1. p. 42. [t] Pezron, Perizonius, Whiston, Bedford, &c. [u] Sir Isaac Newton, Shuckford, Bossuet, Le Clerc, &c.

dynaſties

dynasties not successive but collateral. He is of opinion, that the Mestræans, or offspring of Mizraïm, the first inhabitants of Egypt, were those whom their posterity honoured with the titles of gods and demi-gods; and that, though they began to people the country, yet they formed no kingdom there till Menes who began his reign 648 years after the deluge, and 117 years after the dispersion. Sesostris he places in the time of the judges of Israel, Deborah then presiding over that people [x].

FROM the plans of these two great men, several other chronological writers have formed systems of their own, differing in some respects from them, as well as from each other. The chief care of them all is to fix the times of Menes and Sesostris; which when they have done, they imagine the rest follows almost of course. The opinions, as to these two princes, are so various, that it would lead us into too great a detail to mention them all in this place; and what we judge most curious and worthy notice in such disquisitions, will be more properly introduced, when we give their histories. What is generally to be observed in all these writers, and especially in one of them, Perizonius by name, is, that they are much oftener in the right in refuting and detecting the errors and mistakes of one another, than in settling or adjusting any thing that may be safely relied on.

THE fundamental hypothesis which all these writers go upon, that there were, in the most early times, several kingdoms in Egypt at once, seems to be very probable, the scripture mentioning the kings of the Egyptians in the plural, even so late as the time of Jehoram [y]. The kingdoms of Thebes and Memphis divided Egypt between them for several centuries; and it is certain, from Herodotus and Diodorus, that there were, at least, two kings in that country at the time of the invasion of the Ethiopians under Sabbaco. But it does not appear, that Manetho himself, though he wrote the history of five Egyptian nations [z], did make any of the dynasties he has given us collateral or contemporary; on the contrary, unless his transcribers have done him more wrong than we have reason to suspect, he placed them all in a continual succession [a]; and it is taking the utmost liberty with Manetho to alter it, unless we charge the fault on the records of which he made use.

AFTER Cambyses had carried away their records, the Egyptian priests, in all probability, to supply their loss, and [x] PERON, Antiq. des temps retablie. c. 13. [y] 2 Kings vii. 6.

[z] SYNCELL. p. 40. [a] See PERIZON. Orig. Ægypt. p. 62, &c.

keep

keep up their pretences to antiquity, began to write new records, wherein they not only neceſſarily made great miſtakes, but added a good deal of their own invention, eſpecially as to diſtant times. From theſe materials, for want of better, Manetho collecting his hiſtory, muſt have intermixed a good deal of fable, as there is indeed in the antiquities of all nations (the Jews excepted); for it cannot be expected, that people in the circumſtances of theſe early nations could have begun to keep records till ſome ages after their ſettlement. it is unjuſt therefore, to lay the whole blame of the confuſion and uncertainty we find in the Egyptian hiſtory, at the door of Manetho: he collected, for ought we know, faithfully from the records he had, and we have ſo little genuine remains of him, and what we have, has been ſo mangled by tranſcribers and pretenders to correct him, that Iſis found leſs difficulty in gathering the diſperſed remains of her dead huſband, than it muſt be to patch up a figure which might bear ſome reſemblance of that hiſtorian. Several antient writers of good judgment, as Joſephus, Plutarch, Porphyry, and Euſebius, looked on him as a writer whoſe authority was to be depended on; and the curious fragment tranſcribed from him by Joſephus, before his copies had been corrupted, ſeems to confirm this good opinion, being the moſt valuable and authentic piece of Egyptian hiſtory, of ſo great antiquity, that is extant; and the ſeries of kings we have exhibited thence, in the third table, is a pretty exact record, connecting, if there be any credit in Manetho, the Egyptian and Grecian hiſtories, by acquainting us that Sethoſis was Ægyptus, and his brother Armaïs Danaus.

Of the catalogue of Eratoſthenes.

THE liſt of Theban kings given by Eratoſthenes has had a very favourable reception among the learned, not only as a ſupplement to Manetho, who has entirely omitted that ſucceſſion, but as a certain foundation for fixing the Egyptian chronology (Q). His authority has been preferred to that

(Q) Beſides the obſervation of Dicæarchus, mentioned hereafter, there is another affixed to Mares, the ninth king of this catalogue in Scaliger's edition of Euſebius's Greek chronicle (26), purporting, that he was contemporary with the ſixteenth dynaſty of Thebans in the lower Egypt; which obſervation may be of uſe to thoſe who have a mind to frame a table of the dynaſties, though Goar, in his edition of Syncellus, has omitted it, and taxes Scaliger with adding it of his own invention (27).

(26) Pag. 18. l. 34. (27) Goar, in Not. ad Syncell, p. 521.

of

of Manetho [b], in regard he was no Egyptian prieſt, but a Cyrenæan, a man of eminent learning, and keeper of the Alexandrian library, and took his catalogue from the ſacred records of Thebes, or had it from the ſacred ſcribes there [c]. Together with the Egyptian names of the kings, he has given their interpretation in Greek, which thoſe ſkilled in the Coptic tongue allow to be juſt in ſome inſtances; but ſeveral of them being corrupted and unintelligible, we have choſen to omit them.

THIS Eratoſthenean ſeries is ſuppoſed to be connected with a known epoch in the Grecian hiſtory, by a remark of Dicæarchus, Ariſtotle's ſcholar, who ſays, that from the reign of Seſonchoſis, who ſucceeded Orus, the ſon of Iſis and Oſiris, to the reign of Nilus, are 2500 years; and from Nilus to the firſt Olympiad 436 years [d]. Who Seſonchoſis was is very uncertain; the firſt king of the twelfth dynaſty of Manetho ſeems to have born this name, or one very near it; but he muſt have lived too late to be the perſon here meant; and if he be taken to be the immediate ſucceſſor of Orus, he muſt have been one of the demi-gods, and the ſame with Ares, or Mars; which carries us back into fable. The firſt of theſe obſervations therefore can be of no great uſe, for the time of Seſonchoſis, after this way of reckoning, will precede the deluge, even according to the Samaritan chronology, near 700 years. But the other king, named by Dicæarchus, is found in the catalogue of Eratoſthenes, the laſt king but one, in which is Phruron, or Nilus; and therefore his time being known, the years of all the preceding kings are eaſily adjuſted to any ſyſtem of chronology. This ſeems plauſible enough; yet we are afraid, it will not altogether agree with the account of Diodorus. It is plain, Dicæarchus ſuppoſed Nilus reigned at the time of the Trojan war; for his calculation will carry us up thither; but according to Diodorus, Nilus muſt have been ſeveral generations later than Proteus, who reigned in Egypt at the time of the Trojan war, by the joint teſtimony of him and Herodotus [e]; ſo that Dicæarchus ſeems only to have given a tolerable gueſs at his age, and not fixed it with ſuch certainty as to enable us to determine it within a century at leaſt. Beſides, it is more than probable, that this table of Eratoſthenes has ſuffered by time and tranſcribers, as well as the dynaſties of Manetho; and there are doubtleſs ſeveral miſtakes in the numbers as well as names; the ſum total, for example, which Syncellus reckons to be 1075, will not agree with the particulars; for, if carefully caſt up, they amount to no more than 1055.

[b] Vid. MARSH. Can. Chron. p. 8, 26, 297. CUMBERL. on Sanchon. p. 416, &c. [c] Vid. SYNCELL. p. 147. [d] DICÆARCH. apud Scholiaſt. Apollon. Argon. l. 4. ver. 272. [e] DIODOR. Sic. l. 1. p. 56. Herod. l. 2.

However, according to this calculation of Dicæarchus, the table of Eratoſthenes will ſuit well enough with the Samaritan chronology; for if to the year before Christ 776 (the epoch of the firſt Olympiad) we add 436, the reign of Nilus will end in the year before Christ 1212; to which, if we again add 992, the number of years between the laſt year of Nilus and the firſt of Menes, this laſt king's reign began 794 years after the flood; that is, 393 years after the diſperſion, and about 300 years before Abraham's deſcent into Egypt. But if we abate three or four generations in this calculation, it will ſtill better agree with Diodorus, and allow more time for the riſing of the kingdom of Egypt.

Of the ſeries of Syncellus.

As to the ſeries of Syncellus, given in the fifth table, on which Sir John Marſham built much [f], we have a worſe opinion of it than of any of the other, eſpecially in the more early ages, where it is ſupported by no concurring evidence at all. He ſeems to have compoſed it by picking here and there ſuch names and numbers, and ſometimes adding both out of his own head, as he fancied, in order to accommodate it to the ſacred chronology [g], and therefore we ſhall take no further notice of it.

Of the ſucceſſions according to Herodotus and Diodorus.

We need not ſpend many words to ſhew that it is next to impoſſible to frame a conſiſtent chronology, as ſome have attempted [h], from the ſucceſſions of kings in Herodotus and Diodorus. For, beſides their irreconcileable diſagreement in ſeveral inſtances, they confeſſedly omit a great number of princes, and mention no years of the reigns of others; whereby ſuch chaſms are left, that no body can tell how to fill up; and their manner of reckoning by deſcents, or generations, is too viſibly uncertain. Before Pſammitichus the Egyptian chronology is very dark; and though after that prince's time it begins to clear up, yet the variations between all the hiſtorians ſince his reign are conſiderable, as appears by the tables.

We ſhall not therefore waſte our time in compoſing a hypothetical ſcheme of theſe kings of Egypt; of ſuch performances there are choice already; and they are much more eaſy to frame, than to ſupport; calculations by numbers of years, which are ſo liable to miſtake and corruption, muſt needs be very precarious; and it seems much more reasonable to rely on the coincidence of facts and historical synchronisms, from which chiefly we shall, in the course of our history of Egypt, endeavour to fix the times of such events as we judge capable of it, and shall represent them accordingly in the general chronological tables. And this, we think, is the most that can be done with any degree of certainty: considering, which is amazing to us, that men should pretend to adjust the Egyptian chronology, from the most early times, to so great a nicety as a few years, and dictate dogmatically in a matter of such absolute uncertainty and confusion.

[f] Vid. Can. Chron. p. 7. [g] Vid. Perizon. Orig. Æg. p. 53, &c. [h] Vid. Conring. Adv. Chronol. c. 17, 18. Stillingfl. Orig. Sacr. l. 1. c. 5.

BEFORE we conclude, we will only observe, as to the Hebrew chronology, the imperfection of which we have mentioned more than once, that if there be any dependence to be made on the foregoing accounts of the Egyptian affairs, the beginning of that kingdom must be placed much earlier than that computation will allow. For according to the most moderate calculation, which is that of Eratosthenes, as fixed by the observation of Dicæarchus, the reign of Menes must begin within two centuries of the flood; which is, in our opinion, improbable in the highest degree[1]; even though we should admit, that Menes was the same with Mizraïm, as the patrons of that chronology generally suppose; the contrary of which we believe to be true, and shall endeavour to prove hereafter.

SECT. IV.

The History of Osiris, Isis, Typhon, and Orus.

BEFORE we enter upon the history of the mortal kings of Egypt, we are in some sort obliged to insert the following dark and antient fiction. Osiris and Isis were said by some to be the son and daughter of Saturn and Rhea; but according to others their grandson and granddaughter being descended from Jupiter and Juno, who had a deity born to them on each of the five intercalary days of the Egyptians. These five deities were called Osiris, Isis, Typhon, Apollo, and Venus[2]. We have their origin and generation again differently, and, with the several particulars, related as follows: Sol surprizing Rhea in a private congress with Saturn, prayed that she might not be delivered in the space of any one month, or of the year. Soon after Mercury, smitten with love of the goddeſs, embraced her alſo; and, beating Luna at dice, took from the Lunar year the ſeventy ſecond part of every day, and thereof compoſed five days, and added them to the year of 360 days, that ſhe might bring forth in them: and theſe they celebrated as the birth-days of Oſiris, Iſis, Typhon, Orus, and Nephthe. On the firſt day Oſiris was born, and at his birth a voice was heard crying out, The lord of all things is come into the world: or, according to others, a damſel called Pamyles, going to fetch water from the temple of Jupiter at Thebes, heard a loud voice commanding to proclaim, The great and beneficent king Oſiris is born. He was delivered to this damſel, who was directed to nurſe him, which ſhe did with all the veneration due to him, performing the myſteries called Pamylia, like thoſe ſtiled Pallephoria, in honour of him. On the ſecond day Arueris was brought forth, whom ſome called Apollo, and others the elder Orus. The third was the birth-day of Typhon, who came not into the world in proper time and place, but by a violent eruption leaped out of his mother's ſide. On the fourth day Iſis, and on the fifth Nephthe, or Nephthys, took birth; which laſt was alſo called Finis, and Venus, and Victoria. Sol was the father of Oſiris and Arueris; Mercury was the father of Iſis; and Saturn was the father of Typhon and Nephthe. The third being the birth-day of Typhon, was counted inauſpicious, or unlucky; ſo that the kings thereon ſuſpended all buſineſs, and abſtained from eating and drinking. Nephthe married Typhon, and Iſis married Oſiris. As for theſe laſt it is ſaid, that impelled by a mutual love, they embraced whilſt yet in their mother's womb; and it was thought, that Arueris, the elder Orus of the Egyptians, and the Apollo of the Greeks, ſprang from that early conjunction (R). Oſiris had no ſooner obtained

[1] See before p. 511, &c. [2] Diod. Sic. lib. 1. p. 13.

(R) Herodotus gives them a daughter, Bubaſtis, or Diana; and ſeems to have heard the ſtory of theſe fabulous princes, with ſome variation from what is related by Diodorus and Plutarch, the only authors we have, who have written this fiction at length. And particularly, ſpeaking of the floating iſland Chemmis, near the city of Butis, he writes, that, by an Egyptian tradition, Latona, one of the primary deities, reſiding at Butus, had Orus committed to her care, at a time when Typhon was in ſearch after him to deſtroy him; and ſhe accordingly concealed him in the aboveſaid iſle. Now, according to Plutarch, Typhon was kept within bounds by the prudence of Iſis, during all the expedition of Oſiris; with which account this violent proceeding cannot conſiſt; and Herodotus does not in the leaſt hint at this ſearch afterwards. Diodorus ſays, Orus accompanied his father in his travels; he was therefore out of the reach tained the kingdom of Egypt than he reclaimed the inhabitants from their ſavage and brutal way of living, ſhewed them the fruits of the earth, and inſtituted divine worſhip [b]; building the city of Thebes, as is (with great uncertainty) ſaid, and erecting ſeveral temples, and, amongſt the reſt, one to Jupiter Uranius, and another to Jupiter Ammon, his father, who reigned before him [c]. But, that his beneficence might not be confined to the bounds of his own country, he undertook to viſit the ſeveral nations on the earth, all which he civilized and brought into order; not by the forcible conſtraint of arms, but by dint of perſuaſion, and by the allurements of muſic and poetry [d]. His outſet, and the more remarkable particulars of his travels are thus told.

HAVING in view the vaſt and beneficial deſign above-mentioned, he raiſed a great number of followers, amongſt whom was his brother Apollo, who claimed the laurel as ſacred to him, juſt as the ivy was to Oſiris. He took alſo his two ſons with him, Anubis (which will be ſeemingly contradicted by and by) and Macedo. Theſe two wore coats of mail, and over them the ſkin of ſuch a beaſt as correſponded with the nature of their courage; ſo Anubis had a dog's ſkin, and Macedo the ſkin of a wolf; and hence, ſaid they, the dog and the wolf were worſhipped in Egypt. Pan alſo was of the company; he was afterwards highly revered over all the country, inſomuch that he had not only ſtatues and temples erected to him, but alſo the city of Chemmis, which ſignified Pan's city. Add to theſe Maro, famous for planting and dreſſing of vines; and Triptolemus for ſowing of corn, and gathering in the harveſt. Finally, Oſiris took with him nine virgins, proficients in muſic, who being committed to the care of Apollo, he thence obtained the title of maſter of the nine ſiſters, or muſes; as alſo ſome ſatyrs he met as he went towards Æthiopia, who were acceptable for their jocund diſpoſition, and diverting by their antic behaviour, ſkipping, and dancing.

BUT before he left Egypt he provided againſt any diſturbances that might ariſe in his abſence, by committing the ad-reach of his enemy; and after his father's murder, this author ſays, he was ſo far from flying from Typhon, that he made head againſt him, overcame him in battle, and ſlew him. It appears then, that Herodotus heard this fiction related in a third and different manner (l).

[b] PLUT. de Iſid. & Oſirid, p. 355. [c] DIOD. SIC. ubi ſupra. [d] PLUT. ubi ſupr.

(l) Herodot. lib. 11.

miniſtration to truſty and ſagacious perſons. For he inveſted Iſis with the regency, in which he left his friend Hermes to aſſiſt her. Hermes was alſo called Mercury, Thoth, Theyth, Taautes, Triſmegiſtus, and by other names. It is a common opinion, that there were two perſons or more who bore theſe ſeveral appellations; but leaving the diſcuſſion of ſo dark a point, we will here ſpeak as of one perſon, and enumerate the inventions and books aſcribed to him. He, ſaid they, invented articulate ſounds, appellatives, letters, religion, aſtronomy, muſic, wreſtling, arithmetic, ſtatuary, the three-ſtringed lyre, and the uſe of the olive, and not Minerva, as the Greeks miſtakenly aſſerted. He was ſtiled the father of eloquence, and thence he derived his name of Hermes, the interpreter, or ſpeaker [e]. Now as to the books he wrote, Seleucus reckoned them at no leſs than 20,000 [f]; and Manetho exceeds him, computing them at 36,525 [g]. Theſe numbers are ſo enormous, that it has been a ſtumbling block to the learned, to conceive how one perſon could be the author of ſuch myriads of tracts. Therefore ſome have ſuppoſed theſe computations to refer to verſes, others to leaves of the Papyrus; and others again to ſuccinct diſcourſes and proverbs. But Clement of Alexandria will lead us out of this labyrinth, by the following account of an antient Egyptian proceſſion: The firſt that advanced, ſays he, was a Chanter, or ſinger, who bore ſome ſymbol or other of muſic: his buſineſs it was to receive two of the books of Mercury, or Thoth; of which the one contained hymns to the gods, and the other rules for the king to obſerve. Secondly, an Aſtrologer, bearing a dial and a palm, which were ſymbols of aſtrology: he was obliged to have the four aſtrological books of Mercury by heart; the firſt of which contained the places of the fixed ſtars, and the three others treated of the ſun and moon, their eclipſes, illuminations, riſing and the like. Thirdly, an Hierogrammateus, or ſacred ſcribe, with a feather on his head, bearing a book and a rule, in which were ink and a reed to write with: he was verſed in the ſubjects of ten books, the 1. of hieroglyphics; 2. of coſmography; 3. of geography; 4. of the order of the ſun and moon; 5. of the five planets; 6. of the chorography of Egypt; 7. a deſcription of the Nile; 8. a deſcription of the ſacred utenſils, and of the places conſecrated to them; 9. treated of meaſures; and the 10th of whatever was neceſſary in their worſhip. Fourthly, a Stoliſtes, a kind of ſolemn marſhal, holding the cubit of juſtice [e] Diod Sic. l. 1. p. 14, &c. [f] Seleuc. apud Jamblich. de Myſt. Ægypt. § 8. cap. 1. [g] Manetho, apud eund. ibid.

and

and a cup for libations: he knew whatever concerned the inſtitution of youth, and the ſealing of victims. The whole Egyptian religion was comprehended in ten books; the 1. related to the ſacrifices; the 2. to firſt-fruits; 3. to hymns; 4. to prayers; 5. to proceſſions; 6. to feſtivals; and the other four on the like ſubjects. Fifthly, and laſt of all came the Prophet, bearing a water-pot openly in his boſom, and followed by thoſe who carried the proceſſional bread: he, as preſiding over the temple, ſtudied the ten books called ſacerdotal, which ſpoke of the laws, the gods, and the whole diſcipline of the prieſthood. Here we have an account of thirty ſix books of Hermes; beſides which he wrote ſix more, which treated of anatomy, diſeaſes, medicaments, and the like; ſo that he was author of forty two in all [h]. This is ſome rational account of the matter. But to return from whence we digreſſed; this ſagacious perſon or one ſuch was left behind to aſſiſt Iſis in the government of the kingdom.

MOREOVER, Hercules was appointed over the forces at home, and Antæus, Buſiris, and Prometheus were conſtituted governors over ſeveral provinces. Oſiris having thus ſettled affairs in Egypt, began his progreſs, moving firſt towards Æthiopia. In this country he raiſed the banks of the Nile, and dug ſeveral canals, thereby to prevent the too frequent inundations, and to abate and diſtribute the waters of the Nile. Whilſt he was thus employed in Æthiopia, the Nile broke down its banks in Egypt, and overflowed a great part of the country; and this it did with ſo furious a tide, and ſo ſudden a ſpread, as ſwept away all before it, and drowned great multitudes of people, doing particular damage in Prometheus's juriſdiction, whereat he was grieved almoſt to deſpair. But Hercules ſoon drained off the waters, and thence is ſaid to have ſhot through the eagle which preyed on Prometheus's heart; for the ſuddenneſs of this flood was compared to the flight of an eagle, and the river from thence was ſometimes called after that bird. But to return to Oſiris; he inſtructed the Ethiopians in all rural matters, and built them ſeveral cities; which done he departed, leaving ſome behind him to act as his governors, and others to gather in his tribute. From Æthiopia he went into Arabia, and ſo continued his travels till he got beyond India. In India he built ſeveral cities, and particularly Nyſa, which he ſo called from the place where (according to ſome) he was bred up. Here he planted the ivy which was no where elſe to be found in India, and left ſo many monuments of himſelf behind him as afterwards gave room to dispute, whether he was not originally of this part of the world. Having surveyed all Asia, he crossed the Hellespont, and landing in Thrace, killed Lycurgus, the king of the country, who opposed his progress. Here he left Maro to cultivate the land, and commanded him to build a city, and call it, in derivation from his own name, Maronea. Afterwards he bestowed on his son Macedo the country of Macedon, which borrowed its name from him; and Triptolemus had charge of Attica. At length Osiris returned back into Egypt, laden with the choicest productions of the earth; and with the blessings of the whole race of mankind, who consented to his deification.

[h] CLEM. ALEX. Strom. lib. 6. p. 633.

But his brother Typhon slew him soon after his arrival, and cut his body into twenty six pieces, giving one to each of his accomplices[i]. It was thus that some spoke concerning the death of Osiris; but the story was also told after the following manner: Typhon, hearing that his brother was on his return, entered into a conspiracy with seventy two others, exclusive of the queen of Æthiopia, called Aso, to kill him. And privately taking measure of Osiris's body, he ordered a very magnificent coffin to be made, and contrived that it should be brought home to him as he was entertaining his friends. This was done, and his guests failed not to take notice of the coffin and admire it. Whereupon Typhon, in a jesting way, told them, that the person amongst them whom it best fitted should have it. Several of the company tried, but to no purpose, till Osiris went into it, which he had no sooner done, than they shut the lid on him, and locked it. Then, pouring melted lead over it they conveyed him to the Tanitic mouth of the Nile, and there threw him into the sea; wherefore that entrance of the river was abhorred by the Egyptians. This cruelty was transacted on the seventeenth day of the month Athyr, in which the sun went through the Scorpion, and in the twenty eighth year of the reign of Osiris; though, according to some, not of his reign, but of his life. When the Pans and Satyrs told it to the men, they were seized by those sudden consternations as have ever since born the name of Panic fears. And Isis, hearing it, cut off a lock of her hair, and putting on mourning, set out from the city of Coptus, where she received the doleful news, and went in quest of the body of Osiris. As she went along, she asked all she met, if they had seen, or heard of the coffin; but she enquired in vain, till some children, who had seen Typhon's friends carrying it, gave her some information. Hence the Egyptians held children to have been endued with a predictive faculty, and drew conjectures from what they said whilst playing in temples.

[i] Diod. Sic. ubi supra, p. 15, &c.

dren

ISIS knowing that Osiris had, by mistake, lain with his sister Nephthe, and that she had exposed a son she had by him, through fear of Typhon, resolved now to seek after him; and after much fatigue, she was guided by dogs to the place where he was. Having found him, he afterwards served her for a guard and companion, and was called Anubis. He was thought to have guarded the gods in the same manner as dogs take care of men. At length she came to understand that the coffin was thrown up by the sea, and lodged in a tuft of broom, or heath, at Byblus, and that the broom had suddenly sprouted up with a large stalk, which inclosed and concealed it from sight: Therefore she repaired thither, and to pass over the methods she practised to possess herself of the coffin, she there obtained it. When she first cast eyes on it, she cried out with so loud a voice as struck the king of Byblus's youngest son dead; for she had insinuated herself into his family, as the most ready means to obtain what she wanted, he having out of curiosity built over the broom which hid the coffin. With his eldest son and the coffin she straightways embarked; and, in her passage, dried up the river Phædrus, which displeased her, because of a ruffling breeze which issued from its mouth, as she passed by about break of day. Being now private, and at leisure, she opened the coffin, and laying her face to the face of the deceased, bathed it with her tears. As she was thus giving vent to her grief, the king's son she had brought away with her from Byblus came behind her, and saw what she was about; whereat enraged, she turned on him with so dreadful a countenance, as frighted him so that he died. Some said he jumped into the sea. This is supposed to be Maneros [k]. She brought the body to Butus and hid it; but Typhon, one night hunting by moonlight, fell on it, and tore it into fourteen pieces, which he scattered abroad. Isis then traversed the lakes and watery places in a boat made of the Papyrus, seeking after the limbs of Osiris. Whence it was held, that those who went on the water in boats made of that wood were in no danger from crocodiles, who either revered or dreaded the goddess. In whatever place she found a limb, she there buried it; for which reason there were many tombs ascribed to Osiris: but others said, she made several counterfeits of his body, and presented them to as many cities, pretending to each that they had the original, and so established the worship of him in many places, and made it difficult for Typhon, to find out the right monument, in case he should ever get the superiority, and continue in his implacable malice against Osiris [l]. This burial was also related after a third, and almost quite different, manner. For the author, from whom we took the first account of his death, reports that Isis got together the twenty six pieces of his mangled carcass, joined them, and embalmed them; and afterwards prevailed on the Egyptian priests to consent to, and promote his deification, in consideration of a third part of Egypt which she gave them, and they buried him at Memphis. But the place of his burial was a matter of great dispute and controversy; though some produced the following inscription in sacred characters, which they said was on a pillar in Arabia.

[k] See before, p. 463.

> SATURN, the youngest of all the gods, was my father. I am Osiris, that king who led an army as far as the deserts of India, and from thence northward as far as the springs of the river Ister, and thence quite to the ocean. I am the eldest son of Saturn, sprung from a noble stock, and of generous blood; cousin to the day. Nor is there a place where I have not been, I, who freely dispensed my benefits to all mankind.

ISIS, after the most diligent search, could never recover the privities of Osiris, which being thrown into the river, were devoured by the lepidotus, the squameus, the phagrus, and the oxyrynchus, which four sorts of fish the Egyptians hated upon that account: but she made ample amends for this irreparable loss by instituting a kind of separate worship, which was devoutly, and universally paid to the image of that part afterwards.

THERE were various reports concerning the actions of Isis and Orus after the death of Osiris, as also relating to Typhon. And first it was affirmed, that they overcame him in battle, and slew him [m]. Secondly, he was said to have been thunderstruck by Jupiter, and plunged under the lake Sirbon [n] (S), where [l] PLUT. de Isid. & Osirid. p. 357, 358. [m] DIOD. SIC. ubi supra, p. 79. [n] APOLLON. RHOD. Argo. lib. II.

(S) According to Diodorus Siculus the lake, or bog Sirbon, Serbonis, or Selbonis, under mount Casius, was two hundred furlongs in length, very narrow, but very deep. Many, mistaken in their road, nay, whole armies, misguided in their march, have been swallowed up where being ſuppoſed to lie ſubmerſed, it was thence called Typhon's exhalations [o]. And thirdly it was aſſerted, that Oſiris, aſcending from the infernal regions, inſtructed Orus, and prepared him to war with Typhon; and that after a battle, which continued ſeveral days, this laſt was made priſoner. But Iſis, reſtoring him to his liberty, ſo enraged Orus, that he tore off the royal attire from her head, when Mercury being preſent, clapped her on a helmet made of an ox's head inſtead thereof. Typhon after this renewed the war twice, and was both times vanquiſhed [p]; and being no longer able to withſtand, or make head againſt his enemies, concealed himſelf (as ſhould ſeem) under the above-mentioned lake Sirbon [q]. Oſiris moreover appeared to Iſis, and had a ſon by her, called Harpocrates, but he proved a weak and ricketty perſon. Here Plutarch breaks off, and, aſſuring us that his is the genuine ſtory, proceeds to explain away the whole into an allegory [r]. But ſeeing that Diodorus continues to the death of Iſis and Orus, we now turn to him. Iſis, having thus quelled her enemies, reigned with great prudence, juſtice, moderation, and beneficence. And becauſe of her great and conſtant affection towards Oſiris, which appeared in nothing more than in the vow ſhe made of widowhood, a law was enacted, which allowed of the marriage contract between brother and ſiſter: and from the ſame ſource ſprang the cuſtom of preferring the queen before the king, and the wife before the husband [s]. At laſt ſhe died, and was buried at Memphis, as the common opinion was; but this alſo was diſputed. And particularly thoſe who laid a ſtreſs upon the up in it. The ſhore all round it was heaps of ſand, which the winds blowing over the ſurface of the bog, the lower particles lighted thereon, and by degrees formed a looſe ſkin, or cruſt, over it; which, though weak, was ſufficient to deceive the eye of the wandering traveller, who no ſooner ſet foot upon it, than he felt it give way under him, and was irrecoverably loſt, and this even at the very brink of it. It was alſo called Barathra, or the profound gulphs (2) But it has from time to time decreaſed in extent; for Pliny ſpeaks of it as a ſmall place to what it had formerly been (3); and it is now thought to be quite choaked up, its place being no more to be found (4).

[o] PLUTARCH. in vita Antonii, p. 916. [p] Idem Iſid. & Oſirid. ubi ſupra. [q] HERODOT. lib. 3. [r] PLUT. ubi ſupr. [s] See before, p. 443.

(2) Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 26. (3) Plin. Hiſt. Nat. lib. 5. c. 13. (4) Voyage de P. Lucas, tom. III. p. 306.

above-

above-inserted inscription, affirmed, there was another pillar near to the former in Arabia, and that the following words in sacred characters were legible upon it.

I, Isis, am the queen of this country, and was tutored by Mercury. What I have ordained, no one may make void. I am the eldest daughter of Saturn, the youngest of the gods. I am the sister, and wife of king Osiris. I am she who first found corn for the use of man. I am the mother of king Orus. I am she who ariseth in the dog-star. The city of Bubastus was built in honour of me. Farewel! rejoice, O Egypt, my nursing mother---! This was all, said they, that was to be distinguished of this inscription [t].

She had a most stately temple erected to her at the city of Busiris, situate near the middle of the Delta [u], some remains of which are thought to be still standing (T).

There

[t] Diodor. Sic. ubi supra. [u] Herodot. lib. 2.

(T) Take the Description and account of these ruins in the author's own words: "I here saw the remains of one of the finest, "vastest, and most antient temples of Egypt. All the stones are of "enormous length and thickness, and all of granate. They are, "for the most part, adorned with sculptures in Relievo, which re-"present men and women, and all sorts of hieroglyphics. Many "of these stones bear the image of a man standing upright, with a "long peeked cap on his head, and holding a goblet, or bowl, in "each hand, which he presents to three or four young women, "which stand also upright, one behind another. These young "women have each of them a javelin in one hand, and a staff, "shorter than the javelin, in the other; and on each of their "heads is a ball between two long taper horns. Others of these "stones are embellished with hieroglyphical representations of "birds, fishes, and terrestrial animals. A lofty and very substan-"tial pillar of fine granate, having each of the four faces of its up-"per part wrought with four angular flutings, or notches, seems to "have been erected to support the arcades and vaults of this sump-"tuous edifice. On each face of this pillar there is also carved the "head of a woman bigger than the life. These sculptures have not "been in the least injured by time, nor by the sun, nor by the "Arabs. . . . It seems to be more than probable, that this temple, "whose remains I have here described, was the very temple of the "goddess Isis, and that the city of Busiris, mentioned by Herodo-"tus, is now the very town of Babâbeit, situated in the middle "of the Delta, near Sebennytus, or Sammanûd. My opinion is the "more

THERE is nothing ſaid of Orus any farther than that he was the laſt of the gods and demi-gods [x]; and therefore we here conclude this fabulous, or myſterious, ſection.

[x] Idem, ibid.

" more rational, in that throughout all the iſland it was never " heard, nor known, that any monument of marble, or ſtone, ei- " ther little or big, was ever found there, that could ſuit with any " other deity than the goddeſs Iſis. . . . Theſe ruins which are " near to Babâbeit are about 1000 paces in circumference. They " are about a league from the Nile, about two or three leagues " from Sammanûd, and about twenty five or thirty leagues north " of Kâbira. There is neither brick, nor plaiſter, nor mortar, nor " common ſtone amongſt theſe reliques; there is nothing to be " ſeen but great blocks of granate (5).

(5) Nouv. Mem. des Miſſion de la Comp. de Jeſ. dans le Levant, Tome II. p. 117. & ſeq.

INDEX.

Directions to the Book-binder for placing the Plates.

Map of the Garden of Eden. Page 107
A Chronological Table of Adam and his Defcendants. p. 152
Noah's Ark. p. 242
A Chronological Table of Noah and his Defcendants. p. 257
The Tower of Babylon. p. 322
The Sphynx's Head. p. 393
Coptic Alphabet. p. 486

AN INDEX TO THE FIRST VOLUME.

The Numbers direct to the Page, and the great Letters to the Notes.

A.

ABEL, when probably born, 145. The import of the word, ibid. (I). His offerings 147. Murdered, 148. Various opinions as to the place and manner of his murder, ibid. (N). Whether married, 149, (N). How GOD declared the acceptance of his offering, 147, (M). Abel or Hebel, etymology of, 145.

Abelard Peter accuſed of holding the opinion that all things were GOD, and GOD all things, 15.

Abimael, one of the ſons of Jokran, where placed, 375.

Abram and Abraham, etymology of, 340, (K).

Abu Moſlem held that all things returned into one common principle, or GOD, 16.

Abydus, an antient city of Thebaïs, 386.

Accad, city of, where ſituate, 272. (P).

Achtoes, king of Egypt, a moſt inhuman prince, ſlain by a crocodile, 494, (I).

Adam, in what place created, 100. Whether men before him. See Preadamites. Placed in paradiſe, 118. His happpy ſtate in the garden of Eden, 107. Names the birds and beaſts, 118. Takes Eve to wife, ibid. His fall, as related by Moſes, 119. Some objections to the letter of that relation, 120. The literal ſenſe defended, 121. By whom tempted. 122. His trial, by forbidding a fruit, very rational, 128. And the puniſhment juſt, 129. The circumſtances of the aprons and coats explained, ibid. The effects of his fall on man and the ground, 131. Change in the conſtitution constitution of man, 132, & seq. Change in the constitution of the earth how effected, according to Dr. Burnet, 134, & seq. And Mr. Whiston, 135. Where he dwelt after his expulsion from paradise, 144. The eastern tradition, ibid. (F). Dies, 159. Uncharitable opinion with respect to his repentance, 160. (D). Conjectures concerning the place of his burial, ibid.

Adam an appellative rather than a proper name, and includes both sexes, 92. (M). According to some Rabbins made first with a tail, ibid. (S). Other ridiculous notions of the Talmudists, 93. And Mohammedans, 95. Etymology of the name Adam, 340. L).

Adodus or Adad, called, in the Phœnician records, the king of the gods, 304. (W). Perhaps the Adad mentioned by Josephus, 305. (W).

Æoles, who inhabited Æolia to the north of Ionia, made by Josephus to descend from Elisha, Javan's eldest son, 372.

Æon and Protogonus, Eve and Adam, in the history of Sanchoniatho, 175. Their issue, ibid.

Aeria Egypt, why so called by the Greeks, 384.

Æsculapius, a name given to Tosorthrus, or Sesorthrus, king of Memphis, more antient than the Grecian Æsculapius, 473.

Africa and Asia, their boundaries, 385.

Agreus and Halieus, inventors of hunting and fishing, according to Sanchoniatho, 178.

Agriculture improved by the offspring of Cain, 163. Tools of agriculture, said by some to be the invention of Noah, 172. (S).

Agrouerus, or Agrotes, 179.

Agrus, who, ibid.

Ahâriman, or Ahriman, the evil dæmon in the physiology of the Persian mages, 66, and 106.

Ahl al tahkik, or people of certainty, a sect sprung up lately among the Mohammedans, 16.

Al Bahriya, thought the eastern part of the Delta in Egypt, 387. Placed more truly beyond the western branch of the Nile, ibid.

Alcanna, a shrub growing in Egypt, an account of, 402.

Alexander the Epicurean, his opinion of the origin of things, 15. Holds that all things are essentially God, and that forms are imaginary accidents, ibid.

Alexandria, with its dependencies, part of the lower Egypt, 387. Metropolis of the whole kingdom under the Greeks and Romans, 388.

Algebra among the Egyptians, 472.

Almodad, one of the sons of Joktan, uncertain where settled, 375.

Alorus, the same with Adam, 185.

Amalric, his body taken up and burnt, for having taught, that all things were God, and God was all things, 15.

America, how peopled, and how animals got into it, unaccountable, 212.

Americans speak of a flood, 194.

Amida, god of the Japonese, 72.

Ammonius, ſcholar of Proclus, 8. Teaches publickly in Alexandria the world's co-eternity with God, ibid.
Amoſis, Amos, or Tethmoſis, king of Dioſpolis in Egypt, ſuppoſed to have reigned when the Iſraelites departed out of Egypt, 497, (M). Said to have aboliſhed the cuſtom of ſacrificing men to Juno at Heliopolis, 459.
Amynus and Magus in the Phœnician records, 296.
Amynus, who ſo called, 365. Where ſettled, ibid.
Anarchy, very early cultivated in Egypt, 475.
Anaxagoras, philoſopher of the Ionic ſect, 38. The firſt who rejected all chance in the diſpoſition of the univerſe, ibid. Reforms the Ionic philoſophy, by admitting an intelligent being diſtinct from matter, 40. Held two diſtinct and independent principles co-exiſtent from eternity, 53. His notions of the origin of the univerſe, 59, &c ſeq.
Anaximander, his account of the origin of things, 38. Denies an intelligent being, ibid. Said by ſome to have been the firſt who publiſhed a book of natural philoſophy. ibid. (U).
Anaximenes, diſciple of Anaximander, 39. His coſmogony, ibid.
Andes, Mountains of Peru, their height, 209, (B). Thought by ſome to be the Sephar mentioned by Moſes, 374.
Anebo, an Egyptian prieſt, 26.
Angels, the import of the word, 101. Their nature, 102. Their exiſtence generally acknowledged even by the antient heathens, ibid Epicurus the only one among the antient philoſophers who denied them, 101. Reaſonable to ſuppoſe their exiſtence, ibid. When created, 102. Their nature, power, employments, &c. ibid. Greatly reſpected by the antient Romans, Perſians, Jews, Mohammedans, &c. 103, &c ſeq. Several orders and degrees among them, 104. The fallen angels, 105. The time of their fall, their offence, &c. ibid. Angels tutelar, or guardian, believed by the Jews and Gentiles, 103. Opinion of thoſe who think the angels defiled themſelves with women, 165. By what originally occaſioned, ibid. (L). Traditions concerning them not unknown to the Mohammedans, Perſians, &c. 168. (M) Their ſtories concerning them, ibid, & ſeq.
Animals, half men half fiſh, mentioned by Beroſus, 183. Worſhipped by the Egyptians, 453. What gave riſe to this worſhip, 455. Some pretended, that the worſhip paid thoſe animals did not terminate in them, but in the gods, 456. Vid. Egyptians.
Annedotus, a conjectural explanation of the word, 183, (A).
Antediluvian patriarchs, a chronological table of their years, 139. Their genealogical table, 152.
Antediluvian kings of Chaldea, 184. Length of their reigns, and remarkable events under them, 185, & ſeq. Antediluvian world the ſtate of, 220. More populous and fertile than the preſent, 222.
Antediluvians, their religion, arts, ſciences, polity, &c. 220, & ſeq. Their longevity, and the cauſe of it, 224.
Antelopes, common in Egypt, 398.

Antilibanus mount, whence ſo called in the Phœnician hiſtory, 177.
Anubis, one of the Egyptian deities, how repreſented, 447, ſon of Oſiris by his ſiſter Nephthe, 519.
Aphobis king of Egypt, or Dynaſt of the race of the Phœnician ſhepherds, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Pharaoh, who advanced Joſeph, 496, (L).
Apis, by the Greeks Epaphus, a bull ſo called, repreſenting Oſiris, and worſhipped at Memphis, 448. Was to be the calf of a cow incapable of bearing another, and impregnated, as the Egyptians believed, by thunder, ibid. By what marks he was to be diſtinguiſhed from all others, ibid. Bulls ſacrificed to Apis, ibid. The choice of this victim, and ceremonies of the ſacrifice, ibid. What reaſon they gave for worſhipping Oſiris in the ſhape of a bull, 449. When the Apis died another with the ſame marks was ſought for, and put in his room, ibid. How his oracle was conſulted, 459. Began to be worſhipped at Memphis in the reign of Cracos, 492, (D).
Apollo, ſon of Cronus ſuppoſed to have been the ſame with Phut of Moſes, 303, (R). Whence ſet over the nine muſes, 515.
Arabia, from whom ſo called, 289.
Aram, ſon of Shem, one of the chiefs at the diſperſion, 362. According to the Armenians, the ſeventh in deſcent from Haikh ſon of Togarmah, enlarged the bounds of his kingdom, which from him was called Armenia, 369.
Ararat mountains of, where the ark reſted, 218. The ſituation of theſe mountains, 230, & ſeq. Traditions about them, 231, & ſeq. An account of them from Tournefort 239, & ſeq. From a Dutch traveller, 242, (K). Several traditions relating to them, 231, & ſeq. Called by the Armenians, Maſis, 235. Firſt migration of the ſons of Noah from about theſe mountains, 312.
Archelaus, the ſucceſſor of Anaxagoras, his notions of the origin of the univerſe, 60.
Archytas the Tarentine, a Pythagorean, held two ſubordinate principles, 75, & ſeq.
Ariſtophanes, his antient coſmogony, 37.
Ariſtotle, the firſt at leaſt of the Greeks who aſſerted the world's eternity, 6. His doctrine, ibid. The great reaſon which induced him to aſſert the world's eternity, ibid. His deſcription of the ſupreme being, 7. His ſentiments embraced by many learned Mohammedans, ibid.
Ark, its ſize and figure, 210. The number of the animals in it, 211, (F). Objections againſt the preſervation of animals in it, 212. Its materials, 213. Where built, ibid. In what time built, 214. How many perſons ſaved in it, 215, (I). Noah enters into the ark, 215. Remains of it, 232. Monaſtery of the ark, 233. Fables of the Armenians concerning it, 238.
Armenia, the name of, derived from Aram, 369.
Armenians, give themſelves out to be the deſcendants of Togarmah, by his ſon Haikh, 369. Their fables concerning the ark, 238.
Arouëris, who, mentioned by Plutarch, 180, (O).

Arphaxad, the third ſon of Shem, 279. Thought to be the founders of the Chaldeans, 280, (C). When born, 281. Several conjectures of writers relating to him, ibid. (E). Who was his ſon, 282. One of the chiefs of the line of Shem, 360. Where ſettled, 361.
Arts and ſciences, their original after the deluge, 381.
Arueris, one of the Egyptian gods, by ſome called Apollo, by others the elder Orus, 514. Son of Sol, ibid.
Arura, a meaſure of land among the Egyptians, 437.
Aſclepiades, his natural principles indiviſible bodies, 41.
Aſclepius, ſon of Sydyc, 302. Paſt for a god in Egypt, ibid. (P).
Aſchenaz, one of Gomer's ſons, where ſeated, 368.
Aſſur, ſecond ſon of Shem, one of the chiefs of that line, 360. Where ſettled, ibid. Cities founded by him, 278.
Aſia minor, flood of, 196. Aſia and Africa, their boundaries, 385.
Aſps, why worſhipped by the Egyptians, 457.
Aſſyrian kingdom, epoch of its foundation, 278.
Aſtarte, daughter of Uranus, 301. Called by the Greeks, Aphrodite or Venus, 305
Aſtronomy foundations of, laid by the offspring of Seth, 163. Said to be the invention of the Egyptians, 472.
Athena, daughter of Cronus, 305. Reigns over Attica, ibid.
Athos mount, its height, 209. (B).
Athothes, king of Egypt, ſaid to have been a phyſician, 473. Suppoſed to be the ſame with Thoth or Hermes, 492, (B). Built the palace at Memphis, ibid.
Atlas, ſon of Uranus, 298. His cruel death, by the hands of his brother Cronus, 300. The Atlantij in Afric derived from him, 299, (H).
Atomic ſyſtem, by whom invented, 40. The principles of this ſyſtem, according to Leucippus and Democritus, 42. The ſame according to Epicurus, 43. Difference between the two hypotheſes, ibid. This ſyſtem raiſed to a high degree of reputation by Epicurus, 44. By ſome moderns, both Chriſtians and Mohammedans, 45.
Atticus, his opinion of the origin of the univerſe, 62.
Averroes, or Ebn Roſhd, ſuſpected of favouring the world's eternity, 7.
Auguſtamnica, part of the lower Egypt, 387.
Avicenna, or Ebn Sina, ſuſpected of favouring the world's eternity, 7
Auritæ, the firſt race that governed Egypt, according to the accounts of the Egyptians, 188. From whence ſo named, ibid. (G).
Azer, of the Aſiatics, the ſame as Terah, 292. By ſome ſuppoſed to be the ſon of Terah, ibid. (Z).

B.

BAAU, wife of Colpias, according to the Phœnician tradition, and mother of the firſt pair, 95. The import of the word, ibid (O).

Babel, by whom built, 272. Etymology of the word, 316, 339, (I). Its building begun, 286, 315. What induced them to undertake that work, 315. Their deſign fruſtrated, 316. The time of their enterprize, 317. Whether ſinful, ibid. All mankind concerned in the work, 318, (H). Deſcription of it, 319. Some account of its ruins, 325, (N). Traditions relating to them, 322, & ſeq. Called alſo the tower of Nimrod, 322, (L).
Babylon, according to ſome, built out of the ruins of Babel, 316, (H). An account of its ruins, 324, 325, (M).
Babylonian antediluvian hiſtory, according to Beroſus, 183, & ſeq.
Babylonians attributed the orderly diſpoſition of the world to Bel, or Belus, 30.
Bacchus, worſhipped by the Egyptians, 450. Obſcene ceremonies uſed on his feſtival, 451:
Bætylia, or Bætyli, anointed ſtones worſhipped by the Phœnicians, 301, (N). Why ſo called, ibid.
Balkis, who viſited Solomon, reigned at Sanaa, or Saba, 376.
Barbara, or Barabara Waſtu, the ſupreme being among the Malabarians, 70.
Bdolab and Shoham, differently interpreted, 111.
Beelſamen, what in the Phœnician language, 176.
Beetle, why worſhipped by the Egyptians, 457.
Belus, the ſupreme god of the old Babylonians, 30.
Beelzebub, Satan, or Sammael, prince of the fallen angels, 106.
Beroſus, his account of the Chaldean or Babylonian coſmogony, 29. He collected the Babylonian antiquities, 183. The ſubſtance of the few fragments of them that are ſtill remaining, ibid. & ſeq.
Beruth, 181.
Betylus, ſon of Uranus, 298, (H).
Blacks, their origin according to ſome, 263, (D). Not the deſcendants of Ham, 262. How their blackneſs may be accounted for, 99.
Boëthus, an heterodox Stoic, 16. Aſſerts the world's eternity and incorruptibility, 17.
Brachmans, old Indian philoſophers, 68. Their opinion as to the creation of the world, ibid.
Bramins, Indian philoſophers, their phyſiology, 68, & ſeq.
Bramma, a god among the Malabarians, 70.
Brathys mount, why ſo called in the Phœnician hiſtory, 177.
Bremaw, what meant by, in the phyſiology of the Bramins, 69, & 220.
Bubaſtis, or Diana, daughter of Oſiris and Iſis, 514, (A).
Bull, worſhipped by the Egyptians, 448. Repreſented Oſiris, ibid. Two of this kind kept in Egypt, ibid.
Burnet Dr. his theory of the earth, 76, & ſeq. How he accounts for the change in the conſtitution of the earth after the fall, 134. His theory of the deluge, 203 How he accounts for the changes made in the world after the deluge, 204, & 225.
Buſiris, his cruelty to ſtrangers gave riſe to the fable, 459.
Byblus, in Phœnicia, by whom founded, 300.
Byſſus, ſuperfine linen, 401.

C.

C.

CAIN when probably born, 145. The import of the word, ibid. (I). His offerings, 146. Why not accepted, 147. (M). Murders his brother, 148. His puniſhment, 149. Goes into baniſhment and builds a city, 151. Grows more wicked, 152, (Q). Traditions relating to his death, 153, (Q) His poſterity wicked, 155. His race ſuppoſed to be meant by men, and the daughters of men, ibid. His poſterity employed in improving agriculture, and inventing mechanical arts, and muſical inſtruments, 164. The pedigree of his line, as given by Sanchoniatho, compared with that given by Moſes, 182. A table of his deſcendants according to Sanchoniatho and Moſes, ibid.

Cain, a city in Canaan, 176, (A).

Cainan, one of Seth's deſcendants, 156.

Calah city, where ſituate, 280, (B).

Canaan, the fourth ſon of Ham, 267. Signification of the word, ibid. (C). According to ſome born in the ark, ibid. The curſe of Noah peculiar to, and wholly compleated in, him, ibid. Why curſed by Noah for the crime of his father, 261. Probably lived and died in the country called after his name, 267. His tomb formerly ſhewn not far from Tripoly in Syria, 268. Known to the antient hiſtorians, ibid. Opinions of the Mohammedans concerning him, 267, (D).

Canal, ſtill in being, cut from the Euphrates to the Tigris, 115.

Canopus, one of the Egyptian deities, 447. How he obtained a victory over the Chaldean god Fire, by the craft of a prieſt, 448. How repreſented, ibid.

Caphtor, probably an iſland ſituate either in the lake of Temis or Tanis, extending from Damietta to Tina, 367.

Caphtorim, the laſt of the offspring of Mizraïm, by all the fathers ſaid to be the Cappadocians, and Caphtor Cappadocia, 366. By Cappadocia here underſtood ſome place in Egypt, generally ſuppoſed by the Rabbins, to be Demiat, 367.

Cappadocia, in Aſia minor, and ſome place in Egypt of the ſame name, 366, & ſeq.

Cardu mountains, remains of the ark ſaid to have been formerly ſeen there, 232.

Caſluhim, where ſettled, 366.

Caſiotis, part of the lower Egypt, 387.

Caſius mount, whence ſo called in the Phœnician hiſtory, 177.

Cats in high veneration among the Egyptians, 453. The killing of one was certain death, ibid. Inſtance of this in a Roman, ibid. Why ſo much veneration paid to them, 455, and 456, & ſeq.

Caucaſus mount, called by the Arabs the mountain of Kaf, 371. Its height, 209.

Cayumarras, firſt king of Perſia, ſaid to have been the ſon of Shem, 278.

Celſus would have had the Chriſtians take Orpheus rather for a god than Chriſt, 32.
Celts, the ſame people with the Gauls, deſcended from Gomer, the eldeſt ſon of Japhet, 368.
Cephren, Cephrenes, or Chabryis, king of Egypt, erected the ſecond of the three moſt remarkable pyramids, 404.
Ceteroupa, the firſt woman after the flood, according to the Indians, 220.
Cetii, a people mentioned by Homer, 372.
Ceuta, vid. Sebta,
Chabryis, vid. Cephren.
Chæremon, according to Euſebius, thought there was nothing prior to the viſible world, 26. Defended by Jamblichus, ibid.
Chaldæa, the antediluvian kings of 184.
Chaldean coſmogony, as delivered by Diodorus, 29. The ſame from Beroſus, ibid. The Chaldean account of the flood, 186, & ſeq.
Chaldeans, celebrated for their acknowledging one ſovereign deity, 30. Their account of the origin of things, drawn from the Chaldaic oracles of Zoroaſtres, 31. Probably founded by Arphaxad, 279.
Chaos, ſome philoſophers ſuppoſe the origin of the earth from it, 21. Abſurdity of this opinion, ibid. Maintained by ſome to have been animated by an evil ſpirit, 62, & ſeq.
Charon, why the lake of Mœris called at preſent the lake of Charon, 428.
Chemia, why Egypt ſo called by its antient inhabitants, 383.
Chemmis, or Chembis, vid. Cheops.
Cheops, Chemmis, or Chembis, king of Egypt, builds the greateſt of the three moſt remarkable pyramids, 404. Said to have proſtituted his daughter, to get money for that end, 405. His daughter ſaid to have built a ſmall pyramid, by obliging each of her gallants to contribute a ſtone towards the work, 406.
Cherinus, vid. Mycerinus.
Cherubim, and flaming ſword, placed to guard the way of the tree of life, 130. What meant thereby, ibid. Etymology of the word. 124.
Chineſe, a ſect of philoſophers among them, 50. Hold nature to be the ſole deity and ſoul which informs matter, ibid. Independent of all others, ibid. In what they differ from the Stoics, ibid. The moſt common opinion among them, that GOD is the material ſoul of the world, ibid. Another opinion among them, eſtabliſhed by royal authority, and holding, that a void or emptineſs is the principle and end of all things, 51. Wherein it differs from Spinoziſm, ibid. They formerly acknowledged one GOD, 71. Which opinion obtains now with few of the better ſort, ibid. Their phyſiology, ibid. Their hiſtorians mention the flood, 195. Strong marks of their language being the primitive language, 336.
Chna, mentioned by Sanchoniatho, ſeems to have been the ſame with Canaan, 268.

Chronological table of the years of the patriarchs, according to the computation of the Hebrew, 140. The ſame according to the computation of the Septuagint, 141. And of the Samaritan Pentateuch, 142. Chronology from the creation to the deluge ſtated, 139 From the deluge to the departure of Abraham from Haran, 244. Egyptian chronology, 188, & ſeq. From the time of Alexander the Great, 491.

Chryſor, the ſame with Hephæſtus, or Vulcan, 178. Inventor of iron, ibid And of hooks, baits, &c. 179. The firſt man that ſailed, according to Sanchoniatho, ibid. worſhipped as a God, ibid. Etymology of the word, 179, (L).

Cimmerians, or Cimbri, according to ſome, deſcended from Gomer, and the ſame people with the Gauls of Aſia minor, 368.

Circumciſion, a very antient cuſtom among the Egyptians, 463.

Citium in Cyprus, according to ſome, took its name from the Kittim, 373.

Cneph, the intellectual architect of the world, in the coſmogony of the Egyptians, 27. How repreſented, ibid.

Colour, difference in, between the whites and blacks accounted for, 99.

Colpias, a wind, and his wife Baau, parents of the firſt men, according to ſome, 95. The ſignification of the word, ibid. O).

Columns of Hermes in Egypt, 481.

Comet, the trajection of one occaſioned the deluge, according to Mr. Whiſton, 205. Atteſted by ſeveral authors, that one appeared at the deluge, 206, (A).

Commerce, the original of, after the deluge, 382.

Confuſion of tongues, vid Tongues.

Coptic letters, whether the modern are the ſame with the antient Egyptian, 485. The Coptic alphabet, 486. The Coptic tongue, at preſent, conſiſts of the old Egyptian and Greek, 487. Differs widely from all the oriental and European languages, ibid.

Coptos, an antient city of Thebaïs, 386. The chief reſidence of the native Egyptians for many ages, who are from thence called Copts, 387.

Coſmogony, Phœnician, Egyptian, Chaldean, &c. vid. Phœnician, Egyptian, Chaldean, &c.

Creation, true notion, 3. Moſes's account of it explained, 86. Creation of man, 91. The time and ſeaſon of the creation, 100, Whether compleated in ſix days, ibid.

Crocodile, the extravagant worſhip paid him by the Egyptians, 453, and (D). Why worſhipped, 455, and 457. How taken by the Egyptians, 397. The little, or land crocodile, probably the ſame with the Scincus of Pliny, 399. Found near the Nile and Red-ſea, ibid.

Cronus, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Ham, 266, and 298. Son of Uranus, wars againſt his father, in defence of his mother Ge, 300. Drives him from the throne, ibid. Founds Byblus, ibid.

Cronus the younger, ſacrifices his only ſon 305. Conſecrated after his death into the planet Cronus, or Saturn, ibid. Circumciſed, and forced his auxiliaries to do the ſame, ibid.
Crown, firſt uſed by Nimrod, according to the eaſtern hiſtorians, 271, (O). From whence the model of it taken, ibid.
Cumberland biſhop, his amendments of Sanchoniatho, conſidered, 309, (B) & ſeq.
Curdeſtân the ſame as Aſſur and Aſſyria, 360.
Cuſh, wrongly ſuppoſed by ſome to be the country of the Coſſæans, 112.
Cuſh, father of Nimrod, whether king, 273, and (R).
Cuſh, Ham's eldeſt ſon, where fixed, 363. By Cuſh in ſcripture, always meant Arabia, ibid.
Cynocephalus, a large kind of ape in Egypt, 398. Why ſo called, ibid. The figure of this beaſt often uſed by the Egyptians as a hieroglyphic, ibid.

D.

DÆMONS, two kinds of, 165, (L).
Dagon, or Siton, ſon of Uranus, 298 Worſhipped by the Philiſtines in Canaan, 299, (H). Called Jupiter Arotrius from his contriving of ploughs, ibid.
Dahrians, or Eternaliſts, a ſect of philoſophers among the Mohammedans. 7.
Dair abunah, a monaſtery in Meſopotamia, 256.
Damaſcus, built by Uz, the eldeſt ſon of Aram, 362.
Dandera, the city called Tentyra in antient times, in Egypt, 430. A magnificent temple there deſcribed, ibid. & ſeq. Believed by the inhabitants to have been a temple of Serapis, 431.
David of Dinant, his opinion of the origin of things, 15.
Dedan and Sheba, Raamah's two ſons, where ſeated, 364.
Delta, part of the lower Egypt, 387. Why ſo called, ibid Whether formerly a bay of the ſea, ibid. How divided by the Arabs, ibid. the moſt plentiful part of Egypt, 389.
Deluge, changes on the earth occaſioned by it, 225. Variouſly accounted for, ibid. Vid. Flood.
Demyat, or Damietta, in Egypt, 367.
Demi-gods, or gods that were ſuppoſed to have reigned in Egypt before the flood, 188. A table of them, 190.
Democritus, ſuppoſed the author of the atomic Syſtem, 40. Admits an infinite number of atoms to be the firſt principles, 42. Fatal neceſſity an inevitable conſequence of his ſyſtem, 43. Believed the atoms to be animated, ibid. What he called God, had no attributes of a deity, 44. Said to have tranſcribed his moral diſcourſes from a Babyloniſh pillar. 481.
Deſcartes, his hypotheſis, 74, & ſeq.
Deucalion, 194. (N).
Devil, the tempter of Eve, 122. Why he made choice of a ſerpent, 123. Mohammedan tradition, ibid. (H);

Dhafar, a port in the middle of the Arabian coaſt, 374.
Diana, in what manner her feſtival was obſerved among the Egyptians, at Bubaſtis, 451.
Diklah, one of Joktan's ſons, where ſituate, 375.
Diodorus, his natural principles, indiviſible bodies, 41.
Diogenes of Appollonia, ſuppoſed the air the firſt principle of the univerſe, and endued with reaſon, 40. A near conformity between his hypotheſis and the Carteſian, ibid.
Dioſcuri or Cabiri, deſcended from Sydic, called alſo Corybantes and Samothraces, 297. Invented the building a complete ſhip, ibid. The firſt ſailors mentioned after the deluge, 300. Built the firſt temple, ibid. and (K).
Dioſpolis the leſſer, a city in Thebaïs, 386.
Diſperſion of mankind, 346. The time of it fixed, 348. A double diſperſion ſuppoſed by ſome writers, 347. The number of mankind at that time, 349.
Dodanim, one of the deſcendants of Javan, where ſeated, 373.
Dogs, why worſhipped by the Egyptians, 457.
Dove, ſent out of the ark by Noah, 218. Why choſen, ibid. (N).
Druids, held the alternate diſſolution of the world by fire and water, 65.
Duration, an eſſential diſtinction between that of God and creatures, 10. The diſtinction of the ſchoolmen, between the manner of duration of God, and that of his creatures, rejected by many as inconſiſtent and unintelligible, 11.
Dyad of Pythagoras, what meant by it, 53.
Dynaſties, Egyptian, 188. Tables of their dynaſties, 491, & ſeq.

E.

ECLIPSE, Thales the firſt who ventured to foretel one, 473.
Ecphantus, the Syracuſian, his natural principles indiviſible bodies and vacuum, 41.
Eber, who meant by in the prophecy of Balaam. 259, (U). Eber the ſon of Salah, one of the chiefs of the line of Shem, at the diſperſion, 360. Where ſettled, 361. The ſignification of the word, 284, (K). Believed by ſome to have had no part in the building of Babel, 285, (M). Hebrews believed to derive their name from him, 284. Thought by ſome to be the founder of their nation, ibid. Arguments ſupporting this opinion, ibid. (L). Anſwered, ibid.
Eblis, prince of the fallen angels among the Mohammedans, 106.
Eden, garden of, its ſituation, 108. Extravagant opinions concerning it, ibid. What owing to, ibid. Several Edens, 109. A local, not an imaginary paradiſe, 110. The ſchemes which place it in Syria and Armenia ill grounded 111, & 112. And that which places it in Chaldæa, 113. Objections to this opinion, 114. A new ſcheme propoſed, ibid. The Moſaical deſcription of it imperfect, 115.

Egg, the mundane egg in the Egyptian coſmogony, ſymbol of the world, 27. An egg worſhipped by the Phœnicians in the Orgia of Bacchus, 35. Image of the world among the Chaldeans, Perſians, Indians, and Chineſe, ibid. No trivial queſtion among the Antients, which was the elder, the egg or the hen, ibid. The firſt-born God, according to the author of the hymns aſcribed to Orpheus, produced from an egg, ibid. Firſt egg of wind laid by night in the boſom of Erebus, 37.

Egregori, watching angels, 165, (L). Fall in love with the daughters of men, ibid. Their wickedneſs, ibid.

Egypt, named by its antient inhabitants Chemia, 383. Suppoſed to have been ſo named from Ham, the ſon of Noah, ibid. Generally denoted in ſcripture by the land of Mizraïm, ibid. Egypt a Greek name, ibid. Divers opinions concerning the original of it, 383, and 384. Its ſituation and extent, 384. Divided into the upper and lower, 385. By ſome into the upper, middle, and lower, ibid. Divided into ſeveral governments, called Tabir, or Nomes, 388. Its climate, fertility, &c. 388, 389. Its fecundity occaſioned by the Nile, 395 The different appearances of Egypt in two ſeaſons, ibid. Of the animals of Egypt, 397. Chief cities of the upper Egypt, 386. Of the lower, 388. Of the middle, 387. Vegetables of Egypt, 400, & ſeq. Its artificial rarities, 402, & ſeq. Ruins of antient buildings near the cataracts, 428, & ſeq Deſcribed, 429. Grots near Oſyût, ibid. Ruins at Dandera deſcribed, 430.

Egyptians, deſcended from Mizraïm, 431, 432. Not a warlike nation, 437. Their antiquity, 431. Aſſert themſelves to have been the firſt men in the world, 432. What gave riſe to this miſtake, ibid Said to have found, the firſt, the rules of government, ibid. Their laws reverenced by other nations, particularly by the Greeks, ibid. The crown of Egypt, hereditary, but the kings obliged to conform themſelves to the eſtabliſhed laws of the land, even in their private way of life, 433. Their king's manner of life, ibid Reſtraint laid on them, even in matters of the leaſt conſequence, 434. Honours paid them when dead, 435. The political diviſion of the kingdom, ibid. The prieſts had in great reverence, and next in power and dignity to the king, 435. Their great cleanneſs, ibid. Not allowed to taſte of fiſh, ibid. Their military men called Calaſirians, or Hermotybians, according to the different nomes they inhabited, 437. Not permitted to learn or practice any mechanical art, ibid. Their chief excellency in horſemanſhip, and the ſkill of driving chariots, ibid. Their huſbandmen, ſhepherds, &c. huſbandmen and ſhepherds by law, from generation to generation, 438. Their hatching of eggs by an artificial fecundation, ibid. Their courts of juſtice, and manner of proceeding, 440. Baniſhed lawyers from their tribunals, ibid. Their moſt remarkable laws, 441. Their religion, 443. Said to have been the firſt people who erected altars, images, and temples, ibid. The Greeks borrowed from them both their gods, and religious ceremonies, 445. Their chief gods gods Oſiris, and Iſis, ibid. Their other gods, ibid. Are ſaid to have acknowledged one ſupreme God, ibid. Over-run at laſt with idolatry, ſo as to worſhip not only animals, but even vegetables, ibid. The prepoſterous worſhip they paid to animals, ſetting lands apart for their maintenance, and employing men and women to feed them, 452, 453. The vaſt expence they were at in maintaining their ſacred animals when alive, and in burying them when dead, 454, 455. Reaſons alledged by them to defend the worſhipping of animals, 455. The origin of this worſhip, ibid. Some other of their inſtitutions, 458. Their human ſacrifices, 459. The ſtructure of their temples, 460. How they educated their children, 461. Diſapproved of muſic and wreſtling, ibid. Their diet, ibid. Had an averſion to ſwines fleſh, 462. Their entertainments, ibid. Were very cleanly, 463. Avoided eating with ſtrangers, ibid. Uſed circumciſion, ibid. Their dreſs, ibid. Women among them, employed in buſineſs abroad while the men ſtaid at home to ſpin, 464. Pretended to excel all mankind in gratitude, ibid. Said to have been the firſt who aſſerted the immortality of the ſoul, ibid. Why they uſed ſuch care to preſerve the dead bodies, ibid. Their mourning for the dead, and funeral rites, 465. Their manner of embalming the dead bodies, 465, &c. ſeq. Their ſepulchres, 469. Early famous for wiſdom and learning, 471. Firſt inventers of geometry, ibid. Arithmetic diligently cultivated among them, 472. Aſtronomy ſaid to have been their invention, ibid. And phyſic, 473. Of their chymiſtry, 475. Anatomy, ibid. Natural philoſophy, 476. Magic, ibid. Statuary, painting, architecture, &c. 479. How they preſerved their learning, 480. Their literary monuments, 481. Two ſorts of learning among them, the vulgar, and the ſacred wrapt up in hieroglyphics, ſymbols, &c. 483, & ſeq. The three ſorts of characters they made uſe of, 484. Their navigation on the Nile, and the conſtruction of their veſſels, 480. Their trade and navigation, 488. Bore a great averſion to the ſea becauſe it ſwallowed up their Nile, and hated ſailors, 490. Their language very antient, and probably a mother tongue, 487. Uſed literal characters of two ſorts, viz. ſacred and vulgar, 484. Explication of ſome of their characters, ibid, (L). Whether the ſame with the modern Coptic, 485, (M). Conjectures touching their letters precarious, ibid. According to Euſebius, they acknowledged no Deity beſides ſtupid matter, 27. Defended from this imputation, ibid. Profeſſed the belief of a demiurgic reaſon, and intellectual architect of the world, ibid. How they repreſented this intellectual principle, ibid. They acknowledged ſoul ſuperior to nature, and mind or intellect ſuperior to ſoul, 28. The fabulous hiſtory of the Egyptians, 513, & ſeq. A table of the Egyptian gods, and demi-gods, who are ſuppoſed to have reigned before the flood, 190. Their chronology, 188, & ſeq. Series of their kings according to ſeveral authors, 491, & ſeq. A table of the laſt ſixteen of the thirty Dynaſties, according to the old Egyptian chronicle, ibid.

Egg, the mundane egg in the Egyptian coſmogony, ſymbol of the world, 27 An egg worſhipped by the Phœnicians in the Orgia of Bacchus, 35. Image of the world among the Chaldeans, Perſians, Indians, and Chineſe, ibid. No trivial queſtion among the Antients, which was the elder, the egg or the hen, ibid. The firſt-born God, according to the author of the hymns aſcribed to Orpheus, produced from an egg, ibid. Firſt egg of wind laid by night in the boſom of Erebus, 37.

Egregori, watching angels, 165, (L). Fall in love with the daughters of men, ibid. Their wickedneſs, ibid.

Egypt, named by its antient inhabitants Chemia, 383. Suppoſed to have been ſo named from Ham, the ſon of Noah, ibid Generally denoted in ſcripture by the land of Mizraïm, ibid. Egypt a Greek name, ibid. Divers opinions concerning the original of it, 383, and 384. Its ſituation and extent, 384. Divided into the upper and lower, 385. By ſome into the upper, middle, and lower, ibid. Divided into ſeveral governments, called Tabir, or Nomes, 388. Its climate, fertility, &c. 388, 389. Its fecundity occaſioned by the Nile, 395 The different appearances of Egypt in two ſeaſons, ibid. Of the animals of Egypt, 397. Chief cities of the upper Egypt, 386. Of the lower, 388. Of the middle, 387. Vegetables of Egypt, 400, & ſeq. Its artificial rarities, 402, & ſeq. Ruins of antient buildings near the cataracts, 428, & ſeq Deſcribed, 429. Grots near Oſſût, ibid. Ruins at Dandera deſcribed, 430.

Egyptians, deſcended from Mizraim, 431, 432. Not a warlike nation, 437. Their antiquity, 431. Aſſert themſelves to have been the firſt men in the world, 432. What gave riſe to this miſtake, ibid Said to have found, the firſt, the rules of government, ibid. Their laws reverenced by other nations, particularly by the Greeks, ibid. The crown of Egypt, hereditary, but the kings obliged to conform themſelves to the eſtabliſhed laws of the land, even in their private way of life, 433. Their king's manner of life, ibid Reſtraint laid on them, even in matters of the leaſt conſequence, 434. Honours paid them when dead, 435. The political diviſion of the kingdom, ibid. The prieſts had in great reverence, and next in power and dignity to the king, 436. Their great cleanneſs, ibid. Not allowed to taſte of fiſh, ibid. Their military men called Calaſirians, or Hermotybians, according to the different nomes they inhabited, 437. Not permitted to learn or practice any mechanical art, ibid. Their chief excellency in horſemanſhip, and the ſkill of driving chariots, ibid. Their huſbandmen, ſhepherds, &c. huſbandmen and ſhepherds by law, from generation to generation, 438. Their hatching of eggs by an artificial fecundation, ibid Their courts of juſtice, and manner of proceeding, 440. Baniſhed lawyers from their tribunals, ibid. Their moſt remarkable laws, 441. Their religion, 443 Said to have been the firſt people who erected altars, images, and temples, ibid The Greeks borrowed from them both their gods, and religious ceremonies, 445. Their chief gods gods Oſiris, and Iſis, ibid. Their other gods, ibid. Are ſaid to have acknowledged one ſupreme GOD, ibid. Over-run at laſt with idolatry, ſo as to worſhip not only animals, but even vegetables, ibid. The prepoſterous worſhip they paid to animals, ſetting lands apart for their maintenance, and employing men and women to feed them, 452, 453. The vaſt expence they were at in maintaining their ſacred animals when alive, and in burying them when dead, 454, 455. Reaſons alledged by them to defend the worſhipping of animals, 455. The origin of this worſhip, ibid. Some other of their inſtitutions, 458. Their human ſacrifices, 459. The ſtructure of their temples, 460. How they educated their children, 461. Diſapproved of muſic and wreſtling, ibid. Their diet, ibid. Had an averſion to ſwines fleſh, 462. Their entertainments, ibid. Were very cleanly, 463. Avoided eating with ſtrangers, ibid. Uſed circumciſion, ibid. Their dreſs, ibid. Women among them, employed in buſineſs abroad while the men ſtaid at home to ſpin, 464. Pretended to excel all mankind in gratitude, ibid. Said to have been the firſt who aſſerted the immortality of the ſoul, ibid. Why they uſed ſuch care to preſerve the dead bodies, ibid. Their mourning for the dead, and funeral rites, 465. Their manner of embalming the dead bodies, 465, & ſeq. Their ſepulchres, 469. Early famous for wiſdom and learning, 471. Firſt inventers of geometry, ibid. Arithmetic diligently cultivated among them, 472. Aſtronomy ſaid to have been their invention, ibid. And phyſic, 473. Of their chymiſtry, 475. Anatomy, ibid. Natural philoſophy, 476. Magic, ibid. Statuary, painting, architecture, &c. 479. How they preſerved their learning, 480. Their literary monuments, 481. Two ſorts of learning among them, the vulgar, and the ſacred wrapt up in hieroglyphics, ſymbols, &c. 483, & ſeq. The three ſorts of characters they made uſe of, 484. Their navigation on the Nile, and the conſtruction of their veſſels, 480. Their trade and navigation, 488. Bore a great averſion to the ſea becauſe it ſwallowed up their Nile, and hated ſailors, 490. Their language very antient, and probably a mother tongue, 487. Uſed literal characters of two ſorts, viz. ſacred and vulgar, 484. Explication of ſome of their characters, ibid, (L). Whether the ſame with the modern Coptic, 485, (M). Conjectures touching their letters precarious, ibid. According to Euſebius, they acknowledged no Deity beſides ſtupid matter, 27. Defended from this imputation, ibid. Profeſſed the belief of a demiurgic reaſon, and intellectual architect of the world, ibid. How they repreſented this intellectual principle, ibid. They acknowledged ſoul ſuperior to nature, and mind or intellect ſuperior to ſoul, 28. The fabulous hiſtory of the Egyptians, 513, & ſeq. A table of the Egyptian gods, and demi-gods, who are ſuppoſed to have reigned before the flood, 190. Their chronology, 188, & ſeq. Series of their kings according to ſeveral authors, 491, & ſeq: A table of the laſt ſixteen of the thirty Dynaſties, according to the old Egypian chronicle, ibid.

ibid. A table of the Egyptian dynasties, from Manetho, according to Africanus, 492, & seq. From Manetho, according to Josephus, 500. A table of the Theban kings from the Laterculus of Eratosthenes, 501. A table of the Egyptian kings, according to Herodotus, and Diodorus Siculus, 503. Egyptian cosmogony, as delivered by Diodorus Siculus, 25. Their priests taught, that the earth had certain periods, and revolutions, being destroyed alternately by water and fire, and renewed again, 29. Those of Thebaïs worshipped a supreme being under the name of Cneph, 28. No strangers to the flood, 194.

Elam, son of Shem, and one of the chiefs of the line of Shem, 360. Settles in the country of Elam, ibid.

Eleatic sect, 12.

Elis, a city and province of Peloponnesus, 372.

Elisa, the eighth son of Japhet, according to the Septuagint, 260.

Elisha, Javan's eldest son, where settled, 372. Isles of Elisha, ibid.

Elium, in the Phœnician history the same as Lamech, 181, (Q). why this name was given to Noah, 181, (S).

Elymæ and Elymais, where placed, 360.

Empedocles, believed the world to be compounded of minute particles, 41. Was auditor of Pythagoras, and Anaxagoras, 61. His physiology explained, ibid.

En Soph of the Jews, 52.

Enoch translated, 156. Divers opinions as to the place, ibid. (Y). His skill in mathematical sciences, ibid. Supposed by the Greek christians to be the same with the first Egyptian Hermes, ibid. By Eupolemus to be the same with Atlas, 158, (Y). A book ascribed to him different from his prophecies, ibid. Why called Edris in the Koran 157, (Y). The piece under the title of the scripture, or prophecy of Enoch, a manifest forgery, 158. Some fragments of it, 165, (L).

Enos, son of Seth, when born, 155.

Epicurus, teaches the atomic philosophy with some alteration, but would not acknowledge that he had borrowed his hypothesis from any, 42. How he accounted for the animals and mankind, 44. Acknowledged that there were gods, and that they deserved to be worshipped, 45 But allowed them neither to be the makers, nor governors of the world, ibid. Supposed the gods to be immortal, of human shape, and not composed of atoms like other beings, ibid. How he accounts for the freedom of will in his system, 43. Admits no principles but the atoms themselves, ibid.

Epigeus, or Autochthon, called also Uranus, and from him Heaven so named, 181

Eratosthenes, his list of the Theban kings considered, 510.

Erebus, in the cosmogony of Aristophanes, what, 37.

Erech, a city of Chaldæa, 271, (P).

Eve, by whom tempted, 122. The time of her death uncertain, 162.

Euphrates, 112.

Euſebius of Cæſarea, his animadverſions on the coſmogony of the Phœnicians, 24. And on the Egyptians, 26. Took all advantages to repreſent the Pagans to the worſt, 25.
Euxinus Pontus, or Axinus, as it was firſt called by the Greeks, ſaid by ſome to be a corruption for the ſea of Aſhkenaz, 368, 369.
Extenſion, Vid. Matter.

F.

F*ARABI*, al, 7.
Flax of Egypt, exceeding fine, 401.
Fleſh, whether permitted to be eaten before the deluge, 229.
Flood, the profane hiſtory of it, 174. Account of it from the Phœnician antiquities, ibid. & ſeq. The Chaldean account of it, 186, & ſeq. The account of it given by the Greeks, 194, (N). All mention of it ſuppreſſed by the Phœnician hiſtorians, 180, (P). Why, ibid. A ſhort hiſtory of it, 193, & ſeq. The profane teſtimonies of this cataſtrophe, 194. Whether topical, 196. Reaſons proving that it was general, 197, & ſeq. Conjectures as to the manner wherein it happened, 199, & ſeq. Dr. Burnet's theory of it, 203, & ſeq. Mr. Whiſton's theory, 205, & ſeq. The moſt rational account of it, 208. To what height the waters reached, 217. They aſſwage, ibid. When it began, and when it aſſwaged, ibid. (L). Perſian and Indian traditions of it, 219. Several particular floods, 196. That of Ogyges in Attica, 196, (P). Of Prometheus in Egypt, ibid. Of Aſia minor. ibid.
Fo-hi, firſt king of China, 254. Whether Noah, ibid. His death, 256, (Q).
Forbearance, the 120 years of God's forbearance, 171.

G.

G*ABALIS*, Count, a paſſage of his relating to the crime of Ham, 265. (H).
Galatians, or Gauls, of Aſia minor, deſcended according to ſome from Gomer, and from him called Gomerites, 368.
Gaſſendi, revives the atomic ſyſtem, 45.
Gauls, of Aſia minor, according to ſome deſcended from Gomer, the eldeſt ſon of Japhet, 368.
Ge, ſiſter and wife to Uranus, 181, & 299. Her name given to the earth, 181.
Genealogical table of the Antediluvians, 152.
Genius tutelar, Vid. Angel. A ſort of intermediate creatures between angels and devils, in the theology of the Orientals, 106. Inhabited the world, according to them, many thouſand years before Adam, ibid.
Genus and Genea, who, 175.
Geometry, firſt found out by the Egyptians, 471.

Gether, one of Aram's ſons, according to Joſephus, prince of the Bactrians, 362. Probably ſeated about the river Centrites, between Armenia and the Carduchi, ibid.

Giants, probably Cain's race, 169. Believed by ſome, incarnate ſpirits, 169, (D). What gave riſe to this opinion, ibid. Their origine, according to the prophecy aſcribed to Enoch, ibid. That men were of a gigantic ſize and ſtrength, no ways incredible, ibid. Two diſtinct races of them, 171, (P). The original cauſe of their monſtrous ſtature, 169, (O). Probably they continued to the flood, 171, (P).

Gihon, according to the Jews and the Fathers, the ſame as the Ganges, 113.

Goats, why worſhipped by the Egyptians, 457.

God, creator of the world both as to matter and form, 2. His power of creating matter, 3. He is a free agent, 9. The world not an involuntary effect of his mere nature, ibid. Whether poſſible that he and his creatures may have always exiſted together, ibid. Eſſential diſtinction between his duration and that of his creatures, 10. The author of matter, and the firſt ſole principle of motion, 22. How ſome pretenders to Chriſtianity endeavour to free God from the imputation of evils, 62. The 120 years of his forbearance, 171.

Gods, Egyptian gods reigning before the flood, 191. Who meant by their gods, ibid.

Gog and Magog, ſeem to be the ſame name, 370. Called by the Arabs Yajui and Majui, 371.

Gogarene, a country, according to ſome, deriving its name from Gog and Magog, 370.

Gomerites, called by the Greeks, Galatians, the Gauls of Aſia minor inhabiting part of Phrygia, deſcended from Gomer, 368.

Gopher, what denoted by, 213.

Government, the firſt original of civil government, 377. At firſt patriarchal, ibid. Changed into monarchical, 378.

Greek, philoſophers, received their phyſiology from the Egyptians, 25. Account given by the Greeks of the univerſal deluge, 194. (N).

Grots, near Oſyût in Egypt deſcribed, 429.

H.

HADHRAMAUT, a province of Yaman, or Arabia felix, why ſo called, 375.

Hadoram, one of Joktan's ſons, where ſettled, 375.

Haik, ſon of Togarmah, from whom Armenia, in the moſt antient times called Haikh, 369.

Halieus, and Agreus, inventers of the arts of hunting and fiſhing, 178.

Ham, the youngeſt ſon of Noah, 260. Thought by many to have been the ſecond ſon, ibid, (Y). Import of the word, ibid. Curſed in a branch of his poſterity, 261. His whole race accurſed curſed by Noah, repugnant to ſcripture, 262. And contrary to fact, ibid. (C). Some ſuppoſe he became a Black-moor and communicated that colour to his deſcendants, 263. Looked upon by ſome as the firſt introducer of wickedneſs after the flood, ibid. Crimes laid to his charge, ibid. (F). Held to have been the inventer of magic, ibid. Many paſſages to that effect, ibid. Said to have been the firſt propagator of idolatry after the flood, 263. The crime he committed repreſented by ſome more enormous than it is repreſented in ſcripture, 264. Divers opinions relating to him, ibid. (H). Seems to have had the moſt numerous iſſue of the three ſons of Noah, 266. The true reaſon of Noah's diſcarding him, ibid, (A). Suppoſed by ſome to have been the ſame with Cronus, 266. By others the ſame with Menes, the firſt king of Egypt, ibid, (B . Probably removed from Shinaar, and reigned according to ſome, in Phœnicia, according to others in Egypt, 362. Nations deſcended from him, 363, & ſeq. Where was his ſettlement, 363.

Haran, ſon of Terah, 291. Dies in Ur of the Chaldees, ibid. Various opinions relating to his death, ibid, (Y).

Haran, a city of Meſopotamia, 294.

Harpocrates, one of the Egyptian deities, ſon of Iſis and Oſiris, and the God of ſilence, how repreſented, 447.

Havilah, where ſeated, 363. Two places and two perſons bearing this name, 377.

Hawks worſhipped by the Egyptians, 452, 456.

Hazarmaveth, or Hazarmoth, the third ſon of Joktan, where ſettled, 375.

Hebrews, whether they derive their name and origin from Eber, 284. Their language thought to have taken its name from Eber, and to have remained, at the confuſion of tongues, ſolely in his family, 285. Common to the Phœnicians and Canaanites, 286. Whether the moſt antient, 337, & ſeq. Whether all other tongues may be derived from it, 341.

Hecatompylos, why Thebes ſo called, 386.

Hella, an antient city, 325, 326.

Henna, called Alcanna by botaniſts, a ſhrub growing in Egypt, 402. Deſcription of it, ibid.

Heptanomis, or the middle Egypt, 387. So called from the ſeven nomes or prefectures into which it was divided, ibid. Its extent, ibid. And cities, ibid.

Heraclides, his natural principles indiviſible bodies, 41.

Heraclitus, denied the world to have been made by Gods or men, but by a certain inward plaſtic virtue of its own, 46. His principles of the univerſe, ibid. Surnamed the obſcure, ibid. Held fire to be the firſt principle of all things, ibid.

Hermaic books now extant, contained ſome remains and tincture of the old Egyptian and Hermetic doctrine, 28. Some account of them, ibid. & 473.

Hermaphrodites, mentioned by Plato, 94.

Hermes Triſmegiſtus, ſecretary to Cronus, ſon of Uranus, 300. Hermes the firſt ſaid to have inſcribed his learning upon columns, 481. His pillars in Egypt, ibid.

Hermes, Mercury, Thoth, Thoyth, Taautes, Triſmegiſtus, ſuppoſed by many to have been one and the ſame perſon, 516. His inventions, ibid. Called from his eloquence, Hermes, that is interpreter, or ſpeaker, ibid. Author of 20,000 books according to Seleucus, 36,525, according to Manetho, ibid

Hermogenes, an aſſerter of the ſelf-exiſtence and improduction of matter, 62.

Hermonthis, an antient city of Thebaïs, 386.

Hermotybians, a name given to a particular kind of military men among the Egyptians, 437.

Heſiod, his coſmogony, 36.

Hieracon, the iſland of, in the Arabian gulph, 375. Alſo a town of the ſame name on the river Lar, ibid.

Hierapolis, an antient tradition of the inhabitants relating to the flood, 195, (N).

Hieroglyphical figures uſed by the Egyptians, ſaid to have been the invention of Hermes, 483. Made uſe of to conceal their doctrines from the vulgar, 482.

Hippaſus, held fire to be the firſt principle of all things, and to be God, 46.

Hippocrates, held the heat and fire to be immortal and omniſcient, 47.

Hippopotamus, or river-horſe, common in the upper Egypt, 398.

Hit, or Is, a city in the neighbourhood of Babylon, 319, & (I).

Hobbs, held that there was no ſubſtance diſtinct from matter, 18. Abſurdity of this opinion, 19.

Hud of the Mohammedans, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Eber, 287. Dies in Arabia, ibid. A town called from him Kabar Húd, ibid.

Hul, ſon of Aram, Shem's fifth and youngeſt ſon, where ſettled, 362.

Hunting, nothing more proper after the deluge to procure a man eſteem, 269. Conſidered antiently among the Perſians as one part of a regal education, ibid.

Hyle, the ſame with matter, 64.

Hypſiſtus, who, 181.

Hypſuranius, who in the Phœnician hiſtory, 177.

I.

I, Wrongly made uſe of by the interpreters of ſcripture inſtead of (Y), 111, (C).

Jabal, 153. Thought to have been the Pales of the heathens, 154, (T).

Jamblichus's anſwer to a paſſage in Porphyry's epiſtle concerning Chæremon, 28. Contemporary with Euſebius, ibid.

Japaneſe, opinion of a ſect among them touching the origin of the univerſe, 15. Some of them acknowledge the creation of the world, 72.
Japhet, the eldeſt ſon of Noah, 208, (S). The import of the word, ibid. His poſterity, ibid. The Perſians give him eleven ſons, 260, (X). Their names, ibid.
Jared, deſcendant of Seth, 156.
Javan, where ſettled, 372.
Ibis, a bird frequenting the Nile, 399. Pines away and dies if carried elſewhere, ibid. Deſtroys the flying ſerpents, ibid. Two kinds of Ibis's, ibid. Deſcribed, ibid. Why adored by the Egyptians, 456.
Ichneumon, or Egyptian rat, deſcribed, 399. Of great ſervice in Egypt, by hunting out and breaking the eggs of the crocodile, ibid.
Ichthyophagi, and Troglodytes, inhabit the coaſt of the Red-ſea, and are called in ſcripture Sukkiim, and Zivim, 366.
Idolatry the firſt introduction of, 176, (B). Worſhipping of men when begun, 179, (L). The origin of idolatry by image-worſhip aſcribed to the age of Eber, by others, namely the fathers, to that of Serug, 286.
Jeûd, ſon to Cronus the younger. 305.
Jews, their doctrine as to the creation of the world, 100. They ſay that GOD created ſeven things before the world, ibid. Their cabaliſts how ſuppoſed to account for the origin of things, 52. Their En Soph, ibid.
Jin, or Genii, among the Mohammedans, a ſort of intermediate creatures, between the angels and devils, 106. Capable of future ſalvation or damnation, ibid.
Incubi, dæmons, from whence proceeded the notion of them, 166. (L).
Indian traditions of the flood, 219.
Infan-wang, 51.
Inſcription mentioned by the Copts, as engraven on the pyramids of Egypt, 405. A remarkable one on the temple of Neith at Sais, 445. An inſcription to Iſis, ſtill remaining at Capua, ibid.
Jobab, the 13th ſon of Joktan, where ſettled, 377.
Joktan, ſon of Eber, 287, 288 Thirteen ſons given him by the ſcripture, and 31 by the Arabs, 289. Countries poſſeſſed by Joktan's deſcendants in a ſecond migration, 374.
Ionic ſect, all who preceded Anaxagoras mere materialiſts, 38.
Jorham, the younger ſon of Joktan, founded the kingdom of Hejaz, containing part of Arabia Petræa, 289.
Iſis, according to the Egyptian philoſophy, the ſame as the moon, 27. Iſis and Oſiris, the chief deities of the Egyptians, 443. How repreſented, 446. Her feſtival celebrated with the utmoſt ſolemnity, 449. Ceremonies obſerved on that occaſion, ibid. Said to have invented ſeveral medicines, whence ſhe was called the goddeſs of health, 473. Believed to have been the daughter of Mercury, 514. Her hiſtory, 513. A moſt ſtately temple erected erected to her at Buſiris, 522. A deſcription of its ruins, ibid, (T).

Iſpara, a god among the Malabarians, 70.
Iſparetta, among the Malabarians, the firſt principle, 69.
Jucatan the province of, according to Arias Montanus, took its name from Joktan, 374.
Jupiter, or Ammon, one of the Egyptian deities, 444. How repreſented 447. Jupiter, principally worſhipped at Thebes, thence named Dioſpolis, 450. What victims were offered to him, and with what ceremonies, ibid.

K.

Kain, who, according to the oriental writers, 291, (X): Kendi, al, 7.
Kingdoms, eſtabliſhment of, 377, & ſeq. Small at firſt, 379. Great kingdoms not ſoon formed, 381.
Kittim, where ſettled, 372.
Kiwelinga, worſhipped by the Malabarians, 70.

L.

Labaris, king of Dioſpolis, choſe the labyrinth of Arſinoe, for his ſepulchre, 495, (K).
Labyrinth, the Egyptian, 422. Where placed, ibid. For what deſigned, ibid. Deſcription of it from Herodotus, 423. Some remains of it ſtill extant, 424. Deſcribed, ibid. Called the palace of Charon, ibid.
Lamech, the fifth in deſcent from Cain, 153. Father to Noah, 156.
Language, whether a new one was founded at Babel, 344. The number of languages at Babel, and the conſequences of the confuſion, 346.
Latona oracle of, in the city of Butus in Egypt, 459.
Latopolis, an antient city of Thebaïs, 386.
Latos of the antients, called now Keſher, a kind of fiſh in the Nile, 400.
Lehabim, who and where ſettled, 365. Some ſuppoſe him to be the ſame with Lubim, who came out of Egypt with Shiſhak to invade Judæa, ibid.
Leopards, mountains of, near Tripoly in Syria, 268.
Lepidotus, a fiſh highly eſteem'd by the antient Egyptians, now called Bonni, 400.
Letters, whether the modern Coptic letters the ſame with the vulgar letters of the antient Egyptians, 485, (M).
Leucippus, according to Laertius, the author of the atomic ſyſtem, 40.
Libanus mount, whence ſo called, 177.
Lilith, a woman with whom Adam lived, according to the Rabbies, 130 years after his fall, 144, (F).

Lotus grows plentifully in the lower Egypt, and is called by the inhabitants Al-baſhnîn, being a ſpecies of Nymphæa, or water-lilly, 401. Deſcribed, ibid.
Love made by the old Pagan poets to preſide at the ranging of the confuſed matter, 32.
Lud, ſon of Shem, and one of the chiefs of the line of Shem, 360. Where ſettled, 361.
Ludim, ſuppoſed to be the people above Egypt, called by the Greeks, Ethiopians, and at preſent Abyſſins, 365.
Lycopolites, a nome of Egypt, why ſo called, 457.
Lydians, firſt called Mæones, and afterwards Lydians, from Lydus the ſon of Atys, 361.

M.

MACEDO, ſon of Oſiris gives his name to Macedon, 518. Macedonia plainly denoted by the land of Chettiim, 373.
Madai planted Media, 371. Whether Macedonia the ſettlement of Madai, ibid.
Mages among the Perſians, their phyſiology, 65. Their traditions, with relation to their gods, and the introduction of evil into the world, 66.
Magic, by whom and when invented, 263, (F). In great repute among the Egyptians, 476 Uncertain what were the real grounds of that ſcience, 477.
Magog, the ſecond ſon of Japhet, various opinions with regard to his ſettlement, 370. Miſtake of the modern writers who placed Magog in Syria, 371. Magog in Pliny, by a miſtake of the tranſcriber for Mabog, ibid.
Magus, 180. Magus and Amynus in the Phœnician records, 296.
Mahalaleel, deſcendant of Seth, 156.
Malabarians, their notions as to the origin of things, 69. Their theogony, 70.
Mali, a place ſo called in Arabia, 375.
Man, why the plural number, Let us make, &c. uſed in the creation of man, 91, (K). His creation, 91. Created in an adult and perfect ſtate, ibid. Ridiculous notions of the Talmudiſts in that reſpect, ibid. The happy ſtate of the firſt pair, 107, & ſeq. Vid. Adam.
Maneros, ſeveral traditions relating to him among the Egyptians, 463.
Manetho, from whence he extracted his hiſtory, 163, (K). His Egyptian chronology, 189. Upon what grounds his credit called in queſtion by ſeveral writers, 504. His chronology of the Egyptian dynaſties conſidered, ibid. & ſeq.
Manichæans, maintained two ſelf-exiſtent gods, 66.
Mankind, abandoned to all wickedneſs, 173. Incorrigible, ibid. Deſtroyed by the flood, 174. Firſt migration of, from about mount Ararat, 312, & ſeq.
Marcionites, maintained two ſelf-exiſtent gods, 64.
Mareotis, part of the lower Egypt, 387.
Maro, ſon of Oſiris, builds the city of Maronea in Thrace, 518.

Mars, ceremonies uſed by the Egyptians in celebrating his feſtival at Papremis, 452.
Maſh or Meſhek, Aram's fourth ſon, ſuppoſed to have ſettled in Armenia about the Maſius, commonly held to be the Ararat, and called by the Armenians Masís, 362.
Masís mount, whether the mountain on which the ark reſted, 242. Its deſcription, ibid.
Maſor, ſignifies a fortreſs, and is alſo uſed in ſcripture as the proper name of Egypt, though by ſome tranſlated as an apellative, 383.
Materiarians, who ſo called and why, 62.
Matter, created of God, 2, 3. Arguments to prove the non-exiſtence of matter of ſmall force, 3. Perplexing arguments ariſing from the extenſion and non-extenſion of matter, 4. The creation of it muſt neceſſarily be admitted, 19. Its eternal motion abſurd, 20.
Medes, always called in ſcripture by the name of Madai, 371.
Megaric philoſophers held the eternity and immutability of the world, 12.
Melambolus, why Egypt ſo called by the Greeks, 384.
Melicarthus, or Hercules, ſon to Demaröon, 304. His temple at Gadira, or Gades, continued to the time of Silius Italicus, ibid, (T).
Meliſſus holds the eternity and immutability of the world, 12.
Melo makes the deluge topical, 196, (Q).
Memphis, the chief city of the middle Egypt, 387. Built by Menes their firſt King, ibid.
Memrumus, who, in the Phœnician coſmogony, 177.
Men, whether before Adam. Vid. Preadamites.
Menes, ſaid to be the firſt man who reigned in Egypt, 492, (A). Killed by a Hippopotamus, ibid.
Mneuïs, the name of a bull, repreſenting Oſiris, and worſhipped at Heliopolis, 448.
Meſha and Sephar, mentioned by Moſes, where ſituate, 374. Mount Meſha, ſeveral opinions about it, ibid.
Meſhech, where ſettled, 373.
Miſr, Egypt ſo called by the Oriental nations, 383.
Meſtræi, the ſecond race that governed Egypt, 188, ibid. (G).
Methuſelah, grandfather to Noah, 156.
Metrodorus Chius, his natural principles indiviſible bodies, 41.
Mice, great numbers of them bred yearly out of the mud left by the Nile, 432.
Minerva, how her feſtival was celebrated among the Egyptians at Saïs, 451.
Mint, when firſt ſaid to have been erected, 290, (U).
Miſor, in the Phœnician records, according to ſome, Mizraïm of the ſcripture, and Menes of the Egyptians, 296, (D) Mizraïm, ſuppoſed by many to have began his reign before Nimrod, 271. Suppoſed to have been the ſecond ſon of Ham, 365. Whether Mizraïm the name of a ſingle perſon or of a people, ibid.

ibid. Nations deſcended from him, ibid. A word of the dual termination, ibid. By land of Mizraïm meant in the ſcripture Egypt, 383. Its etymology and why given to Egypt, ibid.
Mœris, or Myris, king of Egypt, built two pyramids, 405.
Mœris, the lake of, 426. Its circumference and depth, ibid. By whom dug and why, 427. Effected by large canals, ibid. Still ſubſiſting, ibid. An iſle in the middle of the lake, where there ſtood antiently two pyramids, 428. What ſums the fiſhery of this lake yielded daily to the prince, during the ſix months of the river's retreat, 427. Why called at preſent the lake of Charon, 428.
Mohammedans, ſome divines among them admit atoms and vacuum endued with life and ſenſe, 45. What was made according to them, prior to the Creation, 100.
Molæ, the primary particles of the earth, 56.
Monad of Pythagoras what meant by, 53.
Monarchical government, how introduced, 377.
Monaſtery of the ark on the Cardu mountains, 233.
Moon when created, 73. worſhipped by the Egyptians, 450. What victims offered to her, ibid. And what ceremonies uſed in offering them, ibid.
Moſaic account of the creation, 73. Moſaic creation explained, 86.
Moſchici, a people, and a long chain of mountains ſtretching along the north-weſt part of Armenia, and ſeparating it from Colchis and Iberia, 370. From the people Moſchici the Muſcovites probably deſcended, ibid.
Moſchus, a Phœnician, lived before the Trojan war, 41. Said by Poſidonius to have been the author of the atomic ſyſtem, ibid. Thought to have been the ſame with Mochus, who is conjectured to have been no other than Moſes, ibid.
Moſes, etymology of the name, 339, (H).
Mót what meant by, in the Phœnician ſyſtem of the world, 23.
Motion eternal of matter abſurd, 20.
Mountains, the higheſt in the world do not exceed five direct miles in height, 209, (B).
Mummies, or embalmed bodies, deſcribed, 466, (I).
Muſcovites, from whom deſcended, 370.
Muſic diſapproved of by the Egyptians, 461. A muſical inſtrument invented by the offspring of Cain, 163.
Muth ſon of Cronus, the ſame as Pluto, 306.
Mycerinus, the ſon of Cheops, and king of Egypt, erected the third of the great pyramids, 404.

N.

NAAMAH, daughter to Lamech, 154. Suppoſed to have invented ſpinning and weaving, ibid. And to have been the wife of Noah, ibid, (T).
Nahar-Malca, or Baſilicos Potamos, 115.
Nahor, inventions aſcribed to him, 290, (U).
Names, ſimilitude of, a deceitful guide, 112.
Naphtuhim, where ſettled, 366.

Naucratis, a colony of the Grecians in Egypt, 490.
Navigation, the firſt we have account of after the deluge, 300, (K).
Nephilim, how interpreted, 169, (O).
Nephthe, or Nephthys; called alſo Finis, Venus, and Victoria, 514.
Nephthys, all the ſkirts of a country waſhed by the ſea, and the promontories ſo called by the Egyptians, 366.
Neptune, or Poſidon, ſon of Pontus, 304.
Nereus, the father of Pontus, ſuppoſed by ſome to be Japhet, 303, (S).
Nicholls holds the creation of other worlds before ours, 88, note (e).
Nile, ſprings of, antiently unknown, 389. Its courſe, ibid. Its ſeven mouths, and their names, 390. Now they are reckoned above thirty, but only two conſiderable ones, viz. that of Roſetta, or Raſhid, and of Damietta, or Dimyât, ibid Its annual overflowing, ibid. To what height the waters ſwell, ibid, & ſeq. How they meaſure the daily increaſe of the waters, 393. To what height it muſt ariſe before the great dam of the Khalij, or great canal of Bulák, be cut down, 391. This is one of the greateſt ſolemnities of Egypt, and in antient times ſolemnized with the ſacrifice of a girl, ibid. This ceremony aboliſhed by the Turks, ibid. The manner of conveying the water on the lands, 394. Fattens the earth without any other manure, 395. The fecundity cauſed by its waters, reaches not only the earth, but alſo mankind and animals, ibid. In what manner the cities, towns, and villages ſecure themſelves from the inundations of the Nile, 396. The cauſe of ſuch inundations, ibid. Birds peculiar to the Nile, 399. What fiſh it affords, 400.
Nilometers, deſcribed, 392.
Nimrod, the ſixth ſon of Cuſh, 268. Repreſented by ſome as a giant, as a great warriour, a great tyrant, &c. ibid. The ſignification of his name, 269, and (I). What gave occaſion to the injurious opinions which have been entertained of him in all ages, 270, & (K). Generally thought to have been the firſt king after the flood, 271. Made by the Eaſtern writers the firſt king of all the world, ibid, (O). And the firſt that wore a crown, ibid. Founder of the Babyloniſh kingdom, 204. Probably not the builder of any of the four cities mentioned by Moſes, 272. At what time he began to reign, 273. Whether the ſame with Belus, 274. Several traditions as to his death, 275, & (W) Whether to be found in profane hiſtory, 274. Several conjectures relating to him, ibid. Kept poſſeſſion of Shinaar, and erected a kingdom there, making Babel the ſeat of the empire, 365. Thought to have been the firſt uſurper on the rights of others, 380.
Ninoeh, where ſituate, 278.
Nitocris, queen of Memphis, a moſt beautiful woman, who built the third pyramid near Memphis, 494, (H).
Noachidæ, the policy of, 378.
Noah, the import of the word, 172, (S). Endeavours to reclaim men from their wickedneſs, ibid. The ſon of Lamech, ibid.

Groundleſs

Groundleſs ſurmiſes with reſpect to his piety, ibid, (R). Departs from among men with his wife and children, 173. Directed to make an ark, 174. Retires into it, 215. Different opinions as to the name of his wife, ibid, (I). Comes out of the ark, 219, & 251. Precepts given him by GOD, 252. Aſſured that the world ſhould not periſh by a ſecond deluge, 253. Becomes a husband-man, ibid. Said by ſome to have invented the tools of huſbandry, 172, (S). Where firſt ſettled, 254. Not Fo hi firſt king of China, ibid. Acknowledged a prophet by the Mohammedans, 172. The genealogy of his deſcendants, 257. Firſt migration of his ſons, 312. Divides the earth among his threeſons, 347.

Nod, land of, where ſituated, 151.

Nomes, præfectures, or governments, into which Egypt was divided, 388. This diviſion aſcribed to Seſoſtris, ibid. How many nomes the country was divided into, ibid.

Numbers, held by Pythagoras to be the principles of all things, 55.

Numenius, his opinion of the origin of the univerſe, 62.

O.

OANNES, a monſter mentioned by Beroſus, 183. Delivered the knowledge of letters, of arts and ſciences, ibid. Called alſo Oes, 184.

Oaſis, two cities of this name in the borders of Libya, and one of the ſixteen nomes of the middle Egypt, 387.

Obollah, a town towards Baſrah, 375.

Ocean, or water, according to the antient phyſiologers, the original of all things, 36.

Ocela, or Ocilis, as Ptolemy calls it, the port of Sanaa, or Uzal, in Yaman, 375.

Ocellus Lucanus, one of the moſt antient aſſerters of the world's eternity, 5. His arguments abſurd and ridiculous, ibid.

Ogyges, his flood, 196, (P).

Olympus mount, its height, 209, (B).

Omoroca, a woman ſo named in the Chaldean coſmogony, 29. The governeſs of living creatures, ibid.

Ophir, one of Joktan's ſons, where ſettled, 376. Groundleſs conjectures touching the place which bears his name, ibid.

Oracles of Egypt, 459.

Origen favours the dogm of the Platoniſts, concerning the world's eternity. 8.

Ormozd, or Hormizda, the good principle among the Mages, 66.

Orpheus, the introducer of the rites of the heathen worſhip among the Greeks, 32. Followed therein by Homer, ibid. Said to have been quite ſilent in his theology, as to any thing intellectual, ibid. And to have made one of his principles to be a dragon, ibid. Looked upon by the Greek Pagans as a profound philoſopher, ibid. Celſus would have had the Chriſtians take him rather for a God than Chriſt, ibid. Is thought to have acknowledged one ſupreme unmade deity, from the eſteem he was in with the Pythagoreans and Platoniſts, ibid. His coſmogony made by Timotheus the chronographer, 33. His verſes aſſert a ſupreme deity, ibid.

ibid. His theology preferred to other Heathens by the Chriſtian fathers, 34. His eſtabliſhing of polytheiſm owing rather to neceſſity than to his own approbation, ibid. He held two principles, æther and chaos, ibid. He firſt introduced the doctrine of the mundane egg, ibid.

Orphic theologers, in what ſenſe they taught that GOD was all things, 35. Orphic coſmogony, epitome of. 33.

Orus, an Egyptian deity, 514. His hiſtory, ibid. Confounded often with Apollo, 447. How repreſented, ibid. The laſt of the Egyptian gods or demi-gods, 523.

Oſiris, according to the Egyptian philoſophy, the ſame as the ſun, 27. Oſiris and Iſis the chief deities of Egypt, 443. How repreſented by the Egyptians, 246. Oſiris and Iſis ſaid to be the ſon and daughter of Rhea, 513. Their hiſtory, ibid & ſeq.

Oſymanduas, or Imandes, buried in one of the pyramids mentioned by Herodotus, 435.

Ovens, uſed in Egypt for hatching chickens, deſcribed, 438, (B).

Oxyrynchus, now called Caſhouc, a kind of fiſh in the Nile, 400.

P.

P*Amyles*, the nurſe of Oſiris, 514.

Pan, worſhipped by the inhabitants of Mendes in Egypt, 450.

Pantibibla, ſeems to be the ſame with Sippara, 186, & (D). Several opinions relating to it, ibid.

Paphlagonians, originally called Riphathæans, from Riphath, 369.

Papyrus, or Byblus, a reed growing in Egypt, 401. Called by the natives, al berdi, deſcribed, ibid The antients made their paper with the pith of its ſtalk, ibid. Or of the inner rind, ibid. Of great uſe to the antients, affording them both food and cloaths, ibid.

Paradiſe, ſeveral paradiſes, 116. Obſcure traditions relating to it among the Heathens, ibid. Vid. Eden Parcoutee, the firſt woman's name in the phyſiology of the Indian Bramins, 69.

Parmenides, his opinion of the origin of things, 14.

Parvaim, the gold of Ophir, ſeeming to be ſo called in ſcripture, has occaſioned two groundleſs conjectures, 376.

Pathros, wrongly taken by ſome for Peluſium, the upper Egypt, or Thebaïs, 366.

Pathruſim, the inhabitants of Pathros, or the upper Egypt, 366.

Patriarchs, antediluvian, vid. Antediluvian.

Paulicians, admitted two ſelf-exiſtent Gods, 64.

Peirerius, held that the flood extended no farther than Judæa, 198, (S).

Pelaſgians of Greece and Italy not deſcended from Peleg, 374.

Peleg, ſon to Eber, 287. Signification of the word, 288, (P). Remained with his poſterity in Chaldæa, 374.

Pendets, Indian Gentiles, 49. Their coſmogony, ibid.

Peræa, the Greek name of the country of Baſhan beyond the Jordan, 302, (Q).

Peri, or Fairies, among the Orientals, 106.

Perſians, a peculiar tradition of the modern Perſians, relating to the creation of the world, 67. Their traditions concerning the flood, 219.
Peru, not the true name of that country, but given to it by the Spaniards, on their miſtaking the anſwer of the natives, 376.
Phagrus of the antients, now called Karmûd, a fiſh to be found in the Nile, 400.
Phaſis, miſtakes of the learned about its ſource, 112.
Pherecydes, of Syros, maſter to Pythagoras, 53. His opinion as to the origin of the world, ibid.
Pherecydes Syrus, ſaid by Theopompus, to have wrote the firſt of nature, and the gods of the Greeks, 38, (U). His treatiſe of the beginning of things extant in the time of Laertius, ibid.
Phlox, who, in the Phœnician hiſtory, 176.
Phœnicians, their account of the original of the world, 23. Their coſmogony according to Euſebius, directly brings in atheiſm, 24. It was taken from that of Thoyth, and agrees in ſubſtance with the Egyptian, ibid. Phœnician antediluvian hiſtory, 174. Phœnician hiſtory from Sanchoniatho, 294. Mentions only the idolatrous line of Cain, 296. Phœnician records ſuppoſed by biſhop Cumberland to have been corrupted, 295, (C). His amendment of them, ibid.
Phœnicopteri, or Flamingoes birds of Egypt, 399.
Phœnix, Herodotus's account of one, 458.
Phos, who, in the Phœnician hiſtory, 176.
Phtha, among the Egyptians, the ſame as Vulcan among the Greeks, 27.
Phyſic, its original owing probably to the Egyptians, 473.
Phyſicians, each applied himſelf among the Egyptians to the cure of one diſeaſe only, 473. Had a public proviſion made for them by law, 474. Their method of practiſing, ibid.
Pico de Adam, why ſo named by the Mohammedans, 93.
Pillars, one of brick, another of ſtone, made by the offspring of Seth, 163. Their inventions engraved upon them, ibid. Said by Joſephus to be extant in his time, ibid, (K). Pillars from whence Manetho extracted his hiſtory, ibid. Others mentioned by Sanchoniatho, conſecrated to the wind and fire, 177, & (H). Of Hermes in Egypt, 481. Pythagoras and Plato borrowed their philoſophy from thence, ibid. Remaining in the time of Proclus, ibid. Uſed by the Egyptians and other nations, to preſerve the memory of things by inſcriptions, ibid.
Piſon, ſome imagine this name preſervedin Paſi-tigris and Piſo-tigris, 110.
Plantation, the order of the firſt, 357. The firſt plantation of the earth, 358.
Plato, ſeveral of his followers held the world to be eternal, both in matter and form, 4. He himſelf acknowledged the world to be made by God, 7. Some of his expreſſions miſinterpreted by his followers, favouring the eternity of the world, 7. His own notions as to the origin of the univerſe, 58. His ideas, 58, &

ſeq. Held two diſtinct principles, GOD and matter, 53. What meant by his finite and infinite, 54. Borrowed his philoſophy from the pillars of Hermes in Egypt, 481.

Platonic argument for the world's eternity conſidered, 9. An anſwer to it, ibid.

Platoniſm early introduced into the church, 8. Favourably received by Origen, and zealouſly oppoſed by others, ibid.

Platoniſts miſinterpret ſome of their maſter's expreſſions, as if he had aſſerted the world's eternity, 8.

Pliny the elder, held the eternity, and incorruptibility of the world, 17.

Plutarch, his opinion as to the origin of the univerſe, 62.

Poets, old pagan poets contributed to the depravation of theology, 31. Countenanced the opinion of the world's being produced from a chaos, ibid. Make love to preſide at the ranging of the confuſed matter, 32. Their coſmogony the ſame with their theogony, ibid.

Poſidon, or Neptune, the ſon of Pontus, 304.

Poſtdiluvian patriarchs, a table of their years to the birth of Abraham, 244. Of the ſame to the call of Abraham, according to the computation of the Hebrew, 245. The ſame according to the computation of the Septuagint, 246. The ſame acccording to the computation of the Samaritan Pentateuch, 247, Pourous, the firſt man's name, according to the Bramins, 69.

Pre-adamites, think mankind in being before Adam, 98. Their arguments and objections anſwered, 98, & ſeq.

Proceſſion, an account of an antient Egyptian one, given by Clement of Alexandria, 516.

Proclus, a great champion for the world's eternity, 8. Acknowledges the generation of the Gods, ibid.

Prometheus, his flood in Egypt, 196, (P).

Protogonus and Æon, Adam and Eve, in the hiſtory of Sanchoniatho, 175, & (Z). Their iſſue, ibid.

Pſammitichus, his expedient to find out which was the moſt antient language, 335, (U).

Pur, who, in the Phœnician hiſtory, 176.

Pyramidal figure, why made uſe of by the Egyptians, and alſo other nations in erecting monuments, 407.

Pyramids of Egypt, the moſt remarkable on the weſt ſide of the Nile, not far from Jizah, about 20 in number, 402. Whence ſo named, 403. By whom built, 403, & ſeq. Some mentioned by Herodotus and Pliny long ſince ruined, 405. The time when they were built, 406. The end for which they were erected, ibid. Three moſt remarkable ones, 404. Their deſcription, 408, & ſeq. The dimenſions of the firſt pyramid, ibid. The outſide of it, 410. The inſide, 411, & ſeq. The ſecond pyramid, 416, & ſeq. The prieſts lodgings near it, 417. Pyramid, ibid. & ſeq. A fourth pyramid, 419. Other pyramids, 422. How the pyramids were built, 419. Inſcription on them mentioned by the Copis, 405.

Pythagoras held two distinct and independent principles co-existent from eternity, viz. God and matter, 53. What meant by his dyad and monad, ibid. The reason of his superstitious abstinence from beans, 54. His theology, ibid. Borrowed his philosophy from the pillars of Hermes in Egypt, 481. With what reluctancy of the Egyptian priests he was admitted to their secret learning, 482.
Pythagoreans, their reasons why God should be called Tetractys, 55.

R.

RAAMAH, or Rhegma, where settled, 364.
Rahab of the scriptures, supposed to have been the western part of the Delta in Egypt, called at present al Ref, 387.
Rain, some deny that there was any on the primitive earth, 227.
Rainbow, whether any before the flood, 229.
Raven, sent out of the ark by Noah, 218. Why chosen, ibid, (M).
Rauwolf, his account of the ruins of Babylon, 323, (M).
Reboboth the city of, where situated, 279, (B).
Relicks, the oldest consecration of relicks to be met with in history 307, (Y).
Resen city, where situate, 279, (B).
Rèû, invention of several arts ascribed to him, 289.
Rhea, daughter of Uranus, 301.
Rhebas, Rhebæus, or Rhebanus, a river near Paphlagonia, and a country of the same name, 369.
Rhodopis, or Rhodope, mistress to Charaxus, said by some of the Greeks to have built one of the three great pyramids of Egypt, 404. what probably gave occasion to this story, 406.
Rhossi, people on the river Ros, or Aras, called by the Greeks Araxes, 370.
Riphæi, mentioned by Pliny, a people, 369.
Riphath, one of Gomer's sons, where seated, 369.
Rivers watering Eden, 112, & seq.
Ruddery, what in the physiology of the Bramins, 69.
Russians, from whom descended, 370.

S.

SABA, now Mareb, formerly the chief city of Yaman, or Arabia Felix, by whom built, 364.
Sabean nations extended from the Arabian to the Persian gulph, 376. The name of their chief city, according to some, Saba; according to others, Mariaba, or Maraba, ibid. All names of the same place, ibid.
Sabtah, where seated, 364.
Sabtecha, where fixed, 364.
Sacrifice, human sacrifices offered by the Egyptians, 459
Sacrificing, the custom of mens sacrificing their children to the devil, when, and on what occasion said by some to have taken rise, 290, (W).

ſeq. Held two diſtinct principles, God and matter, 53. What meant by his finite and infinite, 54. Borrowed his philoſophy from the pillars of Hermes in Egypt, 481.
Platonic argument for the world's eternity conſidered, 9. An anſwer to it, ibid.
Platoniſm early introduced into the church, 8. Favourably received by Origen, and zealouſly oppoſed by others, ibid.
Platoniſts miſinterpret ſome of their maſter's expreſſions, as if he had aſſerted the world's eternity, 8.
Pliny the elder, held the eternity, and incorruptibility of the world, 17.
Plutarch, his opinion as to the origin of the univerſe, 62.
Poets, old pagan poets contributed to the depravation of theology, 31. Countenanced the opinion of the world's being produced from a chaos, ibid. Make love to preſide at the ranging of the confuſed matter, 32. Their coſmogony the ſame with their theogony, ibid.
Poſidon, or Neptune, the ſon of Pontus, 304.
Poſtdiluvian patriarchs, a table of their years to the birth of Abraham, 244. Of the ſame to the call of Abraham, according to the computation of the Hebrew, 245. The ſame according to the computation of the Septuagint, 246. The ſame acccording to the computation of the Samaritan Pentateuch, 247,
Pourous, the firſt man's name, according to the Bramins, 69.
Pre-adamites, think mankind in being before Adam, 98. Their arguments and objections anſwered, 98, & ſeq.
Proceſſion, an account of an antient Egyptian one, given by Clement of Alexandria, 516.
Proclus, a great champion for the world's eternity, 8. Acknowledges the generation of the Gods, ibid.
Prometheus, his flood in Egypt, 196, (P).
Protogonus and Æon, Adam and Eve, in the hiſtory of Sanchoniatho, 175, & (Z). Their iſſue, ibid.
Pſammitichus, his expedient to find out which was the moſt antient language, 335, (U).
Pur, who, in the Phœnician hiſtory, 176.
Pyramidal figure, why made uſe of by the Egyptians, and alſo other nations in erecting monuments, 407.
Pyramids of Egypt, the moſt remarkable on the weſt ſide of the Nile, not far from Jizah, about 20 in number, 402. Whence ſo named, 403. By whom built, 403, & ſeq. Some mentioned by Herodotus and Pliny long ſince ruined, 405. The time when they were built, 406. The end for which they were erected, ibid. Three moſt remarkable ones, 404. Their deſcription, 408, & ſeq. The dimenſions of the firſt pyramid, ibid. The outſide of it, 410. The inſide, 411, & ſeq. The ſecond pyramid, 416, & ſeq. The prieſts lodgings near it, 417. Pyramid, ibid. & ſeq. A fourth pyramid, 419. Other pyramids, 422. How the pyramids were built, 419. Inſcription on them mentioned by the Copts, 405.

Pythagoras held two distinct and independent principles co-existent from eternity, viz. God and matter, 53. What meant by his dyad and monad, ibid. The reason of his superstitious abstinence from beans, 54. His theology, ibid. Borrowed his philosophy from the pillars of Hermes in Egypt, 481. With what reluctancy of the Egyptian priests he was admitted to their secret learning, 482.
Pythagoreans, their reasons why God should be called Tetractys, 55.

R.

RAAMAH, or Rhegma, where settled, 364.
Rahab of the scriptures, supposed to have been the western part of the Delta in Egypt, called at present al Ref, 387.
Rain, some deny that there was any on the primitive earth, 227.
Rainbow, whether any before the flood, 229.
Raven, sent out of the ark by Noah, 218. Why chosen, ibid, (M).
Rauwolf, his account of the ruins of Babylon, 323, (M), Reboboth the city of, where situated, 279, (B).
Relicks, the oldest consecration of relicks to be met with in history 307, (Y).
Resen city, where situate, 279, (B).
Rèû, invention of several arts ascribed to him, 289.
Rhea, daughter of Uranus, 301.
Rhebas, Rhebæus, or Rhebanus, a river near Paphlagonia, and a country of the same name, 369.
Rhodopis, or Rhodope, mistress to Charaxus, said by some of the Greeks to have built one of the three great pyramids of Egypt, 404. what probably gave occasion to this story, 406.
Rhossi, people on the river Ros, or Aras, called by the Greeks Araxes, 370.
Riphæi, mentioned by Pliny, a people, 369.
Riphath, one of Gomer's sons, where seated, 369.
Rivers watering Eden, 112, & seq.
Ruddery, what in the physiology of the Bramins, 69.
Russians, from whom descended, 370.

S.

SABA, now Mareb, formerly the chief city of Yaman, or Arabia Felix, by whom built, 364.
Sabean nations extended from the Arabian to the Persian gulph, 376. The name of their chief city, according to some, Saba; according to others, Mariaba, or Maraba, ibid. All names of the same place, ibid.
Sabtah, where seated, 364.
Sabtecha, where fixed, 364.
Sacrifice, human sacrifices offered by the Egyptians, 459.
Sacrificing, the custom of mens sacrificing their children to the devil, when, and on what occasion said by some to have taken rise, 290, (W).

Saïs, one of the chief cities, in former times, of the lower Egypt, 388.
Salah, ſon and ſucceſſor of Arphaxad, 283. Conjectures relating to him, ibid, & (I) where ſettled, 361. One of the chiefs at the diſperſion, 360.
Salernum in Italy, ſaid to have been founded by Shem, 277. (Z).
Sanaa, the capital of Yaman, called by the Jews who dwelt there Uzal, 375.
Sanchoniatho, his account of the original of the world, 23. He gives us the idolatrous line of Cain, 174. & ſeq. Begins his hiſtory of mankind with the production of the firſt pair, 175. His pedigree of Cain's line compared with that given by Moſes. 182. His hiſtory continued, 294. Biſhop Cumberland's amendment of it conſidered, 308. His account of the flood, Vid. Flood.
Saracens, the etymology of the word, 364. Suppoſed by ſome to be the deſcendants of Sabtecha, ibid. Firſt ſtiled by the Greeks Sabtaceni, ibid. The word Saraceni no other than Sharkîîn, or Eaſterlings, 365.
Sari, meaſure of time in Beroſus, 185, (C).
Saurid, believed by the Copts to have built the pyramids before the flood, 405.
Scythians, about mount Caucaſus, ſuppoſed by the fathers to be the deſcendants of Magog, 370.
Seba, where ſeated, 363.
Sebta, or Ceuta, a maritime town in Africa, ſaid to have been built by Shem, 277, (Z).
Senjâr city, its ſituation, 314, (F). Called alſo al Sâmara, 315, Semnaar of Babylon, 314.
Sephar and Meſha, mentioned by Moſes, where ſituate, 374. Various opinions about mount Sephar, ibid.
Serapis one of the Egyptian deities, 445. Suppoſed by ſome to be the ſame as Oſiris, ibid. How repreſented, 447.
Serpent, the body of, abuſed by the devil to ſeduce Eve, 122. Why choſen by the devil for that end, 123. Of what kind was this ſerpent, 124. His accoſting Eve, 125. His puniſhment reaſonable, ibid. Suppoſed by Joſephus to have been endued with ſpeech, 122, & (F). Ridiculous traditions of the Mohammedans on the ſerpent, 123, (H) & (I).
Serug, the invention of coining aſcribed to him, 290, (U).
Seſochris, king of This in Egypt, ſaid to have been five cubits high, and three broad, 492, (E).
Seth, when born, 152. His race ſuppoſed to be meant by the ſons of GOD, 155. The religious life of his offspring, 163. Their defection, 164. The Cauſe of it, ibid. How long they continued religious, ibid. His name not unknown to the Egyptians, 163, (K). His line as it ſtands in Sanchoniatho, 295, (C). The ſame corrected, 296, (C) The iſſue of the Sethites, and the daughters of Cain, and their impiety, 169.
Shang ti, the ſupreme governor of all things, in the philoſophy of the Chineſe, 71.

Sheba, what parts peopled by him, 364.
She Kia, 51.
Sheleph, one of the ſons of Joktan, uncertain where ſettled, 375.
Shem and his poſterity, 275. When born ibid. Invention of aſtronomy aſcribed to him by the Jews, 276. Confounded by miſtake with Melchizedec, ibid. The 109 pſalm and a treatiſe of phyſic aſcribed to him, ibid. Said to have been thé firſt king, 277. His death, 278. Thought by ſome to be the ſame with Pluto, by others with Typhon, ibid. (A). What countries planted by his deſcendants, 360, & ſeq.
Shinaar, firſt migration of the ſons of Noah to the plain of Shinaar, 312. The Situation and extent of the land of Shinaar, 313. Etymology of the word, ibid, (D). Footſteps of the name met with both in antient and modern writers, 314.
Siameſe agree with the Stoics, in their notion of the alternate deſtruction and renovation of the earth, 52.
Sidon, daughter of Pontus, firſt found out hymns, 304.
Simplicius, his opinion touching the ſyſtem of the Eleatics, 13. A zealous contender for the world's eternity, 28. Affirms the Moſaic hiſtory of the creation of the world by GOD, to have been a fabulous tradition drawn from the Egyptian fables, ibid.
Singara, city and mountain of, 314.
Sippara, the city of the ſun, 187.
Sirbon, a lake in Egypt, 520, (S), deſcribed, ibid.
Siriad, land of, mentioned by Joſephus, where ſeated, 163, & (K).
Solomon, ſeveral princes of that name, according to the doctrine of the orientals, reigning many thouſand years before Adam, 106.
Sons of GOD, who meant by, 164, & ſeq.
Soul of man a ſpiritual ſubſtance, 96. Whether infuſed immediately by GOD into man, or derived ex traduce from their parents, ibid. Whether all created at once with Adam, or ſucceſſively, ibid. Pre-exiſtence of ſouls believed by ſeveral antient philoſophers, Chriſtians, Mohammedans, and Jews, 97. Souls of brutes, according to ſome, particular eradiations from the ſource of life above, ibid.
Speech the original of, 330. Whether the firſt language was of divine formation, 331, 332. The firſt language conſiſted of few words, 334. Whether more tongues than one before the flood, ibid. Enquiry concerning the primitive tongue, 335. Several languages claim this honour, ibid. An experiment uſed by Pſammitichus, king of Egypt, to know which was the primitive language, ibid. (V). The pretenſions of the Hebrew tongue conſidered, 337.
Sphinxes, uſed formerly to ſhow the beginning of the Nile's riſing, 393. Several of them ſtill to be ſeen, ibid. The ſize of one mentioned by Pliny, ibid.
Spider, an immenſe ſpider the firſt cauſe of all things, according to the ſyſtem of the Pendets, 49.
Spinoza, the firſt who reduced Atheiſm into a ſyſtem, 12. His monſtrous ſyſtem of the univerſe, 17.
Spirits evil, no mention of among the Greeks or Romans, 106.

Spirits, vid. Angels.
Statuary in great perfection among the Egyptians, 479.
Stilpo holds the eternity and immutability of the world, 12.
Stoics admitted two principles, the one active, the other passive, 47. Acknowledged no incorporeal substance, ibid. Affirmed God to be an immortal, rational, and perfect animal, ibid. Confounded God and nature together, ibid. Some Stoics supposed the world to be governed by a plastic nature only, ibid. Their peculiar dogm as to the constitution of the world, 48. Conformity between their notions and the doctrine of the Pendets, or Indian Gentiles, 49. Their opinion secretly entertained by the Sûfis of Persia, ibid.
Strato of Lampsacus, his opinion of the origin of things, 14.
Styx, why the gods said to swear by it, 36.
Sukkiim, the Ichthyophagi inhabiting the coast of the Red-sea, 366.
Sun, when created, 73. Said by Herodotus, to have inverted his course four times, and rose in the west, 135, (X). Idolatry began with the worship of this planet, 176, (B).
Suphis, king of Memphis, reported to have seen the gods, to have wrote a sacred book greatly esteemed by the Egyptians, and built the largest pyramid near Memphis, 493, (G).
Susiana, part of Elam, or Persia, taken by Stephanus to be part of Assyria, 360.
Sydyc, in the Phœnician records, supposed to be the same as Melchizedec, 296, (D).
Syene, an antient city of Thebaïs, 386.
Syncellus, his series of the Egyptian kings considered, 501, & 512.
Syriac, allowed to be the most antient of the oriental tongues, 337. Some names in Moses more happily derived from the Syriac than from the Hebrew, 337, (X).
Syringes, a place so called, 164, (K).

T.

TAAUTUS, the same with the Egyptian Thoyth, or Hermes, 23. According to the Phœnician records found out the writing of the first letters, 297. The same with Thoör of the Egyptians, &c. ibid.
Tabir, vid. Nomes.
Table of Cain's descendants, according to Sanchoniatho and Moses, 182. Of the Chaldean kings before the flood, 184. The length of their reigns, 185. Of the gods, and demi-gods, supposed to have reigned in Egypt before the flood, 190. Of the computation of mankind, from the creation to the flood, by Mr. Whiston, 223, (P). Of the years of the postdiluvian patriarchs to the birth of Abraham, 244. Table of the years of the postdiluvian patriarchs to the call of Abraham, according to the computation of the Hebrew, 245. According to the computation of the Septuagint, 246. And according to that of the Samaritan Pentateuch, 247. Table genealogical of the descendants of Noah, 257. Of the gradual increase of mankind after the flood, 352, 353. According to several authors, ibid. Table of the last 16 of the 30 Egyptian dynasties, according to the old Egyptian chronicle, 491. Of the Egyptian dynasties from Manetho, 492. Egyptian kings from Manetho, according to Josephus, 500. Of the Theban kings from the Laterculus of Eratosthenes, 501. Of the Egyptian kings, according to Syncellus, ibid. Of the kings of Egypt, according to Herodotus, and Diodorus Siculus, 502.

Tahmûrath, a fabulous king of Persia, said to have waged war with the Genii, 106.

Talmudists, their ridiculous opinions of the first man, 93.

Tanis, a chief city, in former times, of the lower Egypt, 388.

Tanitic mouth of the Nile, why abhorred by the antient Egyptians, 518.

Taricheutæ, embalmers among the Egyptians, 465.

Tarshish, where settled, 372. Gave name, according to Josephus, to Tarsus, and all Cilicia, ibid.

Telecles, and Theodorus, the sons of Rhœcus, made the famous statue of Apollo Pythius, 479.

Temples, Egyptian structure of, 460.

Teneriff, pike of, its height, 209, (B).

Tentyris, an antient city of Thebaïs, 386.

Terah, father of Abraham, of what age, when Abraham was born, 248, (L). Said to have invented the art of coining, and erected the first foundery, 290, (U). Supposed to be the same whom the Asiatics call Azer, 292. Was an Idolater, 293. Several traditions relating to him, 293, (Z), & (A), 294. Leaves Ur, 294, & (B). Converted from idolatry before his death, ibid.

Tetractys, God so called by the Pythagoreans, and why, 55.

Thales, prince of the Ionic philosophers, 36. Held water to be the first principle, ibid. Whether he acknowledged any intelligent being, as assisting in the formation of the world, 37. The first who foretold an eclipse, 473.

Thebaïs, the upper Egypt, so named from its principal city Thebes, 385. In scripture called Pathros, and at present al Saïd, ibid. Its situation and extent, ibid. The antient cities of note in Thebaïs, 386. The inhabitants of this part of Egypt worshipped only the immortal and unbegotten Cneph, or Emeph, 445.

Thebes, called Diospolis, or the city of Jupiter, the metropolis of Thebaïs in Egypt, 386. Why called Hecatompylos, ibid. Its great power, extent, wealth, &c. in antient times, ibid. By whom founded, ibid. The name of Thebes given formerly to all Egypt, ibid.

This, an antient city of great note in Thebaïs, 386.

Tigris, river, 112.

Timæus Locrus, his account of the origin of things, 57.

Timotheus, his epitome of the Orphic cosmogony, 33. His testimony of Orpheus, ibid.

Tina, the true Pelusium, 367.

Tiras, where settled, 373.

Titanides, or Artemides, the seven daughters of Astarte, 302.

Togarmah, the last son of Gomer, where settled, 369.

Tongues, confuſion of, whether a puniſhment. 318. How effected, 342. Whether a new language was formed, 344, & ſeq. Vid. Speech.

Toſorthrus, king of Memphis, the Egyptian Æſculapius, excelled in phyſic, found out the manner of building with hewen ſtones, and improved letters, 493, (F).

Tournefort, his account of mount Ararat, 239, (I).

Tower of Babel, of Nimrod, Vid. Babel.

Tree, of the knowledge of good and evil, why ſo called, 126. The heathens had ſome notion of it, ibid. What particular tree it was, 127.

Triſmegiſtus, Hermes, ſecretary to Cronus ſon of Uranus, 300.

Trochilus, of the antients the Sakſak of Egypt, 399. A kind of bird and the only creature with which the Crocodile is in friendſhip, ibid.

Trocmi, Trogmi, and Trochmeni, a people inhabiting the borders of Pontus and Cappadocia, 369.

Troglodites and Ichthyophagi, inhabit the coaſt of the Red-ſea, and are called in ſcripture Ziyim and Sukkiim, 366.

Tubal, where ſettled, 373.

Tubal Cain, thought to be the ſame with the Vulcan of the Gentiles, 154, (T), & 192. Found out the art of forging and working of metals, ibid.

Tuſcans, their account of the creation of the world, 65.

Typhon, who, 192. The Egyptian Typhon one of the Egyptian deities, and brother to Oſiris, 444. Called alſo Seth, Bebon and Smy, ibid. The hiſtory of Typhon, 513. Kills Oſiris his brother, 518.

Typhonian, name given to thoſe men among the Egyptians who were ſacrificed, 459.

V.

VACUUM, Vid. Matter.

Venephes, king of This, built the pyramids at Cochome, 492,(C).

Unclean meats, the prohibition of, had not its origin from the Moſaic law, 229, & ſeq.

Univerſe, Vid. World.

Uranus, why ſo called, 181, (S). The heaven, the element over us called from him, ibid. His ſons, 297. Killed by his ſon Cronus, or Ilus, 304.

Uſous, in the Egyptian coſmogony, who, 177, (G).

Vulcan, one of the demi-gods that reigned in Egypt, 190. Invents working of metals, 192. Thought to have been the ſame with Tubal Cain, ibid.

Vyſtney, what meant by, in the phyſiology of the Bramins, 69.

Uz, ſon of Aram, Shem's fifth and youngeſt ſon, built Damaſcus, and gave name to the country about that city, 362. Uz the country of Job, different from this, and lying towards Edom, ibid.

Uzal, one of Joktan's ſons, 375. His name given to Sanaa, the capital of Yaman, by the Jews who dwelt there, ibid.

W.

W.

WATER, according to the moſt antient phyſiologers, the origin of all things, 36. Why the oath of the gods ſaid to be by water, called by the poets Styx, ibid. Held by Thales to be the firſt principle, ibid. What meant by waters above the firmament, 199, (U).

Whiſton's theory, 79. How he accounts for the conſtitution of the earth, after the fall of man, 135, & ſeq. His theory of the deluge, 206. How he accounts for the changes made in the world at the deluge, 225, & ſeq.

Wiſhtnum, a god among the the Malabarians, 70.

Wiſtnou, the ſupreme god in the phyſiology of the Bramins, 69.

Wolf, why adored by the Egyptians, 457.

World, created both as to matter and form, 2. Several opinions held by the antients and moderns as to the origin of it, 4. The opinion of thoſe who held it eternal, both in matter and form, ibid. Held eternal by Ariſtotle, and ſeveral of Plato's followers, 7. Arguments proving the poſſibility of its eternity, 10. The controverſy about the poſſibility of its eternity, a diſpute about words only, ibid. The opinion of thoſe who held the univerſe to be God, 12. That God and the world are but one thing, firſt taught by Xenophanes, ibid. Whatever changes ſeem to happen in the world, maintained by ſome to be mere illuſions of our ſenſes, ibid. The opinion of thoſe who held the matter of the world to be eternal, but not the form, 18. The principles they proceeded upon examined, 19. Strong proofs ſhewing, that the preſent frame of the world has been of no very antient date, 22. The Phœnician account of the original of the world, 23. The opinion of thoſe who held the world to be abſolutely created, and liable to diſſolution, 64. The creation as delivered by Moſes, 72. Whether the formation of the world was compleated in the ſpace of ſix days, 100. In what ſeaſon of the year made, ibid. Whether any thing created before the world, ibid. World deſtroyed by the flood, 174. Changes made in it at the deluge, according to Burnet and Whiſton, 225, & ſeq. Production of the world according to the Phœnicians, Egyptians, Chaldeans, &c. Vid. Phœnicians, Egyptians, &c. World Antediluvian. Vid. Antediluvian.

Worſhipping of animals among the Egyptians, Vid. Animals, Egyptians.

X.

XEnocrates, his natural principles indiviſible particles, 41.

Xenophanes, author of the opinion holding God and the world to be one and the ſame thing, 12. Founder of the Eleatic ſect, ibid. Holds the eternity and immutability of the world, ibid. His opinion qualified by ſeveral learned men, 13.

Xiſuthrus, the tenth of the Chaldean kings, according to Beroſus, who reigned before the flood, 184. Several particulars of him relating to the flood, 187.

Xoïs, one of the chief cities of the lower Egypt, 388.

Y.

YA, emperor of China, 71.
Yaman, of Arabia Felix, 364. The import of the word among the Arabians, 376.
Yang, what meant by, in the Chineſe phyſiology, 71.
Yarab, according to the Arabs, the ſon of Joktan, 374. Gave his name to Arabia, and the Arabic language, according to the Arabs, 289. Founded the kingdom of Yaman, or Arabia Felix, ibid.
Years, antediluvian, 226, (S).
Yezad, Yezdan, the good principle among the Perſian Mages, 66.
Yn, what meant by, in the Chineſe phyſiology, 71.

Z.

ZALA Cuſa, an old woman, 219. Tradition of the Eaſterns relating to her, ibid.
Zenâdika, a ſect among the Mohammedans, maintaining, that whatever we ſee is God, 16.
Zeno of Elea, holds the eternity and immutability of the world, 12. His notions of the origin of things, 48.
Zeus Belus, ſon of Cronus, ſuppoſed by ſome to have been Cuſh, 303, R.
Ziyim, Troglodites ſo called in ſcripture, thoſe who inhabited the coaſt of the Red-ſea, 366.
Zophaſemin, what in the Phœnician coſmogony, 24, 34.
Zoroaſtres, an account of the Chaldean coſmogony, from his chaldaic or magic oracles, 31. His deſcription of the ſupreme Deity, 66.

The End of the Firſt Volume.

A N

Universal HISTORY,

FROM THE

Earlieſt Account of Time to the Preſent:

COMPILED from

ORIGINAL AUTHORS;

And ILLUSTRATED with

Maps, Cuts, Notes, Chronological and Other Tables.

VOL. II.

Ἱστορίας ἀρχαίας ἐξέρχεσθαι μὴ κατανόει, ἐν αὐταῖς γὰρ ἐυρήσεις ἀκόπως, ἅπερ ἕτεροι συνῆξαν ἐγκόπως. Baſil. Imp. ad Leon. fil.

DUBLIN:
Printed by EDWARD BATE, for the EDITORS:
M,DCC,XLIV.

ANTIENT

CONTENTS

OF VOLUME II.

CHAP. III.

SECT. V.

THE Reigns of the Kings of Egypt. page 1

SECT. VI.

The Succession of the Kings of Egypt according to the Oriental Historians, 69

CHAP. IV.

The History of the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, Edomites, Amalekites, Canaanites, and Philistines.

SECT. I.

The History of Moab, 75

SECT. II.

The History of Ammon, 97

SECT. III.

The History of Midian, or Madian, 110

SECT. IV.

The History of Edom, 123

SECT. V.

The History of Amalek, 148

SECT. VI.

The History of Canaan, 157

SECT. VII.

The History of the Philistines, 189

CHAP.

CONTENTS.

CHAP. V.

The History of the antient Syrians.

SECT. I.

The Description of Syria, 232

SECT. II.

Of the Antiquity, Government, Laws, Religion, Customs, Arts, Learning, and Trade of the antient Syrians, 253

SECT. III.

Of the Chronology of the antient Syrians, 269

SECT. IV.

The Reigns of the Kings of the antient Syrians, 273

CHAP. VI.

The History of the Phœnicians.

SECT. I.

The Description of Phœnice, 293

SECT. II.

Of the Antiquity, Government, Laws, Religion, Customs, Arts, Learning, and Trade of the antient Phœnicians, 304

SECT. III.

The Chronology of the Phœnicians, 326

SECT. IV.

The Phœnician Kings from the antient fabulous History of the Greeks, 328

SECT. V.

The Reigns of the Kings of Phœnice, 332

CHAP. VII.

The History of the Jews to the Babylonish Captivity.

SECT. I.

The Jewish History from Abraham to Moses, 354

SECT. II.

The History of the Jews from their Egyptian bondage, to their entrance into the land of Canaan, 463

THE

AN

Univerſal Hiſtory.

FROM THE

Earlieſt Account of Time to the Preſent.

BOOK I.

The ASIATIC Hiſtory to the Time of ALEXANDER the Great.

CHAP. III.

The Hiſtory of Egypt to the time of Alexander the Great.

SECT. V.

The reigns of the kings of Egypt.

MENES, or Menas, is univerſally agreed to have been the firſt man that reigned over Egypt (A). In his time the whole country, except Thebaïs, was a moraſs; and no land appeared between the lake Mœris and the Mediterranean ſea, which was ſeven Days paſſage Menes, or Menas.

(A) It is on all hands agreed, that Menes was the firſt king of Egypt; but all are not of one mind concerning him in any other reſpect. And though we have reſolved to follow no particular hypotheſis in the arrangement of the Egyptian affairs, as thinking them all pretty dubious and exceptionable; yet we ſhall in the moſt ſummary way (ſo as to be conſiſtent with perſpicuity) entertain you, from time to time, with the diſcordant notions and conjectures of ſome of the moſt noted chronologers, that have laboured in the un-paſſage on the river. He diverted the courſe of the Nile, which was wont to waſh the feet of the ſandy mountain towards grateful work of ſettling the Egyptian antiquities. In conformity to what we now propoſe, we ſhall take notice, that, according to Sir John Marſham, this Menes was the Cham, or Ham, the ſon of Noah in ſcripture, the Jupiter Hammon, or Ammon, of the Egyptians, the Thamus, or Adonis, of the Phœnicians, the Saturn of Sanchoniatho, and the firſt that taught the Egyptians to fare ſumptuouſly; which alone, as it is reported of him, were a ſufficient inducement to think, that he could not have lived in the early and ſimple times which were immediately ſucceſſive to the deluge. But we ſhall have no need to contradict him, ſeeing that will be done preſently by one of no mean fame, who wrote profeſſedly with that intent. in a word, he lays it down, that he was king of all Egypt, and the father of the Egyptian god Mercury, or Athothes (1).

It will now be worth while to hear what Perizonius has to object in anſwer to this gentleman. He ſays, that the firſt that reigned in Egypt were the Meſtræi, or Semigods. Then comes Menes, whom he denies to have been either Ham or Mizraïm, or that Hammon is properly the ſame with the Egyptian Jupiter, or that Menes was the father of the Egyptian Mercury. We will now give you an argument of his in proof of theſe ſeveral heads ſeparately, and then conclude with his conjectures concerning the age and family of Menes, and of this remote period of the Egyptian affairs. 1. Menes ſucceeded the Meſtræi: this he proves by very ample teſtimony, and then obſerves, that he could not be the founder of their race, but their ſucceſſor; and ſince it is ſaid, that he firſt taught the Egyptians to feed deliciouſly and to adorn their beds, it muſt follow, that there had been Egyptians before his time, who were uſed to a coarſer and more ſimple way of living. 2. For the ſame reaſon it is very improbable, that he was either Ham or Mizraïm. 3. Hammon is not properly the Egyptian Jupiter; for that Ham, or Hammon, was, by the Greeks, in after-times dignified with the name of Jupiter, was owing to their being ſo ſolicitous after foreign gods, to whoſe original or proper name they prefixed that of Jupiter; ſo Jupiter Belus, Jupiter Hammon, Jupiter Caſius, and many more; wherefore this had no affinity with the antient Egyptian genealogy, which knew nothing of the Grecian Jupiter. In a word, he thinks, he was ſtiled Dionius, or ſprung from Jupiter, by Eratoſthenes, becauſe he was the firſt that reigned after the Meſtræi, or Semigods, as is related by the ſame author. It is his opinion, that Menes lived ſomewhat about the days of Abraham, but does not lay it down for certain; and though Eratoſthenes calls him the father of Athothes, or Mercury, he can by no means admit it (2).

(1) Vid. Marſh. Can. Chron.

(2) Perizon. Ægypt. Orig. & Temp. Antiquiſſimorum Inveſt.

Father

wards Libya, and built the city of Memphis within the antient bed of the river. On the north and weſt ſide of it, without the walls, he made a lake, both which were fed by the Nile, which flowed along on the eaſt ſide of the town: and in the city itſelf he built the ſtately and famous temple of Vulcan [a]. He was the firſt that inſtructed the Egyptians in religious matters, that introduced domeſtic magnificence and luxury, and that inſtituted the pomp of feaſts; on which account his memory was loaded with the execrations of one of his ſucceſſors, as will be obſerved hereafter [b].

AFTER this Herodotus declares, that the Egyptians produced a catalogue of 130 kings, extending from Menes to [a] HERODOT. lib. 11. [b] DIOD. SIC. lib. 1. p. 42.

Father Pezron, who wrote before Perizonius, brings the reign of Menes much later down than the days of Ham, or Mizraïm. According to his hypotheſis Menes began to reign 2904 years after the creation, and 648 after the flood. This he endeavours by all means to prove, and ſeems to be pretty confident that he is in the right: but it would be endleſs to enter into the arguments of the chronologers we ſhall from time to time reſort to, and we ſhall avoid it as much as poſſible, except when their reaſoning is very clear and important, or their notions very ſingular (3)

We will now conſult the incomparable Sir Iſaac Newton. As this chronologer is of opinion, that Seſoſtris was Oſiris, he places Menes after him, and in conſequence thereof, and for other cogent reaſons, he tranſpoſes the ſeries of the kings of Egypt mentioned by Herodotus after this manner; Seſoſtris, Pheron, Proteus, Menes, Rhampſinitus, Mœris, Cheops, Chephren, Mycerinus, Nitocris, and the reſt in the ſame order as they ſtand in Herodotus. He ſuppoſes Menes to be the ſame with Amenophis and Memnon, and that by corruption he was called Menes, Mines, Minæus, Minies, Mineuis, Enephes, Venephes, Phamenophis, Oſymanthyas [Oſymandyas] Oſimandes, Iſmandes, Imandes, Memnon, Arminon. According to his hypotheſis Menes is about 300 years older than Pſammitichus. He holds it irrational to ſuppoſe, that there was any king of all Egypt, till after the expulſion of the Shepherds; and obſerves, that the miracles of Memphis were not ſpoken of, or known in Greece till ſome ages after the Trojan War; for Homer celebrates Thebes as the glory of its days, and makes no mention of Memphis; which, and the temple of Vulcan, that ſtood in the midſt of it, he grants to have been built by Menes. In a word, this hypotheſis reduces the antiquity of the Egyptian empire, of which Menes was the firſt king, much lower than any other (4).

(3) Pezron. Antiq. des temps retab. & defend. (4) Sir Iſaac Newton's Chron. of the antient kingdoms amended, p. 354.

Mœris, who was the laſt of the number; and that there was nothing worth notice recorded of any of them, except one Ethiopian woman called Nitocris. On the other hand Diodorus writes, that Menes's family enjoyed the throne to the fifty ſecond deſcent, and that their ſeveral reigns took up a ſpace of 1400 years. Since therefore there is ſo vaſt a chaſm in both of them, we think, we may ſafely venture to fill it up in part with what we find concerning the ſhepherds who ruled over Egypt; and the rather, becauſe this whole tranſaction ſeems to belong to ſome very remote period of the Egyptian hiſtory.

The irruption of the Paſtors or Shepherds

It happened in the reign of Timaus king of Egypt, that God being diſpleaſed with the Egyptians, they ſuffered a great revolution; for a multitude of men, ignoble in their race, took courage, and pouring from the Eaſt into Egypt, made war with the inhabitants, who ſubmitted to them without trying the event of a battle. Having reduced the princes, they inhumanly burnt the cities, threw down the temples of the gods, and behaved in the moſt cruel and inſulting manner over the antient inhabitants, putting them to death, and carrying away their wives and children into captivity. At length they made one of their own number king, whoſe name was Salatis. He uſually reſided at Memphis, and leaving gariſons in the moſt proper places, kept both the upper and lower region under tribute. But particularly he fortified the eaſtern parts, fearing an invaſion of the Aſſyrians, who were at that time moſt powerful. Finding therefore a convenient city in the Saïtic nome, which was ſeated on the eaſtern banks of the river Bubaſtis, and which was called Abaris in the antient theology, he rebuilt it, and ſurrounded it with a very ſtrong wall, and kept a gariſon of 24,000 ſoldiers therein. It was his cuſtom, about the time of harveſt, to come hither to gather in his corn, and to pay and exerciſe his ſoldiers, that they might always be ready and fit for action, and be a conſtant terror to any who ſhould attempt an invaſion. Salatis died, and was ſucceeded by 5 others [c], who did their utmoſt, as well as their predeceſſor, to root out the whole nation of the native Egyptians [d]. This people was called Hycſos, or King Shepherds (B), hyc, in the ſacred dialect, ſignifying a king,

They ſet up Salatis for their king.

[c] See before, Vol. I. p. 496. [d] Manetho apud Joſ. contra Apion, l. 1. p. 1039.

(B) We will barely tranſcribe the opinions of the above-cited chronologers as to the time of this irruption, as it is repreſented, of king, and ſos, in the common dialect, ſignifying a paſtor, or ſhepherd; and of theſe two came the compound Hycſos. Some would have it, that theſe people were Arabians. They held Egypt 511 years. This is all the genuine account we have of the irruption of the ſhepherds, their expulſion may occur hereafter.

WE now return to Herodotus and Diodorus; and this laſt making mention of ſeveral princes between Menes and Myris, let us hear what he ſays concerning them.

BUSIRIS (C) in proceſs of time became king, and was ſucceeded by 8 princes of his line, the laſt of which was called alſo Buſiris, and was the founder of the city of Thebes, which he made the capital of the kingdom [e].

Buſiris I. and II.

OSYMANDYAS (D) appears next. It is uncertain whom, or when, he ſucceeded. The Bactrians revolting from him, Oſymandyas.

he

[e] DIOD. ubi ſupr.

of the Shepherds into Egypt. Sir John Marſham places it 157 Years before the Exodus of the children of Iſrael (1). Perizonius drawing a very circumſtantial parallel between what is recorded of the Shepherds by Manetho, and what is ſaid of the obſcurity of the Iſraelites, the power and dignity of Joſeph, and the miraculous works of Moſes, which almoſt utterly deſtroyed the country; upon the cloſe, pronounces the Shepherds ſo heinouſly ſpoken of, to have been the Iſraelites themſelves (2). Sir Iſaac Newton makes the Paſtors to have been the Canaanites which fled from Joſhua and went into Afric, but in their flight ſeized on the kingdom of the Lower Egypt in the reign of Timaus, whom the ſame author calls Thamus, or Thammuz (3). Greaves, after a parallel drawn by him between the hiſtory of the Shepherds and of the Iſraelites, which ſeems as natural and as plauſible as that of Perizonius, will by no means allow them to have been the ſame (4).

(C) Sir John Marſham and Sir Iſaac Newton think, that no ſuch king ever reigned, and that what is ſaid concerning his cruelty is merely fabulous (5). Perizonius, on the contrary, that there was ſuch a king of Egypt, but who was not ſo antient as Diodorus makes him; taxing that hiſtorian with too great indulgence towards the Egyptian vanity (6).

(D) If we rely on Sir John Marſham, we ſhould call Oſymandyas Amenophis, and Memnon; as alſo Imandes, Iſmandes, and Oſimandes: this perhaps, ſays he, derived from Oſiris, and that from Iſis. What ſeems to be his chief argument in ſupport of this opinion,

(1) Vid. Marſh. ubi ſupr. (2) Perizon. ubi ſupr. (3) Sir Iſaac Newt. ubi ſupr. (4) Greaves's Pyramid. p. 21, 22. (5) Marſh. ubi ſupr. (6) Perizon. ubi ſupr.

he reduced them, as is ſaid, with an army conſiſting of His tomb. 400,000 foot, and 20,000 horſe. Of all the antient monuments of the kings, for which the city of Thebes was ſo renowned, his was of the greateſt note. It conſiſted of vaſt courts, porticos, ſhrines, temples, a library, his own tomb, and other buildings. The firſt court, which was of various kinds of ſtone, was 200 foot in extent, and 45 foot high. Next to this was a ſquare portico, each of whoſe ſides was 400 foot long; and, inſtead of pillars, ſupported by repreſentations of animals 15 cubits high, all of one ſtone, and adorned with figures after the antient manner. The cieling was blue, and beſpangled with ſtars. From this portico they went into a ſecond court, in all reſpects like the firſt, except that it was more enriched with various ſculptures. In the entrance thereof were three ſtatues, all of one ſtone, the workmanſhip of Memnon the Syenite: one of them was in a ſitting poſture, and the largeſt in all Egypt, the length of its foot exceeding 7 cubits. This was his own ſtatue; the other two, which ſtood one at each knee, repreſented his mother and daughter. This wonderful piece was not ſo admirable for the exquiſite art of the carver, as for the beauty of the ſtone, which was free from the leaſt flaw or blemiſh. It had this inſcription; I am Oſymandyas, king of kings: he that would know my grandeur, or where I lie, let him ſurpaſs me in any of my works. Here was alſo another ſtatue of his mother, ſtanding by herſelf, of 20 cubits high, and cut out of one ſtone: ſhe had three queens on her head, ſignifying that ſhe had been the daughter, wife, and mother of a king. This court led to a ſecond portico or piazza, far exceeding the firſt. On the is, that in the deſcription of the city they pretend he beſieged, it is ſaid to have been ſurrounded by a river, which he will have to have been the river Eulæus, and the city itſelf Suſa; for Pliny ſays, that river ſurrounded the fortreſs of the Suſiaks, and obſerves, that Suſa was commonly called, by the Greeks, Memnonia. He obſerves moreover, that Memnon's expedition into Aſia, was more celebrated by the Greeks than that of Seſoſtris, which he attributes to the poets who ſprang firſt up in, or near, his time: and concludes, that he dwelt ſome time in Suſa. All this, according to his cuſtom, he endeavours to prove from antient teſtimony (7).

Perizonius uſes much argument upon this king's reign, and who he was; but comes to no poſitive deciſion, and ſcarce offers a conjecture, ſo dark this period appears to him (8). We have already told you, that Sir Iſaac Newton takes Oſymandyas and Menes to be the ſame.

(7) Vid. Marſh. ubi ſupr. (8) Periz. ubi ſupr.

firſt

firſt wall of this the king was repreſented with his army beſieging a town encompaſſed by a river, and fighting in the front of the battle accompanied by a lion: concerning which, ſome ſaid he always fought with a tame lion at his ſide; and others, that the figure of that beaſt was purely emblematical of his extraordinary courage. On the ſecond wall were the captives, with their hands and privities lopped off, to expreſs their cowardice. On the third were all ſorts of ſculptures and paintings, which repreſented his ſacrifices and triumph. In the middle of this piazza was an altar in the open air, built of the moſt ſhining marble, of excellent workmanſhip, and wonderful proportion. On the fourth ſide, or wall, were two gigantic ſtatues, all of one ſtone, in a ſitting poſture, and 27 cubits high. Near unto theſe were three paſſages which gave admiſſion into a great hall, ſupported by columns, after the manner of a muſic theatre, and 200 feet ſquare. In this place were many wooden ſtatues, repreſenting parties engaged in law, and the judges hearing the cauſes. Theſe laſt, to the number of thirty, were carved on one ſide, with their preſident in the midſt of them, at whoſe neck hung an image with its eyes ſhut to repreſent truth, and with many books about him. By this they choſe to ſignify, that judges ought to be proof againſt bribery, and reſpect nothing but truth and equity. From hence they went into a gallery, or walk, in which were apartments ſtored with the moſt delicious eatables. Here the king was moſt curiouſly wrought, and painted with the moſt lively colours, as preſenting to GOD the gold and ſilver annually dug out of the mines in Egypt, the amount whereof was 3,200,000,000 minas, or 96,000,000 of pounds ſterling. Next was the ſacred library with this inſcription; The diſpenſary of the mind. Contiguous thereunto were the images of all the Egyptian gods, with the king paying the offerings due and peculiar to each of them; that Oſiris, and the reſt of the deities placed beneath him, might know that he had paſſed his life with piety towards the gods, and with juſtice towards men. Next to the library was an edifice of curious architecture, wherein were twenty couches to feaſt on, and the ſtatues of Jupiter, Juno, and the king; who was thought to be here intombed. Around this were ſeveral pavilions, in which moſt curious pictures of the conſecrated animals were ſeen. From hence was the aſcent to the ſepulchre, which being ſurmounted, you ſaw a ring, or circle of gold 365 cubits in circumference and one in thickneſs, ſurrounding the monument. This ring was divided by the days of the year, and ſhewed the riſing and ſetting of the ſtars, and their ſignifications or portents, according to the Egyptian aſtrology.

This circular border was carried away by Cambyſes the Perſian. Such was the tomb of Oſymandyas, whoſe deſcendants reigned after him to the eighth generation. The laſt of them was called Uchoreus f.

Uchoreus.

THE building and fortifying of Memphis, which have already been aſcribed to Menes, are attributed to this UCHOREUS (E) alſo. He is ſaid to have given that city a circuit of 150 ſtadia, or near 20 miles, and by mounds and trenches to have ſecured it from the inſults either of the Nile, or of the invader. He adorned it with palaces, which, though they ſurpaſſed thoſe in any other country, yet fell ſhort of what had been done in that way by his predeceſſors. For the inhabitants held this tranſitory life in no eſtimation, if compared with the joys the virtuous were to poſſeſs hereafter; and were proportionably leſs ſplendid in the lodgings they prepared for the former, than in the repoſitories they founded for the latter. This king tranſlated the imperial ſeat from Thebes to Memphis g.

Saſychis.

AFTER him, uncertain when, reigned SASYCHIS, the ſecond Egyptian legiſlator.

Nitocris.

WE have now brought Diodorus down to Myris; and that we may do the ſame with Herodotus, we muſt relate what he has recorded concerning NITOCRIS (F). She ſucceeded her brother, an Ethiopian, whom the Egyptians murdered, but afterwards conferred the ſucceſſion on her. She, meditating revenge for her brother's untimely end, put many of the Egyptians to death privately and by ſtratagem; and is particularly ſaid to have contrived a ſubterraneous building, whither ſhe invited the principal actors againſt her brother to partake of a f DIODOR. l. 1. p. 44. g Idem ubi ſupr. p. 46.

(E) The laſt mentioned chronologer thinks the works of Uchoreus and Mœris ſavour of the ſame genius, and therefore would willingly think them one and the ſame perſon (1).

(F) Her name ſignifies Minerva victrix. Sir John Marſham places her ſoon after the Iſraelites came into Egypt. He thinks Joſephus means her by the name of Nic-aule, queen of Egypt and Æthiopia; but that he is miſtaken in alledging that the Nitocris of Herodotus was ſhe who viſited Solomon. According to this chronologer ſhe was queen of This, Thebes, and Memphis; and much older than the Babylonian Nitocris (2). Father Pezron writes much to the ſame purpoſe (3). Sir Iſaac Newton makes her the ſiſter and ſucceſſor of Mycerinus (4).

(1) Vid. Sir Iſaac Newt. ubi ſupr. (2) Marſh. ubi ſupr.
(3) Pezron. ubi ſupr. (4) Sir Iſaac Newt. ubi ſupr.

feaſt,

feaſt, and in the midſt of their mirth turned the river upon them by a private paſſage, and drowned them all. Then to ſcreen herſelf from the rage of the people, ſhe took refuge in a place well fortified with aſhes [h]. She was of a fair complexion, her hair was yellow, her perſon beautiful; but it appears, that though her mind was great, as is ſaid, ſhe was not a little inclined to cruelty. She is reported to have built the third great pyramid [i].

AFTER twelve generations MOERIS, or MYRIS (G) came to the throne. This was he who dug the famous lake which bore his name, and erected the two pyramids which ſtood in the midſt of it [k]: he alſo built a ſumptuous portico on the north ſide of Vulcan's temple at Memphis [l]. According to Herodotus he was the 330th king from Menes, and the immediate predeceſſor to Seſoſtris.

SESOSTRIS, Seſooſtris, Seſooſis, Seſonchis, Seſonchoſis, Sethoſis, and ſeveral other appellations are by (H) ſome held to belong Seſoſtris, [h] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [i] SYNCELL. p. 58. See before, Vol. I. p. 494. [k] See before, Vol. I. p. 427. [l] Idem ibid. DIOD. ubi ſupr p. 47.

(G) He recovered Memphis from the Paſtors ſays Marſham (5) Perizonius fixes upon nothing concerning him. Mæris was alſo called Maris, Myris, Meres, Marres, Smarres, and more corruptly, by changing M into A, T, B, Σ, ΥΧ, Λ, &c. Ayres, Tyris, Byires, Soris, Uchoreus, Labaris; ſo ſays Sir Iſaac Newton (6).

(H) Sir John Marſham allows him to have been called by theſe ſeveral appellations, and others beſides, which we may perhaps have occaſion to mention by and by. He is clearly of opinion, that the Seſoſtris of the prophane hiſtorians is the Seſac, or Shiſhak of the ſacred: he takes notice, that the more antient kings of Egypt, with whom the patriarchs and Iſraelites were formerly concerned, are always ſtiled Pharaoh; whereas Shiſhak is the firſt Egyptian king in ſcripture called by his proper name; except Rameſes be rather the name of a king than a country. This famous chronologer thinks, that when Seſoſtris, or Shiſhak as he terms him, ſat out to invade Aſia, he could not well avoid falling upon Judæa, and accordingly took the capital thereof Jeruſalem, which he ſtripped of its riches, and reduced Rehoboam the king to ſerve him; for there is expreſs mention made in the LXX and vulgate verſions, that he was followed by multitudes of Libyans, Troglodytes, and Ethiopians, nations whom, according to prophane accounts, he had previouſly conquered. He then lays a ſtreſs upon Joſephus, who ſays, That Herodotus through miſtake aſcribed the actions of Seſac to Seſoſtris:

(5) Marſh. ubi ſupr. (6) Sir Iſaac Newt. ubi ſupr.

and belong to one man, whoſe reign is eſteemed the moſt extraordinary and again; That Herodotus was only miſtaken in the king's name. This does not ſeem to us ſo concluſive as it might appear to this gentleman; for we do not ſee how from thence it muſt naturally follow that Seſoſtris and Shiſhak are the ſame perſon. Let us, for example, ſuppoſe, that a foreign hiſtorian ſhould through miſtake aſcribe the great actions of our fifth Henry to our king Stephen; it would not thence be allowed that he meant king Henry, but it would be apparently putting back thoſe great actions a great length of time before they were undertaken, or perhaps even thought of. However this gentleman holds, that ſince Herodotus and Joſephus agree as to fact, there is no great matter in the difference of the names they uſe; and becauſe Herodotus profeſſes to have ſeen ſome of Seſoſtris's ignominious pillars in the Syrian Paleſtine; and becauſe it is ſaid by the ſcripture and Joſephus, that Rehoboam gave up the city without the leaſt reſiſtance, he ſeems to be perfectly of opinion that Seſac, or Shiſhak ſat them up upon that very account. We ſhall here leave him with this general obſervation, that to what is related concerning Seſoſtris by the prophane authors, which he grants, he adds what the ſcripture ſays of the reduction of Judæa by Shiſhak; and holds that his monarchy did not expire with himſelf (8).

Let us now ſee what Perizonius has to offer in contradiction to this; for we have already obſerved, that he makes it his chief buſineſs to confute the foregoing chronologer. He then lays it down with great poſitiveneſs, that Seſac and Seſoſtris are kings widely different and remote from each other. How he proves this, we ſhall give in the briefeſt and cleareſt order we are able.

1. He handles the expreſſions above cited from Joſephus: and after proving that ſeveral of the learned, as well as Sir John Marſham, have taken them wrong, he proceeds. Firſt, he infiſts that, by the common conſent of the Greeks, Seſoſtris was much older than the Trojan war. So ſays Herodotus; and the ſame is reported by Diodorus, only with this difference, that he makes a much greater ſpace between this king and that war than Herodotus does. This alſo is evidently confirmed by Strabo (9); and by Ariſtotle (10), who places him before Minos the Cretan lawgiver: as alſo by the writers of the Argonautic expedition, the ſcholiaſt of Apollonius (11); by Arrianus (12), who makes him contemporary to Jandyſis the Scythian; by Jornandes (13), who ſays he flouriſhed before the Amazons; and laſtly, by Juſtin and Ælian (14); the former declaring, the Seſoſtris lived before the days of Ninus, and the latter, that he was inſtructed by Mercury, and ſo makes him equal to the Egyptian Mercury, who muſt certainly have been more antient than the time

(8) Vid. Marſh. ubi ſupr. (9) Vid. l. i. p 38. & l. xvii. p. 824. (10) Vid. Politic. vii. 10. (11) L. 4. v. 272. (12) Apud Photium cod 53 (13) Geticis c. 6. (14) L. 1. c. 1. Var. Hiſt. l. 12. 4.

of

dinary part of the Egyptian hiſtory. He is repreſented as potent of Reboboam. After theſe citations, he blames Sir John Marſham for making ſlight of ſuch abundant teſtimony, and for pronouncing the whole a miſtake which aroſe from the ignorance of the Greeks, and then proceeds. But could the Greeks be ſtrangers to the age of Seſoſtris, if he lived ſo late? it is certain, there was no very great interval between Homer and Reboboam: and who can conceive, that he who was born in Aſia Minor, and ſpent the greateſt part of his days there, or in the adjacent iſles, and who as Marſham allows, lived after the days of Seſoſtris; who, ſays he, can account for his not making mention of Seſoſtris in any of his poems, as he did of Memnon, who muſt have followed this conqueror very near? Memnon was celebrated, ſays Marſham, becauſe he lived nearer to the poetical times; but Perizonius will have it, that Homer wrote ſoon after the death of Reboboam, and therefore muſt have followed him near enough to have had perfect information and freſh records of the deeds of Seſoſtris: beſides Aſia Minor at that time was all Greek, by the Æolic and Ionic colonies which were tranſplanted thither ſomewhat before the reign of Reboboam; and the inhabitants muſt have principally been Greeks when Seſoſtris invaded Aſia Minor, if Marſham be right. What is here ſaid of the Aſiatic Greeks, is to clear the way for a further confutation of Marſham, who obſerves, that if Seſoſtris had extended the war into Greece, we ſhould have had clearer lights concerning him, nor would he have been involved ſo much in obſcurity; ſeeing that the Athenians, Lacedemonians and Corinthians had begun to preſerve the memory of things; continuing, that the Greeks were not at this time very regardful of foreign tranſactions, were unſkilful in letters, and that Homer was not yet born, who preceded any Greek hiſtoriographer very much: and from hence concludes, that we ought not to wonder that the Egyptian affairs are almoſt buried in ignorance. To this it is anſwered, that the Aſiatic Greeks were more likely to tranſmit the hiſtory of Seſoſtris down to poſterity, as being ſuperior and ſenior in learning to the European; that if they did not immediately keep written records, they undoubtedly preſerved very faithful traditions of paſt occurrences, which they propagated from one generation to another, and particularly in the caſe of Seſoſtris, the monuments of whoſe conqueſts they had before their eyes; and if his monarchy deſcended to his ſucceſſors, as Marſham thinks it did to the firſt olympiad; and if Homer was not yet born, it is certain, that he muſt have been born ſoon after, and whilſt the fame and power of this monarchy muſt have ſubſiſted. In a word, Perizonius prefers the Aſiatic before the European Greeks, as to what concerns the remembrance of antient matters; and proves, that the latter received the greateſt part of the arts and ſciences, nay, of their alphabet, from the former; obſerving, that if not all, yet moſt of the antienteſt Greek writers were Aſiatics. He continues; Now if Seſoſtris invaded Aſia Minor, after the Grecian ſettlement there, the Aſiatic Greeks, who firſt of all delivered down the memory tent at land, and on ſea, wiſe, juſt, generous, valorous, magnificent, mory of things both in proſe and verſe, muſt certainly have known ſomething of this celebrated expedition, either from the writings or the traditions of their forefathers, and have given as juſt and accurate an account thereof as the European Greeks could have given. But nothing of this appears; for Herodotus, the moſt antient of the Greek hiſtorians we have, profeſſes to have received the whole ſtory of Seſoſtris from the Egyptian prieſts. He thinks moreover, that ſuppoſing Marſham to be in the right, the European Greeks muſt have had ſufficient knowledge of Seſoſtris, ſeeing he carried on the war into Thrace, and that Lycurgus, within an hundred years afterwards, muſt have travelled into Aſia, whence he brought over with him the works of Homer. He certainly would have alſo brought ſome account with him of ſo great a victory from the Aſiatic Greeks, if it had been obtained only ſeventy years, or thereabouts, before.

2. But, ſays he, the Greeks alone did not put Seſoſtris many ages more backward than Seſac; the Egyptians did it alſo. Manetho expreſly ſays, that Ægyptus and Danaus were only different names for Sethoſis, [Seſoſtris] and his brother Armaïs: now Danaus came into Greece, as is ſaid, three ages before the Trojan war; and he could borrow this from no Greek author at leaſt that is extant; and therefore, that Seſoſtris and Armaïs were Ægyptus and Danaus, ſeems to have been the opinion of the Egyptians, or at leaſt of Manetho, who could not have borrowed this from the Grecian mythology.

3. The ſacred hiſtory does not favour the opinion of Seſoſtris's being Seſac: for by the prophane account Seſoſtris, in a continued expedition of nine years, ran over all Aſia: but the ſcripture mentions no farther of Seſac, than that he ſpoiled the temple and the city, and returned back (14). Joſephus ſays expreſly, that he returned into his own country.

4. What Marſham ſays of the duration of Seſoſtris's monarchy, as that it reached down to Amaziah and Uzziah kings of Judah, and down to the beginning of the firſt olympiad; by the ſcripture it appears, that the kings of Judah after Rehoboam, never ſerved any foreign power, or paid any tribute, till the Aſſyrians came upon them. So that if Seſoſtris and Shiſhak be the ſame as Marſham would have them, it does not appear, that the Egyptian monarchy was of any duration; ſo that here he is alſo miſtaken. So far we have given you the ſubſtance of Perizonius againſt Marſham. We will now inſert his opinion as to the times when this conqueror lived:

And concerning this he ſpeaks with great uncertainty and caution; but however, we will in brief give a general idea of his manner, of inveſtigating this (as he thinks) dark period. He begins thus; Herodotus declares, that king Mœris had not been dead quite 900 years when he was in Egypt. Now the ſame hiſtorian makes Se-

(14) L. 1. c. 1. Var. Hiſt. l. 12 4.

ſoſtris magnificent, but ambitious almoſt beyond compare. Both the ſoſtris the immediate ſucceſſor of Mœris, and moreover ſays, that the Trojan war was about 800 years older than when he wrote, and that Hercules the ſon of Alcmena was about 900 years before himſelf. By this chronology Seſoſtris lived about an age or century before the Trojan war, and was coetaneous to the above-ſaid Hercules, or a little later. So it follows from this computation; but in fact he muſt have been older, if he be the ſame with Ægyptus, whoſe brother Danaus was the ſixth predeceſſor of Perſeus, who was the great-grand father of Hercules: and from hence he conjectures, that Seſoſtris may be fixed in the days of the Judges. After a pretty long diſcuſſion of the point, continues he, but it may be objected, that there is not the leaſt mention made of Seſoſtris and what he did in holy writ. To this he anſwers, that the Iſraelites, when Seſoſtris came into Paleſtine were under ſubjection to the various nations which inhabited the country; for that Paleſtine bent under the incurſion of Seſoſtris, appears plain from Herodotus, who there ſaw the ignominious pillars which he uſed to raiſe in countries where he met with no reſiſtance. And ſince the Iſraelites were not principals in this calamity, they might imagine it not primarily to concern them, but accidentally to have fallen upon them in common with their maſters, and therefore took no notice thereof, as thinking it could be no immediate part of their own hiſtory. Add to this, that Seſoſtris could make no long ſtay there, conſidering that they voluntarily ſubmitted to him, and that he had no leſs a conqueſt in his eye than all the eaſtern parts of the world, if not the whole habitable earth, which required diſpatch: and thence he takes occaſion to ſpeak in the words of Juſtin, that though Seſoſtris gloried in his conqueſts, he abſtained from empire; and made no change in the government of any country. Finally he ſuppoſes alſo, that Seſoſtris might have come into Paleſtine when Iſrael was under the Moabites; and owns, that it is no way important, whether or no Danaus was the brother of Seſoſtris; deems what Manetho ſays on that head, to be calculated to pleaſe the Greeks; and in a word concludes, that he has deſtroyd Sir John Marſham's hypotheſis, by proving that Menes is not Ham, or Mizraïm; or Seſoſtris Shiſhak (15).

We will now in general terms infert the opinion of Pezron. He teaches, that Sethoſis and Seſoſtris are one and the ſame perſon, and that he was the Ægyptus brother to Danaus; that he was a prince widely diſtant from Seſonchis, whom he will have to have been the ſame with Shiſhak; and that neither Seſonchoris, or Seſonchoſis was Seſoſtris, but diſtinct both from him and from each other. We forbear entering into his reaſons, and proceed to another learned man, who has no one notion in common with what has entered into the heads of theſe three celebrated chronologers (16).

(15) Vid. Perizon. ubi ſupr.

(16) Vid. Pezron Antiq. des Temps retab.

We

the Greeks and Egyptians who recorded his actions, whether in prose

We mean Mr. Whiston, who because he is pretty singular in that he takes this king for the very Pharaoh who perished in the Red-sea, and the very Typhon of the Mythologists, we will give you his own words. And first he premises this proposition. Harmesses Mi-Amôun, or Rameses the Great, the grandfather of Sesostris, was king of the Lower Egypt when Moses was born: Amenophis III. his son was there king after him, during Moses's youth; and Seth-os, or Sethosis, or Sesostris the Great, the son of Amenophis III. was so during the rest of the servitude of the children of Israel in Egypt; and was that very Pharaoh who perished in the Red-sea. He then offers thirteen reasons or arguments in demonstration of this proposition; but passing over to the tenth of them, he there says, that "the "preservation of Moses, and his education by Pharaoh's daugh-"ter (17), are very agreeable to what her brother, Amenophis III. "did about, or soon after the birth of Moses; I mean, when he "called together, and educated with his son Sesostris no fewer than "1700 boys (18), or all the male children that were born in "Egypt the same day with him: which might well be in imitation "of Thermutis [the daughter of this Pharaoh, who was otherwise "called Harmesses Mi-Amôun, or Rameses the Great] when she "drew Moses out of the river, and educated him for her own "son (19). And, by the way, if this Thermutis were but as saga-"cious and learned as her great niece Athirtes, the daughter of "Sesostris, is described by Diodorus (20), we shall have no reason "to wonder at what St Stephen informs us, that Moses was learned "in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and "in deeds, even before he received any particular commission from "God for the delivery of his people out of Egypt. Nay indeed, "these last words concerning Moses, that he was so early mighty "in words and in deeds, seem to me to confirm those accounts we "have in Artapanus an heathen, and Josephus the Jew, considering "Moses's wise and valiant conduct under the king of Egypt, when "he was young, against the Ethiopians; who attempted the con-"quest of that country at that time. Which successes of these "Egyptians, under the conduct of Moses, might probably enough "encourage king Sesostris to undertake those other vast expeditions, "which raised the Egyptian monarchy, and spread his empire over "almost all the then known world. Nor is it impossible to suppose, "that the Ethiopic war, which is known to have been undertaken "both at sea and land by this Sesostris, might be when he was "young; and might be that very Ethiopic war which was managed "by Moses under the king of Egypt, as mentioned by Artapanus "and Josephus.

(17) Exod. ii. (18) Marsh. p. 353. (19) Exod. ii. 10.
(20) Marsh. p. 354.

Mr.

proſe or verſe, differed widely from each other; but they could

Mr. Whiſton's eleventh argument runs thus; "There are evident "remains of this Seſoſtris's periſhing in or near the Red ſea, as did "this Pharaoh at the Exodus out of Egypt. Diodorus aſſures us, that "Seſoſtris at laſt became blind; and that he was voluntarily the oc- "caſion of his own death; and that he deſervedly obtained the "admiration of the prieſts and people of Egypt on account of that "his magnanimous death. But what ſort of voluntary and magna- "nimous death this was, it ſeems the Egyptian prieſts did not inform "him. But then, if we conſider that Seſoſtris's real or Egyptian "name was Seth-os, or Seth-oſis; and that there was an antient "famous Egyptian king, whoſe fictitious name among the Greeks "was Typhon, the Proud; but his real or Egyptian name was no "other than Seth, as Plutarch himſelf, a great maſter of old "Egyptian learning, more than once aſſures us; that Typho's own "city Peluſium was peculiarly the city of this Seſoſtris, whither he "firſt came when he returned from his famous eaſtern expedition; "and where he and his queen received a ſort of miraculous deli- "verance from the murderous deſigns of his brother Armaïs, and "was by the Egyptians called according to his own name Seth-ron; "and the Nomos thereto belonging, the Seth roite Nomos; we ſhall "find, that what the Egyptians could not, or would not directly "inform Diodorus of in the way of plain hiſtorical fact, and there- "by concealed the true manner of his death from foreigners; yet "did ſome of thoſe Egyptians preſerve the memory of it under an- "other form; and that this Seth, or Seth os, or Seth-oſis, or Typho, "came to the ſame end that the Egyptian Pharaoh did, and was "drowned in, or near to the ſame Red-ſea. For as they, in ſome "places at leaſt, long kept the memory of Oſiris, the uſual name "of any beloved king of Egypt that was murdered; as was Iſis the "uſual name of ſuch a king's wife, or queen; and Typho the uſual "name of ſuch a murderer; ſo was it here. Oſiris ſeems to have "been ſome beloved king that Seſoſtris had ſlain [perhaps his own "brother Ramaſſes], and himſelf ſeems thence to have had the hateful "name of Typho given him by the other's ſubjects. And certainly this "name Typho, or the Proud, was never applied more fitly than to "this Seſoſtris; who after his conqueſt uſed ſometimes to take "his horſes out of his chariot, and to harneſs a certain number of "his captive kings, and to be drawn in ſtate by them inſtead of "the other. And as to the death of this Typho, the Egyptian re- "cords are plain and direct, and aſſure us, that he was ſtruck by a "thunderbolt, and his blood ran out at Heroopolis, a city very near "the place where the Iſraelites entered the Red-ſea; the very "ſame, I ſuppoſe, that Moſes calls by its elder name Baalzephon; "that the ſame city was called Blood, or the bloody city, from that "firſt ſhedding of the blood of Typho there; and that he lies "drowned under the waters of the lake Sirbon, which is not far from "the Red ſea; and was antiently ſuppoſed to communicate there-could never differ more, nor ſure ſo much as our modern chronologers

"with

" with under ground. The city alſo itſelf ſeems to me to have " had its later name Heroopolis, or the city of Heroes on this very " account, that near thereto the moſt potent Egyptian king, and " his mighty commanders, with their entire army, theſe great " heroes, became martyrs for the Egyptian idols, idolatry, and " tyranny, in oppoſition to the God of Iſrael and his people: " nor do I meet with any other in hiſtory for that appellation. " And very remarkable it is, how exactly all this agrees to the o- " ther more direct Egyptian account already ſet down; viz. That Se- " ſoſtris's death was voluntary and magnanimous, and ſuch indeed " as was highly extolled both by the prieſts and people of Egypt. " And what Paulinus in Auſonius could mean, when, in the diſtinct " mention of two of the moſt illuſtrious kings of Egypt, Neceſſus " and Seſoſtris, he ſays of the latter, Et qui regnavit, ſine nomine " mox, Seſooſtris; That he who had been ſo great a king, was by " and by without a name; unleſs he refer to ſome ſuch ignomini- " ous death of his, as we have here deſcribed, is hard to ſay. " Nor is that thunderbolt, or ſtorm of thunder and lightning, men- " tioned in this account of Typho's deſtruction, other than what " we have hinted at in the caſe of Pharaoh's deſtruction in our " preſent copies of the Pentateuch; where we find, that God " looked through the pillar of fire, and of the cloud, and ſo " troubled the hoſts of the Egyptians, that their chariot wheels " were taken off, and they drave heavily; and the Egyptians re- " reſolved to flee from the face of Iſrael, becauſe they now perceived " that God himſelf fought for them againſt the Egyptians: while " with the blaſt of his noſtrils the waters were gathered together; " and directly ſet down by Joſephus and Artapanus in the hiſtory " itſelf; and alſo by the pſalmiſt in his celebration of this moſt " wonderful deliverance and judgment; who declares, that beſides " the pouring out of water from the clouds at that time, the ſkies " then ſent out a ſound, and God's arrows went abroad: that the " voice of his thunder was in the heaven; that the lightnings " lightned the world; and that the earth trembled and ſhook: " in exact agreement with the heathens account of the deſtru- " ction of Typho." To conclude; the ſame writer thinks it a plain ſolution to the queſtion of, what became of the famous Egyptian monarchy after the death of Seſoſtris? that he and his numerous hoſt was loſt in the red ſea, which together with the loſs of 600,000 ſlaves, as the Hebrews were no better in Egypt, he thinks muſt have given a great ſhock to the Egyptian power, and naturally ruin their newly acquired monarchy. In a word, it is his opinion, that the ſudden extinction of this vaſt monarchy, at the death of its founder Seſoſtris, is little elſe than a demonſtration, chronologers and hiſtorians do in fixing his age, and in ſpeaking ſtration, that he was that very Pharaoh who with all his hoſt periſhed in the Red ſea, and no other (21).

The great Sir Iſaac Newton is of opinion that Seſoſtris is the Oſiris of the Egyptians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, and the Seſac, or Shiſhak of the ſcripture; towards the proof of which he produces the following arguments.

" 1. Bacchus the Conqueror loved two women, Venus and Ariadne, " by the laſt of theſe he had ſons who were Argonauts; therefore " the great Bacchus flouriſhed but one generation before the Ar- " gonautic expedition. This Bacchus was potent at ſea (22), " conquered eaſtward as far as India, returned in triumph, brought " his army over the Helleſpont, conquered Thrace, left muſic, dan- " cing, and poetry there; killed Lycurgus king of Thrace, and Pen- " theus the grandſon of Cadmus; gave the kingdom of Lycurgus to " Tharops, and one of his minſtrels, called by the Greeks Calliope, " to Oeagrus the ſon of Tharops; and of Oeagrus and Calliope, was " born Orpheus, who ſailed with the Argonauts: this Bacchus was " therefore contemporary to Seſoſtris; and both being kings of " Egypt, and potent at ſea, and great conquerors, and carrying on " their conqueſts into India and Thrace, they muſt be one and the " ſame man.

" 2. Dicæarchus, as he is cited by the Scholiaſt upon Apollonius " (23), repreſents Oſiris and Orus, two generations older than Se- " ſoſtris, ſaying, that after Orus, the ſon of Oſiris and Iſis, reigned " Seſonchoſis. The people of Naxus made Bacchus two generations " older than Theſeus, and for that end feigned two Minos's and two " Ariadne. Now, by the conſent of all antiquity, Oſiris and " Bacchus were one and the ſame king of Egypt: this is affirmed " by the Egyptians as well as by the Greeks; and ſome of the an- " tient mythologiſts, as Eumolpus and Orpheus (24), called Oſiris " by the names of Dionyſius and Sirius. Oſiris was king of all " Egypt, and a great conqueror, and came over the Helleſpont in the " days of Triptolemus, and ſubdued Thrace, and there killed Lycur- " gus; and therefore his expedition falls in with that of the great " Bacchus. Oſiris, Bacchus and Seſoſtris lived about the ſame " time, and by the relation of hiſtorians were all of them kings of " all Egypt, and reigned at Thebes, and adorned that city, and " were very potent by land and ſea: all three were great con- " querors, and carried on their conqueſts by land through Aſia, " as far as India: all three came over the Helleſpont, and were " there in danger of loſing their army: all three conquered Thrace, " and there put a ſtop to their victories, and returned back from " thence into Egypt. all three left pillars with inſcriptions in their ing concerning him: However, we shall collect the best account we can of his reign.

(21) Vid. Whiſton's Appendix. (22) Vid. Hermippum apud num, l. 1. (23) Argonaut. l. 4. v. 272. (24) Diod. l. 1. p. 7.

Sesostris

' conquests: and therefore all three must be one and the same " king of Egypt; and this king can be no other than Sesac. All " Egypt, including Thebaïs, Æthiopia and Libya, had no common " king before the expulsion of the Shepherds, who reigned in the " Lower Egypt; no conqueror of Syria, India, Asia minor, and " Thrace before Sesac; and the sacred history admits of no Egyp- " tian conqueror of Palestine before this king.

" 3. Bacchus had Libyan women in his army, and they were com- " manded by Minerva, herself a Libyan (25). Diodorus (26) calls " her Myrina, and saith, that she was queen of the Amazons in " Libya, and there conquered the Atlantides and Gorgons, and " then made a league with Orus the son of Isis, sent to her by his " father Osiris, or Bacchus, for that purpose; and passing through " Egypt subdued the Arabians, and Syria, and Cilicia, and came " through Phrygia, viz. in the army of Bacchus, to the Mediter- " ranean; but passing over into Europe was slain with many of her " women by the Thracians and Scythians, under the conduct of Si- " pylus, a Scythian, and Mopsus, a Thracian, whom Lycurgus king " of Thrace had banished This (says our most sagacious author) " was that Lycurgus who opposed the passage of Bacchus over the " Hellespont, and was soon after conquered by him and slain: but " afterwards Bacchus met with a repulse from the Greeks, under " the conduct of Perseus, who slew many of his women, as Pau- " sanias (27) relates, and was assisted by the Scythians and Thra- " cians under Sipylus and Mopsus; which repulses, together with " the revolt of his brother Danaus, put a stop to his victories: " and in returning home, he left part of his men in Colchis and " at Mount Caucasus, under Æetes and Prometheus; and his wo- " men upon the river Thermodon near Colchis, under their new " queens Marthesia and Lampeto; for Diodorus (28), speaking of " the Amazons who were seated at Thermodon, saith, that they " dwelt originally in Libya, and there reigned over the Atlantides, " and, invading their neighbours, conquered as far as Europe: " and Ammianus (29), that the antient Amazons, breaking through " many nations, attacked the Athenians, and then receiving a " great slaughter retired to Thermodon: and Justin (30), that " these Amazons had at first, (he means at their first coming to " Thermodon) two queens, who called themselves daughters of " Mars; and that they conquered part of Europe, and some cities " in Asia, viz. in the reign of Minerva, and then sent back part (25) Vid. Diod. l. 3. p. 140. (26) Lib. 3. p. 131, 132. (27) Pausan. lib. 2. c. 20. p. 155. (28) Lib. 3. p. 130. & Schol. Apollonii, lib. 2. (29) Lib. 22. c. 8. (30) Lib. 2. c. 4.

" of

SESOSTRIS then is by ſome thought to have been the ſon of Amenophis; but whether Amenophis, or any one elſe, it is ſaid

" of their army with a great booty under their ſaid new queens ;
" and that Martheſia, being afterwards ſlain, was ſucceeded by " her daughter Orithya, and ſhe by Pentheſilea ; and that Theſeus
" captivated and married Antiope the ſiſter of Orithya. Hercules
" made war upon the Amazons, and in the reign of Orithya and " Pentheſilea they came to the Trojan war : whence the firſt wars
" of the Amazons in Europe and Aſia, and their ſettling at Ther-
" modon, were but one generation before thoſe actions of Hercules
" and Theſeus, and but two before the Trojan war, and ſo fell in " with the expedition of Seſoſtris : and ſince they warred in the " days of Iſis and her ſon Orus, and were a part of the army
" under Bacchus, or Oſiris, we have here a farther argument for " making Oſiris and Bacchus contemporary to Seſoſtris, and all
" one and the ſame king with Seſac.

" 4. The Greeks reckon Oſiris and Bacchus to be ſons of Jupi- " ter, and the Egyptian name of Jupiter is Ammon. Manetho (31),
" in his eleventh and twelfth dynaſties, as he is cited by Africanus
" and Euſebius, names theſe four kings as reigning in order ; Am-
" menemes, Geſangoſes, or Seſonchoris the ſon of Ammenemes, Amme-
" nemes who was ſlain by his eunuchs, and Seſoſtris who ſubdued
" all Aſia and a part of Europe : Geſongoſes and Seſonchoris are cor-
" ruptly written for Seſonchoſis: and the two firſt of theſe four " kings, Ammenemes and Seſonchoſis are the ſame with the two " laſt Ammenemes and Seſoſtris, that is, with Ammon and Seſac ;
" for Diodorus ſaith, that Oſiris built a temple at Thebes to his " father Jupiter Ammon, who reigned in that city (32): and
" Thymæſtes, who was contemporary to Orpheus, wrote expreſly,
" that the father of Bacchus was Ammon, a king reigning over
" part of Libya ; that is, a king of Egypt reigning over that " part of Libya antiently called Ammonia : Πᾶσα ἡ Λιβύη οὕτως " ἐκαλεῖτο ἀπὸ Ἀμμῶνος (33). All Libya was called Ammonia from " Ammon ; that is, that king of Egypt, from whom Thebes was " called No-Ammon, and Ammon-No, the city of Ammon, and by " the Greeks, Dioſpolis, the city of Jupiter Ammon. Here again
" our author ſeems to demonſtrate that Seſoſtris and Oſiris were
" the ſame perſon.

5. And to corroborate what is ſaid in the preceding article ;
" Seſoſtris upon his returning home divided Egypt by meaſure a" mongſt the Egyptians ; and this gave a beginning to ſurveying
" and geometry : and Jamblichus derives this diviſion of Egypt and the beginning of geometry, from the age of the gods of E- gypt. And becauſe Seſoſtris, or Seſac, to render the Nile more uſeful, dug canals from it, and thereby made a general diſtribu-bution of its water ; this chronologer is of opinion, that the river

(31) See before, Vol. I. p. 495. (32) See before, Vol. I. p. 515.
(33) Steph. in Ἀμμωνία.

ſaid that the god Vulcan appeared to him in a dream, and admoniſhed was conſecrated to him, and he was called by its names, Ægyptus Siris, Nilus; and obſerves from Plutarch, that the ſyllable O, put before the word Siris, by the Greeks, made it ſcarce intelligible to the Egyptians.

6. He thinks it appears "That Seſoſtris was alſo Shiſhak, or "Seſac, becauſe the firſt conqueſts this king is ſaid to have made "were Troglodytica, Libya, and Æthiopia, and in the firſt year of "Rehoboam, Seſoſtris [Seſac] came out of Egypt with a great army "of Lybians, Troglodytes, and Æthiopians, and ſpoiled the temple; "and reduced Judæa into ſervitude, and went on conquering firſt "eaſtward towards India, and then weſtward as far as Thrace; for "God had given him the kingdoms of the countries (34).

7. There is no one argument on which this great chronologer lays a greater ſtreſs, for the proof of what he lays down concerning Seſoſtris, than the following: "Solon having travelled into "Egypt, and converſed with the prieſts of Saïs about their anti- "quities, wrote a poem of what he had learned, but did not fi- "niſh it (35); and this poem fell into the hands of Plato, who "relates out of it, that at the mouth of the Straits, near Hercu- "les's Pillars, there was an iſland called Atlantis, the people of "which, nine thouſand years before the days of Solon, reigned "over Libya as far as Egypt, and over Europe as far as the Tyrrhenean "ſea; and all this force collected into one body invaded Egypt "and Greece, and whatever was contained within the pillars of "Hercules, but was reſiſted and ſtopped by the Athenians and o- "ther Greeks, and thereby the reſt of the nations not yet conquered "were preſerved: he ſaith alſo, that in thoſe days, the gods, ha- "ving finiſhed their conqueſts, divided the whole earth amongſt "themſelves, partly into larger, partly into ſmaller portions, and "inſtituted temples and ſacred rites to themſelves; and that the "iſland of Atlantis fell to the lot of Neptune, who made his eldeſt "ſon Atlas king of the whole iſland, a part of which was called "Gadir; and that in the hiſtory of the ſaid wars mention was made "of Cecrops, Erechtheus, Erichthonius, and others before The- "ſeus, and alſo of the women who warred with the men, and of the "habit and ſtature of Minerva, the ſtudy of war in thoſe days being "common to men and women. By all theſe circumſtances it is mani- "feſt, that theſe gods were the Dii magni majorum gentium, and "lived between the age of Cecrops and Theſeus; and that the wars "which Seſoſtris, with his brother Neptune, made upon the nations "by land and by ſea, and the reſiſtance he met with in Greece, "and the following invaſion of Egypt by Neptune, are here deſcrib- "ed; and how the captains of Seſoſtris ſhared their conqueſts a-

(34) 2 Chron. xii. 2, 3—8. (35) Plat. in Timæo & Critia.

"mongſt

monifhed him, that the ſon which was, or ſhould be born to-him, would be lord of the whole earth. Fraught with this viſion, he got together all the males in Egypt born on the ſame day with his ſon, and appointed nurſes and proper perſons to take care of them, and had them treated in all reſpects like his own child; perſuaded, that they who had been the conſtant and equal companions of his childhood and youth, would prove the moſt faithful miniſters, and moſt affectionate fellow ſoldiers. They were abundantly furniſhed with every thing needful, and as they grew up they were by degrees enured to laborious and manly exerciſes, and were in particular never permitted to taſte of any thing till they had performed a courſe of 180 furlongs, or upwards of 22 miles. By this exerciſe of the body, and by a proper cultivation of the mind, they were equally fitted to command and to execute. Amenophis, after he had been at this vaſt expence and trouble in laying the foundation of his ſon's future grandeur, reſolved to give him and his companions an opportunity of diſplaying the good effects of their inſtitution; and therefore he

His father gathers in all the boys in Egypt that were born on the ſame day with him.

" mongſt themſelves, as the captains of Alexander the Great did " his conqueſts long after, and inſtituting temples and prieſts, and " ſacred rites to themſelves, cauſed the nations to worſhip them " after their death as gods: and that the iſland Gadir, or Gades, " and all Libya fell to the lot of him who after death was deified " by the name of Neptune. The time therefore when theſe things " were done, is by Solon limited to the age of Neptune the father " of Atlas; for Homer tells us, that Ulyſſes preſently after the " Trojan war found Calypſo the daughter of Atlas in the Ogygian " iſland, perhaps Gadir, and therefore it was but two generations " before the Trojan war. This is that Neptune who, with Apollo, or " Orus, fortified Troy with a wall, in the reign of Laomedon the fa- " ther of Priamus, and left many natural children in Greece, ſome " of which were Argonauts, and others were contemporaries to " the Argonauts; and therefore he flouriſhed but one generation be- " fore the Argonautic expedition, and by conſequence about 400 years " before Solon went into Egypt: but the prieſts of Egypt in thoſe " 400 years had magnified the ſtories and antiquity of their gods ſo " exceedingly, as to make them 9000 years older than Solon, and " the iſland of Atlantis bigger than all Afric and Aſia together, and " full of people; and becauſe in the days of Solon this great iſland " did not appear, they pretended that it was ſunk into the ſea with " all its people: thus great was the vanity of the prieſts of Egypt in " magnifying their antiquities." Theſe are the moſt obvious and direct arguments concerning Seſoſtris, which we meet with in Sir Iſaac Newton.

Sends him into Arabia and Afric.

ſent him and them with an army into Arabia. In this expedition the young Seſoſtris ſurmounted all the dangers of ſerpents and venomous creatures, all the wants and hardſhips of a dry and barren country, and in the end ſubdued the Arabians, who till that time had never been conquered. His father then ordered him weſtward, and he ſubdued the greateſt part of Afric [e], nor ſtopped his career (as ſhould ſeem) till he ſaw the Atlantic ocean [f]. Whilſt he was on this expedition his father died: and having now the reins in his own hands, and being elated by the ſucceſs which had hitherto attended him, he graſped at no leſs an object than the whole earth. Or he called to mind the prediction of the god, and prepared for the enterprize. Some reported that his daughter Athyrte, a young lady of great wit and ſagacity, excited him thereto by her counſel, repreſenting it as an eaſy matter: others, that ſhe obtained aſſurances of her father's ſucceſs by divination, by dreams in temples, and prodigies in the air, and the like [g]; ſo that according to theſe, he could be no very young man at this time. Laſtly, it was ſaid that he was inſtructed by Mercury, who prepared him for the war [h].

Undertakes to conquer the whole world.

HAVING this view of a general conqueſt, and knowing that he muſt be long abſent, and far remote from Egypt, he bethought him how he might retain the hearts and affections of his own people: wiſely deeming it the moſt natural means of preparing thoſe who followed him, to lay down their lives chearfully in his ſervice; and of preventing thoſe at home from attempting any innovations during his abſence. He therefore, as much as was in his power, endeared himſelf to all his ſubjects, by largeſſes in money, by donations in land, or by the remiſſion of puniſhments: he diſcharged all that were guilty of treaſon with impunity, and paid the debts of all that were thereby incumbered, of which laſt he had many in his army. In fine, he wrought upon the minds of all by fair ſpeeches and a familiar deportment. In the next place he divided the whole kingdom into 36 nomes, or provinces; aſſigned a governor to each of them [i]; and conſtituted his brother Armaïs ſupreme regent, inveſting him with ample power; but forbad him the uſe of the diadem, and commanded him to offer no injury to the queen and her children, and to abſtain from the royal concubines [k]. Having thus ſettled the government, he picked out the choiceſt of his ſubjects, Divides Egypt in 36 nomes.

[e] Diod lib. 1. p. 48 ubi ſupr. p. 49. ubi ſupr. p. 50.
[f] Lucan. 10. v. 27.
[g] Diod. 1. p. 1041.
[h] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l 2. c. 4.
[i] Diod.
[k] Maneth. apud Joſeph. contra Apion. l.

and

and liſted an army equal to the vaſtneſs of his deſigns, and beſtowed the chief commands of it on his beloved companions, who were upwards of 1700 in number. As an earneſt of his benevolence, and beſides the favours he had beſtowed on them in common with the reſt of their countrymen, and that he and his ſucceſſors might always have a regular force ready at hand, he ſettled certain portions by lot, of the moſt fertile land in Egypt, on his whole army; whence a handſome income ariſing to them, neither they nor their poſterity might lie under the neceſſity of ſeeking a livelihood by mercantile or mechanic callings, but wholly apply themſelves to the military exerciſes. His army conſiſted of 600,000 foot, 24,000 horſe, and 27,000 warlike chariots. He firſt marched into Æthiopia, and reduced the inhabitants to a tribute of ebony, gold, and ivory [l]. He is generally believed to have been the firſt that ſubdued Ethiopia and Troglodytica, and is ſaid to have reached the promontory of Dira, near the ſtraits of the Red-ſea, where he ſet up a pillar with a ſacred inſcription on it; and went on as far as the cinnamon country, or at leaſt ſome place from whence cinnamon was brought, where he raiſed monuments and pillars with inſcriptions, which were to be ſeen many ages afterwards [m].

He inſtitutes the military order.

Conquers Ethiopia.

HIS land forces alone were not anſwerable to the conqueſt he intended; and therefore breaking through the antient ſuperſtition of the Egyptians, he was the firſt of their kings that fitted out fleets of tall ſhips. He had two; the one of 400 ſail in the Arabian gulph, if we may add faith to Diodorus [n] who gives us this number, and to Herodotus [o] who mentions the ſame fleet in general terms; and the other in the Mediterranean-ſea, if we may believe Manetho [p] who by Sethoſis underſtands Seſoſtris. By theſe naval armaments, and by the great ſervices they are ſaid to have done, it ſhould ſeem, that Seſoſtris wiped away the averſion the Egyptians had to ſea affairs [q], at leaſt for a time, and inſtituted the marine claſs, as by what appears hitherto he did the military order. But to have done with this conjecture, we ſhall only add, that the ſpacious and magnificent ſhip he conſecrated to the ſupreme god of the Thebans [r], looks as if he deſigned to bring navigation into credit in Egypt. With the firſt of theſe fleets he ſailed out of the Arabian gulph into the Red, or Indian-ſea, and ſubdued the coaſts thereof, and continuing

His fleets.

He inſtitutes the the marine claſs or order.

[l] DIOD. ubi ſupr. [m] Vid. STRABO, lib. 16. p. 769, 770. Vid. etiam lib. 17. p. 790. PLIN. Hiſt. Nat. lib. 6. c. 29. [n] Ubi ſupr. [o] Ubi ſupra. [p] Apud Joſeph. contra Apion. ubi ſupr. [q] See before, Vol. I. p. 490. [r] See before, ibid.

his courſe till he was ſtopped by certain ſhoals and difficult places, returned back to Egypt [r]: or according to another author, he went not on board himſelf, but ſent them out againſt the iſlands and maritime places of the continent as far as India [s]. With his Mediterranean ſquadron he conquered Cyprus, the ſea coaſt of Phœnicia [t], and ſeveral of the Cyclades [u]. This is all we know concerning his exploits by ſea.

Continuation of his conqueſts and wars.

Now as to his further conqueſts on the land; it is by almoſt all antiquity agreed, that he over-ran and pillaged all Aſia, and ſome part of Europe. He croſſed the Ganges, on the banks of which river he erected pillars; and to uſe the poets expreſſion, did the ſame in the remoteſt mountains of India [w]; and indeed he is ſaid to have marched on till he was ſtopped by the main ocean eaſtward [x]. From thence returning he invaded the Scythians and Thracians; but the accounts of his war with the former do not all agree in giving him a complete conqueſt over them. Herodotus, Diodorus, Agathias [y], and others repreſent him victorious; but ſome relate, that he met with a repulſe, and fled from the Scythians, and was worſted by the Colchians. For Juſtin tells us, that Vexores, or Seſoſtris diſpatching ambaſſadors before him to ſummon the Scythians to ſurrender, they ſent back his meſſengers with contempt, and threats, and defiance, and immediately took up arms. Seſoſtris, being informed that they were advancing towards him by haſty marches, ſuddenly faced about, and fled from before them, leaving all his baggage and warlike apparel to the purſuers, who followed him till they came on the borders of Egypt [z]. Pliny relates, that he was overthrown by the king of Colchis [a]; and Valerius Flaccus inſinuates, that he was repulſed with great ſlaughter, and put to flight in theſe parts [b]. But whether he had good or bad ſucceſs in theſe countries, it is a common opinion, that he ſettled a colony in Colchis, though Herodotus, whom we chiefly rely on in this matter, does not decide, whether it was of his own planting, or whether part of his army tired out, loitered in the rear, and voluntarily ſat down on the banks of the river Phaſis in that kingdom. He ſays, from his own experience, that the inhabitants were undoubtedly of Egyptian deſcent, as was viſible from the perſonal ſimili-

Suppoſed to ſettle a colony in Colchis.

[r] Herod. ubi ſupr. [s] Diod. ubi ſupr. [t] Maneth. apud Joſeph. contra Apion. ubi ſupr. [u] Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 51. [w] Dionys. in Perieg. v. 625. [x] Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 50. [y] Lib. 2. p. 55. [z] Lib. 2. c. 3. [a] Lib. 33. c. 3. [b] Argonaut. l. 5. v. 420.

tude

tude they bore to the Egyptians, who were ſwarthy and frizle-haired; but more eſpecially from the conformity of their cuſtoms, particularly circumciſion, and from the affinity of their language with that of Egypt. And many ages afterwards at Æa, the capital of Colchis, they ſhewed maps of their journies, and the bounds of ſea and land for the uſe of travellers [c], and hence came geography. This relation to each other was acknowledged on both ſides [d]. We now attend upon him into Thrace, the utmoſt boundary of his progreſs weſtward in Europe. Here he was in danger of loſing his army through want of proviſions and the difficulty of the paſſes; and therefore he here ſtopped his progreſs *. But the more probable opinion is, that his return was haſtened by advice he received from the high prieſt of Egypt, concerning his brother's revolt and diſobedience [e]. However this was, his pillars were no where to be ſeen in Europe beyond Thrace [f]. For it was his cuſtom to ſet up pillars in every country he conquered, with this inſcription, or one to the like effect; Seſoſtris, king of kings, and lord of lords, ſubdued this country by the power of his arms. If the nation had ignobly crouched to him, he, beſides the inſcription, cauſed the privities of a woman to be carved, as a mark of their effeminacy and baſeneſs [g]; if they had defended themſelves bravely, their pillars bore the diſtinction of the contrary ſex, in teſtimony of their courage [h]. Beſides theſe he left ſtatues of himſelf behind him, two of which are ſtill to be ſeen, ſays Herodotus, the one on the road between Epheſus and Phocæa, and the other between Smyrna and Sardis: they were armed after the Ethiopian and Egyptian manner, were five palms high, and held a javelin in one hand, and a bow in the other. Acroſs the breaſt they had a line drawn from one ſhoulder to the other, on which there was this inſcription; This region I obtained by theſe my ſhoulders. They were miſtaken for images of Memnon [i].

His pillars and ſtatues.

UPON advice therefore of the rebellious proceedings of his brother, who, encouraged by his long abſence and great diſtance, had aſſumed the diadem, violated the queen, and made promiſcuous uſe of the royal concubines [k], he haſtened from Thrace, and at the end of nine years came to Peluſium, attended by an infinite multitude of captives of all nations, and laden with the ſpoils of Aſia [l].

Return to Egypt.

[c] APOLLON. Rhod. Argon. l. 4. v. 272. [d] HEROD. ubi ſupr. * DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 51. [e] MANETH. apud Joſeph. contra Apion. ubi ſupr. [f] HEROD. DIOD. ubi ſupr. [g] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [h] Vid. SYNCELL. p. 59, 60. [i] HEROD. ubi. ſupr. [k] MANETH. ubi ſupr. [l] HEROD. ubi ſupr.

Here

Here the rebel Armaïs, or Danaus received him with outward ſubmiſſion and joy, but with inward deſigns to take away his life, and root out his family. Accordingly he invited the king his brother, the queen, and her children to a banquet he had prepared for their refreſhment, which they accepting, and drinking very freely, were overcome thereby, and betook them to reſt. In the mean time he cauſed a great quantity of dried reeds to be laid all round the apartment where they ſlept, and ſetting fire thereto he hoped to burn them all together.

Is miraculouſly delivered from the murderous deſigns of his brother.

Seſoſtris perceiving the danger he was in, and that his guards, overcharged with liquor, were heavy and incapable to aſſiſt him, lifted up his hands, and imploring the gods in behalf of his wife and children ruſhed through the flames, and they followed him. In thankſgiving for this wonderful deliverance, and to perform the vows he had made in his extremity, he preſented donations to ſeveral gods, and particularly to Vulcan [m], as will be obſerved hereafter. Herodotus ſeems to have been miſinformed in the particulars of this happy eſcape; ſaying, that his wife perſuaded him to lay two of his ſons acroſs the fire, and to tread over them. He then took revenge on his brother Armaïs [n], who is ſaid to have been the Danaus of the Greeks [o], and is thought to have been now driven out from Egypt, and to have proceeded to Greece.

His brother's unnatural deſigns thus defeated, and himſelf in the quiet repoſſeſſion of his kingdom, he adorned all the temples with ſpoils and rich gifts, and rewarded his army in proportion to merit. His army was not only glorious in their return for the mighty actions they had performed, and the great riches they had acquired, but alſo for the great variety of conveniencies and neceſſaries they brought home with them, and with which they ſtored the whole kingdom. Seſoſtris now laying aſide all thoughts of war, diſbanded his forces, leaving every one to the undiſturbed enjoyment of what fortune had favoured him with. As for himſelf, he from henceforward applied his mind to ſuch ſtupendous works as might immortalize his name, and everlaſtingly contribute to the public good.

His works. His works were of three ſorts; religious, military, and civil. And firſt he erected a temple in every city in Egypt, which he dedicated to the peculiar and ſupreme deity of each place. In the courſe of ſo univerſal an undertaking as this, no Egyptian was ſet to work; wherefore upon all theſe temples there was this inſcription: No one native laboured hereon [*]. In the city of Memphis, before the temple of Vulcan, he raiſed ſix gigantic ſtatues, which were each of one ſtone; two of them were 30 cubits high, and repreſented himſelf and his wife; the other four were 20 cubits, and repreſented his four ſons [p]. Theſe he dedicated to Vulcan, in remembrance of his and his family's preſervation at Peluſium [q]. Many ages afterwards it was ſaid, that Darius would have placed his own ſtatue above this of Seſoſtris; but the prieſt of Vulcan ſtifly oppoſed it, urging, that the Perſian, though great, had not yet equalled the Egyptian, and particularly had never conquered Scythia; and that therefore it was unjuſt to prefer him to one he had not yet excelled, and ſo put a ſtop to the attempt [r]. He moreover raiſed two obelisks of hard ſtone [marble] 120 cubits high; and charged them with inſcriptions, which deſcribed the greatneſs of his power, the amount of his revenues, and the nations he conquered. Theſe are his works, which may be ſaid particularly to commemorate his own piety and glory. Let us now take a view of what he did for the benefit and laſting welfare of his people.

[m] Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 53. [n] Ubi ſupr. [o] Maneth. ubi ſupr. [*] Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 51, 52.

the

IN order to prevent the incurſions of the Syrians and Arabians, he fortified the eaſt ſide of Egypt with a wall, which ran from Peluſium through the deſert to Heliopolis, 1500 furlongs, or 187 miles and a half. He moreover raiſed an incredible number of vaſt and lofty mounts of earth, to which he removed ſuch towns as had before too low a ſituation, to ſecure the men and cattle from the dangers of the Nile in its inundations. All the way from Memphis to the ſea he dug canals which branched out from the Nile, and not only gave an eaſier communication from one place to another, and greatly advanced the trade and proſperity of the kingdom; but alſo rendered the country impracticable to an enemy, or at leaſt very incommodious and difficult. So that Egypt, which had hitherto been famous for her horſes and chariots, and was admirably well adapted for either, was now no longer the ſame place in thoſe reſpects, and put on a new face [s]. This looks as if Seſoſtris feared, that the ſeveral nations he had diſturbed, or at leaſt ſome of them, might unite againſt Egypt; but quite the reverſe appears by his haughty carriage towards the tributaries, as will be ſeen by and by. In the mean time it is ſaid, that ſome of the captives grew deſperate under the intolerable ſlavery impoſed on them, and that particularly the Babylonians aroſe and reſolved at all hazards to ſhake off their bondage. They firſt ſeized upon a ſtrong hold, and acting offenſively

[p] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [q] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 53. [r] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [s] DIOD. ubi ſupr. 52.

offenſively againſt the Egyptians, waſted the country round about them. But on the offer of pardon, and a place for their dwelling, they were pacified, and built them a city which they called Babylon: the like was ſaid of the Trojan captives [t]. According to Herodotus there was a report that this king, after he returned from his wars, divided the land equally amongſt all the Egyptians: this claſhes with what has been ſaid of the lands he beſtowed on his army before his outſet; which we take to be more conformable to the genius and policy of this warlike prince, and therefore are inclined to think that Herodotus was miſinformed. The ſame author upon this occaſion ſays; that the king reſerving to himſelf a ſmall rent out of the lands ſo divided, whenever it happened that the waters of the Nile in their retreat waſhed away any part of a perſon's ground, he gave information thereof to the king, who in ſuch caſe remitted a proportionable part of the rent, and by ſending ſurveyors to meaſure it, gave riſe to the invention of geometry *.

His inſolence.

His behaviour towards the conquered princes, who waited on him with their tribute, is moſt remarkably inſolent; for upon certain occaſions he would unharneſs his horſes, and yoke kings together, and make them draw his chariot [u]: this practice he continued, as is ſaid, till a certain day, when obſerving one of the kings who drew him along, look with great ſtedfaſtneſs back on one of the wheels, he asked what took up his thoughts, that he kept his eye ſo fixed behind him? he anſwered, Oh king, the going round of the wheel calls to my mind the viciſſitudes of fortune; for as every part of the wheel is uppermoſt and lowermoſt by turns, ſo is it with men, who one day ſit on a throne, and on the next are reduced to the vileſt degree of ſlavery. This anſwer ſhocked the inſulting conqueror, and he gave over the practice. It was thus he was wont to triumph over his tributaries, but at all other times he treated them with great humanity. At length he loſt his ſight, and laid violent hands on himſelf, and died. The manner of his death was extolled by the prieſts into the higheſt act of magnanimity [w]; and that nothing might be wanting to make his hiſtory compleatly glorious, they reported, that the phœnix came to Thebes during his reign [x]. By what has been here ſaid concerning Seſoſtris, it may ſeemingly be gathered, that he was the firſt that divided Egypt into nomes, and its inhabitants into orders and claſſes; that he was the firſt Egyptian king who was conſiderable at ſea; and that he erected the [t] Idem ibid. * Herod. ubi ſupr. [u] Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 53. Plin. lib. 33. c. 3. [w] Diod. ubi ſupr. [x] Tacit. Ann. 6. p. 154.

firſt

firſt great empire in the world. Juſtin ſays, he neither aimed at it, nor kept it, being contented with the bare glory of the conqueſt he made [y]. But all are not of his opinion.

PHERON was the ſon of Seſoſtris, and ſucceeded him. He is alſo ſtiled Seſooſis [Seſoſtris] II. The ſtory of his reign, as it is handed down to us, ſavours more of fiction than of truth. He performed nothing in the military way; but had the misfortune, in common with his father, to be ſtruck blind. Though this might be properly owing to ſome infirmity derived from his parent, yet it is reported, that his loſs of ſight was a puniſhment inflicted on him for his impiety towards the river. For upon a time that the Nile had overflowed the country to an unuſual height, a gale of wind aroſe, and greatly diſturbed the waters, whereat he capriciouſly took offence, and inſolently darted a javelin among the waves. Upon this he was immediately ſeized with a pain in his eyes, and ſoon after by a total darkneſs, which oppreſſed him for ten years. In the eleventh year the oracle at Buſus declared, that the term of his affliction was elapſed, and that his ſight would return to him if he paid particular devotions to the god at Heliopolis, and waſhed his eyes with the urine of a woman, who had never known any man beſides her huſband. He began with his own wife, but receiving no benefit from her, went on from one woman to another, till at length a poor gardener's wife afforded him the relief the oracle had promiſed. Her therefore he made queen; but as for the adultereſſes he ſent them to a city called Erithybolus, which, together with them, he burnt. He paid his vows to the gods in ſeveral rich donations, and particularly raiſed two magnificent obelisks in the temple of the Sun at Heliopolis [z].

Pheron, or Seſoſtris II.

He is ſtruck blind.

He recovers his ſight again, and raiſes two obeliſks.

MANY ages after the ſceptre fell into the hands of AMASIS, or AMMOSIS. He miſuſed his people with the utmoſt violence and injuſtice. Many he condemned to death without a cauſe; many he deprived of their poſſeſſions, upon no other motive than his own imperious will; and towards all he behaved with inſupportable arrogance. Under this oppreſſor they groaned for a while, not daring to reſiſt ſo dreadful a power. But in time Actiſanes king of Æthiopia made war againſt Ammoſis, and entering Egypt the people joined him, and aſſiſted to drive their unnatural prince from the throne [a].

Amaſis or Ammoſis, a tyrant.

His ſubjects join with the Ethiopians to drive him out.

BUT before we take in hand the hiſtory of Actiſanes, we muſt obſerve, that a king, very near allied in name to Ammoſis, blocked up the Shepherds in the city of Abaris, or [y] Lib. 1 c. 1. [z] HEROD. ubi ſupr. DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 54.

[a] Idem ibid.

Pelufium,

Peluſium, with an army of 480,000 men; but deſparing, as is ſaid, to carry the place by ſiege, he made a capitulation with them, by which it was agreed, that they ſhould go out of Egypt and march which way they pleaſed without moleſtation (I). This article they executed, and went away with their families to the number of 240,000, and taking the way of the deſert entered Syria, but fearing the Aſſyrians, they built them a ſtrong city in Judæa, called Jeruſalem. This favours the opinion of thoſe who take the Shepherds to have been the Iſraelites themſelves; but the Egyptian hiſtory being hitherto, and for a conſiderable time to come, involved in palpable darkneſs, we ſhall only ſay, that this is confeſſedly a contradiction to the hiſtory of Moſes, by whom it plainly appears, that theſe Shepherds could not be the Iſraelites, and him we chooſe to confide in. This king is called Amoſis, Thummoſis, Tethmoſis, Thomoſis, and Themoſis, the ſon of Haliſphragmuthoſis. One Amoſis is alſo ſaid to have aboliſhed the cuſtom of ſacrificing men to Juno at Heliopolis, and inſtead of them to have ſubſtituted waxen images. They were examined and ſealed like pure calves, and were called Typhonians [b]. Three of them were burnt in a day, and their aſhes were ſcattered abroad ſo as to be no more ſeen, and this publickly every year during the dog-days. This is ſaid to have been done at the city of Idithia [c].

The expulſion of the Shepherds

As to the 200,000 Shepherds, which we are told came from Jeruſalem to aſſiſt the leprous Egyptians under Oſarſiphus, and the wars they were engaged in with Amenophis, king of [b] Joseph. contra Apion. l. 1. p. 352, &c. [c] Manetho apud Porph. de abſtin. l. 2. c. 55.

(I) We have already obſerved to you, that Perizonius reckons what is called the expulſion of the Shepherds, and the Exodus of the children of Iſrael, to be one and the ſame event (1).

Sir John Marſham, is of a quite different opinion, but decides nothing (2).

Father Pezron ſays nothing of the expulſion of the Shepherds in particular, but thinks he has ſufficiently proved, that the Iſraelites went out of Egypt under Moſes in the reign of Thomeſis, the ſame who is ſaid to have expelled the Shepherds (3).

Sir Iſaac Newton places this expulſion in the year 1070 before Christ, or 62 years before the firſt expedition of Seſoſtris, or Seſac, as he calls him, into Africa (4).

(1) Vid. Periz. ubi ſupr. (2) Marſh. ubi ſupr. (3) Pezron, ubi ſupr. (4) Sir Iſaac Newton's Short Chronology.

Egypt, we refer our reader to Joſephus againſt Apion, not knowing where to give a place to theſe tranſactions in the courſe of the Egyptian hiſtory. Joſephus arraigns the whole ſtory as fabulous [d].

WE now return: ACTISANES united Egypt and Æthiopia under him, and was the common king of both. He bore his proſperity with great moderation and prudence, and behaved affectionately towards his new ſubjects. He cauſed a general ſearch to be made after the Egyptian thieves and robbers, and giving them a juſt hearing, commanded their noſes to be cut off, and ſent them away to the remoteſt part of the deſert between Syria and Egypt, where he built them a town which was called Rhinocolura, from the diſfigurement of its infamous inhabitants. This part was ſo barren, that it ſcarce afforded any one neceſſary of life; for even the few wells and ponds there found were brackiſh, bitter, and moſt unpleaſant to the palate. Hither he baniſhed them, that they might not injure their honeſt neighbours by living among them, nor be hid in corners among the innocent. But as frightful and barren as their ſituation was, neceſſity, the mother of invention, ſuggeſted means to them of ſupplying themſelves with food: for it is reported, that they made long nets of ſlit reeds, and with them caught great numbers of quails which came in flocks from the ſea ſhore; and of theſe they had barely ſufficient to live upon [e].

Actiſanes the Ethiopian.

He ſends all the Egyptian thieves and robbers to Rhinocolura.

ACTISANES died, and the Egyptians were left to their own diſpoſal; and therefore they choſe them a king, named by ſome MENDES, and by others MARUS. He is celebrated for the ſepulchral labyrinth he built. It was not ſo admirable for its extent, as for its inimitable contrivance, which was ſo intricate and perplexing, that it was impoſſible to find the way out, but by the help of a moſt experienced guide [f].

Mendes or Marus.

He builds a labyrinth.

AFTER Mendes there enſued an anarchy, or inter-reign, for five generations. At length a Memphite of obſcure birth was choſen king. His Egyptian name was CETES, which the Greeks rendered PROTEUS (K). Both Herodotus and Diodorus

Proteus is choſen king

[d] JOSEPHUS ubi ſupr. [e] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 55. [f] Idem ibid.
See before, Vol. I. p. 422.

(K) According to Perizonius, Proteus was the Sethos of Manetho, and the Typhon of the poets. He thinks that Homer's Proteus and this king are the ſame; and that he was ſtiled a ſea-god, becauſe he had commanded the coaſt of Egypt. He gives no credit to Herodotus

Diodorus make him coetaneous with the Trojan war. The prieſts gave him out for one ſkilled in the weather, or a magician, and pretended, he could aſſume any ſhape or form he pleaſed, even fire. This fable, as it was told by the Greeks, drew its origin from a cuſtom among the Egyptians, (and perhaps introduced by Proteus) who were uſed to adorn and diſtinguiſh the heads of their kings with the repreſentations of animals, or vegetables, or even with burning incenſe, as ſo many enſigns of royalty, and to ſtrike the beholders with dread and ſuperſtition [g]. Whilſt Proteus reigned, Paris or Alexander was driven on the coaſts of Egypt by a ſtorm, and there landed with Helen, whom he was carrying from Greece to Troy. But when he heard the perfidious breach of hoſpitality this young man had committed, he ſeized upon him, his miſtreſs, and his companions, with all the riches he had brought away with him from Greece. As for Helen and her huſband's effects, he detained them, promiſing to reſtore both to the injured party whenever demanded, and ſo he did: but Paris and his companions he commanded to depart out of his dominions in three days, upon pain of being treated as enemies. In fine, he had a very rich and ſumptuous temple erected to him at Memphis, and left a ſon and ſucceſſor behind him called Rhemphis [h].

The fable of Proteus whence derived.

Paris and Helen arrive in Egypt.

Rhemphis or Rhampſinitus.

RHEMPHIS is alſo called RHAMPSINITUS (L), and was of [g] Idem. p. 56. [h] HEROD. ubi ſupr.

Herodotus as to the arrival of Paris and Helen under this king. It is not conſiſtent with his hypotheſis (1).

Sir Iſaac Newton, on the contrary, ſeems to give credit to Herodotus as far as relates to Paris and Helena, but makes him contemporary with Amenophis, who, as we have already obſerved, he makes the ſame with Menes. He thinks, he might have been governor of ſome part of the Lower Egypt under Amenophis: and obſerves, that Homer places him on the ſea coaſt, and calls him the ſervant of Neptune, and that his Greek name ſignifies only a prince, or preſident (2).

(L) Sir John Marſham is inclined to think him the eldeſt ſon of Seſoſtris, and to be the ſame with Rhampſes; and this he advances, fraught with the authority of Manetho, who calls him the ſon of Sethos: and that the famous inſcription which was interpreted to Cæſar Germanicus at Thebes, related to him; and indeed there is

(1) Vid. Perizon. ubi ſupr. ant. kingdoms amended.

(2) Sir Iſaac Newton, Chronol of

no

of an inclination to hoard up money. Diodorus reports him to have been ſo ſordidly avaritious, that during his whole reign he rather acted the part of a mean-ſpirited ſteward than of a king; and never could find in his heart to be at the leaſt expence in any thing that might tend either to the honour of the gods, or the good of men: and that to this retentiveneſs it was owing that he left ſo immenſe a treaſure behind him, no leſs than 400,000 talents[i]. Now Herodotus ſufficiently inſinuates, that he was fond of riches, but does not reduce him to ſo wretched a degree of baſeneſs as this. Let us give ear to what he ſays. Rhampſinitus added the weſtern portico to the temple of Vulcan, and erected two ſtatues before it, each 25 cubits high: one of them faced towards the north, and was adored by the Egyptians under the title of Summer; the other looked towards the ſouth, and went by the name of Winter, and was abhorred. Moreover, he had accumulated a far greater ſtore of wealth than any king of Egypt that ſucceeded him; and, being deſirous to depoſite it in ſome ſecure place, commanded a treaſure-houſe to be firmly built for that purpoſe. The architect employed in this work, placed one of the ſtones in ſo artful a manner, that it might be taken out and put in again by one man only, it being his intention to partake in the riches of the place. But about the time that the treaſure was lodged in it, this man fell into a violent ſickneſs; and finding himſelf at the point of death, ſent for his two ſons. To them he declared the whole artifice, and gave them the builds the weſtern portico to the temple of Vulcan, and a treaſure-houſe.

[i] DIOD. ubi ſupr.

no very great difference between the Rhamſes of Tacitus and the Rhampſes of Manetho. In fine, that he enjoyed by right what his father had obtained by conqueſt (1).

Perizonius ſuppoſes, that the Rhamſes of Tacitus is Seſoſtris himſelf. But Rameſſes, or Rhamſinitus, the ſon of Proteus, he makes contemporary with the Trojan war, in which he is ſupported by a paſſage from Pliny (2).

Sir Iſaac Newton conjectures him to have been the ſon of Amenophis, or Menes, and to be ſhadowed under the different names of Rhamſinitus, Ramſes, Ramiſes, Rameſes, Rameſſis, Rameſtes, Rhampſes and Rhempſis; and that the obelisk which was ſent to Rome by the emperor Conſtantius, with an inſcription interpreted by Hermapion an Egyptian prieſt, expreſſing that he was long-lived and reigned over a great part of the earth, as alſo that pompous inſcription mentioned by Tacitus, belonged to him (3).

(1) Vid. Marſh. ubi ſupr. (2) Periz. ubi ſup. (3) Sir Iſaac Newt. ubi ſupr.

most exact directions in the management of the business, which he foresaw would never be his fate to accomplish. The father died, and the young men went to the treasury, and finding every thing to be as their father had told them, they gained an easy admittance, and robbed the king to a considerable value; and this they repeated every night. Some time after Rhampsinitus went in to view his heaps, and was surprized to find a visible diminution of them; and the more, because his seal was whole on the door, the only part of the building that could give entrance. The two brothers continued their nightly expilations till the king, after two or three further surveys, was perfectly sensible that some how or other his wealth suffered a successive decrease. And now convinced that some body must do this, he ordered snares to be laid all around the vessels which held his money. The brethren failed not to come at night, and taking out the stone, one of them went in, and going up to a vessel full of silver, was immediately ensnared. Under this surprize he called to his brother who stood without, and earnestly besought him to come in to him, and cut off his head, that so he might save his own life, and effectually prevent the discovery of their intrigue. The brother, perceiving the reasonableness of his request, went in and did as he was desired, and putting the stone in its place again, took the head away with him. Early the next morning the king came in to see the event of his project, but was quite astonished to find a man caught without a head. He went out again in great confusion of thought, but however directed that the body should be hung on the outside of the wall, and exposed to public view; charging the guard appointed to take care of it, that they should make a narrow inspection into the countenances of the spectators, and in whomsoever they perceived signs of sorrow and mourning, to bring such person into his presence. When the mother of the deceased heard that the body was exposed in this manner, she was distracted with grief, and upbraiding her surviving son, threatened that if he did not procure her his brother's body, and bring it home, she would let the king know who had robbed his treasury. The young man did his utmost to bring her to some temper, by remonstrating to her the impracticability of her request; but to no purpose, for she persisted still in her threats. Therefore finding that something must be contrived to gratify her, he consulted how he might succeed in such an enterprize: and at length loading his asses with skins of wine, he drove them towards the place where the body hung up. Having reached the guard, he privately opened some of the skins, and as soon as the wine poured down which is plundered by the architect's two sons.

down he ſtruck himſelf upon the head, and counterfeited the trouble and conſternation of a perſon utterly undone. In the mean time the ſoldiers upon duty ran to the aſſes with pots, to ſave as much of the liquor as they could for themſelves; which he ſeeing, fell on them with the moſt bitter reproaches, and reviled them for the pleaſure they took in his misfortune, inſtead of giving him their aſſiſtance: but they ſpeaking him fair, he pretended to be pacified, and leading his aſſes out of the way, feigned to be very buſy in ſecuring the remainder of his wine. Whilſt he was doing this the guards ſtood about him, and laughing and joking with him, he at laſt conſented to give them a ſkin of wine; and they in return for ſo great a favour, preſſed him to ſtay and take a part of it with them. He did ſo, and when this ſkin was emptied he gave them another; ſo that by exceſſive drinking the whole guard was overcome, and fell into a deep ſleep. Then watching his opportunity, and perceiving it to be the dead of night, he went to the body, and taking it down, laid it acroſs an aſs; and ſhaving the right cheek of each of the ſoldiers by way of deriſion, went away with the body and carried it home to his mother. The news of this was matter of additional wonder to the king, who, that he might find out the perſon who had done it, bethought him of the following expedient. He ordered his daughter to proſtitute herſelf in a certain apartment of the palace to all comers promiſcuouſly; but under this reſtriction, that ſhe ſhould previouſly extort from each of them a confeſſion of the moſt ingenious intrigue he had ever managed, and the moſt wicked crime he had ever committed. His daughter obeyed, and did as ſhe was inſtructed, and when the thief heard of this extraordinary procedure, he reſolved to perplex the king a little farther. With this view he got the arm of a newly-dead body, and taking it under his cloak, went in to the king's daughter. She examined him in the ſame form, and to the ſame purpoſe as the reſt who had been with her before him; and in return, he frankly confeſſed, that the moſt abominable and wicked action of his life was the cutting off his brother's head when enſnared in the treaſury; and that the moſt ingenious thing he had ever done, was the ſtealing the body from the guard that kept it. She then offered to lay hold on him; which he perceiving, held out the dead arm to her; which ſhe graſping, he ran out, and by the favour of the night made his eſcape. Rhampſinitus's rage was now converted into an admiration of the boldneſs and ingenuity of the man; and therefore he had it proclaimed in every city, that if the perſon, whoever he was, would diſcover himſelf, he ſhould not only be pardoned, but alſo greatly rewarded. The young man confiding in this, went ſtrait to the palace, and made himſelf known. In the end the king gave him his daughter in marriage, and accounted him far ſuperior in wiſdom to any man then living upon earth. Our author does not warrant every particular of this ſtory.

Rhampſinitus goes down to hell.

AFTER this it was fabled, that Rhampſinitus deſcended alive into the infernal regions, where he plaid at dice with Ceres, but neither won or loſt; and that at his departure ſhe preſented him with a golden bowl. The ſpace between his deſcent and reaſcenſion was obſerved with great ſolemnity by the Egyptians many ages afterwards. And now that we may conclude the hiſtory of this king with ſome air of truth and probability, he reigned with great prudence and juſtice, and was a conſtant and ſtrict obſerver of the good order, which, till his death, had uninterruptedly ſubſiſted throughout the kingdom from its firſt foundation [k].

Nilus.

THIS king was ſucceeded by ſeven others, all of nameleſs fame and ignoble character, except one, called NILUS. He is celebrated for the great number of canals he dug all over the country, and for his endeavours to make the Nile as univerſally ſerviceable as poſſible. Whence it was that the river which had been hitherto called Ægyptus, was now called after his name [l].

Cheops, Chemmis, or Chembes, a tyrant.

CHEOPS, CHEMMIS, or CHEMBES, (M) is by Diodorus reckoned the eighth from Rhampſinitus. Herodotus places no diſtance between them. This king is branded for his impiety and tyranny. He began his reign with ſhutting up the temples, and forbidding all public ſacrifices. And then trampling on the laws and invading the liberties of his people, reduced them to a ſtate of the moſt laborious ſlavery. Great numbers he ſent to dig out ſtone in the quaries among the mountains of Arabia, and to tranſport them into Egypt [m]: and harraſſed them in the end in raiſing the largeſt of the three great pyramids [n]. By this, and other vain-glorious works of the ſame kind, he was reduced ſo low, that he expoſed his daughter to common proſtitution; telling her in general terms to earn what ſhe could. She obeyed, and, by her father's Builds the largeſt pyramid.

Proſtitutes his daughter who builds a ſmall pyramid.

[k] HEROD. l. 2. [l] DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 57. [m] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [n] Idem ibid. & DIOD. ubi ſupr. See before, Vol. I. p. 404.

(M) Sir Iſaac Newton ſuſpects, that he intended to be worſhipped himſelf after death; and ſuppoſes that he was alſo called Chemnis, Phiops, Apathus, Apappus, Suphis, Saophis, Syphoas, Syphaoſis, Soiphis, Syphuris, and Anoiſis.

ther's example desiring to perpetuate her memory, required each of her gallants only to contribute a stone towards a building she had in view. With the stones so collected, she built a small pyramid. * This tyrant reigned fifty years and died [o].

HE was suceeeded by CEPHRENES, CEPHREN, or CHABRYIS. It was doubted, whether Cephren, and Chabryis, were one and the same person; some saying, that Cephren was the brother, and that Chabryis was the son of Cheops. But leaving this obscure controversy; this king trod in the foot-steps of his predecessor, and particularly in building a pyramid; but it fell much short of the former. He reigned fifty six years. Though both he and his predecessor designed these pyramids for their eternal mansions, to use the Egyptian phrase, yet neither of them were deposited in them after death: dreading what the rage of the multitude might prompt them to, their friends buried them where no body could ever find them [p].

Cephrenes, or Cephren, or Chabryis a tyrant. Builds a pyramid.

AFTER Egypt had been thus afflicted by tyranny for one hundred and six years, MYCERINUS, or CHERINUS, (N) the son of Cheops, a serene and merciful prince, ascended the throne. Abhorring the impiety and injustice of his father and his uncle, he opened the temples, re-instituted the sacrifices, and left the miserable people to the pursuit of their private affairs. His clemency is reported to have been such, that if at any time complaint was made to him of a hard sentence adjudged in a matter of property, he would satisfy the party aggrieved to the amount of the loss, out of his own treasure [q]. Whilst he was thus intent upon the happiness of his people, a heavy misfortune fell upon him, namely the death of his daughter. He mourned her with great bitterness, and honoured her with an extraordinary funeral: For causing an hollow wooden image of a cow to be made and richly gilt with gold, he therein deposited her body. This cow was never interred, but was exposed in a magnificent chamber of the palace in the city of Saïs; where they burned the most exquisite odours by day, and illuminated the place by night with a lamp. In a room contiguous to this were twenty naked images of women, which the priests of Saïs reported to have been the concubines of Mycerinus. But, as it generally hap-

Mycerinus, or Cherinus, a good prince.

His daughter dies, and he buries her in an extraordinary manner.

* HEROD. ubi supr. See Vol. I. p. 405. [o] HEROD. ubi supr. [p] Idem ibid. DIOD. ubi supr. p. 57, 58. [q] Idem. ibid. HERODOT. ubi supr.

(N) The last cited chronologer calls him also Cheres, Bicheres, Moscheres, Mencheres.

pens in caſes of remote antiquity, this was not the only report that was ſpread concerning this cow and theſe ſtatues. A ſtory went, that Mycerinus falling in love with his daughter, forced and deflowered her; whereupon ſhe fell into a deep melancholy and hanged her ſelf. The twenty naked ſtatues in the next room, ſaid they, were her women, who had been inſtrumental in betraying her to her father's unnatural luſt, and therefore had their hands cut off by the queen. They appeared indeed without hands; but our author, who was an eye-witneſs of theſe things, tells us they were dropped off with age, and lay ſcattered upon the floor. He tells us alſo, that the cow was in a kneeling poſture, and as big as the largeſt living cow. Its neck and head were richly laid over with gold, and between the horns there was a golden circle in imitation of the ſun, and its body had a fine Tyrian carpet thrown over it. The ſepulchral image was removed once a year from the apartment where it ſtood, and expoſed to the open day, in purſuance of a requeſt the deceaſed made to her father, that ſhe might behold the ſun once every year.

Now to return whence we digreſſed; the death of his daughter was not the only misfortune that befel Mycerinus; a more dreadful one enſued: For it was denounced againſt him from the oracle at Butus, that he had but ſix years more to live, and that in the ſeventh he ſhould ſurely die. At this he was greatly troubled, and ſent to expoſtulate with the oracle, and remonſtrated, that ſince his father and uncle, who had been monſters of impiety and cruelty, had been bleſſed with great length of days, it would be ungrateful to requite his piety and humanity with the execution of ſo rigid a ſentence. To this it was anſwered; That his father and uncle knew the decree of fate, which had condemned the Egyptians to a hundred and fifty years of bondage and miſery, and acted conformably thereto; but that his ignorance of this, which had induced him to interrupt the courſe of their affliction, was the cauſe that he was ſo ſuddenly to be cut off. Finding therefore that his doom was irreverſible, he conſulted how to make the moſt of the ſmall remainder of his life; and, commanding a great number of lamps to be lighted up every night, he ſpent his whole time in drinking and revelling. So thence forward making no diſtinction between day and night, he roved about among the groves and the meadows, and wherever he heard of the moſt gay and ſportive company. Thus he went on, thinking to convict the oracle of falſhood, and inſtead of ſix, to live twelve years. Finally Mycerinus is ſaid to have built a pyramid, which from the baſis to the middle was Ethiopian ſtone; and on the northern front of it

The oracle at Butus declares him to be ſhort lived.

Endeavours to convict the oracle of falſhood.

he

he inſcribed his own name. This pyramid the Greeks, by a groſs miſtake, attributed to the courtezan Rhodopis, who flouriſhed in the days of Amaſis, ſeveral reigns lower [r].

WE now proceed to GNEPHACHTHUS, the father of Bocchoris the wife. He is alſo named Technatis by Plutarch [s], and Neochabis by Alexis. What interval there was between him and Mycerinus, or whether any, does no where plainly appear. This king is famed for his abſtinence, and for the execration he denounced againſt Menes. For it is recorded of him, that leading an army into Arabia, and travelling the vaſt and barren deſerts, he there fell into great ſtreights and want of proviſion: and being one day obliged to take up with the poor and ſlender diet he met with, he afterwards fell into a profound ſleep. This ſo delighted him, that he forbad all exceſs and luxury, and curſed MENES, who firſt introduced them: And ſo earneſtly did he perſecute the memory of this his predeceſſor, that, by the conſent of the prieſts, he engraved his curſe upon a pillar, which was ſeen in the temple at Thebes; from whence it came to paſs, that the fair name of Menes was ſeen through a cloud by ſucceeding generations. Forbids all luxury, and curſes Menes.

BOCCHORIS, the ſon of Gnephachthus, was ſurnamed the wiſe. He was a deſpicable perſon to look at, but for prudence and wiſdom far beyond any of his predeceſſors. He is reckoned the fourth Egyptian law-giver; but his laws [t] ſeem not to have concerned any thing, except commerce and the regulation of the public revenue. His judgments were for their excellence retained many ages after his death; but his great qualities were ſomewhat debaſed by his propenſion to avarice [u]. So high was the veneration his ſubjects paid him, that they fabled Iſis to have ſent an aſp to prevent his ſight, that he might judge righteouſly [w]. However, he drew a general odium upon himſelf, by letting in a wild bull to the ſacred one, called Mnevis; but this got the better, and killed his antagoniſt. At laſt, with all the equity of his judgment [x], and the purity of his mind, he is ſaid to have been taken by Sabbaco the Ethiopian, and burnt alive [y]. Bocchoris.

ASYCHIS is by Herodotus placed next in order to Mycerinus; but in compliance with Diodorus, we have put two reigns between them, notwithſtanding our full perſuaſion that Bocchoris and Aſychis were the ſame king, as we ſhall Aſychis.

[r] Idem ibid. See Vol. I. p. 404. [s] De Iſide & Oſirid. [t] See Vol. I. p. 442. [u] DIOD. l. 1. p. 59, 85. [w] PLUT. περὶ δυσωπίας, p. 529. [x] ÆLIAN. de Anim. l. 11. c. 11. [y] SYNCELL. p. 74.

take occaſion to obſerve by and by: In the mean time it is recorded of Aſychis, that he built the eaſtern portico to the temple of Vulcan, with a magnificence that eclipſed the others. And finding that the riches of Egypt, were lodged in a few hands, and that credit was decayed, he enacted a law, whereby a man might borrow money upon the ſepulchre of his father, and depoſite the body, as a pledge, in the hands of the creditor. And till it was redeemed, the debtor might neither be buried in the ſepulchre of his father, or in any other nor put any of his deſcendants there. This king, to ſurpaſs all his predeceſſors, built him a pyramid of brick, which he charged with a very vaunting inſcription [z].

builds the eaſtern portico to the temple of Vulcan, and a brick pyramid.

Anyſis. After Aſychis, a blind man named Anysis, from a city of the ſame name, became King. In his reign Sabbaco king of Æthiopia broke into Egypt with a powerful army, and Anyſis fled for ſhelter to the fens, leaving the kingdom to the invader [a].

Bocchoris and Aſychis the ſame king, and contemporary to Anyſis, and Nechus the father of Pſammitichus.

But before we enter upon the reign of Sabbaco, let us take a curſory retroſpect of theſe three laſt reigns, and perhaps we may find reaſon to think, that Bocchoris and Aſychis are different names for one King, and that the blind man Anyſis was his contemporary. For the law ſaid to have been inſtituted by Aſychis favours ſo much of Bocchoris's genius as might incline one to think them but one man. And if it be true, that Bocchoris was burnt alive by Sabbaco, they muſt not only have been ſo, but Anyſis muſt alſo have been king of another part of Egypt at the ſame time. Furthermore, it is declared by Herodotus, that Necus, the father of Pſammitichus, was ſlain by the ſame Ethiopian [b]. Here we have three kings, if we may ſuppoſe Necus to have been of royal dignity, ſubdued by one and the ſame enemy, and all in Egypt. From hence it may appear, that many of the kings of Egypt are placed in order of ſucceſſion, that were collateral, merely out of oſtentation, and to ſupport the pretenſions the prieſts made to the exceſſive antiquity of their kingdom.

Sabbaco the Ethiopian.

We now return to Sabbaco; and if it be true that he dealt ſo rigidly with Bocchoris, thoſe are ſurely right who ſuppoſe he began his reign with barbarity and cruelty towards others. But no ſooner was he eſtabliſhed firmly on the throne, than he became a new man; ſo that he is highly extolled for his mercy, clemency, and policy. He is thought to have been the So in ſcripture, and to have entered into a league with [z] Herod. l. 2. See Vol. I. 406. [a] Herod. ubi ſupr. [b] Idem ibid.

Hoſhea,

Hoſhea, king of Samaria, againſt Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria. He was excited to the invaſion of Egypt by a dream, or viſion, which aſſured him he ſhould hold Egypt fifty years; and when that term was expired, he voluntarily retired into Æthiopia again, reſigning his conquered kingdom. But whilſt he was in Egypt, he gave the higheſt proofs of his wiſdom and piety, and yielded to none of his Egyptian predeceſſors in the art of governing. He never would conſent to the death of any criminal, though capitally condemned; commuting the puniſhment into hard labour, which purely conſiſted in raiſing of mounts, and digging of canals; ſo that the cities of Egypt were raiſed higher, and rendered more commodious than by Seſoſtris; and particularly the city of Bubaſtis, where ſtood a moſt delightful temple to the goddeſs of the ſame name, whom the Greeks interpreted to be their Diana. At length Sabbaco had a viſion as he ſlept, wherein the tutelar god of Thebes admoniſhed him, that he could not hold the kingdom of Egypt with ſafety and happineſs, except he maſſacred the prieſt as he paſſed through them with his guards. This viſion he had at ſeveral repetitions; but, his heart abhorring ſo dreadful an undertaking, he ſent for the prieſts, and declared to them what the gods would have prompted him to, and that thereby he began to apprehend it was their pleaſure he ſhould remain no longer in Egypt; and that therefore with pure hands and a clear conſcience he would return into his native kingdom, rather than lie under the neceſſity of polluting his life by ſo general a bloodſhed, to preſerve himſelf on the throne of Egypt. And upon the whole, conſidering that the predicted fifty years were expired, he accordingly retired into his own country[c].

His firſt viſion.

His policy.

His ſecond viſion.

As ſoon as Sabbaco had departed the kingdom, Anyſis came out from his hiding-place, and reaſſumed the government. He had been abſent fifty years, and in that time had formed an Iſland for his habitation, compoſed of aſhes and earth; for when any Egyptian came to him with proviſion, he always deſired that aſhes might be brought to him unknown to the Ethiopian. This iſland was called Elbo, and lay undiſcovered ſeven hundred years and upwards, till the reign of Amyrtæus.

Anyſis again.

AFTER him there reigned one SETHON, who was both king, and prieſt of Vulcan. He not only neglected the military claſs or order, but injuriouſly diveſted them of their privileges and lands; whereat they were ſo incenſed that they thought themſelves abſolved from their allegiance, and entered Sethon king and prieſt.

[c] Idem ibid. DIOD. SIC. ubi ſupra, p. 59.

into

into a combination not to bear arms under him, if he ſhould ever ſtand in need of them. But he, regardleſs of their threats and murmurs, gave himſelf wholly up to contemplation and the functions of religion. This was the ſtate of affairs when Sennacherib king of Aſſyria drew near to Peluſium, deſigning to enter Egypt. Sethon perceiving his danger, and that now his only truſt muſt be on the military order whom he had ſo unjuſtly dealt with, he ſought their aſſiſtance; but in vain: They obſtinately perſiſted in their refuſal to march under his banner. The prieſt, now deſtitute of all other advice and ſupport, repaired to his god, and in the utmoſt dejection of mind implored his aid. Whilſt he was yet in the temple, he fell into a deep ſleep, during which it ſeemed to him that the god ſtood at his ſide, and exhorted him to take courage, and promiſed, that if he would but go out againſt the Aſſyrians he ſhould obtain a complete victory over them. Fraught with this viſion, he aſſembled together a promiſcuous body of artificers, ſhop-keepers, and labourers; and, with this unexperienced multitude, bent his march towards Peluſium. The very night after his arrival there, an infinite number of field-rats entered the enemy's camp, and gnawed their quivers, bow-ſtrings, and ſhield-ſtraps to pieces. This is very conſonant to the prophecy of Iſaiah, if we may be allowed to inſert it here: The king of Aſſyria ſhall not come into this City, (meaning Jeruſalem) nor ſhoot an arrow there, nor come before it with a ſhield [d]. For Sennacherib (as ſhould ſeem) had broke up the ſiege of Jeruſalem for a time to fall upon Egypt; but whether this Sethon be the ſame with Tirhakah, or Sevechus, is more than we can decide. But to return; when Sethon next morning found the enemy thus diſarmed, and moving off, he purſued them with a great ſlaughter. In memory of this miraculous event, there was a ſtone ſtatue of this king erected in the temple of Vulcan, with a rat in one of his hands, and delivering theſe words from his mouth; Whoſo beholdeth me, let him be pious [e].

The twelve kings.

A ſhort time after the death of Sethon, Egypt was (upon what motive is not preciſely known) divided into twelve kingdoms, and twelve of the chief Egyptian lords were appointed over them. Theſe twelve entered into the ſtricteſt aſſociation for the public welfare. The mutual league between them was conceived in the moſt obligatory manner, and cemented by all the ſtricteſt ties that could poſſibly conduce to a perpetual union and harmony between them; becauſe it had been foretold by an oracle, upon [d] 2 Kings xix. 32. [e] Herod. ubi ſupr.

their

their aſſuming the government; that he of their number that ſhould perform a libation in a brazen cup would in time be king of all Egypt. This new regulation was attended with peace and happineſs, and the twelve kings reſolved to raiſe a monument, which might perpetuate their names to lateſt ages; and accordingly they raiſed the famous labyrinth [f] near the lake Mœris. At length it came to paſs, that at a ſtated time they all met together to ſacrifice in the temple of Vulcan, and being to offer a libation on the laſt day, the high prieſt, through miſtake, brought out only eleven of the twelve gold bowls, which were reſerved for the uſe of the twelve princes; and Pſammitichus, ſtanding the laſt in order, and being unprovided for the ceremony, took off his helmet, which was of braſs (they all twelve wore the ſame), and performed his libation with that. This he did inadvertently; but it being obſerved by the reſt, they called to mind the oracle which promiſed him to be ſole king of Egypt, who ſhould happen to perform a libation in this place with a braſs bowl. Wherefore, though they were ſatisfied he had no ill intention, and for that reaſon would not ſentence him to die, yet they were unanimous for expelling him to the marſhy country, and for diveſting him of the greateſt part of his diſtrict, and forbidding him to concern himſelf with the affairs of the public [g]. The reaſon of this diſcord is told differently by ſome, and the whole is attributed to envy: For at the diviſion of the country into twelve provinces, as has been obſerved, the ſea-coaſts fell to the lot of Pſammitichus; and he greatly encouraging all commerce with the Grecians and Phœnicians, not only accumulated great wealth, but acquired alſo the favour and friendſhip of ſeveral foreign kings and nations, which drew on him the envy of his colleagues; who, fearing he ſhould grow too formidable, and affect to rule over them, reſolved to reduce him betimes. Wherefore they all declared war againſt him; and he, finding himſelf unequal to the conflict, hired an army of mercenaries, conſiſting chiefly of Ionians, Carians, and Arabians, and repelled force with force, and in the end ſubdued the other kings, and put an end to the duodecemvirate [h]. On the other hand it is related, that, in purſuance of his ſentence, he retreated to the fens; but, greatly reſenting the ſeverity of his uſage for ſo trifling a thing, in which he meant no harm, either preſent or future, he ſent to the oracle of Latona at the city of Butus, to know how, and when he might hope for redreſs. The anſwer he received was,

[f] See Vol I. p. 422. Sic. ubi ſupr. p. 60.

[g] HERODOT. ibid.

[h] DIOD.

That

That Brazen would ſuddenly riſe out of the ſea and avenge his cauſe. This he received as a flat abſurdity: But not long after ſome Ionian and Carian pyrates landed in braſs armour. And an Egyptian, who had never ſeen men armed ſo before, going up to Pſammitichus, and acquainting him, that certain brazen men had riſen out of the ſea, and were pillaging the land near the ſea-ſhore, he perceived that the oracle was come to paſs: Therefore, perſwading them to ſtay by the large promiſes he made them, if he ſucceeded; and joining to them ſuch Egyptians as were well affected to him, he ſubdued, and dethroned the eleven kings, and ſeized on the whole kingdom for himſelf [i]. It is ſaid, the deciſive battle was fought at Monemphis, and that ſome of the kings were ſlain, and others took refuge in Afric. Thus was the government by twelve diſſolved, after it had ſubſiſted fifteen years [k].

Year of the Flood, 2329. Year before Chriſt 670.

HITHERTO the Egyptian hiſtory has been covered with an impenetrable miſt: it now begins to clear up a little. PSAMMITICHUS of the tribe of Saïs, thus poſſeſſed of the whole kingdom of Egypt, reigned with as much wiſdom, magnanimity, and ſplendour as any of his predeceſſors. He was the ſon of Nechus, whom Sabbaco put to death when he conquered Egypt: and had he not fled into Syria, would have ſhared in his father's fate. He made good his engagements with his allies, and over and above preſented them with certain lands on each ſide of the Nile, and called their ſettlements the Camp. He alſo put ſeveral children under their tuition, that they might be inſtructed in the Grecian language; and thoſe who afterwards performed the office of interpreter deſcended from theſe. They had their ſituation near the ſea, below the city of Bubaſtis in the Peluſian mouth of the Nile: and here they continued till Amaſis removed them to Memphis, as will be ſhewn in its proper place. However, it is here proper to obſerve, that theſe Grecians are ſaid to have been the firſt foreigners that were permitted to dwell in Egypt; and that from the intercourſe and correſpondence which was conſtantly kept up between them and their countrymen in Greece, we are well aſſured of the truth and exactneſs of the Egyptian hiſtory from the days of Pſammitichus.

Pſammitichus gives great encouragement to the Greeks.

His public buildings.

CONCERNING the public edifices he erected, there is ſome diſcrepancy: Herodotus ſays, he added the ſouthern, and Diodorus, that he added the eaſtern portico to the temple of Vulcan. The former ſays, that he built a ſpacious edifice oppoſite to this portico, for the reception of the god Apis whenever he ſhould appear; and that it was enriched with ſculptures, [i] HERODOT. ubi ſupr. [k] DIOD. ubi ſupr.

and

and ſurrounded by gigantic ſtatues of twelve cubits high, inſtead of pillars. The latter, that he encompaſſed the temple with a wall, in which he ſubſtituted coloſſuſes inſtead of pilaſters *. Year of the Flood, 2329. Year before Chriſt 670.

Now in conſideration of the fidelity and warlike experience of the foreigners, by whoſe aid he ſeated himſelf on the throne, he always kept ſome of their countrymen in pay, and went ſo far as to compliment them with the poſt of honour, when he marched his army into Syria, where he warred many years. This ſo incenſed the Egyptians, that upwards of 200,000 deſerted him, and marched off in a body. Perceiving his error in thus affronting his own ſubjects, he at firſt ſent ſome of the chief officers after them to excuſe the matter: but finding that their perſuaſions had no effect, he took ſhipping with ſome of his friends, and overtook them on the banks of the Nile. And there entreating them to halt, in conſideration of all the natural obligations that could endear their country to them, their gods, and fireſides, they unanimouſly ſtruck their ſpears upon their ſhields, and cried out, that, as long as they had arms, they did not doubt but they ſhould find a convenient country to ſettle in: then betraying their nakedneſs, that they ſhould never want wives and children whilſt they were ſo perfect. This done, they ſullenly marched on till they came into the territories of Æthiopia, where they ſat down on a fertile ſpot, and dwelt there. His wars.

To repair this loſs, he earneſtly applied himſelf to the advancement of commerce, and opened his ports to all ſtrangers, whom he greatly careſſed, contrary to the cruel or reſerved maxims of his predeceſſors. At the ſame time that he was thus intent upon his affairs at home, he alſo entered into, or renewed an alliance with the Athenians, and others of the Greeks [l]. But his reign is for nothing more remarkable than for the long and tedious ſiege he laid to Azotus in Syria, on the borders of Egypt, and which a ſhort time before had been taken by Aſar-haddon, king of Babylon; for it was twenty nine years before he reduced it [m]. His conduct towards the Scythians, who about this time conquered the Medes, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Aſia, and were now marching with deſign to pour themſelves into Egypt, is highly commended: For, inſtead of oppoſing them, he joined them in Syria, and by his preſents and entreaties prevailed on them to march back again [n]. After a reign of fifty four years [o] he died, and was buried in the temple of Bubaſtis, or Minerva, at Saïs, the Opens the ports of Egypt to ſtrangers. His ſiege of Azotus, and tranſaction with the Scythians.

* HERODOT. ubi ſupr. DIOD. ubi ſup. p. 61. [l] Idem ibid.
[m] HERODOT. ubi ſupr. [n] Idem l. 1. [o] Idem l. 2.

place

place where all the Saïtic kings were depoſited. He is reported to have been the firſt king of Egypt that drank wine [p], to have ſent to diſcover the ſprings of the Nile [q], and to have made an experiment to find out which was the moſt antient nation in the world: to which purpoſe he got two new-born children, and brought them up after ſuch a manner, that they never heard any body ſpeak; and becauſe when at two years old they pronounced a word (beccos) which ſignified bread in the Phrygian tongue, the Egyptians no longer vaunted of their ſeniority before all other nations, but ſubmitted to the Phrygians [r].

Year of the Flood, 2383. Year before Chriſt 616.

Nechus.

Affects the empire of the ſea,

NECHUS was the ſon and ſucceſſor of PSAMMITICHUS. He is the Pharaoh-Necho of ſcripture. He was a prince of a magnificent and warlike genius, and great both at land and ſea. In the beginning of his reign he attempted to cut a canal from the Nile to the Red Sea [s]; and after the loſs of 120,000 of thoſe employed on this work, he was warned by an oracle to deſiſt, and leave the finiſhing of it to a Barbarian, or foreigner. The oracle he obeyed; but thenceforward turning his thoughts towards warlike enterprizes, he built a fleet of gallies in the northern [mediterranean] ſea, and another in the ſtraits of the Arabian gulph, where footſteps of his naval preparations were ſeen many ages afterwards. The warlike actions of this naval force, if any, are no where extant; but, as his mind was bent upon the empire of the ſea, he ſent ſome of the experteſt Phœnician mariners he could procure to go out upon a diſcovery of the African coaſts. Accordingly, ſailing out of the Red Sea through the ſtraits of Babelmandel, as now called, they ſteered down the eaſtern ſhores of Afric; and doubling the Cape of Good-Hope, coaſted up northward, till they came to the ſtraits of Gibraltar; by which they entered into the Mediterranean, and ſo returned into Egypt; and this voyage they performed in three years [t].

His wars at land.

HE was not only great at ſea, but was alſo formidable by land. Joſephus following Cteſias ſays, that he made war upon the Medes and Babylonians; who had juſt then diſſolved the Aſſyrian monarchy, and were grown dreadful to the nations far and near [u]: but the ſcripture expreſly ſays, that he went out againſt the king of Aſſyria, who was then on the river Euphrates, perhaps at Babylon. In his march thither, Joſiah king of Judah, refuſed to let him paſs through Judæa, and drew up an army to prevent his deſign, which was to beſiege

[p] Eudox. apud PLUTARCH. de Iſide & Oſiride, p. 333. [q] HEROD. ubi ſupr. & ATHENÆUS, l. 8. p. 345. [r] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [s] See Vol. I. p. 115. [t] Idem ibid. [u] JOSEPHUS Antiq. l. 10. c. 6.

Car-

Carchemiſh w. Finding therefore that Joſiah oppoſed him, he ſent meſſengers to him to remonſtrate, that his arms were not taken up with deſign to do Joſiah the leaſt prejudice; that the war, he was going to engage in, was undertaken by the expreſs command of God; wherefore he would do well not to incur the wrath of heaven by withſtanding its decree. But, finding that Joſiah gave no ear to this, he reſolved to give him battle; and both armies being drawn up in the valley of Megiddo (or Magdolus, as Herodotus has it x), Joſiah was wounded mortally with an arrow, as he was driving his chariot up and down the ranks; and perceiving his end to be near, he commanded his army to retreat, and Necho held on his march y. He arrived on the banks of the Euphrates, and there overthrew the king of Aſſyria, and took the great city of Carchemiſh; where he lodged a ſufficient gariſon, and after three months returned towards Egypt z. As he drew near to Jeruſalem, he heard that Jehoahaz had taken upon him to be king; and ſending him an order to meet him at Riblah in Syria, he there bound him in chains, and ſent him away priſoner to Egypt. After which he went to Jeruſalem, and made Eliakim, whoſe name he changed into Jehoiakim, king over Judah, impoſing on him at the ſame time a tribute of an hundred talents of ſilver, and one talent of gold a. And thus he became maſter of Judæa and Syria. Herodotus ſays, that he took the great and mountainous city of Cadytis in Paleſtine, which is very rationally underſtood to mean Jeruſalem. It is plain Nechus was there; but it is almoſt as plain that he entered it in a peaceful manner b. Hitherto then he was ſucceſsful in his wars, by which he weakened the declining power of Aſſyria; which very ſoon after ceaſed to give name to a monarchy: and in commemoration of his good fortune, or in gratitude to the god, he is ſaid to have conſecrated the garments he wore in theſe actions to Apollo, and ſent them to Branchis in the land of the Mileſians c.

Year of the Flood, 2383. Year before Chriſt 616.

BUT he did not long enjoy his new acquiſitions; for, about three years afterwards, Nebuchadnezzar came from Babylon, which, in conjunction with Media, had ſubverted the Aſſyrian empire, deſigning to drive the Egyptians from Charchemiſh, and recover the Syrian and Phœnician provinces, which Necho had ſubdued d. But he, no way daunted at the formi-

His turn of fortune.

w 2 Kings xxiii. 29. 2 Chron. xxxv. ver. 20. x HEROD. ubi ſupr. y 2 Chronic. xxxv. v. 24. JOSEPHUS Antiq. ubi ſupr. z Idem ibid. a 2 Kings xxiii. v. 33. b Vid. PRIDEAUX Connect. p. 56, 57. HEROD. ubi ſupr. c Idem ibid. d Jerem. xlvi. 1, 2. 2 Kings xxiv. 7.

dable

dable power of this newly-erected monarchy, marched towards the Euphrates with a very numerous army, againſt Nebuchadnezzar; but in the end Necho was routed with a terrible ſlaughter, and loſt Carchemiſh, and all Syria and Judæa, quite home to Peluſium [e]. He afterwards entered into a confederacy with Jehoiakim, and made as if he intended to renew the war againſt the Babylonians; but he did nothing of moment afterwards, nor ſtirred out of Egypt; and died about eight years after he had been defeated by Nebuchadnezzar [f], having reigned ſixteen, and left his ſon Pſammis to ſucceed him in the kingdom [g].

Year of the Flood, 2399. Year before Chriſt, 600.

IN the reign of PSAMMIS the ſon of Necho there came ambaſſadors into Egypt from the Elæans, to know, if the moſt ſage Egyptians could add any thing to their regulations concerning the olympic games, or could perceive any defect in them. When the king was informed of their buſineſs, he called a council of the wiſeſt heads in the nation, and ſending for the ambaſſadors to come before this aſſembly, he aſked them, if their own citizens were allowed to contend at their games: to which they anſwered in the affirmative. Whereupon the Egyptians pronounced, that they erred from all the rules of hoſpitality; obſerving, that it was natural for them to favour their fellow-citizens more than ſtrangers. That if they were come to be informed concerning what ought, or ought not to be done, in the matter they had propoſed, the moſt equitable law they could make, would be to exclude their own countrymen, and admit none but ſtrangers to contend for the prizes. Pſammis reigned ſix years, and died in an expedition againſt the Ethiopians, leaving his ſon Apries to ſucceed him [h].

Pſammis.

Year of the Flood, 2405. Year before Chriſt, 594.

APRIES is the Pharaoh-hophra of ſcripture. The firſt of his reign was great and proſperous; the laſt inſolent and miſerable. In the firſt year of his reign he received ambaſſadors from Zedekiah king of Judah, and with them he entered into league, promiſing to aſſiſt their king againſt the king of Babylon [i]; and about two years afterwards marched out of Egypt with ſeeming intent to relieve Jeruſalem, then cloſely beſieged by Nebuchadnezzar; who no ſooner heard of his motions than he raiſed the ſiege, and reſolved to meet Apries half way [k]. He did ſo; but the Egyptians, afraid of venturing a battle, retreated as faſt as the Babylonians approached, and ſo continued till they had fallen back into their own country [l], leaving Apries.

His affairs with the Jews.

[e] JOSEPHUS ubi ſupr. [f] 2 Kings xxiv. 7. JOSEPHUS ubi ſupr. [g] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [h] Idem ibid. [i] Ezek. xvii. 15. [k] Jerem. xxxvii. 5. [l] Idem xxxvii. 7.

the

the Jews to the mercileſs rage of their enemy, in contempt of the moſt ſolemn engagements. And for this breach of faith it was, that Ezekiel denounced the heavy doom againſt them, that they ſhould be confounded and deſolate for forty years enſuing [m]; and that afterwards they ſhould degenerate to ſo baſe a degree, as not to have it in their power ever to ſet up a king of their own for the time to come [n]; which will be ſeen accompliſhed in the courſe of this hiſtory. The ſcriptures paint him in very diſadvantageous colours, and in the end threaten him with a violent death; which came to paſs, as we ſhall ſee anon. In the mean time it may not be amiſs to take notice, that Herodotus gives this king twenty five years of greater proſperity than any of his predeceſſors, except Pſammitichus, had enjoyed; though Diodorus allows his whole reign no more than twenty two years. However, they both agree in giving him the character of a martial prince, and ſpeak of ſucceſsful wars which he waged, both by ſea and land, againſt the Tyrians and Sidonians, and Cypriats [o]. The city of Sidon he took by ſtorm, and vanquiſhed both the Phœnicians and Cypriots in a ſeafight; and returned with immenſe ſpoil into Egypt [p]. And all this no way claſhes with what the ſacred writings record of him; but is rather conſonant therewith: For ſure it muſt have been a mighty king, in whom the Jews dared to confide againſt the monarch of Babylon. And as to the feint Apries made to relieve Jeruſalem and his ſhameful retreat, that rather reflected diſhonour on him, than amounted to a misfortune. His victories.

BUT now, in order to harmonize the ſacred and prophane hiſtorians, let us hear the former denounce judgment againſt him, and then ſee how the latter execute it; which is the moſt obvious and diſtinct method we can think of in this caſe, where we are obliged to reſort to both. We have already in general terms obſerved, that the ſcripture threatened this king with a violent death, let us attend to the words of the prophet himſelf: Thus ſaith the Lord, Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that ſeek his life; as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon his enemy, and that ſought his life [q]. Many predictions of the ſame kind are uttered againſt him in Ezekiel, but there he is only involved with the reſt of his ſubjects, and therefore we ſhall paſs them over. We are now to ſee how his deſtruction was brought about. The Cyrenæans, a colony of the Greeks, had a very numerous acceſſion of their countrymen under their third king Battus the happy; and, being impelled by an oracle from the Pythians, fell to ſharing the lands, and unjuſtly driving the Libyans, their neighbours, from their poſſeſſions, their king Andicran ſent an embaſſy of ſubmiſſion to Apries, and implored his protection from the violence of theſe new comers. Apries condeſcended to his requeſt, and ſent a powerful army to relieve him. But the Egyptians were beaten by the Cyrenæans with ſo cruel a ſlaughter, that the few who eſcaped were incenſed with the fierceſt rage againſt their king, as if he had ſent them to certain deſtruction, in hopes that they being cut off, he might tyrannize at will over the remainder of his ſubjects. What ground there was for this clamour does not appear, but the giddy multitude were ſo taken with it, that almoſt an univerſal defection enſued. Upon news that they were embodied in a tumultuous manner, and were talking loud of a revolution, Apries ſent a truſty friend, as he thought, and one much reſpected by the people, called Amaſis, to appeaſe them. He went; but inſtead of reconciling them with Apries, he made intereſt with them for himſelf; and as he was pretending to reproach them, and recal them to their allegiance, one of them came behind him, put an helmet on his head, and ſaluted him king of Egypt; and from that inſtant he prepared himſelf to war againſt his maſter[r]. Apries finding himſelf ſo foully betrayed, commanded one Patarbemis, the moſt conſiderable of all the Egyptians, who as yet adhered to him, to go to the rebellious camp, and bring Amaſis to him alive. He obeyed; and coming in ſight of Amaſis, called out to him, and charged him to attend on him to the king. At this, Amaſis, who was ſitting on horſeback, lifted up his thigh with the utmoſt ſcorn, and breaking wind, bid him carry that back to his maſter. Notwithſtanding this, Patarbemis ſtill urged him to obey the royal ſummons; but all he could obtain was this anſwer from Amaſis, That indeed he had been ſome time preparing to viſit the king, but that he might do it in a proper manner, he would bring a ſuitable equipage along with him. Patarbemis had now heard and ſeen too much to imagine he ſhould ſucceed in the buſineſs he was charged with, and began to think, that the beſt ſervice he could do for Apries, at this conjuncture, would be to give him the moſt early notice of the poſture and temper of the rebels. He therefore returned back; but when the king ſaw him come into his preſence without Amaſis, he ſpoke not one word to him, but ordered his ears and noſe to be cut off. This

[m] Ezek. xxix. v. 8, 12. [n] Idem. xxx. 13. [o] HERODOT. ubi ſupr. DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 62. [p] Idem. ibid. [q] Jerem. xliv. 30.

The cauſe of his ruin.

Is betrayed by Amaſis.

[r] Herod. ubi ſupr. Diod. ubi ſupr.

inſolent

inſolent and tyrannical behaviour compleated his ruin: for when the reſt of the Egyptians, who had continued faithful to him, beheld the inhuman mutilation of ſo worthy and noble a perſon, they all withdrew from him and went over to Amaſis. And now the tyrant on the one hand, and the uſurper on the other, prepared for war; the one having the whole body of the natives under his banner; the other only ſuch Carians, Ionians, and other mercenaries and foreigners as he could engage in his ſervice [r].

Nebuchadnezzar waſtes and plunders Egypt

DURING theſe inteſtine broils, and theſe diviſions, which muſt have greatly weakened Egypt, it is probable that Nebuchadnezzar, who much about this time broke up his thirteen years ſiege of Tyre, and had at laſt nothing but an empty town for his pains, took advantage of the troubled ſtate of this kingdom, in hopes here to acquire ſuch ſpoil as might make amends for what he miſſed at Tyre. And this is perfectly conſonant to the ſcripture, where it is ſaid; Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon cauſed his army to ſerve a great ſervice againſt Tyrus . . . . yet had he no wages, nor his army for Tyrus . . . . Therefore, thus ſaith the Lord God, Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon . . . . and it ſhall be the wages for his army [t]. A nation in ſuch diſtraction, as Egypt muſt have been in at this time, was an eaſy prey to a number of experienced veterans; and beſides, muſt have been in the moſt proper condition to gratify an army already worn out with fatigue, as the Babylonians doubtleſs were. Nebuchadnezzar therefore entered Egypt, and miſerably harraſſed the country, and ſlew and led away great numbers of its inhabitants; ſo that ſome think it did not recover this incurſion for forty years, as had been foretold. At length he left the country; but whether he appointed Amaſis for his lieutenant, or what terms he made with him, is what we do not take upon us to ſay; no more than whether Amaſis and Apries ſtood their ground, and made head againſt the enemy; or whether they left him to act his pleaſure in Egypt. This alone is certain, that the Babylonian carried away immenſe ſpoil with him.

Civil war between Apries and Amaſis.

AND now we reſume the civil war, which we have been obliged to interrupt, by taking a view of the devaſtation of the country by a foreign enemy. Apries marched from Saïs, where he had a moſt ſumptuous and delightful palace, at the head of 30,000 Carians and Ionians; and Amaſis, on the other hand, was in motion at the head of an army of Egyptians [u]. They met in the fields near Memphis; and Apries was so far from doubting the victory, that he is said to have entertained a notion, That it was not in the power even of any god to divest him of his kingdom [w], as he is upbraided by the prophet, My river is mine own, and I have made it [x]. But his confidence availed him nothing; the armies drew up at Memphis, and though the foreigners did wonders, yet they were overpowered by the multitude of the Egyptians, and were utterly overthrown, and Apries himself was taken prisoner.

[r] HEROD. ubi ſupr. [t] Ezek. xxix. 18. 19. [u] HEROD. ubi ſupr. DIOD. ubi ſupr.

Year of the Flood, 2430. Year before Christ, 569.

Amasis.

Apries is strangled.

And now Amasis of the tribe of Saïs usurped the kingdom. He confined Apries in the palace of Saïs, formerly his own; and treated him with great care and respect. But the people were implacable, and could not rest whilst Apries enjoyed his life *: and therefore murmuring against Amasis, and remonstrating that his lenity was wrong applied in extending it to his and their common enemy, he found himself under a necessity of delivering Apries into their hands. And now, being fallen under the power of those who sought his life [y], they strangled him, and laid his body in the sepulchre of his ancestors, which was in the temple of Minerva, adjoining to the palace, on the left hand going in. Here it was that all the princes of the tribe of Saïs were intombed [z].

We know it is said, that Amasis did not thus seat himself on the throne; and that he did not succeed Apries. It was one Partamis, say they, whom Amasis succeeded, and that, by the following incident. Partamis celebrating his birth-day, Amasis, as yet a private person, presented him with a most beautiful and elegant garland of flowers: whereupon being invited to the table as a guest, and thenceforward added to the number of the king's friends; he was at last sent at the head of an army to reduce the Egyptians who had rebelled; but the army made him king, out of the hatred they bore to Partamis [a]. We are inclined to think, that the Partamis here and the Patarbemis above are the same man; and if so, he was rather the idol of the people's affections, than the object of their hatred. But we forbear enlarging any farther on this, and shall only say, that our author, in which we find this, is not always the most faithful transcriber.

Whoever Amasis succeeded, and which way soever he came by the crown, it is commonly allowed, that he was of plebeian extraction. And perceiving at first, that it was with reluctance the people payed him the respect due to the sublimity of his station, he took a golden cistern, in which his guests were used to wash their feet, and ordered it to be melted down, down, and caſt in the ſhape of a god. This precious idol was ſet up in the moſt frequented part of the city; and all paid devout reverence and honour to it. He then called an aſſembly of the Egyptians, and acquainted them, That the god they now worſhipped was made of the veſſel in which they had often piſſed, vomited, and waſhed their feet: that his own caſe was the ſame; formerly he was a mean perſon, but, being now their king, he expected and required to be honoured and obeyed as ſuch. It was a rule with him to attend cloſely to buſineſs every morning, and to divert himſelf with his friends the remainder of the day, drinking and making merry with them: but his mirth was ſomewhat of too low an allay for a king; at which ſome of his friends were ſcandalized, and aſſured him, that ſuch forgetfulneſs of his dignity would draw the contempt of all his ſubjects upon him. To this he replied, that as a bow always bent would undoubtedly loſe much of its ſpring and energy, and in the end be wholly uſeleſs; ſo a man, who ſhould uninterruptedly attend upon ſerious matters, would grow ſtupid and loſe his ſenſes: and being perfectly convinced of this truth, he was determined to divide his time between buſineſs and diverſion. And indeed it is ſaid of him, that when a private man, he delighted in his cup and his jeſt; and was ſo averſe to buſineſs, that he ſupported himſelf in his riot and luxury by thieving. And in conſequence of this heinous practice, being oftentimes accuſed, and continually denying his guilt, they were uſed to carry him to the oracle of the place, wherever he was, by which he was ſometimes convicted, and ſometimes acquitted. When he came to the throne, he recollected the former tranſactions of his life, and calling to mind the deceitfulneſs and ignorance of the oracles, who had pronounced him innocent, he ſlighted the temples of ſuch gods, abſtained from their ſacrifices, and refuſed to preſent them with any donations. On the contrary, he highly revered thoſe for veracity and omniſcience, who had charged him with his odious crime.

[w] Heron. ubi supr. [x] Ezek. xxix. 3. * Plato in Tim.
[y] Jerem. ubi supr. [z] Heron. ubi supr. [a] Hellanic. apud Athenæ Deipno. l. 15. p. 680.

The public works of Amaſis.

HE built a portico to the temple of Minerva at Saïs, which was of the utmoſt magnificence, both in the vaſtneſs of its proportion, and the maſſiveneſs of the materials, adorning it with coloſſuſes, and the monſtrous images of Androſphynges. Part of the ſtones of this building were taken out of the quarries at Memphis; but the largeſt of them came by water from the city of Elephantis, twenty days paſſage on the river, and a great many of theſe he prepared for other works. But what is moſt to be admired, he removed a houſe all of one ſtone from the ſame city to Saïs. The exterior dimenſions of it were twenty one cubits in front, fourteen deep, and eight high; high: the interior measures were eighteen cubits, twelve, and five. Two thousand mariners were employed three years in transporting this extraordinary edifice. It stood near the entrance of the temple, and was never carried quite in, either, as was said, because the chief engineer sighed one day, as if he was tired out with the work, and therefore Amasis, who stood by, taking offence, would never suffer him to have any thing more to do with it; or, because rolling it in towards the temple, one of the men was crushed to death by it, and therefore might not be advanced any farther. He was very magnificent in the gifts and ornaments he bestowed upon the other celebrated temples, and particularly at Memphis; where, before the temple of Vulcan, he caused a colossus of seventy five foot in length to be laid on its back, the face looking upwards: and on the same basis, or pavement, whereon this lay, he erected two statues of twenty foot high, cut out of the same stone, and standing one on each side of the great one. In Saïs there was just such another colossus as this. To conclude on this head, he built the great temple of Isis at Memphis.

The state of Egypt under him, and his laws.

MOREOVER, Egypt is said to have been perfectly happy during his reign, in the fecundation of the Nile, and to have now contained no less than 20,000 populous cities. And, that good order might the better subsist in the midst of so vast a multitude, Amasis enacted a law, whereby every Egyptian was bound once a year to inform the governor of the province by what means he earned his living, and in default thereof to suffer death; which also was the punishment now ordained for those who were not able to give a very satisfactory account of themselves [b]: and for this, and for other laws he enacted, he is stiled the fifth law-giver of Egypt [c].

Is very favourable to all the Greeks.

HE was a great friend to the Greeks, and had a visit from Solon [*]. And, besides the favours he conferred on particular persons and cities of that nation, he allowed as many as pleased to come into Egypt, and either to settle in the most celebrated mart of Naucratis, or drive on their trade upon the sea-coasts; and granted them places where they might erect altars and temples to their own deities. Accordingly they erected several temples, the most frequented and noted of which was called the Grecian temple, being built at the joint charge of the Ionian cities of Chios, Teos, Phocæa, and Clazomenæ; together with the Dorians of Rhodes, Cnidus, Halicarnassus, Phaselis; and of the Æolians only the city of Mytelene. Thoſe of Ægina alſo built a temple to Jupiter at their ſole expence; the Samians another to Juno, and the Milleſians, a third to Apollo. And to conclude, the Greeks elected officers to preſide over their commercial affairs, and over their religion, and from henceforward were a conſiderable body in Egypt.

[b] See Vol. I. p. 441. HEROD ubi supr. [c] DIOD. ubi supr. p. 85. [*] HEROD. lib. 1.

of

So great was the fame of Amaſis for his generoſity and humanity, that when the Delphians, whoſe temple had been burnt, were going about from city to city to raiſe ſuch a contribution, as might enable them to pay that part of the expence which was impoſed on them, they applied not only to the Greeks in Egypt, but alſo to Amaſis himſelf, who gave them a thouſand talents of allom. He made an alliance with the Cyrenæans, and being deſirous of a Grecian woman, or elſe willing to give an ample teſtimony of the affection he had for that people, he married Ladice, the daughter of Battus, according to ſome; but others ſaid, ſhe was daugher of Arceſilaus; and others again, of Critobulus, a perſon of high authority among the Cyrenæans. This marriage was very extraordinary in its beginning, and could not be conſummated without the intervention of a deity. For Amaſis, though he at the ſame time found no impediment in himſelf with regard to other women, was ſenſible of a total inability in reference to his wife. Whereupon he, after ſome time, concluded, ſhe had inchanted him, and practiſed ſome infernal art to debilitate him; and therefore told her one night as they lay together, That as deeply verſed as ſhe was in ſupernatural contrivances, ſhe ſhould not have it in her power to eſcape the vengeance he intended to take on her, for the wickedneſs and ingratitude ſhe had been guilty of towards him. She earneſtly denied the unkind accuſation, and endeavoured to give him a better opinion of her; but in vain. In this diſtreſs ſhe ſighed out a prayer to Venus, and implored her aid, vowing, in caſe of deliverance, to ſend a ſtatue of her to Cyrene, and erect it there. The goddeſs was propitious, and Amaſis found himſelf like other men (the only expedient that could be effectual in this extremity), and continued to uſe Ladice as his wife, with the greateſt tenderneſs and affection. Ladice performed her vow to the goddeſs, whoſe ſtatue ſet up by her was ſeen without the gates of Cyrene ſome ages afterwards. This miracle, as it was doubtleſs called, brought the gods of the Grecians into as much credit with Amaſis as themſelves; as ſhould ſeem by his conſecrated donations to Greece. To the city of Cyrene he ſent a gilded ſtatue of Minerva, and his own picture done from the life. To the city of Lindus he gave two ſtone ſtatues of the ſame goddeſs, with a linen pec-

Marries a Greek.

A miracle.

His conſecrated donations to Greece.

toral, or ſtomacher, wonderfully wrought and adorned. To Samos he ſent two wooden images of himſelf, which were ſeen ſtanding, ſeveral ages afterwards, behind the gates of the great temple of Juno. This donation he made to Samos for the ſake of Polycrates, with whom he was in eſpecial alliance. As for Lindus, it was reported, that the daughters of Danaus founded the temple of Minerva there, when they fled from the ſons of Ægyptus. And add to all the great things which have been hitherto ſaid of him, he was the firſt that ſubdued Cyprus, and that exacted tribute from the Cypriots its inhabitants [d].

Conquers Cyprus.

HITHERTO we have repreſented this reign in the majeſtic colours the Egyptian prieſts beſtowed on it; and under ſo prudent a prince, as it is likely Amaſis was, the greateſt part of what they ſaid may be true enough: but they dwelt ſo much on the glory of this reign, as well as of thoſe that preceded it, as to forget all the ignominy that was mixed with it. Xenophon writes, that Cyrus conquered Egypt [e]; and if ſo, it muſt have been during this long reign; and Herodotus ſays, that Amaſis and Cræſus were leagued together againſt Cyrus [f]. It is certain, that Nebuchadnezzar almoſt ruined the whole kingdom; but we find no acknowledgment of it among prophane authors, who, ſo far as they have touched upon the Egyptians, have copied their archives, or depended upon the oral traditions of their prieſts. But now that it was no longer in their power to conceal their diſhonour, they frankly confeſſed it. For, according to themſelves, the latter days of Amaſis were darkened by a dreadful ſtorm, which threatened the utter ruin of Egypt; and, though he died juſt ſoon enough to eſcape the rage of it, yet his dead body was ſo cruelly abuſed and deſtroyed, that could he have been ſenſible of the hard fate he was doomed to in that particular, he, according to the Egyptian ſuperſtition, would have thought the loſs of his kingdom a trifle, if compared with it.

His latter days unhappy.

FOR by ſome means or other Amaſis had incenſed Cambyſes the Perſian (who was naturally a raſh and hot-headed prince) againſt him to ſo implacable a degree, as has ſcarce its parallel in the hiſtory of any nation. The ſeeds from whence this enmity ſprang are not poſitively, nor perhaps at all, known to us. On one hand it is ſaid, That Amaſis ſending an Egyptian oculiſt to Cyrus king of Perſia, who had deſired to have the beſt in his kingdom; the man, whoſe fortune it was and why.

[d] HEROD. ubi ſupr. DIOD. ubi ſupr. [e] CYROPÆDIA ſub. fine. [f] HEROD. l. 1.

to

to be choſen by the king for this purpoſe, took it much at heart, that he ſhould be thus as it were exiled from his wife and children, and ſent into Perſia; and eſpecially ſince Cyrus had deſired the beſt oculiſt in Egypt, which he was conſcious was not himſelf. The angry Egyptian continuing in Perſia, and plainly perceiving the turbulent genius of Cambyſes, prevailed on him to ſend an herald to Amaſis, to demand his daughter to wife, aſſured, that whether Amaſis complied with this requeſt or not, he ſhould have his full meaſure of revenge on him. Cambyſes hearkened to this man, and did as he had ſuggeſted. When the Perſian herald came to Amaſis he knew not which way to reſolve: he dreaded the Perſian power if he refuſed, and was aſhamed of the diſhonour which muſt be reflected on his family if he complied, knowing, that inſtead of being a wife, his daughter would be no better than the Perſian's concubine. At laſt he bethought him, that his predeceſſor was ſurvived by an only daughter, of great beauty and majeſtic deportment, called Nitetis. Her therefore he ſent, with all the pomp and ſplendour befitting his own daughter, to Cambyſes in Perſia; who, when he ſaw her, ſaluted her by the title of daughter to Amaſis. To this ſhe immediately anſwered, that Amaſis had deceived him; that ſhe was not his daughter; but the unhappy child of the unfortunate Apries, whom Amaſis had put to death, and whoſe throne he had ungratefully uſurped. At this Cambyſes was fired with indignation, and vowed deſtruction to Amaſis. This was the ſtory the Perſians told: but this is not likely to be true; for at this time Nitetis muſt have been ſomewhat upwards of forty years old, or at leaſt near it; and therefore but ill qualified for the bed of Cambyſes. But ſecondly, the Egyptians, to give themſelves ſome credit, even in this deſtructive miſunderſtanding, claimed kindred with Cambyſes, and ſaid, that it was Cyrus who ſent for the daughter of Amaſis, and that Cambyſes was the ſon of Nitetis. This may give a better account of the dreadful malice he wreaked upon Amaſis, in revenge of his unhappy grandfather Apries; which, as is ſaid, he was excited to by his mother. But Herodotus declares it was contrary to the cuſtom of the Perſians to admit of a ſon of the half-blood to ſucceed as heir to the kingdom. Thirdly, it was reported, that a Perſian lady being admitted to the preſence of the king's women, and admiring the children of Caſſandana, was anſwered by her, That notwithſtanding ſhe was the wife of Cyrus and the mother of thoſe fine children, yet he neglected her, and preferred an Egyptian ſervant, meaning Nitetis, before her: which Cambyſes her eldeſt ſon, at that time but ten years of age, hearing, told her, her, that when he came to be a man he would for her ſake ruin all Egypt. This, ſay they, he remembered, and acted accordingly. But, notwithſtanding what is here ſaid, we chooſe to think with Dr. Prideaux, that Amaſis having ſubjected himſelf a tributary to Cyrus, upon his death withdrew his obedience from his ſucceſſor. Having thus laid before you the ſeveral cauſes of this war, as we find them, we leave Cambyſes to his preparation for it, and return to Amaſis.

Amaſis is betrayed by Phanes of Halicarnaſſus.

WHILST this cloud was gathering, Phanes of Halicarnaſſus, a commander of the Grecian auxiliaries, in the pay of Amaſis, took ſome private diſguſt, and embarked from Egypt to go into Perſia. He was a prudent counſellor, and a valiant captain, and perfectly well acquainted with every thing that related to Egypt; and beſides, had great credit with the Greeks in theſe dominions. Amaſis was immediately ſenſible how great the loſs of this man would be to him, and how much he had it in his power to ſtrengthen the hands of Cambyſes, or any prince elſe, who ſhould undertake to invade him; and therefore in all haſte he ſent a truſty eunuch with a ſwift galley to purſue him; and he was taken in Lycia. However, he was not brought back to Egypt; for making his guard drunk, he continued his way to Perſia, and preſented himſelf to Cambyſes, as he was meditating the downfal of Egypt, which he forwarded by his counſel and diſcoveries, as Amaſis had dreaded [g].

Makes Polycrates his enemy.

WE have already obſerved, that there had been an eſpecial harmony between Amaſis and Polycrates the tyrant of Samos; but, a miſunderſtanding ariſing between them, Polycrates, when occaſion offered, joined Cambyſes againſt his former Egyptian ally. For Amaſis, receiving continual accounts of the uninterrupted ſucceſſes and depredations of this Samian, feared, that in the end ſome heavy diſaſter would fall upon him, equal to the glory of his triumphs; and therefore ſent him this letter, adviſing him as follows: Amaſis to Polycrates ſpeaketh thus.----It is with pleaſure I hear of the happy ſtate of my friend and ally. Nevertheleſs I fear for thy great proſperities, knowing the unſtableneſs of fortune. For my part, I ſhould rather chooſe, that my affairs and thoſe alſo of my friends, ſhould be ſometimes proſperous and ſometimes unhappy, than have them go on with continued ſucceſs. Therefore do thou now hearken to my counſel, and do as I ſhall bid thee, to take away from thy happineſs: conſider then with thyſelf what thou poſſeſſeſt of greateſt value to thyſelf; and what would the moſt

[g] HEROD. l. 2.

bitterly

bitterly grieve thee if loſt: and when thou haſt found it, caſt it away from thee, ſo that it may never more be beheld by man. If thy happineſs, after this, knoweth no mixture of evil, preſerve thyſelf againſt the ſorrow that may come upon thee, by repeating the remedy I have ſhewn thee. When Amaſis heard that Polycrates had taken his advice, and had accordingly thrown a very valuable ſignet into the ſea, but that it was found a few days afterwards in the belly of a fiſh, and reſtored to him; he gave him over as the moſt unhappy of men, and dreading to partake as a friend in ſome diſmal calamity, which he feared muſt befal him, he diſpatched a herald to Samos to renounce the alliance, and all the obligations between him and Polycrates, that he might not mourn his misfortune with the ſorrow of a friend [h]. Amaſis, by thus diſſolving the cement of this conjunction, left Polycrates to act againſt him, if his inclination led him ſo to do; and accordingly he offered a fleet of ſhips to Cambyſes to aſſiſt him in his invaſion of Egypt. Thus we ſee Amaſis in danger of an inexorable, cruel, and moſt powerful enemy, in concert with a diſguſted and formidable friend. But before the dreadful day came his life ended, after he had reigned forty four years. His dead body was embalmed, and depoſited in a ſepulchre he had built for himſelf in the temple at Saïs; but there, to ſpeak in the antient Egyptian phraſe, he enjoyed but a ſhort repoſe, as will be ſeen hereafter. He was ſucceeded by his ſon, called Pſammenitus.

His death. Year of the Flood, 2474. Year before Chriſt, 525.

THIS following reign, in which Egypt ſubmitted to a foreign yoke, was of very ſhort duration, and deeply calamitous. For PSAMMENITUS the ſon of Amaſis was ſcarce ſeated on the throne, when he was forced to put himſelf at the head of an army, with which he marched to Peluſium, and there encamped to receive the Perſian, who now drew near to vent his fury upon Egypt. Under this new king a fearful prodigy happened: ſhowers of rain fell at Thebes, where it had never been known to rain before. This was doubtleſs conſtrued to portend a change, and a great one ſoon followed it: for now Cambyſes, by the aid and aſſiſtance of the king of Arabia, and the politic counſel of Phanes, had croſſed the dry and ſandy deſerts, and coming in ſight of the Egyptian camp, immediately drew up to give them battle. The Egyptians prepared themſelves for an aſſault, and in the interim their Carian and Ionian auxiliaries gave a dreadful inſtance of their zeal in the cauſe of Pſammenitus, and deteſtation of their traiterous countryman Phanes. For they led his ſons he had Pſammenitus.

He is overthrown by Cambyſes

[h] Idem l. 3.

left

left behind him out of the camp, and butchered them over a bowl, which received their blood in sight of the father and his new friends; and pouring wine and water into the same, drank of that cruel and unnatural mixture, and then began the onset. The fight was obstinately maintained on both sides; but in the end the Egyptians gave ground and fled in great confusion to Memphis. Here they soon after were guilty of a horrid and imprudent outrage towards a herald, whom Cambyses sent to them in a ship of Mytelene; for they no sooner saw her come into the port than they flocked down to the shore, and destroyed the ship, and tore the Persian herald and all the crew to pieces, carrying their mangled limbs in a barbarous triumph into the city. Not long after, they were closely besieged by the Persians, and in the end obliged to surrender: and so fell the glory of Egypt. The news of this struck such a terror upon the minds of the Libyans, Cyrenæans, and Barcæans, that they humbled themselves to Cambyses, and implored his protection.

Taken prisoner, and loses his kingdom.

The particulars of his captivity.

Upon the tenth day after Memphis had been taken, Psammenitus and the chief of the Egyptian nobility were sent ignominiously into the suburbs of that city, to act a part in one of the most doleful tragedies that can be conceived: for, being there seated in a proper place, he saw his daughter coming along in the habit of a poor slave, with a pitcher to fetch water from the river, and followed by the daughters of the greatest families in Egypt, all in the same miserable garb, and going on the same errand, with pitchers in their hands; all weeping and wailing with the utmost lamentation. When the fathers saw their children in this distress, and reduced to so sordid a degradation, they burst out into tears, and could not contain themselves, all but Psammenitus, who, though ready to sink under the burthen of his grief, only threw his eyes towards the ground, and there fixed them. These past by, came the son of Psammenitus and two thousand of the chief Egyptian youths, all with bits in their mouths, and halters round their necks, going to be executed, to expiate the murder of the Persian herald and Mytelenæan sailors. But Psammenitus, like one perfectly stupified, as they passed by, observed the very same conduct as before, whilst the Egyptians about him cried out with the loudest lamentations. A short space afterwards he saw an intimate friend and companion, who, now that he was advanced in years, was plundered of all he had, and walking up and down the suburbs begging his bread. As soon as he perceived this man he wept bitterly, and calling out to him by his name, struck himself on the head as one frantic. Now Psammenitus had spies privately set

ſet over him to mark his behaviour, and they inſtantly repaired to Cambyſes, and gave him a particular account of it; and ſoon after a meſſenger came from him to the captive king to know what might be the reaſon of it. To this he anſwered, "That the calamities of his own family confounded him, "and were too great to be lamented by any outward ſigns of "grief; but the diſtreſſed neceſſity of a boſom friend gave "him more room for reflection, and therefore extorted tears "from him." By this anſwer he wrought ſo much upon Cambyſes, that he ſent to ſtop the execution of his ſon; but his orders were given too late; for the young prince was the firſt put to death. At the ſame time Pſammenitus himſelf was ſent for into the city, and reſtored to his libery: and had he not betrayed a deſire of change and revenge, he might have been entruſted with the adminiſtration of Egypt; but being vindictively diſpoſed, he was ſeized, and condemned to drink bull's blood [i]; and ſo ended his life after a diſmal reign of ſix months, and a ſhort captivity; and with him died the antient ſplendour and liberty of Egypt. and death.

THE Egyptians now felt the heavy preſſure of conqueſt in a very extraordinary manner. They ſaw their late king Amaſis inhumanly taken out of his tomb, and cruelly mangled, and finally burnt. They ſaw their god Apis ſlain, and their prieſts ignominiouſly ſcourged; all which made ſuch dreadful impreſſions on the minds of the whole nation, that they afterwards bore a moſt uncommon averſion to the Perſians, and never reſted eaſy under their dominion. The dead body of Amaſis burnt; and the god Apis ſlain.

THUS were the Egyptians reduced to the loweſt degree of ſubmiſſion; their royal line was extinct; their religion was trampled on in the moſt outrageous manner; and themſelves perſecuted and deſpiſed for the profeſſion they made of it. Egypt a province of the Perſian empire.

A PEOPLE, who had been bred up to ſuch a ſolemn obſervance of the inſtitutions of their forefathers, muſt needs think themſelves unhappy under ſuch governors as held their laws in deriſion; and therefore they continually conſulted, how they might ſhake off the intolerable yoke of their Perſian oppreſſors.

AT length they broke out into an open revolt in the reign of Darius Hyſtaſpes, and continued in a ſtate of rebellion againſt the Perſians all the firſt year of Xerxes [k]; but in the ſecond year [l] of the ſame prince they were reduced to harder ſubjection than before, as is uſually the caſe; and had one Achæmenes, brother to Xerxes, for their governor. The Egyptians revolt from the Perſians; but ſubdued again.

[i] HEROD. lib. 2. [k] HEROD. lib. 7. [l] Idem ibid.

BUT

Year of the Flood, 2539. Year before Christ, 460.

Revolt a second time, and choose Inarus for their king.

But the more severity they suffered, the more they were exasperated. In the fifth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus they revolted again; chose Inarus king of Libya to fill their throne; and called in the Athenians to their assistance, who chearfully embraced this opportunity of expelling the Persians out of Egypt [m]. The Egyptians almost succeeded in their project. The Athenians falling on the Persian fleet at sea, took and destroyed fifty sail of them; and then sailing up the Nile, landed under the command of Charitimis, and joined the Egyptians and Libyans under Inarus. They all attacked Achæmenides the Persian general, though his army was 300,000 strong; of whom there fell 100,000, together with the general himself. The rest betook themselves to flight, and returned to Memphis; but, being pursued by the Egyptians, they took refuge in a very considerable, and by much the best fortified, part of that city, called the white wall. The Egyptians had the rest of it, and blocked up the Persians three years within the white wall.

By this success the Egyptians hoped they had wrought a total deliverance for themselves and descendants; but their prosperity was by no means of long duration. They were at the end of three years obliged to raise the siege of the white wall, by the Persian army under the command of Artabazus governor of Cilicia, and Megabyzus governor of Syria [n]. In the mean time, when Inarus heard of the formidable preparations, which were making by these Persian governors to relieve the besieged, he redoubled the attacks on the white wall, and made the utmost efforts to carry it; but the Persians within defended themselves with such bravery, that the Egyptians made no considerable progress towards the reduction of the place [o].

In the third year of this siege, and the ninth of Artaxerxes, Inarus and his auxiliaries were not only obliged to raise the siege of the white wall, but also defeated with a fearful slaughter, which fell chiefly on the Egyptians. In this fight Inarus was wounded by Megabyzus; but nevertheless he retreated with his Athenian confederates, and such of the Egyptians as adhered to him, to the city of Biblus in the island of Prosopitis, which being washed on each side by navigable branches of the Nile, the Athenian fleet was stationed in one of them; and here they held out a siege of a year and a half. But

[m] Thucydid. lib. i. Ctesias. Diod. Sic. l. xi.

[n] Thucydid. ubi supr. Ctesias. Diod. ubi supr. p. 281.

[o] Ctesias. Diod.

the

the bulk of the Egyptians ſubmitted to the conqueror, and acknowledged Artaxerxes for their ſovereign; all but Amyrtæus; he retreated with a party into the Fens, where he ruled many years; not in the leaſt moleſted by the Perſians, who were never able to get at him through the inacceſſibleneſs of the place.

IN the mean time Inarus and his auxiliaries on the iſland of Proſopitis were buſy in defending themſelves againſt the Perſians, who attacked them with great vigour: but theſe finding that bare ſtrength was not like to effectuate a reduction of the beſieged, had recourſe to art and ſtratagem; for draining that branch of the Nile in which the Athenian fleet rode, they at once rendered the ſhipping uſeleſs, and made a paſſage, by which the whole body of their army might march over to the iſland. When Inarus ſaw this, he and all the Egyptians, and fifty of his Athenian auxiliaries delivered themſelves up to Megabyzus, on the condition of being ſecured in their lives: the reſt of the Athenians, being ſix thouſand in number, ſet fire to their ſhips, reſolved to die ſword in hand; which the Perſians perceiving, thought it adviſeable to offer them ſome reaſonable terms: and this they did, and their propoſals were accepted [p]. The Athenians had ſent a fleet of fifty ſail to relieve the iſland of Proſopitis, where their citizens were in conjunction with the Egyptians; but they arrived too late, and as ſoon as they entered the river were aſſaulted by the Perſians, both on the river and from the ſhore; ſo that they all periſhed [q]. And thus ended the war between Inarus king of Egypt and Artaxerxes king of Perſia, under whom the Egyptians ever afterwards kept quiet, and made no attempts to recover their liberties. Sartamas was appointed governor of Egypt, and Inarus was carried priſoner to Suſa, and was there crucified, notwithſtanding the promiſe he had of his life when he ſurrendered [r].

Inarus taken priſoner, and Egypt reduced again to the Perſians.

AMYRTÆUS the Saïte in the mean time held the Fens, and in the fifteenth year of Artaxerxes was joined by a fleet of ſixty ſail of Athenian ſhips [s]; but nothing of moment was tranſacted at this time to the prejudice of the Perſians in Egypt.

IN the tenth year of Darius Nothus, the Egyptians revolted once more from the Perſians. For Amyrtæus, being apprized of the diſcontents of the Egyptians, and that they were ripe for any attempts to regain their liberty and independance,

The Egyptians revolt a third time, and Amyrtæus heads them.

[p] THUCYDID. ubi ſupr. CTESIAS. DIOD. ubi ſupr. p. 282.
[q] THUCYDID. ubi ſupr. [r] CTESIAS. [s] PLUTARCH in vita Cimon. THUCYDID. ubi ſupr. DIOD. ubi ſupr. p.

ſallied

ſallied out of his Fens, and being joined by all the Egyptians, he drove the Perſians out of the kingdom, and became king of the whole country of Egypt [t].

Year of the Flood, 2583. Year before Chriſt, 414.

AMYRTÆUS thus in poſſeſſion of the kingdom of Egypt by the total expulſion of the Perſians, reſolved to attack them in Phœnicia alſo, having the Arabians in confederacy with him in this undertaking [u]. But he was engaged by Darius in perſon and overthrown; about which time Amyrtæus either died or was ſlain in the battle.

Amyrtæus dies.

PAUSIRIS his ſon ſucceeded him in the kingdom, with the conſent of the Perſians [w]. And now the Egyptians, though perhaps tributary to the Perſians, had a governor of their own nation to alleviate the burthen of it.

Pauſiris.

PSAMMITICHUS ſucceeded Pauſiris. He was deſcended from the famous Pſammitichus, whoſe hiſtory we have given above. He was a barbarous and ungrateful man, as appears by the only incident we have of his reign: for Tamus, who had been admiral in the Perſian ſervice, though he was a Memphite by birth, thinking it adviſeable for reaſons of ſtate to leave the Perſian ſervice, and confiding in the friendſhip of Pſammitichus, whom he had formerly obliged by many friendly offices, put all his family and effects on board his ſhips, and ſailed for Egypt. But when Pſammitichus heard of his arrival, and that he had brought great riches with him, he unmindful of what Tamus merited of him, and of all the laws of humanity and hoſpitality, fell upon him as an enemy; and having ſlain him, his family, and all his followers, ſeized on thoſe treaſures which Tamus hoped to have enjoyed in his native country [x]. This is all we know concerning this cruel prince.

Nephereus.

HIM ſucceeded NEPHEREUS. This king was invited by the Lacedemonians into a confederacy againſt the Perſians; and he ſent them a ſquadron of an hundred gallies to carry on the war by ſea, and 600,000 meaſures [buſhels] of corn for the ſubſiſtance of their army; but the veſſels, which were laden with this valuable preſent, ignorantly putting into Rhodes, whoſe inhabitants had juſt then thrown themſelves under the protection of the Perſian fleet, which then rode at anchor there under the command of Conon the Athenian, they fell a prey to him, and never reached the Lacedemonians [y].

[t] EUSEBIUS in Chronico. [u] DIOD. SIC. lib. 13. p. 355. [w] HEROD. lib. 3. [x] DIOD. SIC. lib. 14. p. 415. [y] Idem. ubi ſupr. p. 438. JUSTIN. lib. 6. c. 2. OROSIUS lib. 3.

ACHORIS ſucceeded Nephereus. He joined Evagoras king of Cyprus, and the Arabians, and Tyrians, and Barcæans, a people of Libya, againſt the Perſians [z]. Achoris ſent ſome forces to the aſſiſtance of Evagoras, the chief of this league, who being defeated came into Egypt, to engage Achoris to aſſiſt him with his full ſtrength; but Achoris could not be prevailed on to come ſo totally into his meaſures, and only diſmiſſed him with a ſupply of money, by no means equal to the neceſſitous occaſions of that diſtreſſed prince. Soon after Gaus, the only ſurvivor of the family of Tamus, whom Pſammitichus murdered for the ſake of his wealth, and as well as his father had been now promoted to the degree of an admiral in the Perſian ſervice, being diſguſted at the ill uſage of Tiribazus, the king of Perſia's general in the former part of the Cyprian war againſt Evagoras, revolted from the Perſians, in which he was followed by a great part of the fleet and army; and entered into a league with Achoris and the Lacedemonians. But the year after Gaus was treacherouſly ſlain by ſome under him; and Tachos, who had undertaken to execute the ſame project, dying in the midſt of it, the whole fell to the ground, and the Perſians were freed from the troubleſome effects which threatened them from this new alliance [a]. Achoris.

IT was now thirty years ſince the Egyptians had ſhaken off the Perſian yoke under Amyrtæus, and had all along, upon all occaſions, ſignalized their averſion to the Perſian government. But Artaxerxes Mnemon being now at full leiſure to chaſtiſe them, they once more were threatened with a cruel war. Great preparations were made on both ſides. Achoris joined a great number of Greeks and other mercenaries, under the command of Chabrias the Athenian, to his own ſubjects [b]; but, the Perſians being pretty dilatory in their proceeding towards this war, Achoris died before it commenced, and was ſucceeded by PSAMMUTHIS, who reigned only a year [c]. Pſammuthis.

AFTER him NEPHEROTES (who is called the laſt of the Mendeſian race) reigned four months [d]. Nepherotes.

AND then NECTANEBES, the firſt of the Sebennytic race *. In the ſecond year of his reign the Perſian army and fleet came upon his coaſts and borders, and made their attempts firſt upon Peluſium: but Nectanebes having had time ſufficient to prepare himſelf, that city and adjacencies were ſo well provided for the reception of an enemy, that no impreſſion Nectanebes. Year of the Flood, 2618. Year before Chriſt 379.

[z] THEOPOMP. in Excerpt. Photii. DIOD. SIC. lib. 15. p. 459.
[a] Idem ibid. [b] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 471. [c] See Vol. I. p. 500. [d] See Vol. I. ibid. * See Vol. I. ibid.

could be made there. The commanders on the Perſian ſide differing in their counſels, and entertaining jealouſies of each other's glory, they did nothing in this war; for though they entered the Mendeſian mouth of the Nile, and poſſeſſed themſelves of the fortreſs that guarded it, and ſtruck the Egyptians with the utmoſt conſternation; yet they gave them time to recover heart again: For Nectanebes lodged a ſufficient garriſon in Memphis, and taking the field, with the reſt of his forces, ſo annoyed Pharnabazus the Perſian general, that he could make no conſiderable progreſs up the country; and the Nile, at the accuſtomed period, overflowing the land, the Perſians were obliged to march off; which they did not without conſiderable loſs[e]. Thus ended this war.

About five years afterwards, Ageſilaus king of Sparta came as an ambaſſador to Nectanebes, to ſollicite ſuccours for the Lacedemonians, then driven to great diſtreſs by the Thebans[f]. Seven years after this Nectanebes died.

Year of the Flood, 2630. Year before Chriſt 367.

Tachos.

His impolitic conduct towards Ageſilaus.

Tachos ſucceeded him. He gathered together all the ſtrength he was able, to defend his country againſt the ambitious deſigns of the Perſians, who notwithſtanding their many miſcarriages, had not laid aſide the thoughts of ſubjecting Egypt to their dominion once more.

To ſtrengthen himſelf the more he ſent to Greece to raiſe mercenaries; and ſucceeded ſo well in his application to the Lacedemonians, that they diſpatched a good number of forces to him, under the command of Ageſilaus[g]. Tachos had promiſed this king, that he ſhould be generaliſſimo of all the forces; but upon the firſt interview, he conceived ſuch diſadvantageous ideas of the old gentleman, that he thenceforward ſlighted his counſels, and deſpiſed his perſon. He expected to have ſeen a gay and magnificent man, whoſe habit and train were equal to the fame and ſplendour of his exploits, and not a plain, mean-looking, old man. This haſty and ill-grounded impreſſion may be properly enough ſaid to have been the ruin of Tachos, as will be plainly ſeen. For Tachos allowed Ageſilaus to be nothing but general over the mercenaries at land, which alone had been ſufficient to diſguſt ſo great, ſo old, and ſo experienced a commander, and was the firſt cauſe of his averſion to Tachos. The command of the fleet he gave to Chabrias the Athenian, reſerving to himſelf the ſupreme dignity over all. Having joined his mercenaries and Egyptians together, he marched out of Egypt, deſigning

[e] Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 478, 479. Cornel. Nepos, in Iphicrate. [f] Plutarch. in Ageſilao. [g] Idem ibid. Diod. ubi ſupr. p. 506.

to

A Map of Ancient Egypt and its Circumadjacencies according to this History

THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA

33 32 31 30 29 28 27 26 25 24 23

Canopus
The Canopic or Bolbitic Mouth
The Sebennytic
Diod. Boud.
The Phatnic
The Mendesian
The Tanitic
The Pelusian
Rhinocolura
Ostracine
Alexandria
DELTA Pelusium
Augustanmica
LAKE MARIA
Lake Maria
Bubastes
Plinthine MARE OTIS
Sebennytus
Memphis
Babylon
Heliopolis
Lake Mœris
Athribis
Aphroditopolis
Arsinoe
Oxyrynchus
Heracleopolis
Cynopolis
Hermopolis
Oases the Lesser
Lycopolis
Antæopolis
City of Nemus
Panopolis
Crocodilopolis
Ptolemais
Abydus
Thebes
Coptos
Diospolis parva
The lesser City of Apollo
Oasis the Greater
Tentyra
Thebes the Great or Diospolis magna Pampanis
Hermonthis
Tuphium
Chenebis
Latopolis
Elethya
Ombi
The greater City of Apollo
Syene
Elephantine
Cataracts the Lesser
Philæ
LIBYA
MARMARICA
CATABATHMUS
THE TROPICK OF CANCER
CANAAN
Sea of Tiberias
Dead Sea
MOAB
AMMON
PART OF ARABIA the DESART
EDOM
Heroopolis
ARABIA PETRÆA
M. Sinai
The Heroopolitan Gulf
The Elanitic Gulf
THE ARABIAN GULF or RED SEA
MIDIAN
PART OF ARABIA the HAPPY to attack the Perſians in Phœnicia, contrary to the advice of Ageſilaus, who repreſented to him the unſettled ſtate of Egypt, and remonſtrated how much more it would be for his intereſt to manage the war by lieutenants, and ſtay himſelf in his kingdom. The event ſhewed, that Ageſilaus's counſel was the reſult of a very prudent forecaſt; for while Tachos was in Phœnicia the Egyptians revolted, and ſet up his kinſman Nectanebus in his ſtead. Ageſilaus, taking this opportunity to vent his reſentment againſt Tachos, joined Nectanebus, and deprived the other of his kingdom, who fled through Arabia, and went to the king of Perſia.

Is driven out of his kingdom. Year of the Flood, 2630. Year before Chriſt 367.

NECTANEBUS was ſcarce ſeated on the throne, when a Mendeſian roſe up in oppoſition to him, with a force conſiſting of 100,000 men. Nectanebus was now adviſed by Ageſilaus to fall on them immediately, and diſperſe them before they had formed themſelves into a regular body by diſcipline: but he took it into his head, that Ageſilaus intended to betray him, as he had betrayed Tachos, and therefore gave no ear to him. In the mean time the enemy gathered ſtrength and regular order every day, and became ſo formidable a body, that Nectanebus was conſtrained to ſhut himſelf up in one of his Towns, and endure a ſiege. He would now have urged Ageſilaus to ſally out upon the beſiegers, that, putting them into diſorder, he might in the mean time march out himſelf and take the field: and becauſe he refuſed to comply, Nectanebus grew more and more jealous of him. The enemy had run their lines almoſt round the town; which when Ageſilaus perceived, he told Nectanebus, that now was his time to ſally out; that by the lines the beſiegers had raiſed, they would not be able to encompaſs him; and that the gap which was not yet filled up, was wide enough for him to march through with ſafety and convenience. Hereupon a battle enſued, in which the beſiegers were defeated; and the remaining part of the war being left to the management of Ageſilaus, Nectanebus's competitor was every where driven out of the field, and at length taken priſoner. And thus was Nectanebus ſettled in the full and quiet poſſeſſion of the kingdom of Egypt [h].

Nectanebus the laſt King of Egypt.

A rebellion againſt him.

which is quelled.

IN the twelfth year of his reign, the Sidonians and Phœnicians revolted from the king of Perſia, and entered into a confederacy with him againſt that monarch. This happened very opportunely for him; for as the Perſians had been in conſtant agitation againſt him, and were now making vaſt preparations to reclaim Egypt, he had a very good barrier, ſeeing the Perſian forces could not approach his borders, but by

He is joined by the Sidonians, Phœnicians, and Cypriots, againſt the Perſians.

[h] Idem ibid. PLUTARCH. ubi ſupr.

marching through Phœnicia. Therefore, to keep up their ſpirits, Nectanebus detached a body of four thouſand Greek mercenaries, under the command of Mentor the Rhodian, to join them, in hopes to manage the war at a diſtance. The Phœnicians, encouraged by this ſupply, drove the Perſians out of their territories [i]; and immediately after, the Cypriots made themſelves of the alliance againſt Perſia [k]. Darius Ochus, finding that his lieutenants made no progreſs in the ſuppreſſion of theſe revolters, reſolved to head his troops in perſon, keeping his eye chiefly upon Egypt. Mentor the Rhodian when he heard this, and the prodigious numbers of the Perſian army, went over to the king of Perſia, by whom he was kindly received, as one who might do him ſignal ſervice by his knowledge of the country of Egypt, and every thing that related to it: but we are not now on the affairs of Perſia, which will be particularized in their proper place; let us therefore turn our eyes towards Nectanebus. When he found that the king of Perſia was thoroughly reſolved to ruin him, and that he was by all means endeavouring to do it without interruption, and effectually, he got together an army of 100,000 men, conſiſting of 20,000 mercenaries from Greece, as many from Libya, and the reſt Egyptians; but all of them did not amount to a third part of the Perſian army. With ſome of them he gariſoned his frontier-towns, and with the others he guarded the paſſes through which the Perſians were to march. The Perſian detached three bodies from his army. The firſt of them, commanded by Lachares the Theban, ſat down before Peluſium, gariſoned by five thouſand Greeks. The ſecond, under the command of Nicoſtratus the Argive, embarked on board a ſquadron of the Perſian fleet, and ſailing up the Nile into the midſt of the country, landed there, and made a ſtrong encampment. Hereupon the whole country being alarmed, Clinius of the iſland of Cos muſtered all the neighbouring gariſons, and offered to diſlodge Nicoſtratus from his intrenchments. This led them to a battle, which was fought with great obſtinacy; but at laſt the Egyptians gave way, having loſt Clinius and five thouſand more of their number, and were utterly broken and diſperſed. The loſs of this battle was the ruin of Egypt. For when Nectanebus heard it, he drew off from the paſſes, where he had very prudently poſted himſelf, and marched for Memphis to defend that city againſt Nicoſtratus, whom he feared had a deſign upon that capital with his victorious fleet and army. When

Is invaded by the Perſians.

[i] Diod. lib. 16. p. 531, 532, 533. [k] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 532.

the

the Greek garison in Pelusium heard that Nectanebus had deserted his post, they thought there was no further room for hope; and therefore they came to a parley with Lachares, and delivered up the city to him, upon condition that they and their effects should be safely conveyed to Greece. Mentor the Rhodian, who commanded the third body of the Persian detachment, finding the passes unguarded, entered the country through them, and causing it to be universally spread abroad, That Ochus would graciously receive all that submitted; but utterly cut off such as resisted, as he had been known to have done before; both the Egyptians and the Egyptian Greeks strove which should make the most humble and ready submission. This when Nectanebus saw, he was driven to despair, and taking what treasure he could carry with him, he fled from his palace in Memphis into Æthiopia, and never returned more. He was the very last Egyptian that ever governed Egypt, which has ever since been under foreign subjection. Nectanebes lost his kingdom by relying too much on himself. He, as has been shewn, was seated on the throne by Agesilaus: his wars against Persia (for they were always attempting a reduction of Egypt) were managed by the prudence and valour of Diophantus the Athenian, and Lamius the Lacedemonian; but arrogating to himself a share of their successes, he took upon him to act by his own suggestions [l], and so brought ruin upon himself, and ignominy and slavery upon his subjects, even to this day. For henceforward Egypt was a province of Persia, till Alexander subverted that monarchy, and was received by the Egyptians with open arms, as their deliverer from the Persian tyranny. They never had any tolerable understanding with that nation; which, it is likely, may have purely, if not chiefly, been owing to the wide difference between them in religious matters. We now conclude this section with the severe prediction of the prophet; There shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt [m].

and flies into Æthiopia.

Egypt finally reduced by the Persians.

Year of the Flood, 2642.

Year before Christ 355.

Submits to Alexander.

Year of the Flood, 2660.

Year before Christ 337.

SECT. VI.

The succession of the kings of Egypt, according to the oriental historians.

AS the oriental histories differ entirely from the Greeks in their accounts of the Egyptian affairs, it may be perhaps deemed an omission, if we should take no notice of the series of the kings of Egypt given us by the Eastern writers.

[l] Idem ubi supr. p. 534, 535.

[m] Ezek. xxx. ver. 13.

writers. Wherefore we shall set down their names, and briefly mention their principal actions, leaving the reader to judge what credit ought to be given thereto.

Some write, that before the flood Nakraüs, or Bakraüs, the son of Mesr, the son of Tarakil, the son of Zarayîl, the son of Aryan, the son of Adam, when contention and violence began to reign among mankind, retired into Egypt with seventy eight persons; and finding it a fine fruitful country, settled there, and built a city on the banks of the Nile, which he called after the name of his father[n]. But this city, others say, was built after the flood, as will be observed by and by; and that the kings who reigned in Egypt before that destruction, were of the race of Cain. Their names follow.

Antediluvian kings of Egypt.

1. Nakraus called also Amasûs; who reigned 180 years.
2. Natras, son of Nakraüs, built several cities.
3. Mesram, brother of Natrâs. These three princes are said to have been great diviners and magicians.
4. Aicam also practised divination. In his reign Edrîs, or Enoch, was translated.
5. Aryak, son of the preceding prince. In his time the angels Harût and Marût, it is said came down from heaven[o].
6. Hasilim, who first invented and built a nilometer.
7. Husal. In his reign Noah was born.
8. Tedarson, son of Hûsál, was the first who cut canals from the Nile.
9. Sarkak.
10. Sahluk, his son.
11. Saurid, son of Sahlûk. This prince, as the Copts affirm, built the pyramids, and lies buried in one of them, with all his treasures[p].
12. Hujib, brother of Saurîd; who, as the same people assure us, is buried in the next pyramid[q].
13. Manus, or Mankaüs.
14. Afrus, his son.
15. Malinus, son of Afrûs.
16. Pharaoh, cousin of the last prince; who perished in the flood.

After the flood, Kibt, or Kût (which we imagine to be a mistake for Phût,) one of the sons of Ham, founded a monarchy in Egypt; and the greater part of that nation were [n] Al Soyuti, Vol. I. p. 404.

[o] See Vol. I. p. 168. in the notes.

[p] See

[q] Ibid.

his

his deſcendants [r]. But after the diſperſion, Ham himſelf went into Egypt, and there begat Baiſer; who having ſettled near the place where he afterwards built Meſr, was declared by the idolatrous inhabitants of the country king of Monf, or Memphis, the moſt antient city of Egypt and the royal ſeat in the time of Joſeph.

Kings of Egypt after the deluge.

1. BAISER, the ſon of Ham, built Meſr; being aſſiſted therein by Cancahendi, or Cancah the Indian, a perſon famous for his great learning and knowledge in nature, and the inventer of ſeveral noble arts; by whoſe ſkill in architecture this prince erected many magnificent ſtructures.

2. MESR, the ſon of Baiſer, ſucceeded his father. He was ſo named becauſe he happened to be born while the city of Meſr was building. This prince was employed, during his whole reign, in building cities, and warring againſt his enemies. It is ſaid, he divided Egypt among his ſons, giving the middle part to Kift, the upper to Aſhmun, and the lower to Athrib and Sa.

3. KIFT, or Kibt aſcended the throne on the death of his father Meſr; and from him the Copts received their name.

4. ASHMUN who ſeems to be the ſame with Eſmunus, or Æſculapius [f], ſucceeded his brother; though ſome reckon him not among the kings. From him the city Aſhmunain in the upper Egypt took its name.

5. ATHRIB, the ſon of Meſr, built Ain Shams, or Heliopolis, ſome miles diſtant from Meſr. Athribis, the capital of a nome in the lower Egypt, was ſo called from this prince.

6. SANA, or Sa, another ſon of Meſr, is ſuppoſed to have built the city Saïs; and was the firſt who made laws, and eſtabliſhed rules for the government of the ſtate.

7. TEDARIS, or Edris.

8. MALIK.

9. KHARAYA, the ſon of Malik.

10. KELKELI, the ſon of Kharâya, a wiſe and potent prince. Some ſay, he was the firſt who introduced the uſe of magic, which others tell us, was firſt taught Solomon by the Genii.

11. HARBIYA, the uncle of Kelkeli, of whom nothing is recorded, but that he was an infidel, and very wicked.

[r] EBN SHOHNAH. [f] See Vol. I. p. 302. note (P.)

12. Tulis was as bad as his predeceſſor, and a great lover of women; to obtain whom he ſcrupled not, on occaſion, to uſe force. In his reign Abraham came into Egypt, and knowing the king's character, to preſerve the honour of his wife Sarah, ſhut her up in a cheſt, thinking to paſs the guards poſted at the city gate by that means; but they, opening the cheſt, and finding a beautiful woman in it, carried her before the king. Tulis no ſooner ſaw her, than he determined to enjoy her; but was not able to effect his purpoſe, being ſuddenly ſtruck with frigidity; ſo that after he had in vain attempted it thrice, he was obliged to deſiſt, and ſent her back to her huſband, having given her Hagar for a maid-ſervant, as ſome reparation for the affront he had offered her; but ſtill continued an infidel.

13. Juriak Khatûn, daughter of Tulis.

14. Dhalka, or Zalkâ, daughter of Manûn Khatûn. This princeſs being unable to defend her kingdom, Walîd, the ſon of Thardân, king of the Amalekites, who originally dwelt in Syria, took that opportunity of invading Egypt; and, having ſubdued the Copts, ſeized the crown. Theſe Amalekites ſeem to have been the ſame people who are by the Greek hiſtorians ſtiled Shepherds; whoſe invaſion of Egypt was, in all probability, a famous piece of hiſtory in the eaſt.

15. Walid, the firſt king of Egypt, of the race of Amalek, took the ſurname of Pharaoh, which in the Coptic tongue ſignifies King, and was uſed by all his ſucceſſors. He is ſaid to have been an impious man, and rebellious againſt God; and delighting too much in hunting, and paſſing his time abroad and in the deſerts for the ſake of that exerciſe, he was at length ſlain.

16. Riyan, the ſon of Walid, ſucceeded his father; and firſt dwelt at Ain Shams, but afterwards removed to Memphis. In his reign Joſeph was ſold into Egypt, and having lain in priſon twelve years, was at length delivered thence, on his interpreting of a dream, and being brought to court, was made Wazir (or Viſir) in the room of Kolfair, and had the management of the whole kingdom put into his hands. This Riyan is reported to have embraced the true religion, and to have been a ſtrict adminiſtrator of juſtice. One author [t] tells us, that he ſpoke no leſs than ſeventy different languages; in every one of which he put queſtions to Joſeph, who anſwered him in the ſame. This prince flouriſhed four hundred years before the Pharaoh of Moſes.

[t] Kitab Tafasir.

17. Darem,

17. DAREM, the ſon of Riyân, was an impious perſon, rebellious againſt heaven, and exceſſively proud; for which he was, by a juſt judgment of GOD, drowned in the Nile.

18. CATHIM, the ſon of Mádan, an Amalekite, was famous throughout the world for the magnificent buildings erected by him. Some aſcribe the pyramids to this prince; adding, that thoſe ſtructures being in after-times propoſed to be demoliſhed, for the ſake of the treaſures hidden in them, that deſign was laid aſide, on a remonſtrance of the wiſe men of the country; who made it appear, that the riches, which might be found in them, would not countervail the charge of pulling them down. Cathim was the laſt king of Egypt, of the race of the Amalekites.

SOME writers ſay, that the Wazir of Cathim ſucceeded to the crown, and was the Pharaoh of Moſes; but the more exact, leaving out both theſe laſt princes, tell us, that Kiyân was ſucceeded by his grandſon.

19. KABUS, the ſon of Maſáb [u], who being invited by Joſeph to embrace the true religion, refuſed, and died ſoon after that patriarch. Some hiſtorians will have Kabûs to be the Pharaoh of Moſes, pretending, that he lived ſix hundred and twenty years, and reigned four hundred; which is more reaſonable, at leaſt, than the opinion of thoſe who imagine his father Maſáb, or his grandfather Riyân, to have been that Pharaoh [w].

20. WALID, the brother of Kabûs, is generally ſuppoſed to be that king of Egypt with whom Moſes had to do, and who was drowned in the Red-ſea. Moſt of the commentators on the Korân tell us this prince was an Arab, of the tribe of Ad, or, as others ſay, of Amalek, who were alſo Arabians; though ſome pretend he was of Coptic deſcent. What the oriental authors write concerning this Pharaoh, and his conteſts with Moſes, we may take notice of in another place.

21. DALUKA, ſurnamed al Ajûz, or the old woman, of the royal blood, ſucceeded the Pharaoh who periſhed in the Red-ſea. This queen is ſaid to have been the moſt expert woman of her time in magic. She lived an hundred years; and encompaſſed the city of Meſr with walls which were looked on as one of the wonders of the world; and ſome attribute the pyramids to her.

22. DARKUN, the ſon of Maltûs, came to the crown very young; and, being of an illuſtrious family among the Copts, was greatly beloved and reverenced by his ſubjects.

23. TARDAS reigned a long time.

[u] Ibid. [w] KITAB TAFASIR LEBAB, et al KESHAF.

24. LOFASH

24. Lofash ſucceeded; but who he was is unknown.
25. Marina.
26. Malus.
27. Manakil.
28. Bula. The actions of theſe ſix laſt kings are not recorded; and there ſeems to be an omiſſion of ſome intermediate princes; as alſo between the two following.

29. Ashyaf; or, as Ebn Shohnah more correctly writes the name, Shiſhâk, was contemporary with Solomon; and after his death took Jeruſalem, and greatly diſtreſſed the Iſraelites.

30. Pharaoh, ſurnamed al Araj, or the lame. In his time Nebuchadnezzar, governor of Babylon, led an army of 600,000 men againſt Jeruſalem, and ſlew a third part of the Iſraelites, carried a third part of them into captivity, and impoſed a tribute on the remaining third. But many of them flying into Egypt, he purſued them thither, and demanded them of Pharaoh; who refuſing to deliver them up, Nebuchadnezzar beſieged his capital city Meſr; and having taken it, hanged him. Then he burnt and demoliſhed the city, and proceeded forward into Africa. Meſr, they ſay, remained deſolate forty years; but was afterwards rebuilt, and the nation ruled by governors, who reſided there, firſt for the kings of Perſia of the ſecond race, called Cayânians; then for Alexander, who conquered Perſia: afterwards for the Greek kings, or Ptolemies; and at length for the Romans, and the Chriſtian emperors of Conſtantinople, who held Egypt till it was ſubdued by Amru Ebn al As, a general of Omar, the ſecond Khaliff, or ſucceſſor of Mohammed; ever ſince which that kingdom has been in the hands of Mohammedan princes [x].

There is a ſeries of the kings of Egypt ſomewhat different from this, given by a Jewiſh hiſtorian [y]: but as the names are moſt of them corrupted, and ſeem to have been originally taken from the Arab writers, we ſhall not trouble the reader with them; having perhaps already ſaid too much of ſo apocryphal a piece of hiſtory.

[x] Ex libro Mirat Cainat dicto. [y] R. Abr. Zacuth, in libro Juchaſin.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

The History of the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, Edomites, Amalekites, Canaanites, and Philistines.

SECT. I.

The History of Moab.

The descent of the Moabites.

DESIGNING in this chapter to write the histories of those nations with whom the children of Israel had to do, before, or upon their settling in the land of Canaan, we shall begin with that of the Moabites.

THIS people were descended from Moab the son of Lot, by his eldest daughter: but before we mention the occasion of that incest, it may be proper to take the history a little higher.

The life of Lot their ancestor.

LOT was the son of Haran, the brother of Abraham; and after his father's death was brought by his grandfather Terah, together with the rest of his family, from Ur of the Chaldees, their native city, to Haran in Mesopotamia; where Terah dying, Abraham afterwards took his nephew under his protection, and, as Josephus tells us [a], adopted him, despairing of any children of his own. He therefore carried him with him into Canaan [b]; where, after they had dwelt some time, they were obliged by a famine to go into Egypt [c]; soon after their return from whence, they parted: for their flocks and herds were so much encreased by this time, and their substance was so great, that they could not dwell together any longer; the pasture and water not being sufficient for both; which occasioning disputes betwen their herdsmen, Abraham proposed to prevent any misunderstanding between so near relations, that they should separate; and gave [z] See Vol. I. p. 294. [a] Antiq l. 1. c. 7. [b] Gen. xii. 4, &c.

[c] Gen. xii. 10, & xiii. 1.

Lot

Lot the choice of removing to what part of the country he thought fit. Whereupon Lot chose the plain of Jordan, lying eastward of Bethel and Ai, between which Abraham and he then dwelt, and which, at that time, before the terrible destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, was so fruitful and well watered, that it is compared to the land of Egypt, and even to Paradise it self [d]. To this delightful plain or valley therefore Lot came, and pitched his tent not far from Sodom, infamous for the unnatural wickedness of its inhabitants; and afterwards dwelt in the city itself [e]: but that city, with others in the same plain, being not long after taken by Chedorlaomer and his allies, Lot, who, as Josephus tells us [f], assisted the Sodomites, had the misfortune to be taken by the enemy, with his family and all his substance; and had been carried into captivity, had he not been timely rescued by Abraham, who not only delivered him, but recovered all his goods [g]. Notwithstanding this warning, and the abominable wickedness of the inhabitants, Lot still continued to live in Sodom, and had perished in the fearful catastrophe of that people, if he had not been miraculously preserved, and that partly for Abraham's sake [h]. Two angels, who were sent to destroy the place, came to Sodom in the evening in the appearance of travellers; and Lot sitting in the gate no sooner saw them, than he invited and pressed them to be his guests that night, according to the hospitality of the eastern nations. They had scarce refreshed themselves, when the inhabitants of the city, both old and young, being informed that Lot had strangers with him, and in all probability tempted by the beautiful forms which the angels had assumed [i], encompassed the house, and demanded them to be delivered to them, that they might abuse them. Lot endeavoured to dissuade them from their purpose; and, rather than violate the rights of hospitality, offered to give up his two virgin daughters to their discretion, if they would not molest his guests; but, instead of accepting this offer, they came to violence, and pressed forward to break open the door: whereupon the angels suddenly pulled Lot into the house, shut the door, and struck the riotous assembly with blindness (A); so that they sought in vain to find the door, till they were tired.

Whilst

[d] Gen. xiii. 10. [e] Gen. xiv. 12. [f] Antiq. l. 1. c. 10.
[g] Gen. xiv. 16, &c. [h] Gen. xix. 29. [i] Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 11.

(A) It is a very probable opinion, that those men were struck, not with actual blindness, but with a dizziness, which disturbed their

WHILST they were thus buſied, the angels acquainted Lot with their commiſſion; that they were ſent to execute the divine vengeance upon that ſink of iniquity; and adviſed him, if he had any friends, for whoſe ſafety he was concerned, that he would immediately let them know their danger, and warn them to depart in time. Whereupon Lot, before it was light, went to his ſons-in-law, to whom his daughters were contracted (B), and telling them what they muſt expect if they ſtaid longer in the city, earneſtly perſuaded them to leave it: but they, thinking he either laughed at them, or was out of his wits, rejected his advice[k].

THIS circumſtance is the only one which Moſes mentions of Lot's admoniſhing his fellow-citizens; though it is probable this juſt perſon omitted no opportunity of endeavouring their reformation; for it is ſaid, that, in ſeeing and hearing, he vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day, with their unlawful deeds[l]: which words give countenance to the traditions adopted afterwards by Mohammed, of Lot's being ſent to preach to the inhabitants of Sodom[m].

[k] Gen. xix. 1—14. [l] 2 Pet. ii. 8. [m] Korân, c. vii. ver. 81. c. xxvi. ver. 159. c. xxvii. ver. 55. c. xxix. ver. 28, &c.

their ſight, and repreſented objects falſely, and in confuſion (1), as were the Syrians, who were ſent to take Eliſha (2): and this is the ſenſe of the Septuagint. The author of the book of Wiſdom ſuppoſes ſome change in the air, ſaying, that they were compaſſed about with horrible great darkneſs, which he compares to that with which Moſes plagued the Egyptians: he adds, that they could not even find the way home: but every one ſought the paſſage of his own doors (3).

(B) The Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and other tranſlations, and ſome of the Rabbins ſuppoſe, theſe were the huſbands of other daughters of Lot, who were married, and had left their father's houſe: which ſeems to be confirmed by the angels ordering Lot to take with him his wife and his two daughters which were there preſent (4). But the original words, which in our verſion are rendered his ſons-in-law which married his daughters (5), may be tranſlated, according to the interpretation of Onkelos, his ſons-in-law, which were to marry, &c.; the contract having been paſſed, but the marriage not conſummated; and there is no mention in ſcripture of any daughters Lot had, except the two who were ſaved with him; but if he had, they muſt have periſhed with their huſbands.

(1) Vide Auguſtin. de civit. Dei. l. 22. c. 19. Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. T. 2. Exerc. viii. § 16. Cleric. in Loc. (2) 2 Kings vi. 18. (3) Wiſd. xix. 17. (4) Gen. xix. 15. (5) Ibid. ver. 14.

LOT

Lot not having been able to prevail on his ſons-in-law to ſave themſelves; as ſoon as it was day-break, the angels ordered him immediately to depart, with his wife and two daughters, leſt they ſhould be involved in the common ruin: but he delaying to go, being probably intent on preſerving ſome of his moſt valuable goods, the angels haſtily laid hold on them, and brought them out of the city, commanding them to make a ſpeedy eſcape, for that their lives were in danger; and in particular directed them not to look behind them, nor to ſtay in the plain; but to make the beſt of their way to the mountains. Upon which Lot, conſidering the mountains were at a good diſtance, began to fear he could not reach them time enough, and begged, he might be permitted to eſcape to a ſmall city not far from Sodom, then called Bela, but from this accident Zoar, or the little, which was elſe to have been deſtroyed with the other cities of the plain. This requeſt was granted; and the angels promiſed him, that their commiſſion ſhould not be executed till he got thither; which he did by ſun-riſe. Immediately upon which the fearful deſtruction of thoſe cities enſued: and Lot's wife, contrary to the expreſs command of the angel, looking back, was changed into a pillar of ſalt [u] (C), which Joſephus[o] tells us was remaining in his days, and that himſelf had ſeen it.

After

[n] Gen. xix. 15—26. [o] Antiq. l. 1. c. 11.

(C) It is not agreed by commentators what was the crime for which Lot's wife was thus ſeverely puniſhed. Some are of opinion, ſhe deſerved it merely for diſobeying the command of the angel, and expreſſing too much concern for a people who deſerved no compaſſion (6): which yet ſhe might be the more apt to entertain, as ſhe was probably a native of Sodom (7), and had near relations among them. Others ſay, that being anxiouſly ſollicitous for her daughters, who were married there, and turning about to ſee whether they followed her, ſhe ſaw the divine Shechinah, or majeſtic appearance of God, deſcending to deſtroy the place, which was the occaſion of her metamorphoſis. The writer from whom we take this, calls her Adith (8). Mohammed, from ſome traditions he met with, goes farther, and repreſents her as rebellious to her huſband (9); and the commentators of the Korân, who name her Waïlah, ſay, ſhe was in confederacy with the Sodomites; telling them her huſband was diſtracted, and giving them notice when any ſtrangers came to lodge with him, by a ſign of ſmoke by day, and

(6) [1] Joſ. Ant. l. 1. c. 13. Heidegg. ubi ſupr. § 18. p. 23. (7) Targum Hieroſol. (8) R. Eliezer Pirke, c. 25. (9) Korân, c. 66.

of

AFTER this cataſtrophe, Lot ſtaid not long in Zoâr; fearing ſome further misfortune; but went with his daughters to the mountains on the eaſt of the Dead-ſea, and dwelt in a cave there. In this ſolitude the two young women ſeeing no of fire by night (10); or, according to others, by knocking at the wall, and crying, Give me ſome ſalt (11). Others however think the ſcripture does not repreſent the fate this woman met with as a puniſhment for any crime; but ſuppoſe it merely accidental, as will be obſerved immediately.

The manner of her transformation or death is alſo differently apprehended. From the various acceptations of the word we render pillar, ſome have fancied ſhe was turned into an heap of ſtones (12); others into a pillar (13), without any reſemblance of human ſhape; and a third party have imagined ſhe was changed into a ſtatue (14), having the perfect form of a woman. Nor is there any better agreement as to the matter of this monument, than the figure of it. Some ſuppoſe it to have been of rock ſalt, which laſts a long while and is not ſubject to be waſted or diſſolved by the weather, as common ſalt is (15). Aben Ezra is of opinion, that Lot's wife was burnt with fire mixed with ſalt; and Grotius is of the ſame ſentiment (16). But others think the word ſalt does not relate to the matter of the pillar or ſtatue, but either deſcribes the place where it ſtood; and then the meaning of the paſſage is no more, than that it was in a ſalt, or barren ſoil (17); or elſe that it ſignifies only the permanency of the ſtatue's duration; as a covenant of ſalt is elſewhere (18) uſed to expreſs a laſting, or perpetual covenant 19). Hence the Rabbins take occaſion, according to their cuſtom, to carry the matter farther, and ſay, this ſtatue was deſigned for an everlaſting monument of divine juſtice, and ſhall remain till the day of judgment (20). They add, that though it is continually licked by the cattle, yet it is always miraculouſly repaired again (21); that it has not only the lineaments of a woman, but alſo the diſtinction of ſex, and regular purgations, as if it were alive (22): which fable has been ſwallowed by ſome Chriſtian writers (23). Some late commentators (24), after all, think, that there was no miraculous metamorphoſis at all in the caſe; but that ſhe either turned back out of curioſity to ſee the burning nearer, and ſo periſhed in the dreadful ſhower, or by ſome poiſonous vapour; or elſe that

(10) Jallaloddin, &c. (11) Pentat. Ebn Sina. (12) Sulpic. Sever. 13) Septuag. (14) Hieron. Onkelos. (15) Vide Watſii Miſcel. Tom. 2. and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. (16) Deut. xxix. 23. (17) Pſal. cvii. 34. (18) Numb. xviii. 19. (19) Vide Clerici Diſſert. de ſtatua ſalina. (20) Targ. Hieroſ. (21) R. Eliezer, ubi ſupr. Benjam. Itin. p. 44. (22) R. Eliezer, ibid. (23) Tertul. vel Auctor Carm. de Sodoma, Irenæus, l. 4. c. 51. (24) Vatablus, Bodinus, P. Simon, Bibl. Crit. T. 4. Let. 44. Clerici Diſſert. de ſtatua ſalina.

the

no hopes of their ever being married (D), and being very deſirous of having children, to want which was reckoned a great reproach and ſcandal in thoſe days, plotted together to deceive their father, and have iſſue by him. Accordingly they put their project in execution: and making him drink wine plentifully one evening, the eldeſt daughter lay down by him the firſt night, and the old man knew not when ſhe lay down, nor when ſhe aroſe: not that we ſuppoſe he was ſo far overcome as not to be ſenſible of what he did, which would have rendered him rather unfit than fit for their purpoſe; but he knew not who it was he lay with, imagining, probably, that it was a ſervant, to make uſe of which was then reckoned no crime. The next night they employed the ſame artifice, and the youngeſt took her turn. They both proved with child; and from this inceſtuous commerce proceeded two ſons; that of the eldeſt daughter was therefore named Moab, ſignifying (though not in pure Hebrew, yet perhaps in ſome dialect of that tongue) Of a father, and was the progenitor of the people we are now ſpeaking of [p].

[p] Gen. xix. 30—37.

THE

the horror of the ſight, when ſhe looked back, and plainly beheld the terrible deſtruction of a place ſhe had but juſt quitted, ſtruck her ſtiff, and motionleſs like a ſtatue, and that ſhe died of the fright. And as to what is urged from Joſephus (25), and ſome books of travels (26), that this ſtatue or pillar was many ages after, or is now to be ſeen, it is anſwered, that Joſephus might be deceived therein, as many others have been, and daily are, in things of this nature: which really ſeems to have been the caſe; becauſe the more intelligent and credible travellers ſay they could never ſee it; and when they have aſked the people of the country after it, they either aſſured them there was no ſuch thing (27), or pretended it ſtands ſomewhere in the mountains, where the acceſs to it is very dangerous, becauſe of the wild beaſts and ſerpents, but more ſo on account of the Arabs (28).

(D) Several writers (29) excuſe this act of Lot's daughters, by ſuppoſing what they did was for the reparation of mankind, which, as they thought, had been utterly deſtroyed, and none left, except their father and themſelves. But there is no manner of foundation for ſuch an opinion; wherefore St. Auſtin very juſtly condemns

(25) See alſo Wiſdom, x. 7. (26) Vide Quareſm. Elucid. terræ ſanct. Tom. 2. l. 6. c. 14. (27) Radzivil, Itiner. Hieroſ. p. 95. (28) Brochard, Deſcr. terræ ſanct. p. 1. c. 7. Numb. 24. (29) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 12. Chryſoſt. Hom. 34. in Gen. Irenæus, l. 4. c. 51. Ambroſ. de Abrah. l. 1. c. 6. Theodor. in Geneſ. quæſt. 69. c. 5.

THE posterity of this person settled in the country bordering on the mountain where he was born, which some authors make part of Cœle-Syria [q], others of Arabia [r]; and having driven out the old inhabitants, possessed a large tract, thence called Moabitis, or the land of Moab, bounded on the west by the mountains on the east of the lake Asphaltites, or the Dead-sea, and by the river Jordan; on the north by the country possessed by the Ammonites, the descendants of Lot by his younger daughter; on the south by the brook, or little river Zered, which runs into the Dead-sea, and by the countries of Midian and Edom; and on the east by the deserts of Arabia; which tract might be about forty miles long, and as many broad. This country, which is chiefly mountainous, intermixed with vallies proper for pasturing of cattle, was given by GOD to the children of Moab; and the Israelites, notwithstanding the great provocations they received from them, were expresly forbidden to disturb them [s]. However, by the time of Moses, the Amorites, who had possessed themselves of great part of the land of Ammon, took also the adjoining part of the land of Moab; reducing their limits on that side to the brook Arnon, called also the river of Gad [t], which empties itself into the lake Asphaltites, and before passed through the midst of their territories. This the Israelites seizing on, as part of Sihon's kingdom, which was theirs by right of conquest, kept it for several centuries, till recovered by the Moabites, when they brake into the borders of Reuben and Gad, on the declension of the kingdom of Israel, as will be observed hereafter.

Of the country possessed by the Moabites.

THE chief city of Moab was Ar [u], situate on the river Arnon, called also Rabbah [w], or, The Great; and to distinguish it from a city of the same name in the land of Ammon, Rabbath-Moab [x]. In after-times it was called Areopolis [y], by addition of a Greek word signifying a city. The other cities of Moab were Mizpeh, Luthith, Horonaim, and some others, whose situations are not certainly known.

[q] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 12. [r] STEPHAN. de urb. in Μώαβ. [s] Deut. ii. 9. Judg. xi. 15. [t] 2 Sam. xxiv. 5. [u] Deut ii. 9; 18, 29. Numb. xxi. 15, 28. Isaiah xv. 1, &c. [w] Josh. xiii. 25. [x] HIERON. in Moab. [y] Idem ibid.

the action, saying they ought never to have been mothers, rather than to have made such use of their father (30). One of these daughters a Jewish writer calls Pelotith (31).

(30) August cont. Faust. l. 22. c. 43. (31) R. Jehuda, apud Eliezer. Pirke, c. 25.

Their government, customs, &c.

THE cuſtoms and manner of life of theſe people we know very little of. They were governed by kings, uſed circumciſion [z], and ſeem to have employed themſelves moſtly in paſturage, and breeding of cattle, wherein their riches chiefly conſiſted. They were one of the nations whoſe good the Jews were forbidden to ſeek [a]; nor were they to be admitted to intermarry with the Iſraelites, even to their tenth generations [b]. However, they appear to have cultivated a good underſtanding with that people after their ſettlement in Canaan, as appears from the ſojourning of Elimelech there [c], and the reception David met with in his troubles at Mizpeh [d]. What language they uſed we cannot ſay; but ſuppoſe they ſpoke a dialect of the Canaaniti∫h, or Hebrew.

Their religion.

THAT this people had once the knowledge of the true GOD, we may not only conclude from the piety of their great anceſtor, who, without doubt, inſtructed his offspring in their duty, but it appears from ſcripture; for they retained this knowledge till the time of Moſes, even after they had monſtrouſly corrupted their religion by introducing the worſhip of falſe gods [e]; which they ſeem to have done pretty early, though the time cannot be fixed.

THE idols of the Moabites taken notice of in ſcripture are Chemoſh [f] and Baal-peor [g], ſometimes ſimply Peor [h]; or, as the Septuagint write the name, Phegor. But what gods theſe were, learned men are not agreed. St. Jerom ſuppoſes, that they were both names of one and the ſame idol [i]: and from the debaucheries into which thoſe fell who defiled themſelves with their worſhip, ſeveral writers, both antient and modern, have repreſented them as obſcene deities, not much different from Priapus [k]. This opinion they endeavour to ſupport from the etymologies of the names, and fancy ſome filthineſs is implied therein (E). Others [l] however imagine, that though the [z] Jerem. ix. 25, 26. [a] Deut. xxiii. 3—6. [b] Ibid. ver. 3. [c] Ruth i. 1, 2. [d] Sam. xxii. 3, &c. [e] See Numb. xxv. 2. [f] Numb. xxi. 29. [i] Kings xi. 7. Jerem. xlviii. 13. [g] Numb. xxv. 1, and 3. [h] Ibid. ver. 18. Joſh. xxii. 17, &c. [i] HIERONIM. in Eſai. l. 5. [k] Idem in Oſeam, & contr. Jovin. l. 1. c. 12. ORIGEN. in Numer. Homil. 20. THEOPHYLACT. in Hoſeam. CUMBERLAND on Sanchon. p. 67, &c. [l] SELDEN de Diis Syris, Syntag. 1. c. 5. CLERIC. in Numer. PATRICK's Comment. on Numb. xxv.

(E) Peor they derive from פער paar, to open, or ſtretch; becauſe they uſed an indecent poſture before the idol (diſtendebant coram eo foramen podicis,) and offered him dung; which the Jews pretend the Iſraelites and Solomon were drawn in to worſhip thoſe idols by debauching themſelves with Moabitiſh women *; yet it does not thence follow, that any immodeſt ceremonies were uſed in their worſhip; nor are any ſuch mentioned in the moſt antient authors [m]; and the etymologies, we think, are not much to be built on. Peor was the name of a mountain, where the high places of Baal [n], which word ſignifies no more than Lord, and was a title of the ſun, were ſituate; and probably was added to that name by way of diſtinction, to denote the deity adored in that place [o], though he had probably alſo a temple in Beth-Peor, which ſtood in the plain [p]. Voſſius [q] ſuppoſes Baal-peor to be Bacchus; and Dr. Cumberland [r] ſays he was properly called Meon, and will have him to be the ſame with Menes, Mizraïm, and Oſiris (F), who, according to his pretend was the worſhip proper to this idol (31). If this derivation be true, it was moſt probably a name of contempt impoſed by the Jews; and the naſty ceremonies they mention may have been invented to give ſome reaſon for the name.

* Numb. xxv. [m] See PATRICK's Comment. ubi ſupr. [n] Numb. xxiii. 38. [o] THEODORET. ad Pſal. cv. Vid. SUID. in Βεελφεγωρ. [p] See Joſh. xiii. 17 & 20. [q] De idololatr. l. 2. c. 7. [r] On Sanchon. p. 67.

Chemoſh, for want of a better etymology, they will have to come from the verb משש Maſhaſh, to feel: but Dr. Hyde derives it from the Arabic Khamûſh, which ſignifies gnats (though in the particular dialect of the tribe of Hodail), ſuppoſing it to have been an aſtrological Talliſman in the figure of a gnat, made to drive away thoſe inſects (32): and le Clerc, who takes this idol for the ſun, from Camoſha, a root in the ſame tongue, ſignifying to be ſwift (33).

(F) This learned prelate ſuppoſes Peor was not his true name; and finding Baal-Meon (34) and Beth-Meon (35), and Beth-Baal-Meon (36), mentioned in ſcripture, as a place lying within the old territories of Moab, concludes Meon was the proper, or honourable title of this deity, whom he will have to be the ſame with Oſiris, becauſe of the obſcene proceſſions uſed in honour of the latter, agreeing very well with the immodeſt ceremonies uſed in the worſhip of the former, and from the affinity between the names of Meon and Menes. The chief reaſons he gives, why Meon was the his hypotheſis, were all one and the ſame man [r]. Chemoſh ſeems to have been a different idol. Nebo [t] is thought by ſome to have been another deity of the Moabites. It was without diſpute an idol of the Babylonians, and poſſibly the ſame with Mercury: but whether the Moabites worſhipped it is not ſo certain. There was a town of this name in that part of the antient dominions of Moab, conquered by Sihon, which the Iſraelites rebuilt, and changed its name [u]; and a part of mount Abarim in the ſame tract was alſo called Nebo.

(31) Solom. Yarhi in Numer. 25. 3. Maimonides More Nev. part 3. c. 46. Vid. Philon. Jud. de nomin. mutatione, p. 1061. (32) Hyde de rel. vet. Perſ. c. 5. p. 131. (33) Cleric. in Numb. xxxi. 28. (34). Numb xxxii. 38. 1 Chron. v. 8. Ezek. xxv. 9. (35) Jerem. xlviii. 23. (36) Joſh. xiii. 17.

Of their religious rights and ceremonies we can ſay very little. The obſcenity attributed to them by ſome authors we have already mentioned: of which, however, the Pſalmiſt takes no notice, in ſpeaking of thoſe who were joined to Baal-peor; but ſays only, that they ate the offerings of the dead: by which words he may either mean, that the idol, to which they impiouſly gave divine honour, was no more than a dead man; or elſe that their oblations were made to the infernal gods. They ſacrificed both in the open air, on mountains dedicated to that ſervice [w], and alſo in temples built to their idols in their cities; and, beſides oxen and rams, on extraordinary occaſions offered human victims, according to the Phœnician cuſtom; an inſtance of which will be given by and by.

[r] See Vol. I. p. 309, (Z), 310 [t] Iſai xv. 2. Jerem. xlviii. 1—22. [u] Iſai. xlvi. 1. Pſal. cvi. 28. [w] See Numb. xxii. 41, &c.

name of an idol, and the ſame with Peor, are, 1. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions have Meon for a proper name or title of a deity (37). 2. The Targum of Jonathan (38) calls Baal-Meon a city of Balak, in which Iſrael deſtroyed the idol Peor in the houſe of altars. 3. Meon was ſo great a title of honour, that it is given to God himſelf in ſcripture (39), though it is tranſlated dwelling-place. But we think nothing can be concluded from paſſages where the word is plainly an appellative. 4. Beth-Meon ſignifies the houſe or temple of Meon; and no other than a ſuppoſed deity can be ſaid to have a temple dedicated to it. Yet there are ſeveral names of places compounded with the word Beth, which have no relation at all to idols. 5 The Iſraelites changed the name of the city Baal-Meon, when they had rebuilt it, as they did that of Nebo, becauſe they were ſo named from falſe gods (40). But this is no neceſſary conſequence.

(37) Ibid. 1 Chron. v. 8. Jerem. xlviii. 23. (38) On Numb. xxxii. xxxviii. (39) Pſal. xc. and xci. 9. (40) See Cumberland on Sanchon. chap. 2.

The

THE firſt inhabitants of the land, afterwards poſſeſſed by the poſterity of Moab, were the Emims, a great and powerful people and of extraordinary ſtrength and ſtature [x]. They were, moſt probably, deſcendants of Ham, and of the ſame gigantic race with the Anakims and Rephaims, though the Moabites called them by the name of Emims [y], which in Hebrew ſignifies terrible. Theſe having been much weakened by the invaſion of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and his allies [z], became the eaſier conqueſt to the Moabites; who drove them out, and took poſſeſſion of their country; but about what time is uncertain. However, they kept not their new dominions long entire; for in the days of Moſes, Sihon king of the Amorites, who bordered on them eaſtward, fought againſt the king of Moab, the predeceſſor of Balak, and took from that nation all their land, to the north of the river Arnon [a].

The Moabites drive out the Emims.

But loſe part of their acquiſitions to the Amorites.

BALAK the ſon of Zippor, was on the throne of Moab when the Iſraelites, having ſubdued Sihon, were incamped in part of their new acquiſitions, called the plains of Moab, becauſe they had lately belonged to that nation [b]. This prince, being exceedingly diſmayed at the approach of the victorious people, whom he was not in a condition to reſiſt, and not knowing that GOD had forbidden them to attempt the conqueſt of his remaining territories, aſſembled the nobles, and alſo the princes of the Midianites (a branch of which nation dwelt within the borders of Moab, as we ſhall obſerve hereafter), and acquainted them with his apprehenſions, that the Iſraelites ſhould, as he expreſſed it, lick up all that were round about them, as the ox licketh up the graſs of the field. Having conſulted together, and not daring to truſt to their arms alone, the aſſembly agreed to ſend for Balaam, the ſon of Beor, a famous prophet (G), or diviner of that Balak ſends for Balaam to curſe the Iſraelites.

Year of the Flood, 1547. Year before Chriſt 1451.

[x] Deut. ii. 10. [y] Ibid. p. 10, 11. [z] Gen. xiv. 5. [a] Numb. xxi. 26. [b] Numb. xxii. 1.

(G) Some Jews imagine this Balaam was an aſtrologer, who obſerving when men were under a bad aſpect of the ſtars, pronounced a curſe upon them; which ſometimes coming to paſs in neighbouring nations, gained him a great reputation. Several of the antient fathers ſuppoſe him to have been no more than a common ſoothſayer (41), who pretended to foretel future events, but by no juſtifiable arts. Origen will have it, that he was no prophet, but only a ſorcerer, who went to enquire of the devil; but that God was pleaſed to prevent him, and to put what anſwer he

(41) See Joſeph. 13. 22.

that time, in the prevalency of whoſe prayers and imprecations they had great confidence, that he might come and curſe the people, which gave them ſo much uneaſineſs(H). Accordingly ambaſſadors of both nations were ſent, not empty-handed, but with preſents, as is uſual in ſuch caſes, to Balaam, who dwelt at Pethor, a city of Meſopotamia, ſituate on the Euphrates [c], and told him the occaſion of their coming. The prophet deſired them to ſtay with him that night, that he might enquire of God, whether he ſhould go with them and curſe the Iſraelites or not: but being commanded not to go, nor to curſe a people whom God had determined to bleſs; thought fit into his mouth. It cannot be denied however, but that the ſcripture expreſly calls him a prophet; and therefore ſome later writers (42) are of opinion, that he had been once a good man, and a true prophet, till loving the wages of unrighteouſneſs (43), and proſtituting the honour of God to his covetouſneſs, he apoſtatized from God, and, betaking himſelf to idolatrous practices, fell under the deluſion of the devil, of whom he learned all his magical enchantments; though at this juncture, when the preſervation of his people was concerned, it might conſiſt with God's wiſdom to appear to him, and vouchſafe him revelations. Balaam indeed was a man of no great probity, and might by profeſſion be a diviner; but by the free acceſs he had to God, it ſeems apparent, that he was no common ſorcerer or magician (44).

[c] Num. xxii. 5. Deut. xxiii. 4.

The Jews ſay Balaam was not his true name; but that he was ſo called, becauſe by his counſel בלע עם Bala am, i. e. he deſtroyed the people of God (45): and ſome have taken him to be the ſame perſon who in the book of Job is named Eliſha (46). The prophetical traditions of Balaam the Perſian Magi are ſaid to have had (47), and it is thought, that from his prophecy (48) the wiſe men knew the ſignification of the ſtar which appeared at our Saviour's birth (49).

(H) It was a received opinion among the heathen nations, that imprecations might be made which would have effect, not only on private perſons, but even whole armies and nations; and there were particular forms and ceremonies for that purpoſe (50).

(42) See Patrick's Comment. on Numb. xxii. (43) 2 Pet. ii. 15. (44) Stackhouſe's Body of Divinity, p. 465, &c. (45) Vide Hottinger. Semegma Orient. p. 444. (46) See Patrick's Comment. ubi ſupr. (47) D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. p. 528. (48) Numb. xxiv. 17. (49) Theodor. Tarſenſis, apud Hyde de rel vet. Perſ. p. 384. (50) Vid. Macrob. Saturn. l. 3. c. 9. Plutarch. in vita Craſſi, p. 553.

the

the next morning he told them, he could not disobey the divine command, and so dismissed them. On their return with this answer, Balak, whose sole hopes lay in the prophet, sent a second embassy to him, consisting of persons of more distinguished quality, and in greater number, with promises of great riches and preferment, if he would comply with his request. Balaam told them, that if he might gain ever so much wealth, he durst not act contrary to the divine directions: however, being willing to gratify Balak, and tempted by the large offers which had been made him, notwithstanding he knew it was a thing disagreeable to GOD, yet he consulted the oracle once more, and had then leave given him to go, provided he said nothing, but what GOD should put in his mouth. Balaam therefore went with the ambassadors, resolving, as it seems, with himself, to do his utmost for the service of those who had employed him. But his intentions being displeasing to GOD, he sent an angel to withstand him by the way, who placed himself in the road with a drawn sword in his hand, as Balaam came riding on his ass, attended by two servants only, and at a distance from the rest of the company; the ass seeing the angel (though her master did not) turned out of the way into the field; on which Balaam struck her: then the angel went forward, and stood in a path between two walls: against one of which the ass thrusting her self to avoid the angel, crushed Balaam's foot, and provoked him to strike her again. At length the angel went farther, and stood in a place so narrow, that there was no room for the ass to turn out of the way; but she fell down under the prophet, and enraged him so that he struck her a third time. Whereupon GOD miraculously opened the ass's mouth (I), and she spoke to her master with an articulate voice,

(I) This was so extraordinary an event, that some Jews, as great lovers of miracles as they are, have not been able to persuade themselves that it really came to pass. Philo (50), in relating the story of Balaam, wholly omits this circumstance; and Maimonides (51), pretends it happened to Balaam in a prophetical vision. But as there is no doubt of God's power to effect such a miracle, and the words of scripture are very express, there can be no reason for disbelieving it. The heathens cannot reproach Moses with any absurdity in this story, since they themselves relate so many of the like nature, but not near so well supported. Witness what they say of the ass upon which Bacchus rode; of the ram of voice, and asked him, why he had given her thoſe three blows? Balaam, in the heat of his paſſion not conſidering the prodigy (K), angrily anſwered, that ſhe had purpoſely provoked him; and wiſhed he had a ſword to kill her. But on the aſs's demanding if ever ſhe had ſerved him in that manner before, he confeſſed that ſhe had not. Immediately on this Balaam's eyes were opened, and he ſaw the angel ſtanding before him armed with a naked ſword; whereupon he fell proſtrate on his face, and the angel told him, that he had ſtruck his aſs without cauſe, ſince it was he that oppoſed him becauſe of his perverſeneſs; and that if the aſs had not turned out of the way he ſhould have killed him, and ſaved her alive (L). The prophet on this reprimand offered to return home again; but the angel bid him go on, taking care only to ſay no more than what God ſhould direct him [d].

(50) De vita Mosis, l. 1. (51) More Nevoch. part. 2. cap. 42.

Balaam being come to the borders of Moab, Balak went out to meet him; and, after ſome expoſtulations for not coming on the firſt meſſage, brought him to Kirjath-huzoth, where the king offered ſacrifices, and feaſted Balaam and the princes who were with him. The next day Balak brought the prophet up into the high places of Baal on mount Abarim, where he might have a full proſpect of the camp of the Iſraelites, whom he had hired him to curſe [e]. There Balak, by the prophet's direction, built ſeven altars, in which number there might poſſibly be ſome ſuperſtition; but the altars, as it appears, were erected to the true God, to whom they offered a bullock and a ram on each altar; and the ſame they did afterwards in two other places on the mountain. The [d] Numb. xxii. 20, 35. [e] Numb. xxii. 36—41.

Phryxus; the bull of Europa; the horſes of Achilles and Adraſtus; the elephant of Porus in India, and the lamb in Egypt when Bochchoris reigned there (52).

(K) This ſeems to be the true reaſon why Balaam expreſſed no more ſurprize on this occaſion. But ſome ſuppoſe Balaam might have imbibed the doctrine of tranſmigration of ſouls, which was, and ſtill is, too common in the eaſt, and from thence might be the leſs aſtoniſhed to hear a brute ſpeak (53). Joſephus indeed tells us, but without authority, that he was afrighted at the accident (54).

(L) An inſtance of a prophet's being ſlain for diſobedience, and his aſs being ſaved alive, we have in the firſt book of Kings (55).

(52) See Patrick's comment ubi ſupr. (53) Vide Cleric. comment. in locum. (54) Joſeph. Ant. l. 1. (55) Chap. xiii. 23, &c.

two two first times Balaam sought for enchantments [f], or used such means as he was able, to obtain leave of GOD to curse the children of Israel; but without success; for on the contrary he was commanded to bless them, sore against his inclination, and to the great mortification of Balak [g]. Wherefore the third time, finding that no enchantments could prevail against Jacob, nor any divination against Israel, he omitted his former arts, and not only blessed them a third time, but pronounced those cursed who should utter any imprecations against that people. Balak was exceedingly enraged at this disappointment, and ordered him to depart immediately; but Balaam before he went, pronounced in Balak's presence a noble and magnificent prophecy of the future successes of the Israelites, and what should befal several nations and kingdoms [h]. As to Moab in particular, he foretold, that a star (M) should come out of Jacob, and a sceptre should arise out of Israel, which should smite the corners (or, as it may be better translated, the princes) of Moab, and destroy all the children of Seth [i] (N). Which prophecy the most judicious interpreters take to be primarily spoken of David, and fulfilled by his victories over that nation; though it be allowed also secondarily, and in a more exalted sense, to refer to the Messiah. After this Balaam returned home [k], but not [f] See Vol. I. p. 477, 478. [g] Numb. xxiii. [h] Ibid. c. 24. [i] Ibid. ver. 17. [k] Ibid. ver. 25.

(M) The eastern nations denoted a king by a star or comet, the appearance of which they thought portended the rise of great princes, and the revolutions of empires (56).

(N) According to the genius of the Hebrew tongue, wherein it is elegant to repeat the same sentence in different expressions, by the children of Seth, the Moabites should be intended; but why they are so called we cannot find There is a passage in Jeremiah, which seems to prove, that in his time this place was differently read. A fire says that prophet, shall come out of Heshbon, a flame from the midst of Sihon, which shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones, or, as it is better rendered in the margin, of the children of noise (57). The former part of this passage is taken from another text (58), and the latter from that which we are now speaking of. The difference between them is very little in the original: Jeremiah instead of קרקר karkar, shall destroy, having קדקד kadkod, the crown of the head (which is the reading of the Samaritan pentateuch in this very place) and instead of שת Seth, שאון Shaon, noise. But we dare not hence make any correction.

(56) Vide Cleric. in loc. (57) Jerem. xlviii. 45. (58) Numb. xxi. 28.

without

without giving a moſt wicked counſel (O) to Balak and the Midianites, which proved very pernicious to the children of Iſrael: for he told them, that it was in vain to expect that God would ever deſert that nation, ſo long as they continued in their duty; and therefore the only way to hurt and diſtreſs them, would be to tempt them to idolatry and diſobedience, which he thought no means ſo proper to effect, as by inticing them to debaucheries with the Moabitiſh and Midianitiſh women. And therefore he adviſed them, to ſend the moſt beautiful virgins they could find to the Iſraelitiſh camp, with proper inſtructions [l].

This was put in execution; the chief men among them making no ſcruple to proſtitute their daughters on this occaſion [m]: and the ſtratagem ſucceeded but too well. For the Iſraelites were immediately ſmitten with the charms of theſe fair Idolatreſſes; and, having begun to commit whoredom with them, were eaſily ſeduced in another point, and prevailed on to comply with the worſhip of their falſe gods. This occaſioned a dreadful plague, which deſtroyed 24,000 of them, beſides thoſe who were put to death by the order of Moſes [n].

Their hiring of Balaam to curſe Iſrael was the reaſon why the Moabites were not to be admitted to mix, or intermarry with that people, as has been obſerved [o]; but the Midianites, who ſeem to have been more particularly the inſtruments of ſeducing them to idolatry, were more ſeverely puniſhed ſoon after, as will be related in a more proper place: and Balaam himſelf had his reward, being ſlain by the Iſraelites when they took their revenge on Midian [p].

[l] Joseph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. [m] Numb. xxv. 15. [n] Ibid. ver. 1——5. [o] See before, p. 82. [p] Numb. xxxi. 8. Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 5.

(O) Though Moſes mentions not this where he deſcribes the interview between Balaam and Balak, yet in another place (59), he lays the whole blame on Balaam, ſaying, that the Iſraelites treſpaſſed through his counſel. Joſephus is very particular in relating this circumſtance, and tells us, that Balaam bethought himſelf of it when he came to the Euphrates, and thence ſent to ſpeak with Balak and the princes of Midian (60). The Targum of Jonathan and that of Jeruſalem ſuppoſe he gave this counſel juſt before he pronounced the laſt prophecy; and that the ſame is intimated by theſe words, I will adviſe, or counſel thee (61).

(59) Numb. xxxi. 16. See alſo Revel. ii. 14. (60) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. (61) Numb. xxiv. 14. Vid. etiam Cleric. in loc.

The

THE next action which is recorded of the Moabites is, that they were the inſtruments of the ſecond oppreſſion of the Iſraelites after their ſettlement in the land of Canaan. For that people, on the death of Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, being without a head, returned again to idolatry; whereupon GOD raiſed up Eglon king of Moab to puniſh them. This prince therefore having entered into an alliance with the Ammonites and Amalekites his neighbours, with their aſſiſtance ſucceſsfully invaded Iſrael, and ſeized on the eaſtern part of their country, and particularly on a city called by Moſes the city of palm trees, by which is generally underſtood Jericho (P), which was in the lot of the tribe of Benjamin; and having left gariſons to keep the inhabitants in ſubjection, obliged them to pay tribute, and exerciſed great tyranny over them for no leſs than eighteen years. At the expiration of which time the children of Iſrael, returning to a better mind, had recourſe to GOD in their diſtreſs, who raiſed up to them a deliverer, a Benjamite, named Ehud. This perſon, being deputed by his countrymen to carry a preſent, or rather the tribute which was exacted of them, to Eglon, formed the deſign of freeing them from the intolerable oppreſſion they had ſo long undergone, by taking off their tyrant; he therefore provided himſelf with a dagger fit for the execution of his purpoſe, though ſhort enough to be hidden under his garments; and, being left-handed, he girt it on his right thigh, which alſo gave the leſs ſuſpicion of his being armed. Having delivered the tribute to the king, he ſent away thoſe who had brought it, and followed them ſo far homewards as the quarries near Gilgal (Q); but when he came thither he turned

(P) Jericho was famous among other things for the great numbers of palm trees of different kinds which grew in its neighbourhood (62). Joſephus ſays, that Eglon removed his court to this city (63): but he ſeems to have been miſtaken: for after it had been burnt by Joſhua (64), who curſed the perſon that ſhould rebuild it (65), it lay in ruins till the days of Ahab (66). However, the place might ſerve for a gariſon to keep the country in awe, for which uſe it was very well ſituated.

(Q) The word Peſilim, which in our verſion is rendered the quarries, is by the Septuagint tranſlated τὰ γλυπτὰ, and in the vulgate, the idols, the ſculptures, which ſome ſuppoſe to have been ſet up there by Eglon (67).

(62) Deut. xxxiv. 3. Joſeph. de bello Jud. l. 5. c. 4. (63) Idem Antiq l. 5. c. 5. (64) Joſh. vi. 24. (65) Ibid. ver. 26. (66) 1 Kings xvi. 34. (67) Chytræus, &c. See Vol. I. p. 163, in the notes.

back

back again, and being admitted into the king's preſence, who was then in a ſummer apartment, he pretended to have ſomething to impart to him in private. Whereupon Eglon ordered his attendants to withdraw: and Ehud told him, that he had a meſſage to deliver him from God; which the king riſing from his ſeat to receive, Ehud ſtabbed him with his dagger in the belly, and that with ſo violent a thruſt, that the haſt went in after the blade; and Eglon being a very fat man, the fat cloſed upon it, ſo that he was obliged to leave it in his body. Having thus executed his purpoſe, he locked the door of the apartment upon the king, and went out unſuſpected (R). The ſervants, after Ehud was gone, coming, and finding the door locked, concluded the king was eaſing himſelf, and therefore waited at the door till they were aſhamed; but at length they opened it, and found their maſter breathleſs on the floor. Ehud in the mean time eſcaped beyond Jordan, and gathering together what forces he could, attacked the Moabites, that were gariſoned on the weſt of the river within the land of Canaan, and ſlew ten thouſand of their beſt men; which utterly broke the power of Moab, and freed the Iſraelites from the yoke of that nation [q].

We hear no more of the Moabites after this diſaſter till the time of Saul, who warred againſt them with ſucceſs [r]. The enmity which ſubſiſted between him and this nation probably induced David, when perſecuted by that prince, to aſk the king of Moab's protection for his parents, till his affairs ſhould be in a better poſture [s]; which the Moabites readily granted, and treated them with great hoſpitality, while David lay in the cave of Adullam. However, when he came to the crown, the Moabites entered into a confederacy againſt him with ſeveral of the neighbouring nations [t]: whereupon he declared war againſt them; and having obtained a ſignal victory, [q] Judges iii. 12—30. [r] Sam. xiv. 47. [s] 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4. Joseph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. [t] Pſal. lxxxiii. 5, 6, &c.

(R) This action of Ehud ſome juſtify, by ſuppoſing he had God's expreſs command for it (68). But as the ſcripture intimates no ſuch thing, others think he might lawfully rid his country of a tyrant, who had unjuſtly enſlaved it, by any means (69). A poſition which may encourage aſſaſſinations in every caſe, where the actor judges the cauſe he engages in to be righteous.

(68) Vid. Patrick, in loc. (69) Cleric. in loc.

put

put two thirds of them to the ſword (S), and made the reſt his vaſſals and tributaries [u].

FROM this time they continued ſubject to Solomon and Rehoboam till the revolt of the ten tribes; upon which it ſeems they became tributaries to the kings of Iſrael, though they had all along kings of their own, which were little better than viceroys. Meſha, one of them, paid Ahab a yearly tribute of 100,000 lambs, and as many weathers, with the wool; his riches conſiſting chiefly in ſheep [w]. But when Ahab was dead he rebelled againſt his ſon Ahaziah [x], whoſe ſhort reign not permitting any attempt to reduce him, his brother and ſucceſſor Jehoram, aſſiſted by Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, his ally, and the king of Edom his tributary, made an expedition for that purpoſe, and took a compaſs of ſeven days march through the deſert of Edom, in order to ſurpriſe the enemy. Having reached the land of Moab, the army was diſtreſſed for want of water, and muſt have periſhed, had not the prophet Eliſha obtained a ſudden and large ſupply for them by a land-flood. The Moabites, being by this time alarmed, got together all that were able to bear arms, and early in the morning, ſeeing the water to the weſtward look red, like blood, by reaſon of the reflection of the ſun, and never ſuſpecting it to be water in that dry deſert, and in ſo great a quantity, they immediately took it to be blood, and, ſuppoſing the confederated princes had fallen out and turned their arms againſt one another, concluded they had no more to do than to take the ſpoil. On this imagination they ran in confuſion to the camp of Iſrael, but ſoon found their miſtake; for not being able to ſuſtain the firſt attack of the Iſraelites, they preſently turned their backs, and great numbers of them were [u] 2 Sam. viii. 2. 1 Chron. xviii. 2. JOSEPH Antiq. l. 7. c. 5.

[w] 2 Kings iii. 4. [x] 2 Kings i. 1. & iii. 5.

(S) This is the meaning of the ſacred hiſtorian, when he ſays, That David meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground; even with two lines meaſured he to put to death; and with one full line to keep alive. It ſeems to have been a cuſtom in the eaſt, to order the priſoners of war to lie down, and to meaſure by a line ſuch a part of them as they deſigned to put to death. Le Clerc thinks this probably was a juſt retaliation for ſome cruelties of the ſame kind which the Moabites had been guilty of. As the ſcripture does not ſay whether David put to death two thirds of the whole nation, or only of thoſe who appeared in arms againſt him; it is more for the honour of that prince to ſuppoſe the latter (70).

(70) Idem in 2 Sam. viii. 2

ſlain

ſlain by the enemy, who purſued them into the very heart of their country, waſted their lands, and demoliſhed their cities, except Kir-haraſeth, where the king of Moab ſhut himſelf up. Meſha being beſieged and cloſely preſſed, made a ſally with 700 choice men, and endeavoured to eſcape, by breaking through the quarters of the Edomites, which were the weakeſt; but failing in the attempt, in the height of deſpair he took his eldeſt ſon, who ſhould have ſucceeded him in the throne, and offered him for a burnt-ſacrifice on the wall (T). Which barbarous act raiſed ſuch horror and indignation in his enemies, that they immediately raiſed the ſiege, and returned home [y].

It was not long before the Moabites attempted to revenge the loſſes they had ſuſtained in this invaſion, on Jehoſhaphat king of Judah (U), by whoſe aſſiſtance chiefly Jehoram was inabled to undertake it; and, to ſtrengthen themſelves, entered into alliance with the Ammonites, the Edomites of mount Seir (who were almoſt ripe for rebellion, and actually did rebel againſt Jehoſhaphat's ſon), and ſome other neighbouring nations (W), and formed a very large army, carrying on their [y] Ibid. ver. 6, 27. Joseph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 1.

(T) Several writers (71) ſuppoſe Meſha did not ſacrifice his own ſon, but the ſon of the king of Edom, whom, they ſay, he took in the ſally; and that this is the ſame action with that mentioned by the prophet Amos, who threateneth Moab, becauſe he burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime (72). But they ſeem to be different actions; for, not to inſiſt on the ſtrict acceptation of the two paſſages, one ſpeaking of a king of Edom, and the other of a king's ſon, it was a known cuſtom in antient times, for princes in extreme calamities of the public, to offer their moſt beloved child as an expiatory ſacrifice, to avert the impending vengeance of the gods (73).

(U) Some make this action prior to the invaſion of Moab by this prince and Jehoram; but we ſhall elſewhere ſhew that it ought to be placed after it.

(W) Who theſe nations were is uncertain. The original word Mehaammonium ſhould be tranſlated (as it is in the Vulgate) with the Ammonites, were it not that the children of Ammon are mentioned before. To avoid the abſurdity of which repetition, the Septuagint, if their copies were not different from the preſent Hebrew in this place,

(71) See the Argument to the iii chap. of 2 Kings, in the Engliſh Bible; and Uſher's Annals, ad Annum Mundi, &c. (72) Amos ii. 1. (73) See Vol. I. p. 305. Vide etiam Porphyr. de Abſtin. l. 2. Ælian. var. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 28. Juſtin. l. 18. c. 6. Plut. in Pelopida, &c.

their design with such secrecy and dispatch, that they were entered the kingdom by the way of Edom, and were got to Hazazon-tamar, or En-gedi, on the west of the Dead-sea, before Jehoshaphat had any advice of their motion. That good prince was greatly dismayed at the news, and, being unprepared for the reception of his enemies, had recourse to GOD, who promised him by the prophet Jahaziel to deliver him from his enemies without his striking a blow. And it happened accordingly: for while Jehoshaphat and his army, in confidence of the prophecy, were marching towards the enemy, with the priests and singers at their head, praising GOD, the several nations that had leagued against them, destroyed one another by falling into the ambushes which themselves had set against the men of Judah; so that the Ammonites and Moabites first fell upon their confederates of Edom; and, having put them to the sword, began to cut one another's throats till none were left alive. And when Jehoshaphat and his people came up with them, they had no more to do than to seize the plunder, which was very rich, and in such abundance that they were three days in gathering it [z].

AFTER this we do not find, that the Moabites disturbed Israel for many years; however, between this and the reign of Uzziah king of Judah, they had invaded their neighbours of Edom; and having the better of them, inhumanly burnt their king (whether alive or dead is not said), and reduced his bones to ashes: for which piece of cruelty GOD denounced place, render it some of the Minæans; of which name Bochart supposes there were two people, one of the race of Shem, dwelling in Arabia felix, and the other of the race of Ham, who settled in Arabia petræa, and are meant in this place, being, as he thinks, by the Jews called Meonim, which word occurs in two places of the book of Chronicles (74), (though the English translation in the first place takes it for an appellative, and renders it the habitations) and is in both by the Septuagint translated Minæans. Wherefore Bochart prefers the Greek reading, in the passage before us, to the Hebrew; being of opinion, that there is a transposition of the letters Mem and Ain (75). The Chaldee paraphrast has it, with the Edomites. But there seems to be no occasion for any change, since the particle prefixed may, agreeably to its force elsewhere, be rendered beyond or besides; (76) for which reason the English version is judged to have rightly interpreted the words, and others besides the Ammonites.

[z] 2 Chron. xx. 1—25. JOSEPH. ubi supra.

(74) 1 Chron. iv. 41. 2 Chron. xxvi. 7. Phaleg. l. 2. c. 23. (75) Bochart. (76) Vide Cleric. in loc.

severe severe judgments against them by the prophet Amos [a]. And on the declension of the kingdom of Israel, they also seem to have retaken from the tribes of Reuben and Gad great part of the land which had formerly belonged to them before the invasion of Sihon; for, in the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah against Moab, several cities in those territories are mentioned, as then in the possession of that nation, or of the Ammonites [b], who were probably their confederates in oppressing the Israelites. These successes elated the Moabites so much, that for their pride and insolence God threatened them with utter destruction, by several of his prophets [c]: And Isaiah in particular foretold, that within three years Ar and Kir-Haraseth, two of their principal cities, should be destroyed, and the rest of their country brought to contempt and desolation [d]. This prophecy being dated in the first year of king Hezekiah [e], must have been executed the very year that Samaria was first besieged by Salmanesser king of Assyria, who probably subjected Moab, and placed garrisons in those towns, to stop the incursions which the Arabs might that way make on him, before he began the siege [f].

After the fearful destruction of the army of Sennacherib the son of Salmanesser, the Moabites often revolted from his successors, and were as often reduced, till they were entirely subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, into whose hands their king was given, according to a prediction of Jeremiah [g], the fifth year after his taking Jerusalem [h]. For the Babylonish yoke sat so uneasy on them, that though they took advantage of the low condition of Judah, and missed few or no opportunities of harassing that nation [i], yet on Nebuchadnezzar's departure from Judea and Syria, after his second expedition into those parts, they with the other neighbouring nations proposed to Zedekiah, to enter into a league with him against the Chaldeans; which that prince [k], notwithstanding the remonstrances of Jeremiah to the contrary, consenting to, on the accession of the Egyptians to their confederacy, it became the occasion of his utter ruin; his new allies deserting him in his distress.

From this time history makes very little mention of the Moabites, who were henceforward subject to the great empires, and at length coalesced with, and were swallowed up

[a] Amos ii. 1, 2, 3. [b] Isaiah xv & xvi. Jerem. xlviii. ix. [c] Ibid. & Ezek xxv 8, & 9. Zeph. ii 8, 9, 10, 11. [d] Isai. xv 1. xvi. 7 [e] Ibid c. xiv. 28 [f] Vide Prid. Connect. Part 1. B 1. p 18. [g] Jerem. xxvii. 3—6. xxv. 21. [h] Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11. [i] 2 Kings xxiv. 2. [k] Jerem. xxvii.

in,

in, the neighbouring nations which inhabit the deserts of Syria; so that though Josephus mentions the Moabites, as a distinct nation long after, saying they were subdued by Alexander Jannæus king of the Jews [l], and tells us they were a populous nation, even in his time [m]; yet by the third century after CHRIST they lost their antient name, and became comprehended under the more general denomination of Arabians [n].

SECT. II.

The History of Ammon.

THIS people were the posterity of Ammon, otherwise called Ben Ammi (tho' that is not positively known) signifying the son of my people, our kindred, the offspring of Lot and his younger daughter [o]. We have given the history of this incestuous birth in speaking of Moab, the son of the elder sister by her father [p].

THE children of Ammon possessed themselves of the country called, after their own name, Ammonitis, adjoining to the north of Moabitis, after having driven out the Zamzummims, as they called them, who were giants, and the antient inhabitants of the land [q]. This country [r], as well as Moabitis, is by some reckoned a part of Cœle-Syria [s], and by others of Arabia, and was, in its first state under the Ammonites, bounded by the river Jabbok on the north [t]; though elsewhere it seems as if it extended beyond that northward, into the mountains of Gilead [u]: on the west, it had the river Jordan; on the south the river Arnon [w], or the confines of Moabitis; on the east, the deserts of Arabia. But in the days of Moses the Amorites had dislodged them from their first boundaries, at the same time they disturbed the Moabites, driving the Ammonites from the western part of their possession into, and across the mountains, which served them for an immediate defence, perhaps, against the farther pursuit of the Amorites, and as a strong barrier to protect them, in part, from invasions thereafter [x]. Their exact boundaries, especially after this expulsion, we cannot settle. We have only to add, that severe judgments against them by the prophet Amos [a]. And on the declension of the kingdom of Israel, they also seem to have retaken from the tribes of Reuben and Gad great part of the land which had formerly belonged to them before the invasion of Sihon; for, in the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah against Moab, several cities in those territories are mentioned, as then in the possession of that nation, or of the Ammonites [b], who were probably their confederates in oppressing the Israelites. These successes elated the Moabites so much, that for their pride and insolence God threatened them with utter destruction, by several of his prophets [c]: And Isaiah in particular foretold, that within three years Ar and Kir-Harajeth, two of their principal cities, should be destroyed, and the rest of their country brought to contempt and desolation [d]. This prophecy being dated in the first year of king Hezekiah [e], must have been executed the very year that Samaria was first besieged by Salmanesar king of Assyria, who probably subjected Moab, and placed garrisons in those towns, to stop the incursions which the Arabs might that way make on him, before he began the siege [f].

Of the country possessed by the Ammonites.

[l] JOSEPH. de bello Jud. l. 1. c. 4. [m] Idem. Antiq. l. 1. c. 11. [n] ORIGEN. in Job. l. 1. [o] Gen. xix. 38. [p] See before, p. 79, 80. [q] Deuter. ii. 20. [r] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 16—5. [s] Steph. de urb. in Ἀμμανον. [t] Judg. xi. 22. [u] Josh. xiii. 24, 25. [w] Judg. ubi supra. [x] See Numb. xxi. 24.

After the fearful destruction of the army of Sennacherib the son of Salmanesar, the Moabites often revolted from his successors, and were as often reduced, till they were entirely subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, into whose hands their king was given, according to a prediction of Jeremiah [g], the fifth year after his taking Jerusalem [h]. For the Babylonish yoke sat so uneasy on them, that though they took advantage of the low condition of Judea, and missed few or no opportunities of harassing that nation [i], yet on Nebuchadnezzar's departure from Judea and Syria, after his second expedition into those parts, they with the other neighbouring nations proposed to Zedekiah, to enter into a league with him against the Chaldeans; which that prince [k], notwithstanding the remonstrances of Jeremiah to the contrary, consenting to, on the accession of the Egyptians to their confederacy, it became the occasion of his utter ruin; his new allies deserting him in his distress.

From this time history makes very little mention of the Moabites, who were henceforward subject to the great empires, and at length coalesced with, and were swallowed up

[a] Amos ii. 1, 2, 3. [b] Isaiah xv & xvi. Jerem. xlviii. ix. [c] Ibid. & Ezek xxv 8, & 9. Zeph. ii 8, 9, 10, 11 [d] Isai. xv 1. xvi. 7 [e] Ibid c. xiv. 28 [f] Vide Prid. Connect. Part 1. B 1. p 18. [g] Jerem. xxvii. 3—9. xxv. 21. [h] Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11. [i] 2 Kings xxiv. 2. [k] Jerem. xxvii.

in,

in, the neighbouring nations which inhabit the deſerts of Syria; ſo that though Joſephus mentions the Moabites, as a diſtinct nation long after, ſaying they were ſubdued by Alexander Jannæus king of the Jews [l], and tells us they were a populous nation, even in his time [m]; yet by the third century after CHRIST they loſt their antient name, and became comprehended under the more general denomination of Arabians [n].

SECT. II.

The Hiſtory of Ammon.

THIS people were the poſterity of Ammon, otherwiſe called Ben Ammi (tho' that is not poſitively known) ſignifying the ſon of my people, our kindred, the offſpring of Lot and his younger daughter [o]. We have given the hiſtory of this inceſtuous birth in ſpeaking of Moab, the ſon of the elder ſiſter by her father [p].

THE children of Ammon poſſeſſed themſelves of the country called, after their own name, Ammonitis, adjoining to the north of Moabitis, after having driven out the Zamzummims, as they called them, who were giants, and the antient inhabitants of the land [q]. This country [r], as well as Moabitis, is by ſome reckoned a part of Cæle-Syria [s], and by others of Arabia, and was, in its firſt ſtate under the Ammonites, bounded by the river Jabbok on the north [t]; though elſewhere it ſeems as if it extended beyond that northward, into the mountains of Gilead [u]: on the weſt, it had the river Jordan; on the ſouth the river Arnon [w], or the confines of Moabitis; on the eaſt, the deſerts of Arabia. But in the days of Moſes the Amorites had diſlodged them from their firſt boundaries, at the ſame time they diſturbed the Moabites, driving the Ammonites from the weſtern part of their poſſeſſion into, and acroſs the mountains, which ſerved them for an immediate defence, perhaps, againſt the farther purſuit of the Amorites, and as a ſtrong barrier to protect them, in part, from invaſions thereafter [x]. Their exact boundaries, eſpecially after this expulſion, we cannot ſettle. We have only to add, that their kingdom, probably, was not of very wide extent, no more than that of Moab; and that it was chiefly a corn country, as may be gathered from the tribute on its inhabitants, which will be seen in the course of their history.

Of the country poſſeſſed by the Ammonites.

[l] JOSEPH. de bello Jud. l. 1. c. 4. [m] Idem. Antiq. l. 1. c. 11. [n] ORIGEN. in Job. l. 1. [o] Gen. xix. 38. [p] See before, p. 79, 80. [q] Deuter. ii. 20. [r] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 16—5. [s] Steph. de urb. in Ἀμμανον. [t] Judg. xi. 22. [u] Joſh. xiii. 24, 25. [w] Judg. ubi ſupra. [x] See Numb. xxi. 24.

The cities of this kingdom we know little enough of. The metropolis was called Rabbah; which to distinguish it from the chief city of Moab, which bore the same name or epithet was called Rabbah of the children of Ammon [y]. It was also known by the name of Ammana [z]. This capital seems to have been distinguished into two parts, Rabbah properly so called, and the city of waters. Whence the waters were derived to it, whether from the river Jabbok, or whether from exuberant springs in or about it, cannot be determined. This only we have some authority to say, that it was the most delightful part of the city, and that the king's house stood there; from whence this part may have been stiled the royal city [a]. Rabbah moreover was famous for being the place where the great iron bedstead of Og king of Bashan was to be seen [b]. In process of time this city was called Philadelphia [c], from Ptolomy Philadelphus, who rebuilt it in a sumptuous manner; and for ages after it was a city of first note: nay, of such eminence as to impose its name upon the countries of Ammonitis, and Moabitis; from whence you have the Philadelphian Arabia [d]. The other considerable cities of this kingdom were Minnith (concerning which there is some doubt) and Abel of the vineyard [e]. Jaser, or Jazar, is also reckoned among the cities of Ammon [f], but inaccurately [g].

We know very little of the manners and customs of this people. They had kings, and were circumcised [h], and seem to have been principally addicted to husbandry. They, as well as the Moabites, were among the nations, whose peace or prosperity the Israelites were not to strive after. Neither the one nor the other of them were to be admitted into the congregation to the tenth generation; so wide was the distance between the Israelites and them! The reason, because they did not come out to relieve them in the wilderness; and because they joined to hire Balaam to curse them [i]. However,

[y] Deut. iii. 11. [z] Steph. in Αμμαν. [a] See 2 Sam. xii. 26, 27. [b] Deut. ubi supr. [c] Vide Euseb. Onomast. urbium & locorum. [d] Vide Cellarii notitiam Orbis antiqui. c. 14. [e] Judg. xi. 33. [f] Joseph. Antiq. lib. 12. c. 11. 1 Maccab. v. 8. [g] Vid. Cellar. ubi supr. [h] Jerem. ix. 25, 26. [i] Deut. xxxiii. 4.

ever, we find there was afterwards a very good understanding between their king Nahash and David [k].

THE religion of the Ammonites, as we have already observed concerning that of the Moabites, was originally as pure as it could flow from so clear a stream as the instruction of Lot; but they also swerved therefrom by degrees, and at length degenerated into the most stupid, and, as is generally supposed, the most cruel idolatry. Their religion.

THEIR chief and peculiar deity is in the scripture called Molech, or Moloch. He is thought also to be understood under the names of Baal, Milcom, Melech, Adramelech, Anamelech, and the like. These names, or titles, signify no more than lord, or king, and sometimes have a pre-junctive epithet, as in the two last, where he is stiled the mighty and rich Melech, Moloch, or king: these two were the gods of the Sepharvites. We shall only speak of the Ammonitish Moloch in this place. The learned are not positively agreed in what relates to him. It is on all hands allowed, that they addressed him under the title of king, or Moloch [l]. His image is said to have been hollow, and to have been divided into seven receptacles. The first was opened for an offering of fine flour; the second for an offering of turtles; the third for a sheep; the fourth for a ram; the fifth for a calf; the sixth for an ox; the seventh for a child. It had the head of an ox, and the arms of a man stretched out in act to receive [m] (A). Now these seven receptacles are also called seven chapels; and instead of [k] 2 Sam. x. 2.

[l] Vide Voss. de Idololat. & SELDEN de Diis Syr. Syntag. 1. c. vi.

[m] PAUL. FAGIUS apud eund. ubi supr.

(A) An antient Jewish traveller says, "that when he was in "these parts, there were yet standing remains of the antient temple "of the Ammonites, and therein their idol seated upon a throne. "This idol was of stone, gilt over with gold, and had on each "hand the image of a woman in a sitting posture (77): before the "idol was the altar on which the Ammonites offered their sacrifices "and incense." Selden thinks this idol and this temple cannot be thought to have been erected to Moloch, that most antient deity of the Ammonites (78). And indeed we think this traveller must have been some how or other imposed on, or mistaken. However, we must not apprehend, that the images of Moloch were always large and fixed: they were likewise small and portable, and carried up and down in shrines, according to appearance, and as the custom was with other idolaters, as will be observed at due times (79).

(77) Benjamin. Itinerar. (78) In Syntag. prim. de diis Syr. (79) Vide eund. ibid.

being within the image itſelf, are placed orderly before it [n]. Whatever was the diſpoſition of theſe ſeven places, their number correſponding with that of the ſun, moon, and five planets, has given room to ſuppoſe, that they worſhipped the ſun intentionally [o]; and the rather, as the oblations ſeem to riſe in ſuch proportion as might, according to this people, beſt befit the degree of each of theſe heavenly bodies. But it were endleſs to expatiate in a conjectural way upon ſo obſcure a matter, as the learned have done. Some accounts there are farther concerning this idol, but they are very doubtful (B). Chemoſh alſo was a god of the Ammonites, concerning whom we have ſaid all we can already *.

As to the ſuperſtitions paid to Moloch, there is a wide diſcrepancy among authors. By the ſcripture it is often ſaid, that the Ammonites paſſed their ſeed through fire to Moloch. This expreſſion is taken in a literal ſenſe by ſome, in a figurative ſenſe by others. The firſt ſentiment is embraced by the Jewiſh writers (C), who for the moſt part hold, that the [n] See Bedford's Script. Chronol. p. 259. [o] Vide Voss. ubi ſupr. * See before, p. 82.

(B) To give you the various opinions of ſome learned men, Moloch has been taken for Priapus, for Mercury, for Saturn, and for Venus or the morning ſtar (80). But as fancy, chiefly, rules over theſe conjectures, it is enough that we give the bare mention of them.

(C) Some of the Jewiſh writers hold, That the children were ſolemnly delivered to the prieſts; who returning them again, they were carried by their parents, upon their ſhoulders, between two fires. According to others, the prieſts carried them. A very eminent writer of this ſort ſays, "That the prieſts or ſervants of fire "perſuaded men that their children would die if they did not paſs "them through fire: wherefore, parents being anxious for the "lives of their children, and perceiving there was neither danger nor difficulty in performing the ceremony, no one neglected "it, conſidering that the children were not to be conſumed by fire, "but only to paſs through it" (81). This alſo is the opinion of Solomon Yarhi, Joſeph Karo, and others; but Aben Ezra diſſents therefrom, and affirms, that paſſing through fire muſt be here underſtood of burning. Voſſius inſiſts on it, that wherever the expreſſion of paſſing through fire is met with, it muſt be taken in the ſtrictneſs of the letter; but allows, that in caſes of great calamity and upon other particular occaſions, they gave up their offspring as an

(80) Vide Voſs. de Idololatria, lib. 2. c. 5. (81) Moſes Maim. More Nevoch. lib. 3. c. 38.

expiatory

the children were barely carried or led between two fires, by way of purification: the latter is adopted by the chriſtian writers chiefly, who think that they actually burnt their children, by way of ſacrifice to this grim idol. There was a place near Jeruſalem where this horrid cuſtom was obſerved. It was called the valley of the ſons of Hinnom [p] (D), ſo named from the ſhrieks of the children ſacrificed: as alſo Tophet [q], from a Hebrew word Toph: ſignifying a drum or tabret, which they uſed among other inſtruments, to drown the dreadful outcries of the unhappy victims. Whence this cruelty took birth, is what we may have occaſion to diſcuſs at large hereafter.

They drive out the Zamzummims.

As the Moabites drove out the Emims, and poſſeſſed themſelves of their country, ſo the Ammonites forced the Zuzims, or Zamzummims, as they called them, from their habitations, and ſettled themſelves there. Theſe Zamzummims, as well as the Emims, are ſtiled giants [r], and were doubtleſs both derived from the ſame ſtock [s]. This gigantic race had been invaded by Chedorlaomer king of Elam [t], who, deſtroying great numbers of them, as ſhould ſeem, made it the eaſier for the children of Ammon to diſlodge them. When this expulſion was effected, or in what manner, we know not. However, the Ammonites themſelves underwent the ſame fate in the days of Moſes, being diſpoſſeſſed by Sihon the Amorite, who drove them into, and to the eaſtward of, the mountains.

Their hiſtory.

THE names of their firſt kings do not occur. They joined Eglon king of Moab againſt Iſrael [u], and ſhared in the ſuc-expiatory ſacrifice to their god (82). Selden is of a quite different ſentiment, and will have it, that they not only led their children through fire, but burnt them alſo at the ſame time. This he proves as far as a matter of this nature can be aſcertained (83). Upon the whole, remembering how common a practice it was to offer up theſe unnatural oblations among ſome of the neighbouring nations, the ſame may probably have prevailed among the Ammonites.

[p] 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. [q] 2 Kings xxiii. 10. [r] Deut. ii. 20, 21. [s] See before, p. 85. [t] Gen. xiv. 5. [u] See before p. 91.

(D) This valley was a very delightful place, watered by the ſprings of Siloah. It was ſhady and beautified with gardens. And indeed it is remarkable that the heathens commonly choſe fountain-heads and ſolemn groves for the ſcenes of the homage they paid their deities. This cuſtom our author ſuppoſes they borrowed from the Ammonites (84).

(82) Vide Voſs. ubi ſupr. (83) Vide Seld. ubi ſupr. (84) Hieron. in Jerem. c. vii. xxxii.

ceſſes of that war; but who was their leader at this time is not ſaid.

They war with the Iſraelites under an anonymous king.

About two hundred years after this, we find the Ammonites as principals in a war, under an anonymous king, againſt the Iſraelites. This prince took it into his head to attempt the recovery of the antient country of Ammonitis; and making an irruption into it, he bore down all before him, and reduced the land, and kept it in ſubjection to him eighteen years. Encouraged by his ſucceſs, he croſſed over the river Jordan, and inſulted the tribes of Judah, and Benjamin, and Ephraim [w]; but returned to the other ſide again, and prepared (E) to make a compleat conqueſt of the country on both ſides of the river [x]; or at leaſt to get a handſome portion of it. For it is ſaid, that the Philiſtines alſo at this time invaded Iſrael; but whether with ſeparate views, or in combination with the Ammonites, does not appear; though it is moſt likely they intended to ſhare the ſpoil between them. But to ſpeak of the king of Ammon ſingly, he perſevered in his purpoſe, and encamped in Gilead; and the Iſraelites having turned to God, who had ſuffered them to be ſo long oppreſſed for their wickedneſs, they were inſpired with a courage to oppoſe this arrogant invader, and not only ſtop the progreſs of his arms, but drive him out of Gilead, where he had lorded it for eighteen years. Accordingly, meſſengers came to him from their new general Jephthah, to demand his reaſons for perſiſting in his enmity againſt them, and threatening them with farther calamities. His anſwer to them was, that the remembrance of the injuries his fore-fathers had ſuſtained when the Iſraelites diſpoſſeſſed them of their country, had [w] Judg. x. 8. [x] Joseph. Antiq. lib. v. c. 9.

(E) There is pretty conſiderable difference here between the ſcripture and Joſephus. He ſays, the Ammonites and the Philiſtines had only prepared to croſs the river Jordan. The ſcripture ſays, the Ammonites did actually croſs over to fight with Judah, and Benjamin and Ephraim; ſo that the Iſraelites were in great diſtreſs. We have therefore harmonized the one with the other; in which we know not but we may be miſtaken. For, after all, this warfare is not very clearly related in ſcripture. If they croſſed to this ſide of Jordan, what did they here? we are not told. How came it to paſs that the inhabitants of thoſe tribes did not croſs over to Gilead, where the war was decided? we know not. In a word, this war ſeems by the ſcripture to have affected only the north-eaſtern Iſraelites who had been oppreſſed by the Ammonites, and ſhook off the yoke at laſt by their own ſtruggles, without any other aſſiſtance.

excited

excited him thereto; and therefore required them forthwith to reſtore that realm to him, as in juſtice they ought. In reply to this pretenſion, there came ambaſſadors to him again from Jephthah: and theſe made an hiſtorical remonſtrance to him of his miſtake, in ſaying the Iſraelites had driven out the Ammonites, and, ſtifly expatiating upon the truth of the ſtory throughout the ſeveral circumſtances, expected his anſwer: but he gave no ear to them, and was bent at all hazards upon a war. And therefore as he lay near Aroer, he was attacked by Jephthah, who gave him a total overthrow; and being put to flight, he was purſued with great loſs of blood, even into his own dominions, to Minnith, and from thence as far as Abel of the vineyards: ſo that not only his army was ſlaughtered, but good part of his country alſo was pillaged and waſted [y]. This was the event of the war, which put an end to the tyranny of Ammon over the Iſraelites on the other ſide Jordan, and which had laſted eighteen years.

THE next of their kings we find mentioned, is called NAHASH. He flouriſhed in the days of Saul, from whom he received the juſt reward of his great inſolence and barbarity. For reviving the old claim upon the territory inhabited by the Iſraelites on the other ſide Jordan, he waged war with them, and in the beginning was attended with all the ſucceſs imaginable. At length coming to the city of Jabeſh, he beſieged it. The terrour of his arms was ſo great, that the inhabitants were at once for throwing themſelves at his feet, and acknowledging him for their lord and king. This ſubmiſſion, which might have mollified the leaſt generous heart, ſerved only to harden his. He would hearken to them upon no other condition than their conſenting every one to the loſs of his right eye, that in them he might ſtigmatize the whole body of Iſrael. The inhabitants returned, That if he would allow them but ſeven days to endeavour a deliverance from him, they would ſubmit to his terms after the expiration of that time, if none was found to deliver them. This he granted them, and, ſecure within himſelf, waited for the cruel ſatisfaction he propoſed ſhortly to enjoy. But he was aſſaulted in three ſeveral parts of his camp by Saul, very early on the eighth morning, when he expected the inhabitants to march out to him, as they deceitfully told him they ſhould the night before; and his army was put into ſuch confuſion, that the Iſraelites had little elſe to do but to put them to the ſword. Inſtead of a battle it is termed a ſlaughter, which laſted till the heat of the day; at which time the ſurviving remnant of Nahaſh's army was ſo perfectly diſperſed, that there was no two of them to be seen together [z]. Thus ended this war. We are informed, that Nahash did some kindnesses to king David. Josephus differs from scripture in his account of this war (F).

Nahaſh king.

[y] Judg. xi.

Hanun king.

Hanun succeeded his father Nahash (G). in the kingdom; but whether this Nahash be the very same who was defeated by Saul at Jabesh, we are not told. However this was, we are informed, that Nahash, the father of Hanun, had lived in a very fair intelligence with David. Wherefore when this latter heard, that Nahash was dead, and that his son succeeded, he, for the father's sake, sent ambassadors to the young king, to condole with him for his loss, to congratulate him upon his accession, and to offer a continuance of the friendship which had been cherished between the late king and him. Hanun seems to have been a weak prince, and had very ignorant counsellors about him. Whence it came to pass, that when he received these compliments from king David by the mouth of his ambassadors, he, instead of improving them to advantage, took a false step which he never could recover. For instead of entertaining these ambassadors with the hospitality and decency which became him, he suffered himself to be persuaded, that they were no better than spies; and accordingly forgetting the sacredness of their character, he shaved off the half of their beards, cut away their garments by the [z] 1 Sam. xi.

(F) There seems to be something very unaccountable in Josephus's history of this war: he says, that Nahash began it, and carried it on for some time with the violences usual in the like cases, and with this political addition, of plucking out the right eyes of all those he took, that they might lose the use of their bucklers, which covered the left eye, or the use of that eye at all; and so reduce them to slavery for life, seeing they would be unable to defend themselves. But may it not be asked how it could come to pass, that those, who pressed on so hastily to relieve Jabesh, could have suffered Nahash to have gone on in a course of this cruelty for even the shortest space of time? this historian seems here to be quite wide of the sense of the sacred text.

(G) Notwithstanding Josephus informs us, that Nahash was killed upon the breaking up of the siege of Jabesh, (85) we cannot forbear thinking that he lived many years afterwards, and was the father of this Hanun. His behaviour at Jabesh, speaks him to have been a rash, hot-headed, young man at that time, and he might naturally enough have lived fifty or threescore years afterwards. We are seemingly supported in our opinion by the scripture itself.

(85) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 6. 6.

buttocks,

buttocks, and in that ſhameful diſguiſe ſent them back to their king. This amazing defect in policy and contempt of David, in open defiance of the laws of nature, hoſpitality, and gratitude, brought on a war *, which ended very deſtructively upon him and his kingdom.

IT was ſoon told him how grievouſly David reſented the affront, and what preparations he was making to chaſtiſe him for it. Hanun, therefore, perceiving himſelf on the brink of a war, to which he ſingly was unequal, diſpatched ambaſſadors to the neighbouring princes, to hire and ſolicit the aſſiſtance of troops from them, to enable him to withſtand the invaſion which threatened his kingdom. What the troops he procured were, either in quality or number, is not clearly evident, inaſmuch as the ſcripture varies (H) concerning them. Firſt, we are told, that Hanun ſent to the Syrians of Bethreboh, and to the Syrians of Zobah, from whom he had twenty thouſand footmen; to the king of Maachah, who furniſhed one thouſand men; and to the king of Iſhtob, who ſent twelve thouſand men [a]. With this Joſephus agrees pretty well in reſpect of number, retrenching only the one thouſand men ſupplied by the king of Maachah, and allowing him and the king of Iſhtob to have contributed twelve thouſand men between them [b]. Whence, inſtead of making the number of theſe mercenaries to have amounted to thirty three thouſand, as the ſcripture does, he gives them at thirty two thouſand. Again, we are told, that Hanun ſent a thouſand talents of ſilver, therewith to hire chariots and horſemen out of Meſopotamia, and out of Syria Maachah, and out of Zobah; and that he actually hired thirty two thouſand chariots beſides the king of Maachah's men [c]. Between Joſephus and this paſſage of Scripture there is a more material difference than before: He ſays, thoſe which came out of Meſopotamia were footmen [d]. Here alſo we ſee the ſcripture keeps to the number of thirty three thouſand. However, though the number be the ſame as before, the difference is very great. But let us proceed to the actions and event of this war.

* 2 Sam. x. 1 Chron. xix. JOSEPH. Antiq lib. 7. c. 6. [a] 2 Sam. ubi ſupra. [b] JOSEPH. Antiq. ubi ſupra. [c] 1 Chron. ubi ſupra [d] ubi ſupra.

(H) This we cannot pretend to account for, nor do we know that it was ever cleared by any one, in a ſatisfactory manner. Hadarezer is in ſcripture mentioned as the chief prince of the Syrian nations; Joſephus ſpeaks of one Syrus as chief, and calls him king of Meſopotamia (86).

(86) Id. lib. 7. b.

HANUN

Hanun having thus drawn a conſiderable force from the neighbouring countries, and raiſed an army of his own ſubjects, marched out of Rabbah to fight Joab, whom David had ſent at the head of his army. The Ammonites and their auxiliaries drew up in two diſtinct bodies; (viz.) the Ammonites under the walls of their city, and the auxiliaries at ſome diſtance on the plain. By this diſpoſition they thought to have charged Joab's front, and at the ſame time to have fallen upon his rear; but this took not effect. For the Ammonites were attacked by Abiſhai, Joab's brother, whilſt Joab himſelf charged the Syrians. The Ammonites (I) ſuſtained Abiſhai's charge with great conſtancy, and maintained the conflict with intrepidity, till, perceiving their Syrian friends to give ground, they thought it moſt adviſeable to retreat into their city, and they did ſo.

The next year their Syrian allies, aſhamed of their laſt defeat, made head again, (K) but being utterly routed by

(I) In what concerns this battle we reject Joſephus *, and chooſe to interpret the ſcripture according to reaſon and the nature of things. He ſays, the Ammonites, perceiving their allies to be routed, hurried into their city without ſtriking a ſtroke. Partiality for his fore-fathers might perhaps have tempted him to repreſent them ſo very formidable to their enemies. But can it be ſuppoſed, that when Joab divided his army between his brother and himſelf, that they did not advance with an equal pace each againſt his oppoſite? And eſpecially, as Joſephus allows, that the Syrians ſtood their ground till a conſiderable ſlaughter was made among them, which could not be the work of a minute; Abiſhai muſt have moved on very ſlowly, if before the Syrians were broke he did not charge the Ammonites. On the other ſide the Ammonites, who were principals in this war, if they had perceived Abiſhai afraid to give them battle, or ſeemingly ſo, and at the ſame time beheld their auxiliaries in a furious and doubtful conflict with Joab, they muſt have had ſenſe and courage enough to march up to Abiſhai, and force him to battle, before the Syrians began to flee. If the whole ſtory be well conſidered, it is not to be imagined, that Abiſhai and the Ammonites kept looking at one another, or what is next of kin to it, made very ſlow advances towards each other.

(K) Thus it appears by ſcripture, which turning the tables, makes the Syrians principals in this war, rather avenging their laſt overthrow, than eſpouſing the cauſe of the Ammonites. Joſephus ſtrays here again very unaccountably. He makes the Ammonites ſend to one Balawa, a king of the Syrians beyond the Euphrates, for another army thrice as big as that they hired before (87).

* Antiq. lib. 7, c. 7. (87) Ubi ſupra.

David

David in perſon, the Ammonites were left to defend themſelves againſt the violent and juſt reſentment of their injured enemy [e].

IT came down heavily upon them. For the very next year, the third of this war, the country was entered by Joab, who harraſſed and waſted it far and wide; and at length beſieged Hanun in Rabbah, the capital of his kingdom. The place held out about two years; during which Hanun made one deſperate ſally, and cut off many of the beſiegers, and, among the reſt, Uriah the huſband of Bathſheba. At length the city was reduced to the utmoſt extremities of famine, and was ſtormed by David in perſon, who came to have the honour of compleating the work. In the aſſault Hanun was ſlain, and his crown, which weighed a talent of gold (one hundred thirteen pound ten ounces, one penny weight 10 $\frac{2}{7}$ Gr. of our Troy weight *), and was adorned with precious ſtones, a ſardonyx, Joſephus ſays, was taken from off his head by David. What other ſpoil was found in this metropolis is no where ſpecified. The inhabitants were treated with extraordinary ſeverity, being led out, and put to death by the moſt exquiſite torments, harrowed, ſawn, and hacked with axes, and paſſed through the brick-kiln. This dreadful uſage extended to the reſt of the cities of Ammon (L), which held out againſt the conqueror; all ſuch ſharing in the fate of the city of Rabbah, which was deſtroyed, and laid level with the ground [f]. And thus did the Ammonites ſuffer, ſeemingly too much, for the raſhneſs of a young king, and the fooliſh advice of empty counſellors.

AFTER this vengeful execution, it is no wonder we hear nothing of a king of Ammon, nor indeed of the nation itſelf, till the reign of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah. At this time we find them united with their brethren the Moabites, and the inhabitants of mount Seir againſt the ſaid king of Judah. The particulars of this war, and how it ended, we have given in the hiſtory of Moab [g].

[e] Sam. ubi ſupra. JOSEPH. Antiq. ubi ſupra. * See ARBUTH. Tab. of an. coins, weights, and meaſures, Tab. XX. [f] See 2 Sam. xii. 29, 31. JOSEPH. ubi ſupra c. 7. 1 Chron. xx. [g] See before p. 94.

(L) The ſcripture ſays it extended to all the cities of Ammon; but we cannot forbear thinking, that this expreſſion means only all ſuch as held out obſtinately, and defied the king of Iſrael; and herein we are ſupported by Joſephus.

AFTER

After this they were overthrown by, and made tributary to, Uzziah king of Judah [h].

The Ammonites bore this yoke as long as Uzziah lived, but in the reign of his son Jotham they had an anonymous king over them, who ſtirred them up to rebellion againſt him. The nation at this time muſt have been pretty well recovered, and having a martial prince at the head of them, they reſolved to free themſelves from the oppreſſions of their old enemies in Judah. The event was unhappy; they were overthrown in battle, and were reduced to compound for their peace with Jotham, by paying a tribute of one hundred talents of ſilver, ten thouſand meaſures of wheat, and as many of barley [i], in all about one hundred ſixty thouſand of our buſhels; and this ſame tribute did they pay for three ſucceſſive years [k].

At length when the Babylonians grew mighty, and threatened all the kingdoms of this part of Aſia with ſubjection, it is likely they might have entertained thoughts of withſtanding the common enemy with their joint force. From hence, poſſibly a good underſtanding between Baalis, the laſt king of Ammon, and Zedekiah, the laſt king of Judah [l], might ſeemingly ariſe. But when deſtruction came upon Zedekiah and Jeruſalem, the Ammonites ſhewed themſelves, and exulted over the ruins of that unhappy city [m], for which they were ſeverely threatened by the prophet. It ſeems impoſſible that they ſhould have refrained from it, conſidering the ſteadfaſt enmity which had ſo long ſubſiſted between the nations. However, Baalis received all the Jews, that fled into his dominions to avoid the captivity, and among thoſe one Iſhmael, of the royal blood, whoſe intereſt he pretended to have much at heart. And, to give him an inſtance of his readineſs to aſſiſt him, with his counſel at leaſt, adviſed him to go back again into his own country and aſſaſſinate Gedaliah, who by the expreſs appointment of the Babylonians, was left ſet over the poor remnant of the Jews. By thus ſtirring up a pretender, he ſeems to have aimed at the utter extirpation of the nation, either out of a pure deſire of revenge, or with ſome view to his own advantage at the ſame time. His bloody counſel was taken, and the aſſaſſin did his work, and was obliged to fly back again to Baalis who received him into his protection [n]. But Baalis lived not long unpuniſhed for having been ſo nearly acceſſary to the murder of the innocent [h] 2 Chron. xxvi. 8. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 9 c. 11. [i] Vid. Arbuth. ubi ſupra. [k] Idem ubi ſupra. [l] 2 Chron. xxvii. 5. [m] See Jerem. xxvii. 3. [n] See Jerem. xl, xli.

Gedaliah:

Gedaliah: for, a short time afterwards, he was attacked by Nebuzaradan the Babylonian general, who put his country to fire and sword, and destroyed his chief city Rabbah, and carried away Baalis and most of the nobles of Ammon into captivity, as had been prophesied by Amos: " I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, and their king shall go into captivtiy, he and his princes together, saith the Lord; and Ezekiel: and I will deliver thee for a spoil [o] unto the men of the East, and will give them the Ammonites in possession, that the Ammonites may not be remember'd among the nations [p].

THIS last prophecy was in due time compleated, their name being blotted out from the book of nations in the end. But in the mean time they are mentioned as conjoined with the Arabians, Moabites, and Samaritans, in giving all the disturbance they were able to the rebuilding of the temple of Jerusalem; which they endeavoured to prevent as much as in them lay. One Tobiah called the servant, is said to have been at the head of them upon these occasions [q].

LIVING in peace and quietness under the great monarchies, the Ammonites in process of time grew to be more considerable, and in the days of Judas Maccabæus were assembled together, in a very great army under their governor Timotheus, to fight against that heroic Jew. They came to a battle, wherein Timotheus and the Ammonites were worsted, and the same ill fortune attended them in other subsequent conflicts, under the same leader, and against the same enemy. In the end their city Jaser (it was not antiently reckoned a city of theirs) and the neighbouring towns, fell a prey to the Jews, who smote the men, and carried their wives and children into captivity, and plundered and burnt the city of Jaser; and thus ended this, as it seems, their last warfare with the descendants of Israel [r].

NEVERTHELESS, towards the beginning of the second century of the christian æra, they were thought worthy of being called a numerous nation [s]; but towards the latter end of the same their name was vanished, and they themselves blended among the Arabians [t], as happened also to the Moabites, Edomites, and others.

[o] See Ezekiel xxv. [p] Idem. xxv. 7—10. [q] See Nehem. ii, iv, vi, xiii. [r] See 1 Macc v. 6—8. JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 12. c. 11, 12. PRIDEAUX Connect. part 2. book 4. p. 212. [s] Vide JUST. MART. in dial. cum. Tryph. p. 272. [t] ORIG. lib. 1. in Job.

The End of the History of Ammon.

SECT:

SECT. III.

The History of Midian, or Madian.

Their descent.

IT is generally agreed, that this people drew their origin from Midian, the fourth son of Abraham by Keturah, from whom they were called Midianites. He received large gifts from his father, as did the rest of his brethren, and was, as well as they, sent eastward, into the east country, to be at a proper distance from Isaac [a]. The sons of Midian were Ephah, and Epher, and Hanoch, and Abidah, and Eldaah [b].

THE Midianites were, in their most early times, evidently confounded with the Ishmaelites [c]; and many ages afterwards they are mentioned in conjunction with the Nebatæans and Kedarenes, the posterity of Nebaioth and Kedar, the sons of Ishmael [d]. Doubtless, remembering their kindred, they adhered to each other, and were pretty much blended together. On the other hand, we find them to have been so incorporated as it were with the Moabites, that Moses almost considered them as but one nation [e]. Their religion was the same, and they acted in the strictest concert together against him and the Israelites. The ties of blood united these likewise, as on the one side they were descended from Abraham, and on the other from Lot. So, just as they happened to live in the northern or southern parts of their country, they joined themselves either to the Moabites or the Ishmaelites. From hence we, in part, gather the extent of their territory, and that there was a pretty wide difference between the Midianites and Madianites.

The country possessed by the Midianites.

THE country of Midian was a part of Arabia Petræa. Its exact limits cannot be ascertained. From what we find in scripture, it must have lain south-eastward of the lake Asphaltites, or the Dead-sea [f]. On the north, it was bounded by Moab, or rather mixed with it [g]. Its boundary on the east is uncertain. On the south, it was bounded by the Red-sea. On the west, by Edom, or Idumæa, and, partly, also on the north, as should seem [h].

BEING a part of Arabia Petræa, it was mostly rocky, mountainous, and sandy. These barren and difficult defects

[a] Gen. xxv. 2. 6. 1 Chron. i. 32. [b] Ibid. ver. 33. Gen. xxv. 4. [c] See Gen. xxxvii. 25—28. Judg. viii. 24. [d] Isa. lx. 6, 7. [e] See Gen. xxxvi. 35. 1 Chron. i. 46. [f] See Exod. iii. 1. xviii. 5. Judg. vi. 3. vii. 12, 24, 25. [g] See Numb. xxii. 4. [h] See 1 Kings xi. 18.

were pretty well amended by the numbers of camels and dromedaries it abounded with; creatures moſt admirably adapted for the uſe of ſuch whoſe lot it was to live upon ſo dry and rugged a ſoil. It was alſo well ſtored with other cattle, which in great herds were driven about to paſture, and to ſprings of water [i]. Though it is certain, that this country was not very well furniſhed with fixed habitations, ſuch as towns and cities, yet we read of their cities and goodly caſtles: but theſe we muſt underſtand to have ſtood in the neighbourhood of Moab only [k]. Two of its cities we have expreſs mention of, and both called Midian, or Madian; the one ſituated in the north, towards Rabbah of Moab, or Areopolis; the other in the ſouth, by the Red-ſea [l]; and was very probably the ſame which Ptolemy calls Modiana, and is perhaps the ſame with a ruined place which the Arabs call Madyan, to this day. Finally, we muſt not forget, that mount Sinai is placed within this territory [m].

THE Midianites were a very numerous race, and may be diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts, ſhepherds and merchants. The ſhepherds moved up and down in tents, and drove their cattle before them, even when they went to war [n]. The merchants alſo travelled from place to place in companies [o], or caravans, as the merchants of thoſe parts do at this day, and left the care of their cattle to the women, as ſeems by the ſtory of Jethro's daughters (A). The ſhepherds, it is likely, had few or no fixed habitations, except ſome ſtrong holds near their borders; the merchants probably had few or none but Their Manners.

[i] See Judg. vi. 5. in Numb. xxxi. 8, 10.
[k] Numb. xxix. 10.
[l] HIERON. Χωρὴϛ.
[m] Vide EUSEBIUS Onomaſt. in vocem
[n] See Judg. vi. 5.
[o] See Gen. xxxvii. 28.

(A) That ſtory ſeems to inform us, that the men in the ſouth part of Midian were not ſhepherds; and therefore we imagine they were merchants. Joſephus expreſly tells us, that it was the cuſtom of the women in this part, (which he miſtakenly calls Troglodytica) to look over the cattle; though indeed in this he ſeemingly contradicts what he ſays but a line or two before, viz. that the ſhepherds of the country were continually at ſtrife, which ſhould get firſt ſerved with water; and from thence infers the irregularity committed upon Jethro's daughters (1): Thus ſeemingly inconſiſtent is this author with himſelf. But if this laſt cuſtom prevailed, Jethro's ſon Hobab (for that he had ſuch a ſon we ſhall endeavour to make out hereafter) would have been much more equal to ſo troubleſome a taſk, than all the young women, his daughters.

(1) Joſeph. Antiqui. lib. 2. c. xi.

marts

marts and ſtations, in places convenient for their trade. Theſe grew to be exceeding rich, and by exchanging their gold and jewels with their brethren for their cattle, the ſhepherds were thereby ſtored with precious ornaments [p]. Their manners muſt have been in many reſpects as different as their way of life. However, they are in general repreſented to have been very ſumptuous in their exterior. We read of their jewels of gold, chains, bracelets, rings, ear-rings, tablets [q], the purple raiment of their kings, and the gold chains, or collars round the necks of their camels [r].

Their learning.

It appears very plain from Job, that they had the uſe of writing very early in theſe parts [s] among the deſcendants of Abraham; and the Midianites being alſo of the number, we cannot ſuppoſe them to have been ignorant therein (B). Sir Iſaac Newton gives them the honour of having inſtructed Moſes in writing [t]. The merchants muſt alſo have been verſed in arithmetic of ſome kind or other; and there being ſhips on the Mediterranean ſo early as in the days of the patriarch Jacob [u]; and theſe being themſelves traders, and ſituated on the Red-ſea, it cannot be ſuppoſed that they could refrain from ſhip-building, and exploring the ſhores of their own ſea, and the coaſts thereunto contiguous. From hence we may naturally enough extend the circle of their ſciences beyond bare writing

[p] See Numb. xxxi. 50, 51, 52. Judg. viii 24. [q] Numb. ubi ſupr. [r] Judg. ubi ſupr. ver. 26. [s] See Job. xix, 23, 24. [t] Chron. of antient kingd. amended, p. 210. [u] See Gen. xlix. 13.

(B) It is almoſt plain that Jethro himſelf had the art of writing, and, though we dare not poſitively aſſert it, ſent a letter to prepare Moſes for his rēception, when he was on his way to the Iſraelites with his daughter Zipporah and her two ſons. This is very naturally inferred from Jethro's form of addreſſing himſelf to Moſes, and what is ſaid to have happened thereupon: I, thy father-in-law, Jethro, am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two ſons with her. What was the conſequence of this? Moſes went out to meet his father-in-law. Had theſe words been uttered face to face, Moſes could, with no manner of propriety, be ſaid to have gone out to meet his father-in-law. Nor could this notice have been delivered by a meſſenger, who could not, without the moſt ridiculous abſurdity, have ſaid, I Jethro am come unto thee, and ſo on (2). As to the manner of writing in theſe days, and in theſe parts, there is mention made of graving with an iron pen or ſtyle upon lead, in the book of Job (3).

(2, Vide Lightfoot Spicilegia in Exod. § xxiii. (3) Chap. xix. 24. and

and arithmetic, and allow them a competent ſkill in geography, geometry, and aſtronomy.

Their religion.

IT is very apparent that the Midianites varied as much from each other in the matter of religion, as in their manner of life. At firſt they were, to be ſure, pure and right in their way; how long they perſevered in it is not ſaid. But in the days of Moſes they partly wallowed in all the abominations of the Moabites [w]; thoſe we mean who were neareſt to that idolatrous nation; nay, exceeded them in their endeavours to pervert the children of Iſrael, when they lay in the plains of Moab, and perſuaded them to bow down to Peor [x]; but we are indeed told, that Peor was worſhipped by the Midianitiſh women chiefly [y]. Thus ſtood religion in the north of Midian. Now in the ſouth we find them enlightened by a rational and ſublime ſyſtem, long after their brethren had fallen into the fouleſt corruption. As a proof of this, we need only mention Jethro, who is commonly ſtiled the prieſt of Midian, and is ſaid to have lived [z], and is by ſome thought to have preſided [a] over the Midianites, near the Red-ſea. His behaviour [b] in the camp of Iſrael is a ſufficient argument in favour of them; yet, though their religion was otherwiſe very pure, it is remarkable they could not bear circumciſion (C) [c]. They offered up praiſes, and thankſgivings, and ſacrifices to GOD, but their religious rites or ceremonies are not ſpoken of.

Their hiſtory.

WE know not whether they were divided as much from each other in form of government, as occupation and religion: excepting the caſe of Jethro, their government is repreſented rather as ariſtocratical than monarchical. Their chiefs however are ſtiled kings, and therefore we ſhall dignify them with the ſame title.

THE moſt antient record we find concerning this nation, after what has already been ſaid, is, their war with Hadad

[w] See before p. 85, 90. [x] See Numb xxv. 18. JOSEPH. Antiq. lib 4. c. vi. [y] HIERON. in Numb. Hom. xx. [z] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 2 c. xi. [a] Vide TREMELII Bibl Lat. Exod. iii. [b] Exod. xviii. 10——12. [c] See ibid. iv. 25, 26.

(C) This we think we have authority to ſay; but it is a controverted point. The text, to our apprehenſion, ſuggeſts at leaſt as much for it as againſt it. We ſhall briefly conſider this hereafter.

marts and ſtations, in places convenient for their trade. Theſe grew to be exceeding rich, and by exchanging their gold and jewels with their brethren for their cattle, the ſhepherds were thereby ſtored with precious ornaments [p]. Their manners muſt have been in many reſpects as different as their way of life. However, they are in general repreſented to have been very ſumptuous in their exterior. We read of their jewels of gold, chains, bracelets, rings, ear-rings, tablets [q], the purple raiment of their kings, and the gold chains, or collars round the necks of their camels [r].

Their learning.

It appears very plain from Job, that they had the uſe of writing very early in theſe parts [s] among the deſcendants of Abraham; and the Midianites being alſo of the number, we cannot ſuppoſe them to have been ignorant therein (B). Sir Iſaac Newton gives them the honour of having inſtructed Moſes in writing [t]. The merchants muſt alſo have been verſed in arithmetic of ſome kind or other; and there being ſhips on the Mediterranean ſo early as in the days of the patriarch Jacob [u]; and theſe being themſelves traders, and ſituated on the Red-ſea, it cannot be ſuppoſed that they could refrain from ſhip-building, and exploring the ſhores of their own ſea, and the coaſts thereunto contiguous. From hence we may naturally enough extend the circle of their ſciences beyond bare writing

[p] See Numb. xxxi. 50, 51, 52. Judg. viii 24. [q] Numb. ubi ſupr. [r] Judg. ubi ſupr. ver. 26. [s] See Job. xix, 23, 24. [t] Chron. of antient kingd. amended, p. 210. [u] See Gen. xlix. 13.

(B) It is almoſt plain that Jethro himſelf had the art of writing, and, though we dare not poſitively aſſert it, ſent a letter to prepare Moſes for his reception, when he was on his way to the Iſraelites with his daughter Zipporah and her two ſons. This is very naturally inferred from Jethro's form of addreſſing himſelf to Moſes, and what is ſaid to have happened thereupon: I, thy father-in-law, Jethro, am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two ſons with her. What was the conſequence of this? Moſes went out to meet his father-in-law. Had theſe words been uttered face to face, Moſes could, with no manner of propriety, be ſaid to have gone out to meet his father-in-law. Nor could this notice have been delivered by a meſſenger, who could not, without the moſt ridiculous abſurdity, have ſaid, I Jethro am come unto thee, and ſo on (2). As to the manner of writing in theſe days, and in theſe parts, there is mention made of graving with an iron pen or ſtyle upon lead, in the book of Job (3).

(2) Vide Lightfoot Spicilegia in Exod. § xxiii. (3) Chap. xix. 24. and and arithmetic, and allow them a competent ſkill in geography, geometry, and aſtronomy.

Their religion.

IT is very apparent that the Midianites varied as much from each other in the matter of religion, as in their manner of life. At firſt they were, to be ſure, pure and right in their way; how long they perſevered in it is not ſaid. But in the days of Moſes they partly wallowed in all the abominations of the Moabites [w]; thoſe we mean who were neareſt to that idolatrous nation; nay, exceeded them in their endeavours to pervert the children of Iſrael, when they lay in the plains of Moab, and perſuaded them to bow down to Peor [x]; but we are indeed told, that Peor was worſhipped by the Midianitiſh women chiefly [y]. Thus ſtood religion in the north of Midian. Now in the ſouth we find them enlightened by a rational and ſublime ſyſtem, long after their brethren had fallen into the fouleſt corruption. As a proof of this, we need only mention Jethro, who is commonly ſtiled the prieſt of Midian, and is ſaid to have lived [z], and is by ſome thought to have preſided [a] over the Midianites, near the Red-ſea. His behaviour [b] in the camp of Iſrael is a ſufficient argument in favour of them; yet, though their religion was otherwiſe very pure, it is remarkable they could not bear circumciſion (C) [c]. They offered up praiſes, and thankſgivings, and ſacrifices to GOD, but their religious rites or ceremonies are not ſpoken of.

WE know not whether they were divided as much from each other in form of government, as occupation and religion: excepting the caſe of Jethro, their government is repreſented rather as ariſtocratical than monarchical. Their chiefs however are ſtiled kings, and therefore we ſhall dignify them with the ſame title.

Their hiſtory.

THE moſt antient record we find concerning this nation, after what has already been ſaid, is, their war with Hadad

[w] See before p. 85, 90. [x] See Numb. xxv. 18. JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 4. c. vi. [y] HIERON. in Numb. Hom. xx. [z] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 2. c. xi. [a] Vide TREMELII Bibl Lat. Exod. iii. [b] Exod. xviii. 10——12. [c] See ibid. iv. 25, 26.

(C) This we think we have authority to ſay; but it is a controverted point. The text, to our apprehenſion, ſuggeſts at leaſt as much for it as againſt it. We ſhall briefly conſider this hereafter.

the Horite, when Midian (D) was smitten by him in the field of Moab [d].

The next is their purchasing of Joseph from his brethren for twenty pieces of silver, and carrying him away with them into Egypt, where they sold him to Potiphar, one of Pharaoh's chief officers [e].

Jethro. Many years after this there lived a priest, or prince, (E) of the southern Midianites, called Reuel, or Jethro (F), or the Kenite the father of Moses [f]. This person resided in the city of Madian bythe Red-sea [g]. It happened that his daughters, who were seven in number, met with some disturbance one day from certain rude shepherds, in watering their father's flock. Just before this, Moses had set himself down to rest in the same place, being then upon his flight from Pharaoh; and perceiving the outrage of the shepherds, who drove the maidens and their cattle from the water they had been at the pains of drawing (G), he rose up, and withstood them, and assisted the young women in compleating their work. When they went [d] Gen. xxxvi, 35. [e] Ibid. xxxvii. 28, 36. [f] Exod. iii. 1. Judg. i. 16 [g] Josephh. ubi supr.

(D) Doctor Cumberland is inclined to think, that Moses recorded this, as it was a calamity, to Jethro his father-in-law; and that it was Midian himself that was smitten, somewhat before he was an hundred and nine years old (4).

(E) The Hebrew word is כֹּהֵן chohen, which signifies a prince, or a priest, and is promiscuously rendered by both the one and the other. But let this condition of life have been great or mean, we may be excused for inserting what we find concerning him and his family, inasmuch as it is the only fragment we have left in history concerning the antient Midianites in the south.

(F) This is by some held to have been the surname of the family (5). The seventy call him Ῥαγουήλ, Raguel, and so does the vulgate, and even our own version in another place: however, this name is by some thought to have been the name of Jethro's father (6). but with what foundation may be cursorily considered hereafter.

(G) This insult has given birth to a suspicion, that their father was so far from being chief, either as prince, or priest, that he was only an inferior in the sacred order, and then no wonder they were abused, says our commentator. Indeed, if we do not suppose

(4) Origin. Gent. Antiquiss. p. 14, 136. (5) Vide Cleric. in Exod. ii. (6) Vide eund. ibid.

these went home to their father, he wondered to ſee them come back ſooner than uſual; and enquiring into the cauſe of their diſpatch, they gave him an account of the inſult they had received at the well; and how an Egyptian (ſo they called Moſes) had protected and aſſiſted them. The good man enquired where this worthy ſtranger was, and reproved his daughters for being ſo unkind as not to bring him home with them; and ſtraitway ſent them to invite their friend and protector to refreſh himſelf. They obeyed, and brought Moſes to their father Jethro; who, taking a fancy to the man, retained him in his family, committed the care of his flocks to him, and in proceſs of time gave him his daughter Zipporah to wife; and Jethro had Moſes with him forty years. At length, underſtanding that his ſon-in-law was commiſſioned by GOD to lead out the children of Iſrael from bondage, he conſented to part with him, and his daughter, and his grandchildren, who ſet out for Egypt: but a diſpute ariſing between Moſes and his wife about circumciſing a child upon the road [h], ſhe came, or was ſent back again (H) by her huſband, and he went on without her [i].

WHEN Jethro heard of the mighty things which the LORD had done through Moſes, and how he had delivered his people, and brought them out of Egypt, he took his daugh-theſe ſhepherds to have been ſtrangers in this part, it muſt be acknowledged, that it does not look as if Jethro was a man in any great repute or authority.

[h] Exod. ii, iii, iv. [i] Ibid. xviii. 2.

(H) In caſes of doubt like this, we can only take what ſeems to us the moſt rational ſide of the queſtion. Divines have explained this matter many ways (7), and ſome ſeem unwilling to allow there was any jar between Moſes and his wife, apprehending perhaps, that it cannot ſuit with the dignity of that lawgiver's character. But for our parts we do not perceive how it can reflect any diſhonour upon him, eſpecially, when the ſubject of the diſpute was ſo very important. Furthermore, if the cuſtom had been that Jethro's family was circumciſed, Zipporah his daughter would certainly have made no words about the execution of a practice, which ſhe muſt have thought to have been eſſential. That there was ſome ſort of miſunderſtanding in this matter muſt be allowed; and therefore we have urged it as an inſtance to prove, that theſe Midianites did not uſe circumciſion; and have alſo made it the cauſe of Zipporah's returning back to her father.

(7) Vide Lightfoot, ubi ſupr. § 8, 9. Cleric. in Exod. iv.

ter Zipporah, and her two ſons, and his own ſon Hobab, and ſet out with them towards his ſon-in-law Moſes, to congratulate him, and reconcile him with his daughter Zipporah. They were all received very affectionately by Moſes, and Jethro hearing from him the wondrous works which had been done for Iſrael, he bleſſed GOD for the ſame, acknowledged him to be far ſuperior to all other gods, and took a burnt-offering and ſacrifices for GOD: and Aaron and all the elders of Iſrael came to aſſiſt at the ſolemnity, and to pay him the reſpect due to ſo venerable a perſon.

THE next day Jethro had an opportunity of diſplaying his great wiſdom and ſkill, in the due regulation of government. He obſerved, that the people crouded about Moſes all day long; and aſking him the meaning of it, Moſes anſwered him that he had been ſitting in judgment. Upon this Jethro told him, he was quite wrong to charge himſelf with ſo grievous a burden, too much for any one man to bear; that it would be enough for him to attend upon the ſublimer concerns only, to conſult with GOD, to declare his holy laws and ordinances, to inſtruct the people in the right way, and the like; and commit the judging and well-ordering of the people to a ſelect number of the moſt righteous men among the multitude, who ſhould, according to their abilities, be appointed over thouſands, and over hundreds, and over fifties, and over tens; abſtaining from every buſineſs himſelf that was not of the higheſt moment. Jethro gave not this counſel in vain, and thereby adminiſtred great eaſe to his ſon-in-law Moſes [k] (I).

[k] Ibid. ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, & ſeq.

(I) A very eminent divine contends, that this whole ſtory is miſplaced, and ought to ſtand between the tenth and eleventh verſes of the tenth chapter of Numbers (8): Firſt, becauſe Jethro is ſaid to have taken burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for God. Secondly, becauſe Moſes is ſaid to have ſitten to judge the people, and to have made known to them the ſtatutes of God and his laws. As this ſtory now ſtands, it refers to a time when as yet the tabernacle was not erected, nor any altar built; Moſes had not yet received any laws from GOD; nor had they reached mount Sinai, ſays our author. But it is nevertheleſs poſſible, that Jethro might have offered a ſacrifice in his way, particularly as he was a prieſt; nor is it unlikely that Moſes acted as judge and arbitrator, before he received any particular ſyſtem of laws from GOD. But Thirdly, becauſe Moſes puts off the inſtitution of the judges and elders over the people, which he was adviſed to by Jethro, till after they moved from

(8) Lightfoot ubi ſupr. § xxiii.

ANY

ANY thing farther concerning Jethro we know not, except that Moſes diſmiſſed him; that he ſeems to have left his ſon Hobab (K) behind him, with a friendly intent, that he ſhould ſerve as a guide through the wilderneſs; but it was with reluctance he went through with them; nor was he prevailed mount Sinai. This third proof ſeems to be more valid than the two former, but yet, not quite ſo plain and deciſive as might be wiſhed. The putting of Jethro's advice in execution effectually and orderly, muſt have been certainly the work of time. But were we to enlarge upon theſe obſcurities ſo far as we might, there would be no end to our work.

(K) It is very ſtrange, that thoſe who know not how to think that Raguel and Jethro were both names belonging to one man, will yet have it that Hobab and Jethro mean one and the ſame perſon. And, contrary to the apparent reaſon of things, that it was Jethro himſelf under the name of Hobab, who is here intreated to ſerve as a guide to the Iſraelites (9). Joſephus frequently calls him by the name of Raguel and ſays he was Moſes's father; ſo ſays the ſcripture, under the name of Raguel, in the place where Hobab is mentioned. In ſcripture he is conſtantly called Reuel or Jethro, till he departed from the camp. Shall we ſuppoſe that he came back again, and was from thenceforward called Hobab? That Jethro, returned to his own country, is expreſly ſaid (10). That Hobab did ſerve the Iſraelites as a guide, is plainly enough inſinuated (11). What ſettlement could Jethro want? how, as father of a family, could he deſert them? how, as he was a prieſt or a magiſtrate, could he be abſent from his charge? On the other ſide, how can it be ſuppoſed, that a man who expreſſed ſo much good-will towards the children of Iſrael, who was ſo thankful to God for their deliverance, who owned his conviction that they were under the protection and care of the Lord God; how can it be ſuppoſed, that ſuch a perſon would have made the leaſt ſcruple of doing any thing that could have been requeſted by Moſes, whom he looked on as the immediate miniſter of the Almighty? It is more rational to ſuppoſe, that it was a ſon of his called Hobab, who is here ſpoken of, who was left behind by his father, as one well acquainted with the deſert, and ſo might be of good uſe to Moſes; but who, not having the ſame faith and aſſurance in GOD which his father had, ſaw no great proſpect of good things to come, and therefore wanted to return home again; but that he was tempted to ſtay, and go through with them, is clearly enough ſaid. If Moſes's father-in-law is afterwards called Hobab, as he is (12), that is not the only little diſſonance of the hiſtorical kind we find in ſcripture.

(9) Vide Cleric. in Exod. xi. & Numb. x. (10) Exod. xviii. Judg. i. 16. (11) Joſeph. Antiq. lib v. c. 2. (12) Judg. iv. 11.

on to do it without very large promiſes [l]. We read farther concerning the deſcendants of Jethro, that they were called Kenites, and that they joined the children of Judah, and marched with them from the city of palm trees [Jericho] [m] into the wilderneſs of Judah [n]. That upon the taking of Hebron they were rewarded with a large portion of ground, in conſideration of their having forſaken their native place, and ſuffered with the Iſraelites all the toils of their wars, and all the diſtreſſes in the wilderneſs [o]. That Heber the huſband of Jael, who killed Siſera, was particularly of this family [p]. That on the aforeſaid conſideration alſo, the Kenites were many years afterwards warned by Saul to move off from the Amalekites, when he had it in charge to extirpate that nation, that they might be no way prejudiced thereby. Thus were they preſerved, and fixing their ſeat upon a rock, and there poſſeſſing a ſtrong hold, they grew wanton and preſumptuous, and were carried away into captivity by the Aſſyrians, together with the ten tribes of Iſrael, as Balaam had propheſied long before: And he [Balaam] looked on the Kenites . . . and ſaid, ſtrong is thy dwelling-place, and thou putteſt thy neſt on a rock. Nevertheleſs the Kenite ſhall be waſted, until Aſhur ſhall carry thee away captive [q]. And thus have we traced down the poſterity of Jethro to their exit.

The Kenites.

Evi, Rekem, Hur, Zur, and Rebah.

The Midianites we ſhall have now occaſion to mention as at enmity with Iſrael, we apprehend to have been chiefly thoſe who bordered upon, or lived, as it were, in common with, the Moabites. Evi, Rekem, (L) Hur, Zur, and Rebah, were all five of them kings, or dukes of Midian (M), when Moſes overcame Sihon the Amorite, and greatly fearing for themſelves, they entered into counſels with Balak king of Moab, to conſider upon what methods they could take [l] Numb x. 29—32. [m] See before in the Notes p. 91. [n] Judg. i. 16 [o] Joseph. Antiq. lib. 5. c. 2. [p] Judg. iv. 11. [q] Numb. xxiv. 21, 22.

(L) Joſephus calls theſe five kings Oeus, Sures, Robeas, Ures, and Recem, and ſays, that this laſt built, and gave name to the city of Rekem the capital of Arabia, by the Greeks called Petra (13).

(M) They are alſo ſtiled princes of Midian, and dukes under Sihon king of the Amorites 14. Perhaps they might have paid ſome homage or tribute to Sihon, or ſome other way might have been deemed as feudatory under him.

(13) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 4. c. 7. (14) Joſh. xiii. 21

to

to avoid the dangers which they thought threatened them. We ſhall not repeat here what we have already ſaid concerning this abſurd and iniquitous matter in the hiſtory of Moab[r]. Only it will be neceſſary for us to remark here once more, that the Midianites ſeem to have ſignalized themſelves in a moſt extraordinary manner in their endeavours to turn the children of Iſrael from GOD. For it muſt be remembered, that Balaam had ſent them word either upon, or after, his return home, that it was in vain they hoped to hurt the darlings of heaven, by any other means than enticing them to ſin, the ſole means whereby GOD could be brought to forſake them: that upon this occaſion it would be proper for them to take the moſt beautiful of their young women, and deck them out in the moſt gorgeous manner, and ſend them to the Iſraelites, with ſuch inſtructions for their behaviour, as that, after having enſnared their hearts, might beſt corrupt their minds alſo[s]. This counſel they ſwallowed down very greedily, and were ſo ſanguine upon the matter, that we find Zur, one of their kings, made no ſcruple to ſend his daughter Cozbi among the reſt; but it was a tragical buſineſs for her; ſhe was killed by a wound in the belly, given with the ſame weapon, and with the ſame ſtroke, as made an end of her huſband or friend Zimri. For the reſt, theſe fair idolatreſſes played their part ſo well as to captivate many of the Iſraelites, and ſo abſolutely to prevail over them, as to bring them to bow down before Baal-peor, from whence great trouble and deſtruction came upon the whole body of them (N)[t].

THE Midianites herein enjoyed but a ſhort-lived ſatisfaction; their forwardneſs upon this occaſion, and ſubdolous practices, kindled the wrath of GOD againſt them, and Moſes had poſitive orders to ſmite them particularly. When they heard that the divine command was on the point of being executed upon them by twelve thouſand of the Iſraelites, under the conduct of Phinehas, they made the beſt preparations they could to withſtand the invaſion, by arming their caſtles, and muſtering their ſtrength. But their caſtles availed them but little, nor the ſtrength they muſtered. They were defeated, and every man of them put to the ſword, and among the [r] See before, p. 90, 91, & ſeq. [s] p. 90. [t] Numb. xxv. 15——18. JOSEPH. Antiq lib. 4. c. 6. See before, p. 90.

(N) Joſephus ſpeaks of a plague upon this occaſion which carried off fourteen thouſand ſouls (15).

(15) Joſeph. ubi ſupra.

reſt Balaam [u] (O), and all their cities and goodly caſtles were laid in aſhes. Not one male of any age or degree was ſpared, they were all put to the ſword, as were all the females likewiſe that were not pure virgins. The country was laid waſte, and all the cattle driven off before the conqueror, to the number of ſix hundred ſeventy five thouſand ſheep, ſeventy two thouſand beeves, and ſixty one thouſand aſſes. The virgins which were carried away captive were thirty two thouſand in number; and there is mention made of great riches in gold and ſilver, and iron, and other metals, which were carried off in this general devaſtation [w]. Thus were they puniſhed for their folly and wickedneſs, and their country made quite deſolate.

THUS was a branch of the Midianites utterly cut off; but in proceſs of time this loſs was ſupplied, and it pleaſed GOD, for the puniſhment of Iſrael, that they roſe up in war againſt that ſinful nation, and in their turn were very near deſtroying the whole generation of them by fire, and ſword, and famine, for ſeven ſucceſſive years. For, about one hundred and fifty years after this ſlaughter of the Midianites, there appeared two kings at the head of them, and the Amalekites, and Arabians.

Zebah and Zalmunna.

THESE two kings are called ZEBAH and ZALMUNNA, and waged ſo cruel a war againſt the Iſraelites, that, not daring to ſtay in the low country, they betook them to the mountains, and there, where nature had been defective, they made themſelves caves and fortreſſes to ſhelter them. The Midianites having therefore no enemy that withſtood them, they waſted the fruits of the earth, and drove off all the cattle. This deſtruction they continued for ſeven years together, marching every ſummer ſeaſon in vaſt multitudes, with numberleſs camels, and herds of cattle, about the time the fruits were far advanced, all which they reaped for themſelves; ſo that between them, and their infinite flocks, there was ſcarce any ſuſtenance left for the Iſraelites, who continually fled up to the mountains upon their approach [x].

[u] Numb. xxxi 1——8. JOSEPH. ubi ſup. c. 7. lib. 5. c. 7.

[w] Ibid. ver. 9, 10, 11, & ſeq.

[x] Judg. vi. 1---6. JOSEPH. Antiq.

(O) Balaam is poſitively ſaid to have gone to his place (16), to have returned home; but whether he came back again in compliance with a ſecond meſſage, or whether of his own accord, to ſee the iſſue of his wicked counſel, or to forward it, is not ſaid.

(16) Numb. xxiv. 25.

BUT GOD at length put a ſtop to theſe mercileſs incurſions of Zebah and Zalmunna, who meant nothing leſs than to ſtarve the inhabitants, and poſſeſs themſelves of the land [y]. Gideon was choſen by heaven for the delivery of his country upon this calamitous occaſion, and he did it ſo effectually, that the Midianites never dared afterwards to contend with Iſrael, as will immediately be ſeen. Zebah and Zalmunna and their confederates marching into the country, according to their annual cuſtom, pitched their tents in the valley of Jezreel, on this ſide Jordan. Here, as they lay covering a vaſt tract of ground, their camp was explored by Gideon one night, who overhearing one of the camp telling his dream to another, who interpreted it in favour of Gideon, he was more than ever encouraged to put in agitation a ſtratagem which had been formed for their deſtruction, with only three hundred men, armed with no other weapons than a rams horn in one hand, and a light concealed in a pitcher in the other. Accordingly about midnight the Midianites were alarmed in three ſeveral quarters of their camp, by the ſound of one hundred horns or trumpets in each; and ſtarting from their ſleep, perceived alſo as many lights breaking in upon them on three ſeveral ſides. The ſound of the horns, the glare of the lights, the gloom of the night, and the loud ſhouts they heard, ſtruck them with horror and amazement, and having no time to recover from their firſt conſternation, they fell into unſpeakable confuſion; and, being of different languages, ſtruck at one another, not knowing friend from foe; ſo that a dreadful ſlaughter enſued, which was chiefly owing to their own weapons. The kings Zebah and Zalmunna, however, found means to extricate themſelves, and fled off with a body of about fifteen thouſand men: Oreb and Zeeb, two princes of Midian (P), alſo found means to eſcape for the preſent; but they immediately fell into the hands of the Ephraimites, who put them to death; and by the ſlaughter which happened upon this occaſion, and what before happened in the camp, there fell one hundred and twenty thouſand men. The kings Zebah and Zalmunna (Q), with their party, got over the river, and held [y] Pſalm. lxxxiii. 11, 12.

(P) According to Joſephus, Oreb and Zeb were kings of Midian (17).

(Q) Joſephus ſays, they were brethren, and calls them Zebin and Hezarben (18). He ſays alſo, that theſe fifteen thouſand men were held on their flight to Karkor, and there thought themſelves ſafe; but being hotly purſued by Gideon, they were unexpectedly ſurprized, and put to farther flight, and being overtaken again, their fifteen thouſand men were beaten and diſperſed [z], and they themſelves taken priſoners, and carried back again by Gideon [a]. When he had brought Zebah and Zalmunna home with him, he aſked them what kind of men they were whom they had formerly ſlain at Tabor; they anſwered they were juſt ſuch as himſelf, of majeſtic deportment; to this he replied, they were his own brethren, and therefore he could not ſpare their lives: wherefore he ordered his ſon to ſtand up and kill them; but they perceiving the youth to be but weak and fearful, requeſted of Gideon, as a favour, that he would diſpatch them himſelf, and he did ſo, and they were no ſooner diſpatched than the ornaments were taken from the necks of their camels. Thus were the Midianites ſlaughtered a ſecond time, and plundered of immenſe wealth in cattle, gold, jewels, rich attire, and the like. The very ear-rings only, taken from them, weighed 1700 ſhekels [b]. This downfal is, by the prophet, termed, the day of Midian [c], and the ſlaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb [d]. From henceforward they gave over the trade of war [e].

(17) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 5. c. 8. (18) Idem ubi ſupra.

They were, however, a famous nation many ages afterward, and are mentioned for their induſtry, and riches [f], and the magnificence of their tents [g]: but in the firſt century their name was diffuſed, being by that time ſwallowed up by the more famous of Arabia. Between three and four hundred years ago, there was a ruined city which bore the antient name (R); in the neighbourhood of which they pretend to were all ſlain (19) to a man; the ſcripture only ſays they were diſcomfitted or terrified, which is by much the more likely to have happened.

[z] Judges ubi ſupra. 10. 12, 13. & ſeq. vii. viii. 1—18. [a] Vide Joseph. ubi ſupra. c. viii. [b] Judg. viii. 18, 26. [c] Iſa. ix. 4. [d] Iſa. x. 26. [e] Judg. ubi ſupr. ver. 28. [f] Iſa. lx. 6. [g] Habak. iii. 7.

(R) Abulfeda, from whom we have authority to ſay this, calls it مدين Madyan, and Moſes's father-in-law, شعيب Shoaib (20); and the place is ſtill one of the ſtations in the pilgrimage from Egypt to Mecca, under the name of Shoaib's Cave. (21).

(19) Idem ubi ſupra. (20) Deſcrip. Arab. p. 42. inter Geo. Vet. Script. Grec. Min. (21) See Ray's Collect. of curious Travels and voyages, Tome 2. p. 158.

ſhew

ſhew the place where Moſes watered his father-in-law's cattle.

SECT. IV.

The Hiſtory of Edom.

ESAU, called alſo Edom, was the progenitor of this people. He was the ſon of Iſaac, the ſon of Abraham, by Rebekah, and born at a birth with Jacob, being his twin-brother, and the elder of the two (A). Theſe twins contended while yet in their mother's womb; an early preſage of the ſtrife which was to take birth between them, and revive between their deſcendants, as GOD himſelf explained it to their mother. Eſau was born with red hair all over him (B); and as he grew up he proved to be a very ſtrong and active perſon, and delighting in the chaſe, became a man of the field; by which means providing plentifully and deliciouſly for his father's table, he won his particular affection. On the other hand, being of a very maſculine turn of mind, and much abſent from home, he retained not the kind inclinations of his mother Rebekah, who prided herſelf wholly in Jacob, who was a gentle-ſpirited man, and more frequently in her eye. On a day it happened, that Eſau came home

(A) It is remarkable, that as he came into the world his brother Jacob had him faſt hold by the heel, as if he would ſupplant him, as he afterwards did, ſays a learned commentator (1).

